of his nativity was March 13, 1878. He is a son of J. Frank and Marinda (Compton) Johnson, the form of whom was born at Bristol, Tennessee, in 1830, at the latter in Buckhannon County, Virginia (now West Virginia), in 1858. The parents were for many years residents of McDowell County, and here the father died in 1908 and the mother in 1917. J. Frank Johnson was reared in a home of comparative affluence and received a liberal education. He was in his young manhood successful teacher in the schools of McDowell County and he was called upon to serve in various local office of public trust, including those of county sheriff and county clerk, of which latter he was the incumbent twenty-six years. As a soldier of the Union in the Civil war he took part in many engagements, was captured by the enemy on more than one occasion and was to have been shot, but contrived to make his escape. He was a life-long democrat, but his two sons have been republicans from the time of casting their first votes. Besides the two sons the family circle includes four daughters, all of whom survive the honored parent.

Walter W. Johnson continued to attend school until he was twenty-two years of age, and thereafter was for a short time engaged in the teaming business. He then became associated with his brother in establishing the Johnson Printing Company, through the medium of which they were for sixteen years editors and publishers of the McDowell Record, which they made an effective exponent of local interests and also of the cause of the republican party. After their retirement from the newspaper business they formed the present Welch Sales Company, and erected a garage which in general facilities and equipment is conceded to be one of the best in Southern West Virginia. The McDowell Record was the first newspaper established in McDowell County and was founded by the father of the subject of this sketch. He first published the paper at English and later removed the plant and business to Welch, the county seat, where his sons eventually succeeded him in the ownership and management of the business. The elder of the two brothers, J. Frank Johnson, Jr., is now a member of the County Court of McDowell County and is extensively interested in coal development in this section of the state, besides which he has served as county sheriff and as mayor of the City of Welch.

As previously stated, Walter W. Johnson is a republican in political allegiance. He is affiliated with the local Blue Lodge and Chapter of the Masonic Fraternity and also with the Knights of Pythias, and his wife is an active member of the Baptist Church.

August 1, 1907, recorded the marriage of Mr. Johnson and Miss Bessie Beard, who was born in Gates County, Virginia, a daughter of James E. Beard. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have two children, Elizabeth and Thelma.

THOMAS EDWARD HODGES was one of those rare men who seem able to translate broad and generous ideals into deed of practical and useful service. It was not any one achievement that distinguished him, but rather a lifetime of consecutive work and performance of duty. He was a popular figure in the sense that he lived with and worked among the people and exerted a constant influence and helpfulness in whatever relationship he was placed. This quality of his character should be emphasized even beyond the fact that he gained some of the highest offices in his native state.

In his case the facts that constitute the formal material of biography are as follows: He was born on his father's farm near Buckhannon in Upshur County, December 13, 1858, one of the three children of John Henry and Melissa Margaret (Humphreys) Hodges. The environment in which he lived during his boyhood was not one from which he could have derived any of the talented and permanent influences that moulded his career. It was rather the aspirations and energy within him that reached out and procured peculiar values from normal advantages. He attended district schools, then entered the old French Creek Academy, where he was graduated in 1877, and in the same year entered the West Virginia University where he as graduated A. B. in 1881. In 1884 he received the master of Arts degree from the University. In the meantime, beginning in 1881 and continuing until 1886, he was principal of the Morgantown public schools. Many years later, in recognition of his high scholarship and attainments, West Virginia College bestowed upon him the degree of Doctor of Science in 1909, and Washington and Jefferson College constituted him a LL. D. in 1919. From the public schools of Morgantown he became principal of Marshall College, the State Normal School at Huntington, in 1886, and that institution thrived under his management for ten years. In 1896 he was recalled to West Virginia University as Professor of Physics, a chair he held until 1909. That year Governor William E. Glascock appointed him a member of the State Board of Control, a new organization to which was assigned the duties of administering state institutions. A year later he resigned to accept the presidency of West Virginia University, though by law he could not enter upon the duties of that office for one year, a time he utilized partly in travel abroad. July 1, 1911, he began his duties as University head and was formally inaugurated November 3d of that year. Some of the reasons that made his choice a very popular one are suggested in the following quotations from the Charleston Gazette of that time: "The action of the State Board of Regents in selecting Thomas E. Hodges to take the place at the head of the State University to be made vacant by the resignation of President D. P. Purinton was the most definite piece of wisdom that has taken place in the history of the state's educational system. There is no higher man in the state than Tommy Hodges, and there is no man who is so definitely identified with all that is good in the state University. There is not a single student past or present of the university who has ever known Tommy Hodges who is not rejoicing at the choice of the regents. Tommy Hodges is the student's friend. He has the interests of the students at heart." While the West Virginia educator commented on his selection in these words: He is regarded as one of the few men possessed of all the qualities necessary to make a good university president. He is, moreover, particularly well fitted for the presidency of the head school of West Virginia. Born and bred within our borders, he has imbibed the spirit of growth which has become characteristic of the state in every phase of life and he truly appreciates the magnitude of her possibilities. A man among men, a scholar among scholars, fitting his action to his word, he will be able to meet every demand made upon him occasioned by the new career upon which the university has entered. He is wisely progressive and possessed of strong convictions, but he will never bring a revolution of destruction leaving waste and failure in his wake. He will conserve and organize all the resources of the university and direct its energies toward giving the greatest possible service to the state."

All this promise was abundantly fulfilled during the three years he was university head. Then, in 1914, he yielded reluctantly to the persistent demand of his party and resigned to become democratic nominee for Congress at Large. He made a splendid campaign but was defeated by Howard Sutherland. In July, 1915, Mr. Hodges accepted the unsought appointment as postmaster of Morgantown, and to the duties of that office he devoted the last years of his life.

Dr. Hodges was chairman of the Democratic State Committee in 1908, and in that year was a candidate for the gubernatorial nomination, and in 1912 was again urged to seek the nomination for governor, but declined. Aside from his prominence in educational and political roles Doctor Hodges was a very able banker and financier. In 1896 he assisted in organizing the Morgantown Savings & Loan Society, and was its secretary until 1909. His corporation became the largest of its kind in the Upper Monongahela Valley, and its success meant the more to Dr. Hodges because through it he was able to aid many Morgantown people in building their homes. He was one of the organizers in 1906, and from that year president of the Bank of Morgantown. He was a director of the Farmers' and Merchants' Bank, and treasurer of the Chaplin Collieries Company.

Doctor Hodges graduated at college as a "distinguished cadet" and later for some years was identified with the West Virginia National Guard, serving successively as major and colonel in the Second Regiment of Infantry and as brigade instructor of Small Arms Practice with the rank of major on the staff of the general commanding the West Virginia Infantry Brigade. He was also at one time commandant of the West Virginia University Cadets. He served on the Board of Eastern Colleges in intercollegiate athletics, was a member of the College Board of the Presbyterian Church, for six years was a trustee of Davis and Elkins College, and was a member of the Board of Trustees of West Virginia Odd Fellows Home. He was a Mason, a Phi Beta Kappa honor man and a member of the Kappa Alpha fraternity and the Morgantown Rotary Club. Doctor Hodges was an impressive speaker and in constant demand as a lecturer before educational meetings throughout West Virginia and neighboring states. He had become a member of the Presbyterian Church at French Creek in 1876, and was one of West Virginia's most prominent laymen in that denomination. For many years he was an elder in his church at Morgantown.

October 5, 1882, Doctor Hodges married Mary Amelia Hayes, daughter of Manly Hayes, of Morgantown. He is survived by Mrs. Hodges and two children: Grace, wife of Oscar F. Gibbs of Columbus, Ohio; and Charles Edward Hodges.

Thomas Edward Hodges died at Morgantown July 13, 1919, in his sixty-first year. For all the numerous activities that have been briefly reviewed it was the elements of his character that made him one of the great figures in West Virginia life. An editorial tribute in the New Dominion read as follows:

"It was the grand old man of education in West Virginia that passed on yesterday when Colonel Thomas Edward Hodges died. No man in Morgantown had more friends or more deserved them, for Colonel Hodges was first of all a friend of Morgantown and of all the good souls in it.

"He was a tireless worker for the advancement of his fellowmen. To do the kindly, friendly thing—that seemed to be his first impulse. Whether in the highest chair of the State University, of which he was a prime factor in its development, or as local postmaster, his foremost thought was to be of service. A companion of great and renowned men, he was still a friend to the friendless, and who can doubt that his very thoughts and his heart of love helped to make the world a happier place to live in? His time, his talents, his dollars were always available and his good cheer was inexhaustible. He was one of the "old timers" of the best sort and lived his square and honorable life according to the best traditions of the Mountain Side.

"As an educational figure he won national fame; as a church worker he was the coadjutor of the leaders of his denomination; as a politician he was the trusted advisor of the democratic party of the state. He was the beloved father of a family of whom he was proud and who live to do honor to his name. It can truly be said of Colonel Hodges what cannot be so truly said of many men—that his life was a well rounded success. Men may come and men may go, but there never will be another just like Colonel Hodges. The whole state will lament his going and cherish his memory."

Perhaps a better and closer approximation to the essential elements of his career and character is contained in another editorial tribute, published after his death by the Morgantown Post:

"There is not a city, town or village in the state of West Virginia where men and women, some of them past middle age, others just fairly beginning life's active duties, will not pause to recall with kindly affection their associations in one capacity or another with Thomas Edward Hodges, whose splendid earthly career ended Sunday morning. In the larger cities there will be hundreds to whom his death will mean a personal loss, while in the small country village there may be only one or two who were privileged to know him, but without exception their sentiments will be the same. Not many men so live and act that this remarkable tribute may be justly paid them, but there is none who will question the propriety of its application here. In the field of scholarship, he had earned the title of doctor. In military rank he was a colonel because of military service faithfully performed. In service to his state he was properly referred to as honorable. To thousands whom he had instructed he was professor. In business associations, in military service, as lecturer, publicist, and political leader he numbered thousands among his associates, acquaintances and friends, but those to whom his life and character meant most, and to whom his death will bring sincerest sorrow, are the students who knew him outside of the class room as 'Tommy' Hodges. And this is because in his big, whole-hearted, sympathetic way, he understood the heart of youth. His faith in young men and young women was boundless, and this they understood—and loved him.

"He achieved in many fields a distinction for which most men strive for but one. His scholastic, civic and religious attainments were extraordinary. His wholesome optimism, his limitless energy, his fondness for clean sport, his sound business judgment and probity, his spiritual understanding, his devotion to his church and family, his high patriotism, his faith in humanity, his unwillingness to believe evil, his staunch friendship, and his devotion to right as he saw it, were all attributes worthy of admiration, but in his genuine affection for the young men and women who came to him for instruction, and his unflinching sympathy with all of their activities and aspirations, his clear understanding of their hearts and his willingness to serve them, not only as their instructor but as their friend and associate, is builded his best and most lasting memorial. The state and this community have lost a magnificent type of citizen in the death of Doctor Hodges; the students of former years mourn the death of a friend and comrade."

CHARLES EDWARD HODGES, only son of the eminent West Virginia educator and banker, the late Thomas Edward Hodges, has in a brief but intensely active career proved the possession of many of the admirable qualities which distinguished his father. The son made a fine record as a soldier and officer with the Expeditionary Forces in France, was abroad nearly two years, and not long after his return to Morgantown he bought and is editor and publisher of The New Dominion, the leading morning newspaper.

Charles Edward Hodges was born in Huntington, West Virginia, September 27, 1892. He graduated from Morgantown High School in 1909, from West Virginia University with the A. B. degree in 1913, and also did post-graduate work in international law and diplomacy.

From 1913 until May, 1917, his duties were those of a reporter and editor for local Morgantown newspapers. He was one of the early volunteers for service when America entered the war with Germany. He enlisted as a private in Company A of the Fifth Reserve Engineers at Pittsburgh, July 1, 1917, with this command he went overseas, and was on duty in France for twenty-two and a half months. In October, 1917, he was promoted to sergeant and in March, 1918, was sent to the Army Candidates School at Langres in Haute Marne District, where he graduated with the rank of second lieutenant of infantry in July, 1918. He was assigned to the 359th Infantry, 90th Division, but later transferred to the 143rd Infantry of the 36th Division. With this command he participated in the Meuse-Argonne campaign, in the offensive action along the Champagne front, and before the armistice was promoted from first lieutenant to captain. After the armistice he remained with the 36th Division until that command returned home on June 1, 1919. During the Meuse-Argonne fighting he was cited in orders of the French Army Corps, with which his division was operating, and was recommended for the Croix de Guerre. Before returning home Captain Hodges was offered a place on the United States Food Commission at Berlin, but declined that opportunity for service in order to return home, the health of his father being then very critical. For about a year he looked after his father's interests and in November, 1919, with R. E. Jarvis, bought The News Dominion, one of the newspaper with which he had been employed in former years. He is now president of The Dominion News Company, a publishing company, and has active charge of the editorial and general business management of this influential news paper.

Captain Hodges attended the National Democratic Convention in San Francisco in 1920, and was a member of the headquarters staff of John W. Davis, candidate for the nomination for president. He is a member of the various Masonic bodies at Morgantown, including Morgantown Union Lodge No. 4, Morgantown Commandery No. 18, Knights Templar, Morgantown Lodge of Perfection No. 6, of which he was secretary, and is also a member of West Virginia Consistory and Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling. He is a member of the West Virginia Alpha Chapter of the Phi Kappa Psi college fraternity. Captain Hodges was representative of the 36th Division in the meeting at Paris, France, where the American Legion was formally organized, and since his return home he has been an executive official of Morgantown Post No. 2. He served as president of the Morgantown Rotary Club for 1921-22.

HENRY FAIRBANKS WARDEN is a young man who has shown fine executive and administrative ability in connection with the coal-mining industry in West Virginia, where he is general manager of the Williams Pocahontas Coal Company at War, McDowell County, besides being general manager also for the Orinoco Mining Company Orinoco, on Pond Creek, Pike County, Kentucky. His residence and official headquarters are maintained at Bluefield, Mercer County, West Virginia.

A scion of staunch Colonial ancestry in New England Mr. Warden was born in the town of Monroe, Grafton County, New Hampshire, on the 29th of May, 1893, and he is a son of Alexander and Susie (Fairbanks) Warden both likewise natives of Monroe, Grafton County, New Hampshire, where the father was a representative merchant and farmer and influential in political circles and public affairs of a local order. He died in 1908, at the age of seventy-four years. The first wife of Alexander Warden bore the maiden name of Lucy Flint, and his second wife, mother of the subject of this review, died in 1907, at the age of forty-four years. Mr. Warden served as draft officer in his native county in the period of the Civil war, and he represented his county in the State Legislature, served as its sheriff, was city clerk and postmaster at Monroe, and held other positions of trust. A man of inviolable integrity and mature judgment, he was a guide and counsellor in his community and commanded unqualified popular confidence. He was one of the builders of the Methodist Episcopal Church edifice at Monroe, and was one of the most zealous and liberal members of this church. His political allegiance was given to the republican party and he was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity. He passed the last seven years of his life in supervising his farms and other property interests. Alexander Warden was a member of a family of eleven sons and two daughters, and his father, Andrew Warden, was one of the substantial citizens of Monroe, Grafton County, New Hampshire, at the time of his death. Alexander and Lucy (Flint) Warden had one son, Oliver S., who is now owner and manager of the Great Falls Daily Tribune at Great Falls, Montana. Of the three children of the second marriage Henry F. of this sketch is the eldest. David R. is chief inspector and chemist in the employ of W. C. Atwater & Company at Bluefield, West Virginia. He was a student at Norwich University at Northfield, Vermont. In the World war period he was with the Near East Relief Commission in Turkey and Armenia, a service with which he was connected eighteen months before his return to the United States. Ralph B., a youth of seventeen years (1922), resides with his brother, Henry F., at Bluefield.

The early education of Henry F. Warden was acquired in the public schools of his native county and was supplemented by a four years' course at St. Johnsbury Academy, a leading preparatory school at St. Johnsbury, Vermont. Thereafter he held a clerical position with Boston & Montana Smelting Company at Great Falls, Montana, now a subsidiary of the famous Anaconda Smelting Company, and upon his return to the East he took a course in technical and industrial chemistry at Pratt Institute, Brooklyn, New York, in which institution he was graduated in 1913. Soon afterward he came to Bluefield, West Virginia, and took the position of chemist in the office of the Pocahontas Coke Company. Eighteen months later he became chief inspector and chemist for William C. Atwater & Company, his duties involving inspection of coal mines and their products and the preparation of coal for market. He retained his position until he was made manager of the Williams Pocahontas Coal Company and the Orinoco Mining Company's properties, owned by the Oriental Navigation Company, New York City, who are in a position to ship their coal from the West Virginia and Kentucky coal fields to all parts of the world. The Oracle, official publication of the Oriental Navigation Company, in one of its recent issues published a full-page portrait of Mr. Warden, who is probably the youngest general manager of coal-mining corporations to be found in West Virginia.

In 1915 Mr. Warden married Miss Ethel Witt, daughter of J. F. Witt, of Bluefield, and the two children of his union are Henry Fairbanks, Jr., and James Alexander. Mr. and Mrs. Warden are members of the Bland Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and are popular in the representative social circles of their home city.

WALTER ALLEN CARR, M. D. In the practice of his profession Doctor Carr is associated with Dr. David D. Hatfield, the former maintaining his headquarters at War and the latter at Yukon, both in McDowell County. As partners the doctors have charge of the medical and surgical work at the mines of the following named corporations on Dry Fork and on the line of the Norfolk & Western Railroad: Warrior Coal Company, Williams Pocahontas Coal Company, War Creek Coal Company, Domestic Pocahontas Coal Company, Yukon Pocahontas Coal Company, Buckhannon Coal Company, Dry Fork Coal Company, Sawyer Pocahontas Coal Company, Dry Fork Colliery Company, and Flat Top Coal Company. Each of these physicians also has a comprehensive and important private practice of general order.

Doctor Carr was born at New Hope, Mercer County, West Virginia, December 9, 1882, and is a son of Edward B. and Mary (Ellison) Carr, the former of whom likewise was born at New Hope, in 1853, and the latter of whom was born in Grayson County, Virginia, in 1862, a granddaughter of Rev. Matthew Ellison, a distinguished and revered pioneer clergyman of the Baptist church in what is now West Virginia. Edward B. Carr was the third student to enroll his name at the Concord Normal School at Athens, and he has long maintained high prestige as a successful and popular teacher in the schools of this state, the while he has taken special satisfaction in inducing many of his pupils to attend his alma mater, the State Normal School at Athens. He has wielded large and benignant influence as an instructor and counselor of young men and women, his abiding sympathy and tolerance have been shown in human helpfulness, and he has ever been instant in the aiding of those in suffering and distress. It is pleasing to note that his son, Doctor Carr of this sketch, has shown the same gracious attitude and gives his professional service as well as other aid to those in need, just as willingly and earnestly to those who have no means of paying him as to those in affluent circumstances. Further than this, the Doctor attributes much of his professional success and advancement to the aid and goodly counsel of his honored father. Edward B.

Carr taught in numerous rural schools in Mercer County and also at the normal school at Athens, where he and his wife now maintain their home. They are zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and he has been a teacher in the Sunday School for many years. He is independent in politics and is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity. His father, Col. Shannon Carr, who was born in Wythe County, Virginia, represented the Old Dominion State as a gallant soldier and officer of the Confederacy in the Civil war, in which he was colonel of a regiment of Virginia infantry. He was a resident of Mercer County, West Virginia, at the time of his death, and had served many years as sheriff of that county. Edward B. and Mary (Ellison) Carr became the parents of five children: Dr. Edward S., a graduate of the University College of Medicine of Virginia, is a representative physician and surgeon at Narrows, that state; Mabel M. is the wife of S. C. Thornton, of Princeton, West Virginia; Alice is (1922) a popular teacher in the public schools at War, McDowell County; Dr. Arthur B. graduated in the Medical College of Virginia, at Richmond, and is now a professional assistant of his brother, Dr. Walter A., who is the eldest of the children. Dr. Arthur B. Carr was a member of the Students Army Training Corps during the period of America's participation in the World war.

Dr. Walter A. Carr reverts with satisfaction that the major part of his preliminary education was acquired in schools taught by his father. Thereafter he continued his studies in the Concord State Normal School at Athens until 1902, after which he taught school one term in Mercer County. In 1907 he graduated in the College of Physicians and Surgeons in the City of Baltimore, Maryland, and after thus receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine he engaged in practice at Palmer, Braxton County. Three months later he joined his brother Edward S. in practice at Narrows, Virginia, where he remained eighteen months. Since that time he has been doing admirable professional service in the coal fields of McDowell County, West Virginia, where he now maintains his residence and office in the village of War. The doctor holds membership in the McDowell County Medical Society, West Virginia State Medical Society, and the American Medical Association. He is independent in politics, and in the Masonic fraternity he is affiliated with the Blue Lodge at Narrows, Virginia, and with the Chapter of Royal Arch Masons at Northfork, McDowell County.

In 1909 Doctor Carr wedded Miss Hettie Altizer, daughter of William Altizer, of Harman, Virginia, and her death occurred in January, 1913, one son, Walter Hatfield Carr, surviving her. In 1917 was recorded the marriage of Doctor Carr and Miss Elva M. Ward, daughter of George W. Ward, of Inez, Kentucky, and the two children of this union are a winsome little daughter, Betty May, and a baby boy, James Arthur.

JAMES D. McLAUGHLIN. At Kermit, Mingo County, Mr. McLaughlin is the efficient and popular general manager of the Earleton Coal Company, one of the important producing companies of this district.

Mr. McLaughlin was born at Perrysville, Ohio, September 11, 1885, and is a son of Rev. Harvey McLaughlin and Maria (Glasgow) McLaughlin, both of sterling Scotch lineage. Rev. Harvey McLaughlin was born in what is now Braxton County, West Virginia, where he was reared on the farm of his father, and after attending Dennison University, in the State of Ohio, he completed a divinity course in the theological seminary in the City of Louisville, Kentucky, his ordination to the ministry of the Missionary Baptist Church having occurred when he was twenty-five years of age. While pastor of a church at Perrysville, Ohio, his marriage to Miss Maria Glasgow was solemnized, she being a representative of an old and well-known Ohio family. After his marriage Mr. McLaughlin held other pastoral charges in Ohio, and in 1893 he returned to West Virginia and became pastor of the church at Alderson, Greenbrier County, where he remained four years. Thereafter he held various pastoral charges in the coal districts of the state. He was sixty-six years of age at the time of his death, in October, 1917, his wife having died when their son James D., of this review, was a child.

After the death of his mother James D. McLaughlin was taken into the home of his maternal grandfather at Perysville, Ohio, where he continued his studies in the public schools until his graduation from the high school in 1903. Thereafter he attended a preparatory school at Wooster, Ohio, and after leaving this institution he was for two years a student in Dennison University, his father's alma mater. In 1910 he was graduated as a Civil Engineer from Ohio State University, and for two years thereafter he was professionally associated with the firm of Clark & Krebs at Charleston, West Virginia. He passed the next year in the service of the Milburn Coal & Coke Company on Paint Creek, and from 1913 to 1919 he was with the New River & Pocahontas Consolidated Coal Company, in the engineering department, at Berwind, McDowell County. He then took charge of the Earlston Coal Company, of which Henry E. Harman is president, and as general manager he has developed the Earlston plant from a wagon mine into one of the best equipped in this field. He is a republican in politics and is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity.

In 1919 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. McLaughlin and Miss Louise Stealey, daughter of John E. Stealey, of Clarksburg, she being a graduate of the University of West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. McLaughlin have one child, Miriam Louise.

WILLIAM H. PRICE, M. D. With headquarters in the vital industrial village of Chattaroy, Mingo County, Doctor Price finds ample demand upon his time and attention in connection with his official professional service as mine physician and surgeon for the Buffalo Thacker Coal Company, Falf Branch Coal Company and Wygart Coal Company, all of which are operating in this immediate vicinity.

Doctor Price was born at Montvale, Bedford County, Virginia, October 7, 1879, and is a son of Dr. Samuel H. and Frances (Harris) Price, the latter of whom died in the year 1898. Dr. Samuel H. Price was born in Pittsylvania County, Virginia, is now (1922) sixty-nine years of age, and has long been a representative physician and surgeon in Bedford County, that state, where he still maintains his home at Montvale. He was graduated in the medical department of the University of Virginia in 1875, and he is one of the honored and influential citizens of Bedford County, of which he has served twenty-one years as treasurer, and prior to his election to that office he had been for five years a member of the County Board of Supervisors. He is a staunch democrat, is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, has been for forty years an elder in the Presbyterian Church and is interested in many business enterprises. Of the children two sons and one daughter are living. Dr. Samuel O. was engaged in the practice of his profession at Maybrey, McDowell County, West Virginia, at the time of his death, when twenty-six years of age, he previously having been connected with hospitals at Newport News, Virginia, and Huntington and Welch, West Virginia. Dr. Howard E., another of the sons, is a graduate of the Medical College of Virginia, and is now engaged in the practice of dentistry at Altavista, Virginia. Mary Ross Price, the one surviving daughter, is the widow of Dr. Walter S. Slicer, who received his degree of Doctor of Medicine from the University College of Medicine and who was engaged in the practice of his profession at Cripple Creek, Virginia, when he entered the medical corps of the United States Army for service in the World war, he having held the rank of captain and having died while in service. His widow is now a resident of Roanoke, Virginia.

Dr. William H. Price graduated from a college academic course when he was seventeen years of age, and for the ensuing year he was employed in the store conducted by his father at Montvale, Virginia. In 1898 he entered the medical department of the University of Virginia, and in the same he was graduated as a member of the class of 1901. Since thus receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine he has taken effective post-graduate courses in the celebrated

New York Polyclinic. The doctor initiated practice by establishing his residence at Caperton, Fayette County West Virginia, where he became physician and surgeon in connection with the mines of George L. Wise & Company. He next removed to Eckman, McDowell County, one year later he engaged in practice at Big Creek, Logan County, and since June, 1909, he has maintained his residence and professional headquarters at Chattaroy. Doctor Price is a member of the Mingo County Medical Society, the West Virginia State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. Though he was reared in the faith of the democratic party, he is aligned in the ranks of the republican party, as is also his wife, and both are members of the Presbyterian Church. He is affiliated with the Blu Lodge, Chapter and Commandery organizations of the Masonic fraternity, as well as the Mystic Shrine at Charleston and he is a member also of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Modern Woodmen of America.

November 29, 1916, recorded the marriage of Doctor Price and Miss Lucy Fowble Millendor, daughter of Cornelius F. Millendor, of Huntington. The two children of this union are Frances and Margaret.

PHILIP A. HOLMAN is well known in Charleston business circles, and has recently helped organize and become an executive official in one of the city's prosperous wholesale enterprises.

He was born, reared and educated at St. Agnes', Cornwall, England, and came to America about the time he reached his majority, in 1908. He first located in Michigan, and for several years was assistant to receivers of national banks under the U. S. comptroller of the currency. His home has been in Charleston since 1915. As an American citizen he answered the call to service at the time of the war with Germany, was trained in Camp Sherman, and was on duty in Charleston as an aide to the disbursing officer in this city.

Mr. Holman was the active organizer and is now treasurer of the Superior Drug Company, wholesale, incorporated for $225,000, and which opened for business in Charleston in the latter part of March, 1922. The other officers of the corporation are Dr. H. H. Kessel, president, Dr. Sylvain Goffaux, vice president, and C. H. Casto, secretary.

This company has its headquarters at 905 Virginia Street in the heart of the wholesale district, and its building, a four-story and basement modern brick structure, is ideally fitted for the purposes. The company started out under most favorable auspices and with a volume of business that assures its growing contact and trade with the great territory surrounding Charleston. Mr. Holman is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, a Knight Templar and a Noble of the Mystic Shrine. He also holds membership in the Kiwanis Club. He married Miss Jennie Lind Hodges of Louisville, Kentucky.

WILLARD ALEXANDER WILSON, with residence and business headquarters in the City of Williamson, is superintendent of the Pond Creek By-products Colliery Company and the Vulcan Colliery Company, the former corporation having its base of operations at the mouth of Pond Creek in Pike County, Kentucky, and the Vulcan Colliery Company, with office in Mingo County and mines in Pike County, Kentucky, on the line of the Norfolk & Western Railroad. Mr. Wilson has been actively identified with operations in the coal fields of this district, including the adjoining Kentucky county of Pike, since 1903, when he engaged in engineering work for the United States Coal Company at Gary, McDowell County. He remained at Gary during the period of mine opening and construction work, and in 1912 went to the Pond Creek District, where likewise he took part in development work. In 1914 he came to Red Jacket, Mingo County, and in 1918 became associated with operations at the Vulcan mines. In 1920 he became associated also with the Pond Creek By-products Colliery Company, and he is now superintendent of both corporations, as noted earlier in this paragraph.

Mr. Wilson was born at Cynthia, Ohio, February 22, 1880, a son of Lewis C. and Emma A. (Steele) Wilson, the former of whom was born in 1848 and the latter in 1850. Lewis C. Wilson became a member of the historic rifle brigade known as the "Squirrel Hunters," which was organized in Ohio to repel the forces of the celebrated Confederate raider Gen. John Morgan at the time of the Civil war. In his earlier life Lewis C. Wilson was a farmer, and later he was identified with various lines of business, including the insurance business. He is a stalwart republican and at one time served as county commissioner in Pike County, Ohio, he and his wife being now residents of Columbus, that state, and both being members of the Presbyterian Church. They became the parents of six sons and two daughters.

Willard A. Wilson, who is more familiarly known to his set of friends as "Tug," Wilson, continued his studies in the public schools of his native town until he had completed a course in the high school, and in 1899-1900 he was a student in the Ohio State University at Columbus. A youth of fine athletic powers, he was a leading and popular member of the football team of the university, and it was in this connection that he gained his nickname of "Tug." He played also on the baseball team of the university, and later he became infielder with the Utica team of the New York State League. It was as a ball player that Mr. Wilson came to West Virginia and became a member of the team at Gary, where also he was given employment with an engineering corps in the coal fields. He "made good" in both connections, and though he had previously had no engineering experience, he so proved his value that when the United States Coal Company reduced the membership of its engineering corps from hundred and forty to twenty he was one of the twenty retained in service. He has served continuously as mine superintendent since 1906, and has made a most excellent record as an executive. Mr. Wilson is a republican, he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church at Williamson, in which he is an elder, and while a resident of Vulcan he served as a member of the Board of Education.

In 1906 Mr. Wilson wedded Miss Grace Myers, daughter of Mrs. Malissa P. Myers, of Columbus, Ohio, and the three children of this union are: Elizabeth, Frances Ann and Mary Lou.

HARRY SCHERR, ESQUIRE, Williamson, West Virginia. Mr. Scherr was born June 6, 1881, at Maysville, Grant County, West Virginia, the son of Arnold C. and Katherine (Nickel) Scherr. Arnold C. Scherr was born in Switzerland, August 19, 1847, and accompanied his parents to his country at the age of eight years. His father was a colonel in the Swiss Army, who with other Swiss officers at the outbreak of the Crimean war went to England and rendered his services to the British Queen, becoming an officer in the British Army. Coming to the United States, he was offered a colonelcy in the United States Army at the outbreak of the Civil war, but could not accept on account of ill health.

Arnold C. Scherr was a merchant and manufacturer, and for many years was prominent in the public life of West Virginia. He served eight years (1901-1909) as state auditor, and was the republican candidate for governor in 1908, being defeated. He died in 1917.

The subject of this sketch attended the public schools at Maysville and Keyser, a military academy in Allegheny County, Maryland, and the West Virginia University. He was admitted to the bar in the summer of 1905 and located at Williamson, having accepted a position in the law office of Sheppard and Goodykoontz. On July 1, 1907, he became the junior partner in the firm of Sheppard, Goodykoontz and Scherr. In 1912 Mr. Sheppard retired from the firm, and the present firm of Goodykoontz, Scherr and Slaven became the successor of the firm of Goodykoontz and Scherr. In 1919, Mr. Lant R. Slaven having been admitted as a member. Mr. Scherr is an officer and director in several financial and industrial enterprises, among others the National Bank of Commerce of Williamson; and is city attorney and member of the Board of Education of Williamson Independent School District. He was the first president of the Coal City Club, which later became the Chamber of Commerce, of which, also, he was the first president and in which capacity he is now serving. He served two years as assistant prosecuting attorney of Mingo County, having been appointed in 1906. During the entire period of the World war, he was a member of the Local Draft Board of Mingo County. In 1920 he was a delegate to the Republican National Convention, which nominated President Harding.

Mr. Scherr is married and has two children, Harry, Jr., and Barbara. He is an Episcopalian, a Kiwanian, and his college fraternities are Kappa Alpha and Delta Chi. He is a member of the Mingo County, West Virginia State and American Bar associations.

JAMES R. BROCKUS, who is now captain of Company B of the West Virginia State Police, with headquarters in the court house at Williamson, Mingo County, has the rank of lieutenant colonel in the United States Army Reserves. His service in the United States Army covered a period of twenty-three years and ten months, and within this long period he was in forty-one different states of the Union and also in seven foreign countries. He passed fourteen months in Alaska, four years on the Mexican border, seven years in the Philippine Islands, besides which he was with the American troops in China at the time of the Boxer uprising, and was in France in the period of the World war. In nearly a quarter of a century of active and efficient service in the United States army Colonel Brockus was in the best of physical health, and his entire interval of confinement in hospital did not exceed ten days. He made an admirable record, as shown in the text of his various discharges from the army, in which he promptly enlisted at the expiration of his various terms until his final retirement. He rose in turn through the grades of corporal (second enlistment), sergeant and battalion sergeant major (Boxer rebellion in China). West Virginia is fortunate in having gained this seasoned soldier and sterling citizen as a member and officer of its state police.

Colonel Brockus was born at Erwin, Unicoi County, Tennessee, on the 8th of August, 1875, and is a son of William K. and Sarah (Parks) Brockus, the father having been a skilled mechanic and having conducted a shop at Erwin. In the public schools of his native town Colonel Brockus gained his early education, which was supplemented by a course in a business college at Nashville, Tennessee.

In 1893 Colonel Brockus enlisted in Company F, Twenty-second United States Infantry, and after spending three years at Fort Keough, Montana, he received an honorable discharge. At Nashville, Tennessee, he soon afterward re-enlisted, at this time as a member of the Fourteenth United States Infantry. It was within this period of enlistment that he was with his command in Alaska for fourteen months. Later he was in service in the Philippine Islands, whence he went with his command to China at the time of the Boxer rebellion, his second discharge having been received while he was at Pekin, China. He then returned to the United States and engaged in the hardware business in his native town. Thero he lost all of his investment as the result of a fire, and he then enlisted in Company D, Eighteenth United States Infantry, with which he was in service at Fort Bliss, Texas. Later he was at Fort Logan, and next he was assigned with his command to service in the Philippines, his second trip to those islands having been made in 1903. In the Philippines he served with Company D, Fifteenth Infantry, in Mindanao, but he purchased his discharge and rejoined his old command as a member of Company D, Eighteenth Infantry. He returned to the United States on the 15th of November, 1909, and from Camp Whipple Barracks, Arizona, was sent to service on the Mexican border. In connection with the nation's participation in the World war Colonel Brockus was commissioned second lieutenant at Nogales, Arizona, on July 9, 1917, and sent to the Officer's Training School at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana, where on August 15th he was commissioned captain and assigned to the Three Hundred and Thirty-first Infantry at Camp Sherman, Ohio. On December 31, 1917, he was advanced to the rank of major and went with the Eighty-third Division to France, where the division received final training and equipment for front-line service. After the signing of the armistice Major Brockus was transferred to the One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Battalion of the Military Police Corps at Laval. He sailed for home June 21, 1919, and landed at Newport News, Virginia, on the 3d of the following month. His command was mustered out at Camp Taylor, Kentucky, where he received his final discharge July 24, 1919. He again enlisted, as a first sergeant, and was sent to Fort George Wright, where he remained until May 13, 1920, when he was retired with credit and with the pay of a warrant officer for thirty years' service. After a brief visit to his old home in Tennessee Colonel Brockus joined the West Virginia State Police, August 29, 1920, and was sent to the Mingo coal fields, where he has continued in active service except during the recent interval when Federal troops were here in connection with mine troubles. He is now captain of Company B of the State Police, and during the recent miners' invasion he had command of seventy-two state police, including two officers and also eighteen volunteers. He was under fire many times in the Philippines and in the Boxer uprising, but has stated that he heard more hostile bullets during the mine troubles in West Virginia than at any other period of his long military experience. A man and a soldier of fine personality, Colonel Brockus has made many friends within the period of his residence and official service in West Virginia. Colonel Brockus is a member of the American Legion, a thirty-second degree Mason and a member of the Shrine.

WILLIAM CASSIUS COOK, county superintendent of schools for McDowell County, was born on a farm at Windom, Wyoming County, this state, on the 21st of November, 1882, and is a son of Rev. William H. H. Cook and Mary Jane (Cooper) Cook, the former of whom still resides at Windom, where he was born November 5, 1840, and the latter of whom died in 1918, at the age of seventy-four years.

Rev. William H. H. Cook is a son of Thomas Cook, and the family settled in what is now Wyoming County, West Virginia, shortly after the close of the Revolution, the original American progenitors having come from England and settled in Virginia in the early Colonial period. Rev. William H. H. Cook is a man of fine intellectual ken, he having been largely self-educated, and his life has been one of high ideals and exalted service. As a clergyman of the Missionary Baptist Church he gave pastoral service to four different churches in Wyoming County, and in the early days he frequently rode forty miles in a single day on horseback in making visitation to these churches. He was a gallant soldier of the Union during virtually the entire period of the Civil war, and lived up to the full tension of the conflict. In 1865, shortly after the close of the war, he was one of a numerous company of Union soldiers who marched over the mountains and across the valleys to hold a reunion with Confederate soldiers at Welch, the judicial center of McDowell County having at that time been marked by an open field and a single log cabin. In earlier years Mr. Cook was a successful and popular teacher in the schools of this section of the state, and he has ever striven, with much of ability and fine stewardship, to aid and uplift his fellow men. He served two terms in the Lower House of the State Legislature and two terms in the State Senate. He is a republican, but has worked for political peace and amity rather than for strident partisanship. He has been president of the First National Bank at Pineville from the time of its organization, and in all of the relations of life his influence has been benignant and helpful. Of the thirteen children all are living but one. The seven sons and five daughters have all received liberal educations and all have been successful teachers. The devoted and revered mother was a daughter of Rev. Thomas Austin Cooper, a teacher and a clergyman of the Missionary Baptist Church.

After having attended school in a primitive log school house William C. Cook pursued higher studies as student in the Concord Normal School at Athens. He taught his first school at Clarks Gap, near the boundary line between Mercer and Wyoming counties, his salary being $30 a month, and from the same he saved $104 after paying $5 a month for board. He used his earnings to defray his expenses at the normal school, in which he was graduated in 1907. The next year he taught school, and the succeeding year he was bookkeeper for the Tidewater Coal Company at Kimball, McDowell County. In 1909 he was elected county superintendent of schools, and by successive re-elections he has since continued the incumbent of this office, in which he has done an effective work in bringing the school system of the county up to a high standard. He was a member of the first school-textbook commission, 1912, in West Virginia, in 1922 and at the time of this writing is an influential member of the State Board of Education besides which he is a member of the executive committee of the West Virginia State Educational Association.

In the World War period Mr. Cook served as a member of Draft Board No. 2 in McDowell County, besides being active in support of the various patriotic service in the county. He is affiliated with Bluefield Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, is a Master Mason, and he and his wife are zealous members of the Missionary Baptist Church, he having been for a number of years influential in the affairs of this church in his home community and in the state. He has been specially active in Sunday School work and served for years as Sunday School superintendent. His brother Dr. Ulysses G., is a physician and also a clergyman of the Missionary Baptist Church, and resides at Beckley, Raleigh County; another brother, Rev. John Jay Cook is pastor of Calvary Baptist Church in the City of Charleston. Thomas A., another brother, is a member of the faculty of the Concord State Normal School at Athens.

In 1907 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Cook and Miss Lulu Stewart, who was born in Mercer County and who is a daughter of the late C. M. Stewart. Mr. and Mrs. Cook have two children: Eunice and William C., Jr.

JOHN THORBURN MORGAN, member of the historic Morgan family of West Virginia, is a mechanical engineer by profession, and has been closely associated with the upbuilding and success of the Charleston Electrical Supply Company, of which he is sales manager, secretary and one of the directors.

Both he and the present governor, Ephraim F. Morgan, are descendants of Col. Morgan Morgan, and both are descendants of the historic character, David Morgan, a son of Col. Morgan Morgan. Col. Morgan Morgan was born in Wales, was educated in London, and during the reign of William III came to America, living for a time in the Colony of Delaware and subsequently moving to the vicinity of Winchester, Virginia. About 1727 he is credited with having made the first white settlement and having built the first church in what is now Berkeley County, West Virginia. One of his sons, Zackwell Morgan, served as a colonel in the Continental Army during the Revolutionary war, and had previously founded Morgantown. Stephen H. Morgan, who was the grandson of David Morgan, was the father of Smallwood G. Morgan, grandfather of the Charleston business man.

Benjamin S. Morgan, son of Smallwood G. and Oliza (Thorn) Morgan, has been a distinguished figure in West Virginia educational affairs and also as a member of the bar of Charleston. He was born in Marion County in 1854, and graduated from the University of West Virginia at Morgantown in 1878, subsequently taking the law course and receiving the LL. B. degree in 1883. As a youth he took up educational work, and he served as superintendent the public schools of Morgantown from 1878 to 1881 and was county superintendent of schools for Monongalia county from 1881 to 1885. In the general election of 1884 he was democratic candidate for state superintendent of the schools, was elected, and was re-nominated and re-elected in 1888, each time receiving the largest vote given any candidate for state office. Eight years of his service as state superintendent of schools could be characterized as a period of special growth and improvement in the educational facilities and the enlightened opinion of the state regarding the use and development of school facilities. He inaugurated and put into practice a number of features that are still part of the state's policies in regard to the control and management of schools. At the close of his second term as state superintendent Benjamin S. Morgan began the private practice of law at Charleston, where he is still a prominent member of the bar. He married Annie Thoburn, daughter of John and Jane (Miller) Thoburn, both natives of Belfast, Ireland.

John Thoburn Morgan, their son, was born November 25, 1889, at Charleston and was educated in the public schools of his native city, and for three years, from 1906 to 1909, as a student in the University of West Virginia, where he specialized in engineering. In 1909 he entered the service of the Charleston Electrical Supply Company. He was one of the first of the type of modern salesmen who combines technical knowledge and engineering with salesmanship. To his firm he has given the best of his abilities and through various promotions has reached the post of sales manager and secretary of the corporation. From 1913 to 1917 he was employed by the Ohio Brass Company of Mansfield, Ohio, as district sales agent in Southern West Virginia, southwestern Virginia and Eastern Kentucky.

The Charleston Electrical Supply Company was founded in 1902 by the late Howard S. Johnson, who was its president until his death in February, 1921. It is exclusively a wholesale electrical supply house and undoubtedly one of the largest and best equipped concerns of its kind in the county, and has contributed not a little to Charleston's prestige as a wholesale center. Mr. Morgan has a staff of highly trained and expert salesmen covering the territory. These salesmen might more properly be classified as sales engineers, since they carry out the long standing policy of the house that its representatives should be technical men as well as salesmen. There is an efficiency and organization, developed through years of practice, that gives this house justified precedence throughout its trade territory.

Mr. Morgan is an associate member of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, associate member of the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers, associate member of the Institute of Radio Engineers and an active member of the Society of American Military Engineers. Membership in the latter order recalls the two years he spent in the American army during the World war as an engineer. He held the rank of captain. He entered the First Officers' Training Camp at Fort Myer, Virginia, in 1917, joined the Engineer Officers' Training Camp at Elvoir, Virginia (later Camp Humphreys), received further training in the American University Camp at Washington, and went overseas with the Three Hundred and Fifth Engineers of the Eightieth Division, reaching France early in June, 1918. During the summer that marked the climax of the allied efforts against the German armies he was with his division on the British front, in the Argonne, and after the armistice he was ordered to Coblenz, being attached to the staff of the chief engineer of the Third Army. While still in Europe he received his discharge and reached home May 30, 1919. Before returning home he spent two months in France and England on special sales investigation work for the Ohio Brass Company of Mansfield, Ohio.

Mr. Morgan married Miss Rebecca Putney, member of the prominent Putney family of the Kanawha Valley. Through her mother she is a member of the Littlepage family. Her parents were Alexander Mosely and Albira Rebecca (Littlepage) Putney, of Kanawha County. Her father was a grandson of Dr. Richard Ellis Putney, one of the foremost citizens of his day in this valley. Her mother is a sister of the late Adam B. Littlepage, who represented the Charleston District in Congress and was one of the really eminent lawyers and men of affairs of the state.

To Mr. and Mrs. Morgan were born on December 6, 1921, a son and daughter (twins), John Thoburn Morgan, Jr., deceased, and Rebecca Putney Morgan.

FORNEY WADE. One of the leading and successful business men of Morgantown is Forney Wade, who as sales manager of the Central Automobile Corporation is one of the best known and most popular automobile men of the State of West Virginia. Mr. Wade has been identified with this line of business for more than ten years, during which period he has made the most of his opportunities and has taken advantage of his chances to better his personal condition while at the same time adding to the prestige of his company. In this dual ambition he has been eminently successful, and in the meantime has not overlooked or neglected his opportunities to serve his city in the role of public-spirited citizen.

Mr. Wade was born August 14, 1880, near Mount Morris, Pennsylvania, but in Monongalia County, West Virginia, and is a son of the late Jess and Sarah Jane (Clovis) Wade, both of whom were born in the same county. Jess Wade was a life-long farmer and a man of industry and good character, who had the respect of his neighbors and a good record for citizenship. The boyhood and youth of Forney Wade were passed on the home farm, but his ambitions did not run along the line of agricultural endeavor, and after securing a public-school education, at the age of nineteen years, he left home and, learning carpentry, went to the West and spent three years in working at that trade in Illinois and Iowa. Returning to Monongalia County in 1902, in partnership with his brother, Jarrett Wade, he engaged in the building and contracting business, and the association continued until the death of his brother in 1905. Mr. Wade continued in the same line, with a modest degree of success, until 1911, when he changed his activities into another field of endeavor. For some time he had been interested in the automobile industry, and had been cognizant of its constantly-growing importance in the business world and in 1911 he and Ben Garrison, a son of M. S. Garrison and now service manager of the Central Automobile Corporation, joined forces and in a small way engaged in the automobile business at Morgantown as agents for the Central Automobile Company, Inc. In 1917 this company was dissolved, but was immediately reorganized as the Central Automobile Corporation, which now handles Ford cars and parts in the counties of Harrison, Monongalia and Marion with service stations at Morgantown, Fairmont, Mannington and Clarksburg. This $200,000 corporation has the following officers: Dell Roy Richards, president; A. W. Bowhly, vice president and treasurer; D. C. Garrison, secretary; Charles G. Baker, attorney; Forney Wade, sales manager; and Ben Garrison, service manager. In the capacity of sales manager Mr. Wade has contributed materially to the success of this concern and at the same time has evidenced the possession of qualities which place him among the capable automobile men of his section. He is a member of the Masons' Odd Fellows and Elks at Morgantown, and belongs to the Rotary Club and the Chamber of Commerce. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Protestant Church. In 1906 Mr. Wade married Miss Harriette F. Sayer, daughter of William Sayer, of Orion, Illinois.

ARTHUR V. HOENIG. Elsewhere in this volume is a brief history of The Carter Oil Company, one of the oldest and most extensive oil producing companies operating in the state of West Virginia. This company was incorporated in 1893, and just four years later Arthur V. Hoenig entered its service in the home offices at Titusville, Pennsylvania, and with the exception of a few years since has been continuously with that corporation.

He was born at Titusville, Pennsylvania, June 29, 1877, son of Joseph and Mary (Mayer) Hoenig. His parents were born and reared in Germany, coming to the United States in 1852, and were married after arrival in this country. Arthur V. Hoenig grew up in his native city, attended public schools there, and finished his education in Eastman's Business College at Poughkeepsie, New York. In 1897 he became a clerk with The Carter Oil Company, and soon was transferred from their main business offices in Titusville, Pennsylvania, to their field headquarters at Sistersville, West Virginia. After about a year in the Sistersville offices he was successively engaged in the Sistersville Yard in connection with shipping; in field work in connection with leasehold operations, drilling, pumping, etc.; and in the land department, obtaining leases for drilling and development purposes. Subsequently he was returned to producing operations, first as assistant superintendent and then as district superintendent of general oil well operations.

In 1903 Mr. Hoenig, together with D. A. Bartlett, of Marietta, Ohio, engaged independently in the business of prospecting for oil in Ohio and West Virginia. The partnership was dissolved in 1904, and Mr. Hoenig, with others from Titusville, entered the Oklahoma oil fields, where he was similarly engaged for a year.

Early in 1906 he resumed his connection with The Carter Oil Company as superintendent of properties in the Woodsfield, Ohio District. The company in 1909 transferred him to Bremen, Ohio, in a similar capacity. In 1916 he was sent to Tulsa, Oklahoma, and the same year transferred to Wichita, Kansas, and in both those cities was superintendent of The Carter Oil Company (Western Division) properties.

In 1919 Mr. Hoenig had charge for the Standard Oil Company (New Jersey) of a party of geologists in a survey of Venezuela and Colombia, South America, for the purpose of taking up land for oil development. In May of the same year Mr. Hoenig returned to the United States and made his official report, but in July again returned to South America. In September, 1919, he returned to the United States, and since October of that year has been located at Parkersburg as vice president and general manager of the Eastern Division of The Carter Oil Company, and also interested in developing the Standard Oil Company (New Jersey) properties acquired in Venezuela and other foreign countries.

Mr. Hoenig is a republican in politics. He is a Catholic and is a member of the Rotary, Country, Blennerhasset and Elks Club at Parkersburg. In 1905, at Sistersville, West Virginia, he married Miss Grace E. Marsh. They have two children, Karl M. and Martha J.

THE CARTER OIL COMPANY. Col. John J. Carter, an oil operator of Pennsylvania, came to West Virginia in 1893, and on his own account bought producing oil properties in Tyler County, West Virginia, at and in the vicinity of the town of Sistersville, known as the Victor, Shay, Ludvig, Mooney and Gillespie holdings. On May 1, 1893, The Carter Oil Company was incorporated and organized as a subsidiary of the Standard Oil Company (New Jersey), and Colonel Carter's holdings were transferred to the new company, its officers being: Col. John J. Carter, president and general manager, and George A. Eckbert, secretary-treasurer. The main office was at Titusville, Pennsylvania, until August, 1915, when Colonel Carter and Mr. Eckbert retired and were succeeded by A. F. Corwin, president; C. B. Ware, treasurer, and A. Clarke Bedford, secretary. F. C. Harrington became a vice president in 1915. For a number of years prior to that time Mr. Harrington had been general superintendent of the company, with offices at Sistersville. The general offices were removed to Sistersville in 1915, and in 1918 to Parkersburg, the present headquarters. Also, in 1915, Eastern and Western Divisions were created, the Eastern Division comprising Ohio, West Virginia, Kentucky and Tennessee, the Western comprising Kansas, Oklahoma, New Mexico and Wyoming. The present officers of the company are: A. F. Corwin, president; A. V. Hoenig, vice president and general manager of the Eastern Division; R. M. Young, vice president and general manager of the Western Division; C. B. Ware, treasurer; and Richardson Pratt, secretary.

The oil wells in the Sistersville field produce large quantities of water with the oil, and about the time Colonel Carter became interested it was generally thought by oil operators that the oil could not be produced on account of the water. It was Colonel Carter's belief that systematic and continuous pumping would overcome this condition, and his belief was justified by subsequent operations. The well in this field still produce much water with the oil, but large number of wells are still producing oil in sufficient quantities to warrant their operation. From that section the company extended its holdings until it became one of the largest oil producers in West Virginia, its principal operations being in Wetzel, Tyler, Pleasants, Ritchie, Doddridge, Roane, Jackson, Lincoln, Calhoun and Kanawha counties, West Virginia, and also large operations in Ohio and Kentucky, in addition to the operations of the Western Division in Oklahoma, Kansas, Wyoming and New Mexico.

About 1910 experiments demonstrated that gasoline could be produced from the natural gas from oil wells, by what known as the Compression process. Casing-head gas from oil wells is especially rich in gasoline, and as such gas was for the most part at that time a waste product its utilization was desirable, not only to the producer but also to the consumer. W. H. Cooper, employed as a mechanical engineer was given charge of this work, and in 1911 he constructed the company's first Compression Gasoline Plant at Sistersville. The company now has upward of thirty compression plants and several plants which utilize what is known as the Absorption process for producing gasoline from natural gas. The production of gasoline from natural gas has become one of the important features of the company's business.

In its operations for oil the company has drilled many wells which produce gas only, the product from which is increasingly valuable.

REECE SHELBY, former owner of the business conducted under the title of the Shelby Shoe Company at Morgantown, Monongalia County, is one of the progressive business men and representative citizens of the fine little city that is the judicial center of this county. Mr. Shelby was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, and is a representative of one of the old and honored families of that county, his paternal grandparents, Reece and Minerva (Reppert) Shelby having been born in this county, near the West Virginia line, and Mr. Shelby having later become a prosperous merchant at Greensboro, that county. Their son, Walter, was born in the same part of Greene County as were his parents March 31, 1847, and as a young man he married Matilda Patterson, who was born near Sharpsburg, that state, February 12, 1849, a daughter of John W. and Sarah (Bugh) Patterson. Mrs. Shelby was a resident of Morgantown, West Virginia, at the time of her death, July 7, 1915. Walter Shelby was for a prolonged period a merchant at Greensboro, Pennsylvania, and thereafter became a sales man of farm machinery and fertilizers. In 1903 he removed with his family to Morgantown, West Virginia, to afford his children better educational advantages, and for several years he here held a clerical position in the Mississippi Glass Works. Since 1912 he has lived retired in his home at Easton, near Morgantown. He is a member of the Baptist Church, as was also his wife. Of their children, Reece, subject of this sketch, was born at Greensboro, Pennsylvania, May 12, 1888, and he was afforded the advantage of the public schools of that place and of Morgantown, West Virginia, in which latter city he for a time attended the commercial department of the state university. For several years thereafter he held an office position in the Mississippi Glass Works, and he next became a clerk for the American Sheet & Tin Plate Works, three years later marking his promotion to the position in the warehouse and pickling department.

In 1915 Mr. Shelby became associated with C. R. Huston in the purchase of the business of the J. M. Waters Shoe Company on High Street, and the business was then incorporated as the Waters Shoe Company. In 1918, L. E. Price purchased Mr. Huston's interest, and in September, 1919, reincorporation was effected, under the title of the Shelby Shoe Company. Shortly afterward Mr. Shelby purchased the interest of Mr. Price, and he was sole owner of the substantial business, which represented one of the two largest shoe houses in Morgantown until October 15, 1921, when he sold out. He is now sales agent for the Delco light system for Monongalia County and for part of Weston County.

Mr. Shelby was formerly vice president of the Morgantown Business Men's Association, and was a director of the organization at the time when it was merged into the Chamber of Commerce, of which he has been a director from the time of its organization. He is also a progressive member of the Rotary Club. His basic Masonic affiliation is with Morgantown Union Lodge No. 4, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and in the Scottish Rite of Masonry he has received the thirty-second degree in the Consistory of Wheeling, where also he holds Membership in Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is a member also of Athens Lodge No. 3, Knights of Pythias, and Morgantown Lodge No. 411, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

September 11, 1910, recorded the marriage of Mr. Shelby and Miss Annabel Jones, who was born at Rivesville, Marion county, this state, a daughter of Haynes and Isabelle (Howell) Jones, both of whom are deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Shelby have five daughters, whose names are here recorded: Eleanor Gertrude, Annabel Louise, Sarah Katharyn, Virginia Hope, and Frances Genevieve.

LINVILLE CHRISTOPHER MASSEY, president of the Kanawha County Bank, has for many years been active in Charleston in behalf of its material and civic development and also in public affairs, especially through his service or two terms as county clerk.

The Massey family has been in old Virginia and West Virginia since Colonial times. His great-grandfather, William Massey, was a native of old Virginia, was a farmer and planter, and died in Raleigh County, West Virginia, in 1855. His children were Steel, Jackson, Henry, Floyd, William, Clark, Ruhama, Martha and Mrs. Larkin F. Allen. Steel Massey, grandfather of the Charleston banker, was born in Raleigh County, where he spent his life as a farmer. He married Caroline Cantley and their three children were George W., Henry and Mary. George W. Massey, who was born in Raleigh County in 1851, owned one of the substantial farms in that locality, and was widely known over that region for his hospitality and his influence for good. He died of typhoid fever in November, 1895. His wife was Lydia Rosabelle Acord, who was born near Charleston, daughter of William C. Acord. The children of their marriage were: Romanza, L. Christopher, Robert L. and Harry J., twins, Lura B., Arizona, Calvin W., Virginia A. and Ettie.

Linville Christopher Massey was born on his father's farm in Raleigh County, April 26, 1878. He was educated in the public schools and the Concord Normal, and for thirteen years his chief work was in the educational field. Mr. Massey as a young man had the unusual distinction of having a town named in his honor, Masseyville, and his brother, C. W. Massey, became the first postmaster. Mr. Massey himself was active in business as manager of the Black Band Coal & Coke Company. While so much of his life has been devoted to public service represented in teaching and other public offices, Mr. Massey is a thoroughly able business man and has been identified with the coal business, real estate and banking. A number of years ago he became interested in Charleston real estate development. One of his most notable successes was the promotion of the U. C. Massey subdivision of Montrose, a beautiful residential area on the south bank of the Kanawha River, directly across from the main lower section of Charleston. His own beautiful home and grounds are there, and many other fine homes distinguish it as one of the best residential sections of Charleston.

Mr. Massey's public career began with an appointment as justice of the peace, to fill out an unexpired term, in 1903. In 1905 he was elected on the republican ticket to the State Legislature, serving two years. He was appointed member of the Board of Education in 1907. In the same year he served as chairman of the Republican Senatorial Committee, and has also served as chairman of the Third Congressional Committee. He was elected and in 1908 entered upon his duties as county clerk of Kanawha County, and six years later was re-elected, but at the close of his second term, having given twelve years to the duties of the office, he refused longer to be a candidate, and had the satisfaction of leaving the office in a condition of systematic good order and with the general financial credit of the county higher than ever before.

His term as county clerk ended January 1, 1920, and since then Mr. Massey has devoted his entire time to real estate and the active direction of the Kanawha County Bank, of which he is president. This bank opened for business March 5, 1919, and has a most advantageous location on the corner of Virginia and Court streets, diagonally across from the magnificent new City Hall and just half a block from the Kanawha County courthouse. The bank is, therefore, in the commercial and civic center of Charleston. Under Mr. Massey's skillful management the Kanawha County Bank has enjoyed a highly satisfactory growth and development, and is one of the substantial financial institutions of the state. He is also president of the Community Savings & Loan Company.

Mr. Massey is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, a Knight Templar, and a Noble of the Mystic Shrine. He is also an Odd Fellow, a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and a Knight of Pythias.

He and Mrs. Massey are members of the Presbyter-ian Church. March 1, 1904, he married Miss Mary J. Mathews, who was born near Charleston and was educated in the public schools of that city. She is a granddaughter of Guy P. Mathews, and a daughter of Capt. J. W. and Josephine (Walker) Mathews. Both her father and grandfather were Confederate soldiers, her father being a captain in the Southern army. Mr. and Mrs. Massey have three sons, Guy Mathews, Eunastee Lee and Linville C., Jr.

MARSHALL W. OGDEN, a vital and representative member of the bar of Marion County, is engaged in the successful practice of his profession in the City of Fairmont, the county seat.

He was born at Prospect Valley, Harrison County, this state, January 26, 1873, and is a son of Van Buren and Marey (Talkington) Ogden. In assured genealogical records the lineage of the American branch of the Ogden family traces back to Maryland and its early settlement. At Port Tobacco in that commonwealth we find Jonathan Ogden, who from a liberal research of genealogical records is believed to be a lineal descendant of John Ogden, the Pilgrim, who came to America in 1640 from England and settled on the southern shore of Long Island. Jonathan Ogden married Jane Howell, daughter of Paul and Mary Howell, of Howell's Delight, Maryland. Among his ten children was a son, Thomas, born September 30, 1775, who married Elizabeth Moore at Port Tobacco in 1793, and with his family, including his father, mother and eight of his brothers and sisters, came to what is now West Virginia and settled near Enterprise in Harrison County, where he became a successful trader and accumulated an appreciable estate. His father and mother are buried in the Hardesty Cemetery at that place. The Barnes, Richardson, Martin, Robey and Bigler families of the Upper Monongahela Valley can trace their ancestry to the daughters of Jonathan Ogden. Nathan Ogden, son of Thomas, was born in Harrison County, near Enterprise, June 14, 1811. He married Jane Duncan, of Prospect Valley, and settled in that neighborhood. He became prominently identified with early lumbering operations in that section, and as owner and operator of a water power sawmill he shipped lumber, cereals and other products down the Monongahela River in flat boats to market.

Van Buren, son of Nathan Ogden and father of the subject of this review, was born November 27, 1837, became a skilled blacksmith and followed his trade until 1873, when he engaged in the mercantile business with Benjamin W. Harbert at Prospect Valley, and after eight years of successful business their store was destroyed by fire. He then turned his attention to farm enterprises, though in later years he again engaged in mercantile pursuits. He was appointed postmaster at that place by President Grant, which position he held until 1904, when the post office was abolished and placed on rural free delivery. He married September 29, 1864, Marcy E., daughter of Abraham and Elizabeth W. (Hartley) Talkington, pioneer residents of Marion County, near Mannington. Though born on the 27th day of February, 1835, Mrs. Ogden is still in fair health. Van Buren Ogden died January 26, 1911, known as a business man of ability and as a sterling citizen well worthy of the popular esteem which was ever accorded to him. Of the children the following brief record is available: Savilla A., born January 28, 1866, married G. D. Shreve on June 30, 1887, and she died June 4, 1889, their only child, Goff D., having died in April of the year of the first anniversary of his birth. William B., born April 13, 1867, became a prominent and successful educator, and died unmarried, April 7, 1893. Ellery Ellsworth, born October 19, 1869, married, May 16, 1893, Miss Lilly Weekly, and to them have been born five children, Paul G., born December 15, 1895, married May Matthews; Ira D., born July 25, 1897, married Blanch Hildreth; William F., born October 12, 1899; Zabell Flora, born March 5, 1905; and Oran Maxin, their youngest son. Marshall W., the subject of this review, was the next in order of birth of the children of Van Buren and Marcy E. Ogden. Emma Z., born August 24, 1874, was united in marriage to James D. Robinson, December 21, 1893, to which union were born two children, David W., born June 12, 1895, married Willa B. Robinson, and they have one child, Virginia Lee; and Vera M., born November 11, 1900.

After completing the curriculum of the public schools and teaching two years therein at Prospect Valley, Marshall W. Ogden continued his studies in the State Normal School at Fairmont, and in 1897 graduated from the law department of the University of West Virginia. His admission to the bar was virtually coincident with his reception of the degree of Bachelor of Laws, and he forthwith opened an office at Fairmont as partner with Ross A. Watts, which partnership was continued until 1901, when the same was dissolved by mutual agreement, since which time he has continued in the successful practice of law, and has secured status as one of the able and successful members of the Marion County Bar. He was for two years acting president of the Marion County Bar Association, and is an active member of the West Virginia Bar Association. He is a loyal advocate and supporter of the principles of the republican party, but the only elective office which he has consented to hold was as member of the City Council. He and his family are affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and he was president of its Business Men's Bible Class in 1919-20.

On the 16th day of June, 1901, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Ogden and Lelia, daughter of Thomas and Amanda Hawker, she having been born in Harrison County, February 25, 1878. Mr. Hawker was a prosperous business man, and was president of Farmers Bank of Shinnston for twenty years prior to his death, October 10, 1921. Mr. and Mrs. Ogden have one son, Herbert Leland, born September 2, 1906.

HENRY SANFORD YOST, M. D. This is a brief record of a family of physicians whose professional work through three generations has been done in Marion County. The name is one of honorable distinction in citizenship as well as in the profession.

The American ancestor of this branch of the Yost family was John Yost, who immigrated from Bavaria in 1773, landing at New York City. A year later he removed to Elizabeth, New Jersey, then to Treulton in the same state, and for several years was a soldier in the war for independence. After that war he came over the mountains and was one of the pioneers in Monongalia County, on Indian Creek. At Elizabeth, New Jersey, he married Katie Snuiche (Snook), of Holland and English descent. A son of this pioneer couple, also named John Yost, was born near Cumberland, Maryland, in 1775, and spent his active life in Monongalia County, where he died in 1850. He married Susie Dawson, who was born in 1780 and died in 1864. Aaron Yost, son of John and Susie Yost, was born in Mo-nongalia County in 1800 and died in 1879. His wife was Sarah Pitzer, daughter of John Pitzer. This is a brief account of the first three generations, all of whom lived West Virginia.

The fourth generation was represented by Dr. Jorier Yost, son of Aaron Yost. He was born in Marion County, West Virginia, June 11, 1833. Early in life he took up the study of medicine with Dr. Fielding H. Yost, of Fairview, attended lectures of the Eclectic Medical School of Cincinnati and throughout his active life was a capable and highly minded practitioner of medicine in the Fairview community. During the Civil war he was made a prisoner by the Federal troops. On October 30, 1867, Dr. Jorier Yost married H. H. Neptune. She was born in Marion County, May 1, 1848, daughter of Samuel and Rebecca (Raber) Neptune. Her father, Samuel Neptune, was a son of Henry Neptune and a grandson of Henry Neptune, who came from Greece in 1760, settling in Virginia, and some years later bore arms with the colonists in their struggle for independence.

Dr. Henry Sanford Yost, a son of Dr. Jorier Yost, was born at Fairview, Marion County, April 28, 1869, and while he is now in the prime of his powers and activities as a typical physician and surgeon, he has two sons enrolled in the profession and a third preparing therefor. He had liberal education, attending the Fairmont State Normal School in 1884-5, graduated in 1888 from the Central Normal College of Danville, and in 1890, graduated from the Eclectic College of Indianapolis. For a number of years Doctor Yost practiced his profession at Fairview, but in September, 1905, removed to Fairmont. He handles an extensive general practice and is also a member of the medical staff of Cook Hospital. He did special post-graduate work during 1900-01 and 1906-07 in the Eclectic Medical College of Cincinnati. From 1892 to 1896 Doctor Yost was a United States Pension Examiner, and is surgeon for Monongahela Railway Company.

He is a member and a trustee of West Virginia State Eclectic Medical Association, a member of the National Eclectic Medical Association, and is also affiliated with the Marion County, West Virginia State and American Medical Associations. His fraternal affiliations are with Fairmont Lodge No. 9, A. F. and A. M., Orient Chapter No. 1, R. A. M., Crusade Commandery No. 6, K. T. and Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine of Wheeling; is a past grand of Mill City Lodge No. 110, I. O. O. F., of Fairview has been a member of the Grand Lodge of the state in that order; and is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and Knights of the Maccabees. While living at Fairview, Doctor Yost served as mayor of that city on term, and has since been a member of the Fairmont City Council.

On August 28, 1890, he married Leane Phillips. Mrs. Yost was born January 1, 1869, daughter of Remembrance Lindsay Phillips, of Greene County, Pennsylvania. Her father made a record of teaching school in Pennsylvania for thirty terms, and then bought a farm near Fairview, Marion County, where he lived until his death in May, 1898, at the age of fifty-seven. Following this paragraph it is appropriate to give briefly a record of each of the three sons of Doctor and Mrs. Yost.

Herschel R., the oldest, was born June 1, 1891, graduated from the Fairmont High School in 1911, received his M. D. degree from the Eclectic Medical College of Cincinnati in 1915, spent six months in Seton Hospital of Cincinnati and twelve months as house surgeon at Bethesda Hospital after practising for a few months at Carthage, Ohio, he returned home and has since been associated with his father at Fairmont. He is a member of the staff of Cook Hospital and is mine surgeon at Rivesville for the Monongahela Railway. Dr. Herschel Yost is a member of the Marion County and the American Medical associations, the National Eclectic Medical Association and the Southern Ohio Eclectic Medical Association. Fraternally he is affiliated with Acacia Lodge, A. F. and A. M., and with the Scottish Rite and Shrine, and is also a member of the Elks.

Three days after the United States entered the World war he applied for enlistment, but was rejected on account of physical disabilities. In May, 1918, he again volunteered and was accepted and commissioned first lieutenant in the Medical Corps. During the same month he was called to duty at Camp Jackson, South Carolina, in September was transferred to Camp Sevier, Greenville, South Carolina, and January, 1919, was returned to Camp Jackson for duty. The Demobilization Board for examination of returned officers, and in March, 1919, gained his honorable discharge and soon afterward resumed his private practice in Fairmont.

J. E. Kesterson

The second son, Jorier Yost, born December 12, 1894, graduated in 1918 from the Eclectic Medical College of Cincinnati, and was on duty at the Metropolitan Hospital, New York City, awaiting call to the service, but the war closed before he received active detail. He is now in practice with a father and brother.

Paul Yost, the youngest of the family, was born November, 1897, received his A. B. degree in 1920 from West Virginia University, and is now in his junior year of medicine at West Virginia University.

JOSEPH ROSIER, who has been president of the Fairmont State Normal School for a number of years, has been a leader in West Virginia educational affairs for many years. His youth he made a definite start of education as a teacher, and it has been a calling that has absorbed his whole souled enthusiasm and energy ever since.

Mr. Rosier was born in Harrison County, West Virginia January 24, 1870, son of John W. and Rebecca (Miller) Rosier. His parents, now deceased, were also natives of Harrison County. The Rosier family was established in America a number of generations ago by an ancestor from Germany. The mother of John W. Rosier was a Ratcliff, who came from Scotland with her parents when she was six years old, the family settling in Harrison County. Rebecca Miller was a daughter of David Miller, who married a Swiger.

Joseph Rosier attended the common schools of Harrison County and Salem Academy, is a graduate of Salem College, and that institution conferred upon him the honorary degree of A. M. in 1915. Mr. Rosier did his first work as a teacher in the grade schools of Salem as principal in 1890. He remained there three years, for one year was a member of the Harrison County Board of Examiners, was county superintendent of schools for two years and for two years as an instructor at Salem College. For one year he was a member of the faculty of the Glenville State Normal School.

While his influence as a school man has become widely extended over the state, Mr. Rosier for over twenty years has had his chief work in the City of Fairmont. He became superintendent of the public schools of that city in 1900. He held that post fifteen years, a period that coincided with the greatest development of the school facilities of Fairmont. He became president of the Fairmont State Normal School in 1915.

Mr. Rosier has been an instructor at Teachers Institutes in nearly every county in the state. He is a member of the National Educational Association, of the National Council of Normal School Presidents, and of the West Virginia State Educational Association, and has been secretary and president of this state association. His interests have called him to active co-operation with movements outside school life and work. He is president of the local association of Associated Charities, vice president of the local Young Men's Christian Association, an organization with which he has been identified since its beginning, is a member of the Official Board of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, and is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and Ancient Order of United Workmen. During the World War Mr. Rosier was food commissioner for Marion County.

August 14, 1895, he married Iva Randolph, of Salem, West Virginia. She was born October 15, 1872, daughter of Preston Fitz and Henrietta (Meredith) Randolph. Her father was a successful teacher in West Virginia for more than a quarter of a century. Mrs. Rosier's great-grandfather, Randolph, was an ensign in the Continental Army during the Revolutionary war. Mr. and Mrs. Rosier have three children: Nellie, born May 29, 1898, is the wife of Paul Coffee, formerly of Fairmont, their present home being at Canton, Ohio. Robert, born April 10, 1902, is a sophomore in the engineering department of West Virginia University. Mary Josephine, born December 5, 1905, is a student in the Fairmont High School.

HOWARD JOSEPH ROSS was born, reared and achieved his first business success in Ohio, but for nearly twenty years has been a factor in the commercial life of Fairmont and also a progressive leader in some of the larger movements for that community's welfare and advancement.

Mr. Ross was born on a farm near Cadiz, Harrison County, Ohio, February 8, 1878. On the same farm on February 20, 1850, was born his father, Rev. S. F. Ross, who was the son of Joseph and Catherine Ross, natives of Pennsylvania and early settlers of Harrison County. Amanda Welch, who became the wife of Rev. S. F. Ross, was born on a neighboring farm in Harrison County, December 10, 1853, daughter of Joseph and Margaret Welch. Rev. S. F. Ross was reared on a farm, attended public schools, then Seio College, Seio, Ohio, an institution now incorporated in Mount Union College, and after several years' experience as a teacher and while still a young man he entered the ministry. For many years he has been one of the able workers in the Ohio Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is now serving as pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Wadsworth, Summit County.

Howard J. Ross spent his early life on the Ross farm, was educated in the public schools, and for a time was a student in Seio College. During 1898-1900, he attended Muskingum College in Ohio. While he was there Joseph Leiter, of Chicago, engineering the great wheat "corner," and young Ross, seeing the opportunity to make some money, bought wheat and carried the deal through to a considerable profit. This gave him his initial capital for his business career. His earnings from wheat he invested during the development of the oil fields around Seio, Ohio, and here, again, his investment and judgment were profitable. About that time he engaged in the furniture business at Byesville, Ohio, in partnership with Edward Kennedy, subsequently bought out his partner, and soon afterward sold the business. During 1901 he was a student in the law department of Ohio State University.

After his university career Mr. Ross became a traveling salesman for a furniture company, with headquarters at Zanesville, Ohio. In December, 1904, he came to Fairmont, during a vacation, to manage the Fairmont Furniture Company. Ultimately he bought a half interest in that business, the firm becoming Nuzum & Ross, and in 1911, upon the retirement of Mr. Nuzum, Mr. Ross incorporated the Ross Furniture Company, of which he is now president and owner. This is one of the very special business enterprises of Fairmont. Mr. Ross became interested in the Moon Oil & Gas Company in 1907, and since 1915 has been active manager of this corporation.

He was holding the office of president of the Fairmont Chamber of Commerce when the campaign was inaugurated for building the magnificent new bridge across the Monongahela River, connecting East and West Fairmont. He was twice president of the Chamber of Commerce, and was also one of the organizers and president of the Fairmont Business Men's Association and is a member of the West Virginia State Business Men's Association. Mr. Ross is a member and treasurer of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Fairmont, belongs to the Rotary Club, and is affiliated with Fairmont Lodge No. 9, A. F. and A. M.

On October 21, 1908, he married Miss Lenore Brahm, a native of Terra Alta, West Virginia, where she was born January 26, 1882. Her parents were Lynn F. and Elizabeth Brahm, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Ross have two children: Joseph Finley, born October 11, 1911, and Elizabeth Elliot, born February 1, 1914.

GEORGE E. KESTERSON. Among those prominently known in the profession of law at Huntington and equally recognized as leaders in the coal industry is George E. Kesterson. During the twenty-seven years that he has been identified with affairs in this state he has made numerous important connections and entrenched himself firmly in the confidence of his associates. He was born at Belpre, Washington County, Ohio, October 7, 1867, and is a son of William Franklin and Melissa (Treadway) Kesterson.

The Kesterson family originated in Germany, whence came the great-grandfather of George E. Kesterson, who first located at Baltimore, Maryland, where, upon the advent of the War of the Revolution, he joined General Washington's army and fought bravely during the winning of American independence. His son, Willis Kesterson, the grandfather of George E. Kesterson, was born at Waynesboro, Virginia, where he lived practically all of his life, being a well-known and prosperous planter of his community. He maintained the family's military record by fighting with the American troops during the Mexican war. Late in life he went to Lubek, West Virginia, where he died prior to the birth of his grandson.

William Franklin Kesterson was born in June, 1825, at Waynesboro, Augusta County, Virginia, where he was reared and educated and where he early adopted the vocation of planter. Later he located at Parkersburg, this state, where he secured employment at the trade of cooper. In 1866 he removed to Belpre, Ohio, where he also followed the same trade, and through industry and good management increased his capital until he was able to purchase land. Eventually he became a successful agriculturist and owned considerable property at Belpre at the time of his death, January 4, 1916, when he had reached the great age of ninety-one years, eight months, twenty-one days. He was a democrat in his political convictions, and a member and liberal supporter of the Methodist Episcopal Church, North. Mr. Kesterson married Miss Melissa Treadway, who was born in Wood County, Virginia (now West Virginia), and died at Belpre, Ohio. They became the parents of seven children: Willis II., who resides at Newark, Ohio, and is an agriculturist; Hester, who died at Somerset, Kentucky, as the wife of Hosea Johnson, also deceased, who was a farmer of Washington County, Ohio, and at Somerset; Hellenia, who died at Rockland, Ohio, as the wife of John Waterman, township clerk at Rockland; Sylvester V., who is engaged in farming in Washington County, Ohio; Jeanetta, who died at Rockland, Ohio, as the wife of Edward Ames, an agriculturist, who later died in Iowa; William Franklin, who is engaged in farming at Rockland, Ohio; and George E., of this record.

George E. Kesterson attended the graded and high schools of Belpre, Ohio, and after graduating from the latter entered upon the study of law. He was admitted to the bar at Sistersville, West Virginia, in 1896, and practiced there until 1906, then spending two years at Parkersburg and a like period at Columbus, Ohio. During a part of this time, however, he was handling undeveloped coal lands in Kentucky. Coming to Huntington in 1910, he opened a law office and has since been engaged in the practice of his profession at this place, where he has gained a large and representative clientele and established an excellent reputation for sound ability and thorough professional knowledge. He is operating a coal mine at Hawk's Nest, West Virginia, and is a stockholder in the United Pocahontas Coal Corporation. His offices are situated at 1220 First National Bank Building. Mr. Kesterson is a democrat in politics, but not a seeker after political preferment. Fraternally he is affiliated with Huntington Lodge No. 347, L. O. O. M., and Huntington Lodge No. 33, K. of P.

On February 5, 1912, Mr. Kesterson was united in marriage with Miss Maude Mayfield, at Catlettsburg, Kentucky. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wood Mayfield, reside at Ashland, Kentucky, Mr. Mayfield being a retired agriculturist. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Kesterson: Josephine Virginia, born May 5, 1915, who is attending school, and William Woodrow, born November 22, 1921.

GIBBON M. SLAUGHTER, superintendent for the Thacker Coal Mining Company, with executive headquarters at Rose Siding, Mingo County, has been identified with mining activities in the coal fields of this section of the state since December 23, 1913, and has won advancement through effective service.

Mr. Slaughter was born at Washington, Virginia, March 28, 1876, a son of Francis L. and Sue F. (Motley) Slaughter. The father likewise was born at Washington in 1834, and there his death occurred February 11, 1902. The mother was born in Caroline County, Virginia, December 11, 1841, and since the death of her husband she has continued to maintain her home at Washington, that state. Francis L. Slaughter gave his active life to farm enterprise in his native county, was influential in community affairs and served as magistrate and school trustee. He was a zealous member of the Baptist Church, as is also his widow. Mr. Slaughter was a gallant soldier of the Confederacy during the entire period of the Civil war, he having been a member of Company B (Captain Duncan), of the Sixth Virginia Cavalry, in the command of Major Grimsby, and Col. John S. Green. He was made a non-commissioned officer and he took part in many important engagements, including the battles of the Wilderness, Winchester, Manassas and Front Royal, or Cedarville, he sides the many engagements in which his command was involved in the Valley of Virginia. He had two horses killed under him, and the skin on one of his wrists was grazed by a bullet, but he was never captured or severely wounded. He was a descendant of one of two brothers of the Slaughter family who came from England in the earlier part of the eighteenth century and settled in Kentucky and Virginia, respectively, the first governor of Kentucky having been a Slaughter, and a representative of the name in Virginia having been a member of the American navy in the War of the Revolution.

Gibbon M. Slaughter, one of a family of four sons, all of whom are living, attended the public schools of his native town until he was eighteen years old, and thereafter he continued his association with farm enterprise in Virginia until he had attained to the age of twenty-five years. When the Spanish-American war was initiated he enlisted and was trained for service, but the war came to a close without his being called to the stage of conflict. On October 28, 1901, he went to Cincinnati, Ohio, where he found employment in connection with the wholesale and retail coal business in selling the output of the Glenalum and Thacker mines in West Virginia. He was six years in office and two years on the road as a salesman, his territory extending from Michigan to South Carolina. In November, 1909, he came to the West Virginia coal fields in the capacity of shipping agent for the Glenalum mine. Two years later he was made assistant superintendent, and after holding this position two years he became assistant to S. G. McNulty, general manager of the Thacker Coal Mining Company, at Rose Siding. Two years later he was promoted to his present office at this place, that of superintendent.

In politics Mr. Slaughter is inclined to consider men and measures rather than to be constrained by strict partisan lines. He registered for service in the World war but was instructed to continue the production of coal, the fuel industry being one of vital importance during the war period. He is affiliated with the Masonic Blue Lodge at Washington, Virginia; with Rappahannock Chapter No. 33, Royal Arch Masons, at the same place; with Ivanhoe Commandery No. 19, Knights Templars, at Bluefield, West Virginia; and with the Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Charleston, this state. Mr. Slaughter's name is still enrolled on the roster of eligible bachelors in Mingo County.

GEORGE EDMUND PRICE recently passed the golden anniversary of his admission to the bar. Fifty years a lawyer, he has spent all but the first few years in West Virginia, his native state, and for a third of a century has stood among the leaders of the bar of Charleston. The progenitors of the family settled in ryland in early Colonial days, and the great-grandfather, Thomas Price, served as a colonel in the American army during the Revolutionary war.

George E. Price was born on a farm near Moorefield, Hardy County, West Virginia, November 9, 1848, and of Welsh ancestry. His family was a substantial one, with professional connections, and he acquired a liberal education in preparation for his chosen profession. He attended Georgetown University at Washington, where he enjoyed many of the college honors. In December, 1871, he was admitted to the bar in Frederick County, Maryland, where he studied law with his great uncle, James M. Coale. In 1875 he returned to West Virginia, and practiced at Keyser in Mineral County until 1880, when he located at Charleston. In the meantime, in 1882, he was elected a member of the State Senate, and served continuously for eight years and was presiding officer of the Senate in the sessions of 1885-1887 and 1889.

On removing to Charleston Mr. Price was associated in practice with Hon. S. L. Flournoy until the latter's death. He is now senior member of the law firm Price, Smith, Spilman and Clay, one of the most highly accredited firms of the state bar. The group of attorneys associated with Mr. Price in this firm include Harrison Smith, Robert S. Spilman, Buckner Clay, Arthur B. Leach, David C. Howard, T. Brooke Price, John J. Preston and Frederick L. Thomas.

In the settlement of the boundary dispute between Virginia and Maryland Mr. Price was selected by Governor Fleming to represent the State of West Virginia before the Supreme Court. His brief, pleadings and oral arguments in that case were the contributing factors in the final decision, and the case became one of importance beyond immediate results as a precedent settling similar questions. Mr. Price was one of the organizers of the Kanawha National Bank and also the Kanawha Banking and Trust Company, of which he is a director and vice president. In and out of his profession he has exercised an important influence in the industrial developments through the state.

In June, 1878, Mr. Price married Miss Sallie A. Dorsey, of Howard County, Maryland. Of their children two are lawyers. For many years Mr. Price has served as a ruling elder in the Presbyterian Church. While he is not the Nestor of the Charleston bar, he has long been regarded as one of its most honored members, with unquestioned ability and versatility of talent and personal character that mark him as one of the eminent men of the state.

RICHARD EARL MCCRAY is a graduate doctor of dental surgery and for over a dozen years has enjoyed prestige in the leading practice in Fairmont, where he has been widely known for his business enterprise.

Doctor McCray was born at Fairmont, October 15, 1886, of Charles Edward and Martha Virginia (Prichard) McCray. His grandparents John and Rebecca (Cunningham) McCray, were also natives of Marion County, and maternal grandparents, Thomas and Harriet (Morse) McCray, were born in the same county, so that more than two generations of these worthy families have been represented in this section of West Virginia. Charles E. McCray was born in Marion County in 1850, and has spent his life there. By trade he is a harness-maker, an occupation he followed in Marion County, but later became a dentist at Fairmont and is now living retired. His wife, Martha Virginia Prichard, was born in the Paw Paw District of Marion County in 1855.

Richard E. McCray acquired a public school education at Fairmont, graduated from high school in 1904, spent a year at the Fairmont State Normal School, in 1905 attended the Ohio State University at Columbus, and took a course in dental surgery at the Starling, Ohio, Dental College, now incorporated in the Ohio State University. He was graduated with the degree of D. D. S. in 1909, and soon afterward took up active practice at Fairmont. Doctor McCray is a member of the West Virginia State Dental Society, the Monongahela Valley Dental Society, of which he was president in 1919, and is the present secretary of the Marion County School Dental Clinic Society.

One of the widely known business enterprises having its home at Fairmont is The McCray System Advertising Company, Inc., with which Doctor McCray has been actively associated for a number of years, and of which he was formerly president. He is now president of the firm McCray & McCray, theatrical enterprises, an organization founded in 1908 by him in association with his brother, Frank C. McCray.

Doctor McCray is affiliated with Fairmont Lodge No. 294, B. P. O. E. and is a member of the Psi Chapter of the Ohio State University and of the Psi Omega dental fraternity. In 1912 he married Miss Bonnie Marie Orr. She was born at Clarksburg, West Virginia, May 27, 1895, daughter of Frederick Bruce and Laverna Angelina (Wyer) Orr, of Harrison County, West Virginia. The two children of Doctor and Mrs. McCray are Bonnie Jean, born March 11, 1916; and Richard Earl, Jr., born March 3, 1921.

JABEZ B. HANFORD for a number of years has had an interesting place of power and influence among the executive officials connected with the great coal mining industry of West Virginia and Pennsylvania. He is one of many men prominent in the business who have come up from the ranks. As a boy he was a worker in the mines of Western Pennsylvania, and he comes of a coal mining family in which the raising of coal to the surface is practically a traditional occupation.

Both he and his parents and his forefathers for generations were natives of Staffordshire, England. His maternal grandfather, William Smith, was a coal miner nearly all his life. The Smith and Hanford families have been miners for many generations in Staffordshire. Jabez B. Hanford was born in Staffordshire, June 4, 1865, and his parents, Joseph and Emily (Smith) Hanford, were born there respectively in 1843 and 1845. The father died in 1878 and the mother in 1905. Joseph Hanford brought his family to the United States in 1870 and located at Sharon, Pennsylvania, in the midst of one of the great industrial and mining districts of that state. His previous training brought him connections with the coal mining industry, and he continued this work until he met his death as the result of a mine accident.

Jabez B. Hanford was thirteen years old when his father was killed. He had very few school advantages, and two years before his father's death he had gone to work in the mines of Mercer County, Pennsylvania. He served the long and arduous apprenticeship of the common miner, but after getting started his promotion was singularly rapid.

At the age of twenty-five Mr. Hanford was mine foreman, at thirty he was mine superintendent, at thirty-six, was division superintendent for the Shawmut Mining Company of Elk County, Pennsylvania, and at thirty-eight, became general superintendent of this, one of the larger mining corporations of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Hanford has been identified with the coal mining industry in West Virginia since 1905, in which year he moved to Morgantown, as general superintendent of the Elkins Coal & Coke Company. This corporation was then engaged in developing the West Virginia field. Mr. Hanford continued as general superintendent until the Elkins Company's interests were taken over on October 28, 1919, by the Bethlehem Mines Corporation. Since then Mr. Hanford has been with the National Fuel Company, with headquarters at Morgantown, and he has all the duties if not the official title of chief executive for that corporation. The coal mining industry all over the country recognizes him as a man of marked achievement. He is a member of the Executive Board of the Coal Mining Institute of America, and was one of the organizers of the Coal Mining Institute of West Virginia and was its president for the first three years. He is also a member of the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers and is president of the Morgantown Engineers Club. When the Morgantown Post Company was organized to take over the Post-Chronicle newspaper in 1918, Mr. Hanford became a member of the new company and has since served as vice president. He is vice president of the Morgantown Country Club, a member of the Episcopal Church, and is affiliated with Lodge No. 187, A. F. and A. M., and the Royal Arch Chapter No. 137, R. A. M., at Barbooursville, Kentucky.

Mr. Hanford married Joanna Dillon. She was born at Aberdeen, Wales, daughter of Lawrence and Mary (Downey) Dillon. Mr. and Mrs. Hanford have a son, James, and a daughter, Josephine. The latter graduated A. B. from West Virginia University in 1920, and is now a teacher in the Masontown High School.

The son, James Hanford, born October 2, 1892, attended West Virginia University and studied mine engineering at Lehigh University in Pennsylvania. March 4, 1918, he joined the colors, going from Morgantown to Camp Oglethorpe, Georgia, and two weeks later to New York, where he was assigned to the Three Hundred and Second Sanitary Train of the Seventy-seventh Division. April 6, 1918, just a month after enlisting, he was ordered overseas, landed at Liverpool, crossed the channel from Dover to Calais, and proceeded to the St. Omer sector of the western front, and at the signing of the armistice was in the Baccarat sector. He returned to the United States May 6, 1919, and was discharged at Camp Meade May 28, 1919. James Hanford is now superintendent of the National Fuel Company of West Virginia. He is a highly qualified mining engineer, and is a member of the Coal Mining Institute of America. He belongs to the Sigma Chi college fraternity.

R. LINDSAY CUNNINGHAM, former sheriff of Marion County and for many years the leading funeral director in the City of Fairmont, the county seat, was born on a farm in Paw Paw District, this county, July 13, 1851, and is a son of Nimrod and Martha (Danley) Cunningham, both likewise natives of Marion County. Nimrod Cunningham was born on a pioneer farm in Paw Paw District, and in 1855 removed to Mannington District, virtually his entire active career having been given to farm industry.

R. Lindsay Cunningham received the advantages of the common schools and as a young man he learned the carpenter's trade, to which he gave his attention for some time. In 1880 he established a saw and planing mill at the corner of Jackson and Monroe streets, Fairmont, and this mill, opposite his present place of business, he operated nine years. While working as a carpenter he frequently was called upon to manufacture coffins, and it may consistently be said that he has been identified with the undertaking business since about 1870. From year to year the undertaking department of his business increased in scope, and he is now the oldest representative of this line of business at Fairmont, where his establishment is the largest of the kind in the county.

Aside from his direct business activities Mr. Cunningham has contributed much to the material development and upbuilding of Fairmont. He was one of the organizers and became president of the old Coal City Furniture Company; he built the McAlpin Hotel Block, in the heart of the business district, and this property he still owns; he erected the block in which the Home Furniture Company is located, and also an adjoining building, which he recently sold; in 1921 he completed the Cunningham Block, at the corner of Jackson and Monroe streets, this being a structure of four stories and basement, the first and second floors and basement being occupied by his undertaking establishment and the upper two floors being fitted up as apartments. This last mentioned building was the first tile and stucco building erected in Fairmont, and is one of the most modern and attractive structures in the city.

In 1896 Mr. Cunningham was elected sheriff of Marion County, and this office he held four years. He is a charter member and was the first president of the West Virginia Funeral Directors Association; he is a loyal and liberal member of the Fairmont Chamber of Commerce; he is a Knight Templar and Mystic Shrine Mason, and he is affiliated also with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias.

December 17, 1885, recorded the marriage of Mr. Cunningham and Anna Violet Mayers, who was born near the City of Fairmont and who is a daughter of George W. and Mary E. (Fleming) Mayers, the former of whom died in 1900, at the age of sixty-nine years, and the latter whom died in May, 1902, aged sixty-four years, she having been a daughter of Alfred Fleming, a member of one of the old and influential families of Marion County. Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham have two children, Lawrence M. a Genevieve.

Lawrence M. Cunningham was born at Fairmont on 12th of July, 1887, and from 1907 until 1913 he was student in Washington and Jefferson College, he having been a member of the football team each year while attending both the preparatory and collegiate departments in this institution. In 1913 he became somewhat interested in traction matters in consequence of his father's interest in the Traction Company of Fairmont, and so continued until the nation became involved in the World war. Aug. 24, 1917, he entered the Officers Training Camp at Ft. Benjamin Harrison, Indianapolis, Indiana, where, on 128th of the following November, he was commissioned second lieutenant. On the 14th of December he reported to Camp Sherman, Ohio, and was assigned to Battery of the Three Hundred and Twenty-fourth Heavy Field Artillery. He was later transferred to the Headquarters Company of the regimental staff. June 3, 1918, with command, he left Camp Sherman and proceeded to Camp Mills, Long Island. A week later, on the English transport Leicestershire, he sailed for France. Fourteen days later he landed at La Havre, and with a detachment the command went into camp with the 17th French Field Artillery Corps at Camp Coquetdan, near Rennes. Members of Lieutenant Cunningham's command there received instruction in the French school of military instruction and were equipped with French 155 M. M. guns. August 1st they proceeded to the Verdun front, and thereafter Lieutenant Cunningham was in active service at the front in the Twenty-sixth, Twenty-ninth, Thirty-second, Thirty-seventh, Eighty-ninth and Ninety-first Divisions, his commission as first lieutenant having been received November 4, 1918. He served on several of the French fronts, where he was at Vologan, on the River Meuse, when the armistice was signed. With the Thirty-second Division he then proceeded to Germany, and on December 15, 1918, was Breitenau, Germany, with the advance Army of Occupation. There he remained until April 22, 1919, when he returned to Brest, France. Shortly afterward he sailed for America and at Camp Mills, New York, he was placed in charge of troop trains between that camp and Camp Meade. At the latter camp he received his honorable discharge June 19, 1919, his discharge papers showing that he had served France, England and Germany. After his retirement from military service, Lieutenant Cunningham became associated with his father's business, he having completed a course at the Renard Training School for Embalmers, New York City, and being licensed as an embalmer in both New York State and West Virginia. He is commander of Heintzler Post No. 17, American Legion, and the Veterans of Foreign Wars. Lieutenant Cunningham's Masonic affiliations are with Fairmont Lodge No. 9, A. F. and A. M.; Order Chapter No. 9, R. A. M.; Crusade Commandery No. Knights Templar; the Consistory of the Scottish Rite No. 1, Wheeling, in which he has received the thirty-second degree; the Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine in the same city; and the Order of the Eastern Star. He is a member also of the Knights of Pythias and of the Phi Delta Theta college fraternity.

DORSEY PLUMMER FITCH, M. D., is one of the able physicians and surgeons of his native state and is engaged in active general practice in the City of Fairmont, Marion County. He was born at Morgantown, Monongalia County, September 12, 1858, and is a son of Capt. Enoch Plummer Fitch and Louisa (Dorsey) Fitch. Captain Fitch was born in Preston County, Virginia, (now West Virginia), and was a son of Arthur Fitch, who was a representative of a family founded in New England in the Colonial period of our national history. Captain Fitch served as sheriff of Monongalia County, and was one of the first men in that county tender his aid in defense of the Union when the Civil war was precipitated. He received commission as captain and later became quartermaster, an office of which he was incumbent at the time of his death, May 31, 1864, in Monroeville, Virginia. His wife long survived him and was a member of an old and honored family of Monongalia county.

Doctor Fitch was reared on his father's farm in Monongalia County, and his higher education along academic lines was obtained in the University of West Virginia. He thereafter studied medicine in the office of Drs. Hugh W. and S. Brock at Morgantown, and later attended lectures at Jefferson Medical College in the City of Philadelphia. For four years thereafter he was associated in practice with the former preceptors, the Doctors Brock, at Morgantown, and he then completed the full course in Jefferson Medical College, in which he was graduated in 1885, with the degree

Doctor of Medicine. He then engaged in practice at Eastport, Maryland, where he remained until 1888, since which year he has been one of the leading physicians and surgeons at Fairmont, West Virginia, his prestige in his profession having been won by ability and faithful stewardship. He has taken a post-graduate course on diseases of the eye at Jefferson Medical College, and in bacteriology in the Richmond Medical College, Richmond, Virginia. He is one of the veteran and honored members of the Marion County Medical Society, is a member also of the West Virginia State Medical Society, and he is affiliated with the local Blue Lodge, Chapter and Commandery of the Masonic fraternity, as well as with the lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

September 3, 1884, Doctor Fitch wedded Sallie Haymond, daughter of Marcus W. Haymond, of Fairmont, and she passed to the life eternal in the year 1896. She was survived by two children: George Carroll, who took a course in civil engineering at the University of West Virginia, is now a resident of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and is associated with the Pittsburgh Coal Company; and Sallie Louise is the wife of Everett C. Butler, who is engaged in the jewelry business in the City of Cleveland, Ohio. On the 2d of July, 1900, was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Fitch and Blanche Haymond, a sister of his first wife.

FRANK REZIN AMOS, who since January, 1921, has been a capable prosecuting attorney of Marion County, is one of the prominent young lawyers of Fairmont and is a native of that city, representing two well known names among Marion County's families.

His grandfather was Edgar W. Amos, a native of Marion County, a farmer and an extensive land owner who at one time owned all the land now included in the site of the mining town of Baxter in that county. The father of Frank Amos was the late Elias S. Amos, whose life was largely devoted to the cause of education. He was born in Paw Paw District of Marion County in 1852, attended the common schools and the Fairmont Normal School, and also a summer school in Wetzel County. For over twenty years he was one of the best known schoolmasters of Marion County. In 1888 he removed to Fairmont, and for a number of years continued teaching in the city schools and he also served as county superintendent of schools. When he left the teaching profession he was for several years city collector and for ten years justice of the peace at Fairmont. Practically his entire mature life was devoted to public service, either in the school room or in public office, and it was very soon after the close of his last term as justice of the peace that he died in 1915. He was a republican and a member of the Baptist Church. Elias S. Amos married Foda Annis (Parker), who was born in Paw Paw District, only a few miles from the birthplace of her husband. Her parents were Capt. William C. and Rebecca (Conaway) Parker. Captain Parker was a native of Marion County, was an officer in the Union army during the Civil war, and was a substantial farmer and influential citizen. Both the Parker and Conaway families furnished soldiers to the Revolutionary war. Frank R. Amos was born April 15, 1890, and until past majority was busily engaged in securing a liberal education. He graduated from the Fairmont High School in 1908, from the Fairmont State Normal in 1909, and in 1912 received his LL. B. degree from West Virginia University. He was admitted to the bar that year, and has since been busy with his growing professional interests at Fairmont. Since July, 1913, he has been in practice with his brother Curtis E. under the firm name of Amos & Amos.

Mr. Amos was for four years chairman of the Republican County Executive Committee, and for the same length of time was a member of the Republican Congressional Committee of the First District. He was nominated for prosecuting attorney in the republican primaries of 1920 and at the general election received approximately a majority of 1,500 votes. He entered upon the duties of his office in January, 1921.

Mr. Amos is a prominent fraternal man, being affiliated with Fairmont Lodge No. 9, F. and A. M., Fairmont Chapter No. 9, R. A. M., Fairmont Commandery No. 6, K. T., Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling, Fairmont Lodge No. 294, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Fairmont Lodge No. 12, Knights of Pythias, and Fairmont Lodge No. 9, Loyal Order of Moose. He is also a member of the Sigma Chi college fraternity, the Marion County Bar Association and the Baptist Church.

August 15, 1915, Mr. Amos married Kathryn Donham, a native of Fairmont, where she was a popular teacher in the city schools prior to her marriage. Her parents were H. L. and Ella (Harden) Donham. The Donhams came from Greene County, Pennsylvania, and the maternal grandparents of Mrs. Amos were Thomas and Cordelia (Burnes) Harden. Thomas Harden was a Union soldier in the Civil war. Mrs. Amos is a member of the Methodist Church. She and Mr. Amos have one son, John Donham Amos, born November 2, 1918.

CALVIN D. CONAWAY, president of the Home Savings Bank of Fairmont, Marion County, former sheriff of the county and present member of the County Court, was born on the old family homestead in Fairmont District, this county, August 3, 1863, and is a son of Maj. James E. and Miranda (Ice) Conaway. On the same old homestead farm Major Conaway was born in the year 1831, and his death occurred in 1910. He was a gallant officer in the Confederate service in the Civil war, as major in the regiment commanded by Colonel Thompson. He was long a representative farmer and merchant in his native county, besides having been identified with the coal industry in this section of the state. He served three terms as justice of the peace, and was one of the honored and influential citizens of Marion County. On the same ancestral homestead was born his father, William Conaway, and the latter's father, John Conaway, was the pioneer representative of the family in this county, the land which he here obtained and which he reclaimed to productiveness having continued in the possession of the family for four generations. John Conaway came to Marion County from Pulaski County, Virginia. He was a patriot soldier in the War of the Revolution, and his widow, Mrs. Rachel (Wilson) Conaway, drew a pension on account of his service in that war.

Mrs. Miranda (Ice) Conaway was born at Barrackville, Marion County, in 1834, and her death occurred in 1901. She was a daughter of Hon. William B. and Dollie (Straight) Ice, her father, a native of Barrackville, this county, having served as a member of the State Senate. William B. Ice was a son of Adam Ice, who was the first white child born west of the Allegheny Mountains in what is now Northern West Virginia, the family having become very early settlers in the Cheat River neighborhood.

Calvin D. Conaway was reared on the ancestral homestead, which he now owns and on which he has resided almost continuously. For twenty years he was engaged in stone contracting work, including the construction of foundations and the supplying of stone in railroad construction and maintenance. He has recently retired from this business, including the operation of a large stone quarry. He has been president of the Home Savings Bank of Fairmont since 1917, and since 1916 has been president of the Farmers Mutual Fire Insurance Company of West Virginia, of which he was one of the organizers, the company now having a membership of 9,000, with insurance in force to the amount of $12,000,000. Mr. Conaway is president also of the West Virginia Association of Mutual Fire Insurance Companies, with a membership of 18,000 and with $30,000,000 of insurance. He is vice president of the Monongahela Candy Company and a stockholder in many other business concerns of Fairmont.

In 1912 Mr. Conaway was elected sheriff of his native county, in which office he served one term. In 1918 he was elected a member of the County Court, in which capacity he is giving characteristically loyal and effective service. He is a member of the Elks, Knights of Pythias, Woodmen of the World and the Loyal Order of Moose. His wife, whose maiden name was Clara Hunter, was born at Barrackville, Marion County, a daughter of Josephus Hunter, and a representative of one of the old and influential families of the county. Mr. and Mrs. Conaway are the parents of two children, Olive Blanche, deceased, and Nannie M., who is the wife of Archie F. Sandy, a well known business man of Fairmont.

JAMES MCNEIL STEPHENSON, who died at Parkersburg nearly half a century ago, was one of the stalwart characters of his age, and his constructive activities and the impress of his influence are part of the heritage of the present generation.

He was a son of Edward and Elizabeth (Dils) Stephenson, who were married in 1794, and in the early infancy of their son James moved to Parkersburg, in 1800. The family has therefore been represented in this city for considerably more than a century, and the descendants are numerous and many of them have been prominent. One of the sons of the pioneer couple, Edward, Jr., was a man of most versatile gifts and accomplishments, was a lawyer, teacher, preacher, writer, carpenter, but owing to wandering habits never lived long in any place. He traveled extensively by foot and on horseback throughout the West, South and East, and finally died in Mexico. He never married.

James McNeil Stephenson, first named above, was educated for the law and achieved many marks of distinction in that profession. But his chief work was in the field of practical business and affairs. He became one of the largest land owners and tax payers in Wood and adjoining counties. It was due to his exertion more than to that of any other man that the northwestern branch of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway was built. He declined a nomination for Congress in order to enter the House of Delegates, where he could employ his influence to further the promotion of this railroad. He was also regarded as the father of the Northwestern Turnpike, one of the great public undertakings of the day. A large degree of credit is due him for the construction of the James River and Kanawha Canal. For years he was president of the Parkersburg National Bank, and was also interested in the Northwestern Bank. A man of tremendous energy, he gave wholehearted support to whatever he undertook, and this largely accounts for his great success. While owning deep moral and religious sentiments, he chose to distribute his gifts without prejudice among the various denominations and worthy institutions, and he was equally independent of partisan ties in politics.

James McNeil Stephenson married Agnes Boreman, of the prominent West Virginia family of that name. Their six children were Kenner Boreman, Sarah Elizabeth, James McNeil, Isabella, Andrew Clark and Lucy Lazier.

James McNeil Stephenson, Jr., became a physician by profession. He was born in 1838 and died in 1906. He married Veronica Gale.

By marriage the Stephenson family is related to many of the family names that have been conspicuous in the life and affairs of West Virginia, including those of Bird, Tavenner, Newman, Botts, Johnson, Wade, Gale, Dorsey, Hutchinson, Boreman and others.

HARRY E. CALDABAUGH. A native of Wheeling, Harry E. Caldabaugh was educated as an engineer, followed that profession for a number of years, but is now prosperously established as a merchant, a wholesale and retail dealer in paints and glass. Mr. Caldabaugh has a record of service in the army at the time of the Spanish-American war.

He was born at Wheeling, April 25, 1879. His father Philip C. Caldabaugh, now living at Glendale, Marshall County, West Virginia, was born in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, in 1844. Four years later, at the climax of the Revolutionary struggles in Germany, his parents, Charles F. and Laura M. (Kraft) Caldabaugh, left their native home in Hesse-Darmstadt and came to America, first settling in Monroe County, Ohio, and later moving to Wheeling, where the latter died. Philip C. Caldabaugh was reared in Monroe County, and as a young man of nineteen enlisted there in 1864, joining Company F of the One Hundred Eighty-ninth Ohio Infantry. He served the last year of the war and was with Sherman on the march to the sea, his regiment being part of the rear guard in this famous campaign. Philip Caldabaugh moved to Wheeling in 1867, was married in this city, and for many years followed teaming. He is a republican, an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is affiliated with the Knights of the Mystic Chain and the Improved Order of Red Men. His wife was Margaret Heckler, who was born in Hesse-Darmstadt in 1848, and died at Wheeling in 1889. She was the mother of the following children: Laura M. living with her father; George W., connected with a wholesale hardware house at Los Angeles, California; Laura M. unmarried and living with her father; Charles W., a merchant at Wheeling; John C., a merchant at Glendale, West Virginia; Harry E., Lucy M., wife of William Thornburg, a resident of Glendale and an office employee of the Wheeling & Lake Erie Railroad; and Chester W., a Glendale merchant.

Harry E. Caldabaugh attended the public schools of Wheeling and spent three years in West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buckhannon, pursuing a course in civil engineering. From 1906 to 1908 he was employed in structural engineering work at Wheeling and Cincinnati. Then as a civil engineer and as purchasing agent he was associated with the United States Engineers in river improvement and other Federal projects in the Wheeling District. He was in the service of the Federal Government in this capacity for 9½ years. In 1917 Mr. Caldabaugh established his present business, beginning in a small way as a dealer in paints and glass, and has kept his business growing and prosperous until it is now one of the leading establishments of the kind in the Wheeling District. His store and offices are at 1058 Market Street.

Mr. Caldabaugh has always been willing to take a kind and helpful interest in community affairs. He was for eight years state commander of the State Boys Brigade, a national organization. He is president of the Northern West Virginia Fish and Game Protective Association. He is a member of the Wheeling Chamber of Commerce and Kiwanis Club, is a republican, has served on the Official Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church and as president of the Epworth League. In June, 1898, he enlisted in Company D of the Second West Virginia Infantry, as bugler, being then nineteen years of age. He was with his regiment at Camp Meade, Pennsylvania, and then at Greenville, South Carolina, until mustered out in April, 1899.

In 1910, at Wheeling, Mr. Caldabaugh married Miss Mabel W. Rahr, daughter of David and Jennie (Wallace) Rahr, residents of Wheeling, where her father is employed in the Steel Rolling Mills. Mr. and Mrs. Caldabaugh have four children: Harry R., born July 31, 1912; Jane E. born April 30, 1914; Phil D., born May 31, 1915; and John W., born August 31, 1918.

CHARLES H. SEABRIGHT is a prominent resident of Wheeling, has been in business in that section of Greater Wheeling Benwood, since boyhood, his vehicle and implement establishment is located at Forty-second and Wood streets, and is deep interest in the welfare of the city and its people has also brought him several positions of trust. He is a member of the Wheeling City Board of Education.

Mr. Seabright was born at Wheeling, October 1, 1863, son of Henry and Wilhelmina (Pappa) Seabright. His parents were both born in Germany, but were married after coming to Wheeling. Henry Seabright was a butcher by trade, and a young man located at Wheeling and soon afterward opened a shop on Chapline Street, between Thirty-sixth and thirty-seventh, in what was then the south end. He developed a very prosperous business and continued it until his death in 1874, when he was about fifty years of age. His widow survived him until 1885, and was about the same age when she died. They were members of the Lutheran Church. After his death the widow operated a grocery store at the old place of business for a short time. These parents reared three children: Charles H.; Henry L., a contractor and manufacturer; and Minnie, wife of Elwood Wilson, a native of Wheeling and a mechanic now living at Los Angeles, California.

Charles H. Seabright was eleven years of age when his father died, and he assisted his mother in the store. Later he moved to a residence at Benwood, known as "The Oldrovers Home," and there she resumed merchandising, opening a stock of groceries. In the intervals of his service for his mother Charles H. Seabright attended the public schools. After his mother's death he began dealing in buggies at Benwood, starting in this line of business in 1886, and has been continuously engaged in the same line now for over thirty-five years. His business was first located at Benwood, but when the old home was sold to the Sheet & Tube Company he removed to his present site, in 1903. Here the business has continued to grow and expand, and he carries an extensive line of vehicles, agricultural implements, harness and other supplies, chiefly for the farmers' trade.

At the age of twenty-four Mr. Seabright married Miss Katie Delbrugge, of Bellaire, Ohio, but a native of Wheeling. They have a family of four children: Earl, a bookkeeper; Bruce, in the automobile business at Wheeling; Wilbur, an electrician; and Clyde, associated with his brother Bruce. The family are members of the Trinity Lutheran Church.

Mr. Seabright has never been so closely tied to his business affairs that he neglected the call of public duty. He served twice as a member of the city council, and since 1913 has been a member of the Wheeling Board of Education. He has participated in the general program of the board's activities, and has cultivated as his special interests the matter of the new high school, the purchasing of the ground which is now known as the public school athletic field, and the building of the New Island School. He is a Republican. He is now serving as a member of Wheeling City Recreation Commission, other members being Mr. Gundling, Roy Naylor, Ed Jefferson and Mrs. Harold Brennan. This commission has charge of the playground and social centers of the city, and as chairman of the Physical Educational committee Mr. Albright had charge of the improvements that have made this field one of, if not the, best athletic fields in the state.

HERMANN BENTZ. Behind the large and impressive success of the Cooley-Bentz Company, Incorporated, of Wheeling, is an interesting story based upon the thrift and enterprise of the two original partners constituting the firm that preceded the corporation. Close application to their work and genius in understanding and meeting the demands of the trade have been responsible for the success of the company. His business, handling home furnishings and undertaking, as its main location at 3601-3603 Jacob Street, at least a mile from the main business center of Wheeling, and yet the stock carried and the annual volume of sales compare favorably with any of the more centrally located concerns. Both the proprietors are royal good fellows, substantial citizens, and the present article is devoted chiefly to the career of Mr. Bentz, another article being published concerning Mr. Cooley.

Mr. Bentz was born in the south end of Wheeling, not far from his present business, on November 22, 1877, son of Christian and Mary (Lewis) Bentz. His father was a native of Germany, but came to America when a lad and for a number of years was employed as a puddler in the La Belle Iron Works at Wheeling. He married in Wheeling, Mary Lewis, who came of a prominent Brooke County family, daughter of Job and Mary (Miller) Lewis, farmers in that section of West Virginia. Mrs. Bentz at the death of her husband was left with a family of four children, and she provided for them and lived with them and died, after seeing them all well established, when she was seventy-nine years of age. These children were: John, a puddler in iron mills who died at the age of sixty-three; Mrs. Sallie Rasel, of Wheeling; Hermann; and Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Hoffman.

Hermann Bentz at the age of fifteen became the principal support of his widowed mother. Thereafter he remained with her, providing not only for her material comfort but giving the utmost of a son's devotion to a devoted mother who earned fully the love of her children and the esteem in which she was held by all her neighbors. Hermann Bentz at the age of ten began doing some work in the La Belle mills, learning the trade of cooper for nail kegs at that plant. He worked there through all his boyhood, and later as a young man he served four years as deputy sheriff under Sheriff Steenrod.

It was on August 1, 1897, that Mr. Bentz and Mr. W. R. Cooley began their modest partnership of Cooley-Bentz. They bought the business of a former dealer, paying his widow $1,000. They had only $500 of operating capital, and that was borrowed. During the early months, when the prosperity of the venture was not entirely assured, Mr. Bentz and Mr. Cooley allowed themselves from the proceeds of the business only enough to insure a bare subsistence for the partners, Mr. Bentz, a bachelor, taking only $8 a week, while Mr. Cooley, with his family, took $12. Their stock was kept in one small room, 20 by 60 feet, and comprised an ordinary line of furniture, and from the first they emphasized their undertaking service. Seven years later, in 1904, they incorporated, and since then the capitalization of $75,000 has been increased to $200,000, and in 1914 they erected a substantial five-story brick block 50 by 100 feet, all of which is now occupied by their business and they have planned additional quarters which will provide at least double the capacity. The business is strictly retail, and their customers extend over a radius of fifty miles from points in Ohio and Pennsylvania. There are twenty-eight employees, and for the past ten years a branch store has been conducted at Benwood, being under the personal charge of Mr. Edward Cooley.

Mr. Hermann Bentz has never married. He is a popular citizen, a Knight Templar Mason, a democrat without political aspirations, and is a director of the South Side Bank & Trust Company.

JAMES C. MOORE is one of the leading merchants at Warwood, a thriving industrial place that is now a part of the City of Wheeling, he having been four years of age when the family home was established in the present Warwood District of Ohio County and having been here reared and educated. He was born in the City of Wheeling, October 31, 1874, a son of John Z. and Mary (Cashman) Moore, the former of whom was born at Akron, Ohio, and the latter at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Mrs. Moore was a child when the family removed to Wheeling, where her father, John Cashman, was in the service of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company until his death, and she was reared and educated at Wheeling, where her marriage was solemnized. She survived her husband four years and died at the age of fifty-three years.

John Z. Moore was left an orphan in childhood and was reared in the home of an uncle. At the age of eighteen years he found employment in a nail mill in the City of Pittsburgh, and he became a skilled nailmaker. Later he was employed in a nail mill in New Jersey, and there he enlisted in a New Jersey regiment, with which he served as a loyal soldier of the Union during the Civil war, he having been in the army commanded by General Sheridan and having participated in many engagements, including those of the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia and the battle of Appomattox. After the war he remained for a time at Pittsburgh, and about 1866 came to Wheeling. For years he was a skilled artisan at the Top Nail Mill, and in 1878 he purchased a farm of twenty-six acres in the present Warwood locality, he having continued in the management of this excellent little farm until his death in 1900, at the age of sixty-three years, and having in the meanwhile continued to work at his trade. He served as a member of the school board of his district and was otherwise prominent in community affairs. Of the seven children all but one attained to maturity and five are now living. The son Sheridan is engaged in the practice of law at Huntington; Misses Estella and Nellie reside with their brother James C., of this review, who is a bachelor; and the other sister, Laura, is the wife of Charles Meyer. In earlier years Miss Nellie Moore was a popular teacher in the public schools, besides which she served as postmistress at Glenova, the title of the office having later been changed to Warwood, and the village having finally become a part of the City of Wheeling.

James C. Moore gained his early education in the public schools, and as a young man he worked in the nail mills. Thereafter he was actively identified with the operation of a large farm in this locality, and about 1905 he engaged in general road contracting. In 1907 he opened a feed and livery establishment at Wheeling, and this he conducted four years, during which he still resided at Warwood. His elder brother, Robert M., engaged in the grocery business at Warwood in 1903, and upon the death of this brother in 1911 James C. assumed charge of the business, which he conducted nine years, in the meanwhile having developed it into a general merchandise enterprise, the first of the kind at Warwood. His sister Nellie became postmistress, the post-office having been in the store, and in this position she succeeded her deceased brother. It is interesting to note that the original title of this local postoffice, Glenova, represents a combination of the name of Glen Run (by which this part of Ohio County has long been known), the "o" from the initial of the county, and the final syllable, "va" representing the current abbreviation for Virginia.

In 1920 Mr. Moore sold his store, and thereafter he erected a two-story double-store building, 56 by 56 feet in dimensions, in which he is now conducting two well appointed mercantile places, one being devoted to groceries and the other to hardware. He is the owner also of the residence property which represents the home of himself and his sisters, and all of them are members of the Presbyterian Church.

HENRY BIEBERSON, who is living retired in the beautiful suburb of Woodlawn, on the National Road, two miles distant from the center of Wheeling, of which the district is a part, is vice president of the Wheeling Fire Insurance Company, the only corporation of its kind in the state and one of which specific mention is made on other pages of this work.

Mr. Bieberson was born in Germany, in 1848, and there gained his early education, he having been sixteen years of age when he came to the United States. In 1874 he opened a restaurant on the South Side in the City of Wheeling, and this gained high reputation and continued a popular resort for twenty-eight years. Mr. Bieberson won substantial success through his careful and honorable business activities, and he was formerly a director of the Bank of Wheeling. He is now a director of the Bridgeport Bank & Trust Company and in 1902 became president and manager of the Belmont Brewing Company at Martin's Ferry, Ohio. Under his direction this company gained high reputation for the quality rather than the quantity of its output, and was a model in connection with the brewing industry of the country. Mr. Bieberson is interested in the West Virginia Fair Association, and formerly served as a trustee of the Home for the Aged. He was a director of the company which constructed the Wheeling & Elm Grove Railroad. He came to this country in 1865, in company with an aunt and with his sister, the latter being now the widow of August Rolf. Mr. Bieberson came to Wheeling in 1867, and even the brief data incorporated in this sketch indicate that he has been closely and worthily associated with the development and progress of the city. He is also interested in the West Virginia Steel Corporation, which absorbed the La Belle Iron Company and the Benwood Iron Works, in each of which he had been a stockholder and director. He is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and his personal popularity is on a parity with his prominence and loyalty in connection with civic and business affairs in Wheeling. It may further be stated that he is a director in the Citizen People's Trust Company, was a member of the original directorate of the Bridgeport Banking Company, and is a director of the Maher Colliers Company of Cleveland, Ohio, who operates mines in Belmont County, that state, and which one of the most important operating companies in the fields of the Wheeling District. Mr. Bieberson was one of the principals in the platting of the Belvidere addition to the City of Wheeling, and for the past twelve years he has maintained his home at Woodlawn, one of the finest residential districts of Wheeling.

In 1873 Mr. Bieberson married Miss Frederic Schmacher, who was born and reared at Wheeling, her father having been a native of Germany and having been one of the pioneer German citizens of Wheeling, where engaged in the work of his trade, as a skilled stone-cutter. Mr. and Mrs. Bieberson became the parents of two sons and three daughters, two of the daughters being deceased. Their daughter Emma, who became the wife of Karl Goetz, died when a young woman. Henry is a manufacturer in the City of Delaware, Ohio; Lillie E. is the wife of Henry C. Hae mann, of Wheeling; Anton is manager of the real estate department of the Citizens-People Trust Company at Wheeling; and Cora died when a young woman.

Mr. Bieberson has lived a sane, worthy and constructive life, and has done much to further the civic and material development and progress of his home city and community. In earlier years he was actively identified with the Turnverein and Liederkranz societies of Wheeling, which represented much in the social and cultural life of the community. He served as president of St. John's Evangelical Protestant Congregation for several years and is active in church work.

FRED J. FOX from an early age has been on intimate terms with work as a means of advancing himself as broadening his usefulness as a factor in the affairs of the community. His work eventually led him into banking, and for thirty years he has been a figure of increasing influence in the financial affairs of the Wheeling District, where he is secretary and cashier of the Security Trust Company.

Mr. Fox was born at Bridgeport, Ohio, November 2, 1867. His father, Jacob Fox, was born in Wuertemberg, Germany, in 1830, and as a young man came to the United States and located at Wheeling. He learned the baker's trade under the master of that art, Joseph Bayha, at which while he followed the occupation in Wheeling on his removal to Bridgeport about 1855 and after his marriage he entered the service of the Cleveland & Pittsburgh Railroad Company, and was continuously with that road's checker for thirty-five years. He finally retired in 1899 and died at Bridgeport in 1893. He was independent politics, a devout Lutheran, and was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Jacob Fox married Christina Schweitzer, who was born in Wuertemberg in 1834 and died at Bridgeport in May, 1908. She was the mother of seven children: Elizabeth, wife of Louis I. Cook, a mail clerk living at Bridgeport; William, head of the shipping department of the Jefferson Glass Works and a resident of Bridgeport; Rachel, wife of William Koehnline, a retired ice and coal dealer at Bridgeport; Fred J.; Henry, cashier of the Dollar Savings Bank at Bridgeport; Mary, wife of Sam Greenlaand, general manager of the traction system of Fort Wayne, Indiana; and J. Edward, a real estate and insurance man at Bridgeport.

Fred J. Fox attended the public schools of Bridgeport and even while in school was turning his ingenuity in the direction of earning money to support himself and to pay his expenses while in school. He also attended Frazier Business College at Wheeling. His early positions gave him a varied knowledge of business, and in 1891, at the age of twenty-four, he entered the service of the Dollar Savings Bank at Bridgeport, and was teller in that institution until 1897. He was afterward cashier of the German Half Dollar Savings Bank.

The year 1903 marks the beginning of Mr. Fox's long and useful service with the Security Trust Company of

Fred. J. Fox

Wheeling. He became cashier in that year, and since 1916 has also filled the office of secretary. The Security Trust Company was organized in 1903, with J. N. Vance as president. Its present officers are: W. E. Stone, president; M. J. McFadden, vice president; A. L. Meyer, vice president; Fred J. Fox, secretary-cashier; H. S. Martin, assistant cashier; and E. B. Bowie, trust officer. The list of directors include the following well-known Wheeling men: James H. Beans, Alfred Caldwell, John L. Dickey, William Ellingham, James W. Ewing, F. F. Paris, L. W. Franzheim, J. G. Hoffman, Jr., John Hoffman, third, William Lipphardt, George W. Lutz, W. O. McKinsey, M. J. McFadden, H. W. McLure, A. L. Meyer, H. S. Sands, L. E. Sands, George E. Stifel, W. E. Stone, H. E. Vance.

Mr. Fox became cashier of this company before there were any deposits. Today the deposits aggregate $2,750,000, with capital stock of $300,000 and surplus and profits of $350,000. The great resources of the company place it as one of the strongest financial institutions in the Upper Ohio Valley, and men in a position to know, including his associates, say that this satisfactory condition is due more to Mr. Fox's personal ability and character than to any other one factor. The Security Trust Company is now housed in one of the handsomest buildings along Market Street, at 1143 Market Street. This structure, erected in 1917, is of granite, brick and terra cotta, and besides being the quarters for the Trust Company it also accommodates the large music store of C. A. House & Company. The company conducts a foreign department in the basement and also a real estate and insurance department, and there are other modern facilities and equipment for keeping accounts and safeguarding funds, including safety deposit boxes. Ordinarily there are about twenty-two employees in the bank.

While with the welfare and growth of this institution Mr. Fox has found his time and talents fully engaged, he has associated himself so far as possible with worthy movements in his community. He is a member and elder of the First Presbyterian Church at Wheeling, and for two consecutive terms was township treasurer of East Township in Belmont County, Ohio, though as a rule he has avoided politics and public offices. He is a republican. Mr. Fox is treasurer of the Wheeling Chamber of Commerce, a director of the Old Ladies Home at Wheeling, director of the Home of Aged and Friendless Women, director of the Union Mission, secretary, treasurer and director of the Market Auditorium Company, and director of the Associated Charities. During the war was a Four Minute Speaker and did all he could to further the local campaigns, particularly those for the raising of funds. He is affiliated with Belmont Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, at Bridgeport, and the Fort Henry Club of Wheeling. His residence is at 108 Fourteenth Street in Wheeling.

In 1893, at Wheeling, Mr. Fox married Miss Mary Ziegler. She died at Bridgeport in 1899, and is survived by two children. Wilbur, her son, born in February 1896, was for sixteen months in the army service during the war, enlisting from Bellaire, Ohio, and most of the time was stationed at San Francisco. He is now employed in the foreign department of the Security Trust Company. The daughter, Helena, is the wife of Mervin Stonecipher, and they live with Mr. and Mrs. Fox, Mr. Stonecipher being employed in the traffic department of the Wheeling Steel Corporation.

In 1903, at Martin's Ferry, Ohio, Mr. Fox married Miss Amanda Jordan, daughter of Benjamin F. and Margaret (Finney) Jordan, who live near Bridgeport. Her father was a farmer for many years but is now a rural mail carrier. Mr. and Mrs. Fox have three children: Edward Jordan, born in March, 1908; Henry Nelson, born in June, 1912; and Irvin Franklin, born in June, 1912, the last two being twins.

ALEXANDER R. CAMPBELL, of Wheeling, has long represented a benignant force in connection with the civic and business affairs of this section of the state and has served in various offices of public trust, including that of deputy collector of internal revenue for this district. He is a scion of a family that was founded in Virginia in the Colonial era of our national history, and his lineage on both paternal and maternal sides traces back to fine Scotch origin. The Campbell family gained pioneer honors in that section of the Old Dominion that now constitutes West Virginia.

Alexander R. Campbell was born at Des Moines, Iowa, August 29, 1848, a son of John R. and Margaret (Cassady) Campbell, the former of whom was born at Wheeling, Virginia (now West Virginia), in 1813, and the latter of whom was born at Winchester, Virginia, in 1826. John R. Campbell removed with his family to Iowa about 1844, and became a pioneer merchant at Des Moines, that state, but about 1850 returned with his family to Wheeling, where his death occurred in 1864 and where his widow died in 1875, she having been prominently identified with the founding of the Children's Home at Wheeling. Upon the death of his father Alexander R. Campbell became the chief support of his widowed mother and the other members of the family. For five years he was salesman in a wholesale drug establishment at Wheeling, and in 1873 he was admitted to partnership in the business, that of Laughlin Brothers. A number of years later he sold his interest in the business and removed to Ravenswood, Jackson County, and after a time he became the West Virginia general state agent for the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company of Milwaukee, for which he developed a large and profitable business in his jurisdiction, in the meantime the family home having been maintained at Ravenswood. Mr. Campbell served as chairman of the Republican Committee of Jackson County, and in 1888 was elected to the State Senate, as representative of this district comprising Jackson, Roane and Mason counties. In 1889 he returned with his family to Wheeling, and in 1892 he was elected from Ohio County to the House of Delegates of the State Legislature. In 1896 he was in clerical service in connection with the State Senate, and he served also as a member of the City Council of Wheeling, as representative of the Third Ward. He made a record as one of the most effective campaign speakers of his party in the state, and his political influence was widely and worthily extended. In July, 1897, he was appointed deputy United States collector of internal revenue and in this service he continued under the McKinley and Roosevelt administrations. Mr. Campbell became prominently concerned in banking enterprise and in other lines of business, and was long an honored member of leading fraternal and social organizations at Wheeling.

December 20, 1876, recorded the marriage of Mr. Campbell and Miss Mary H. Rearick, who was born at Hagerstown, Maryland, a daughter of John Rearick. Of the children of this union Clinton R. is now serving as assistant prosecuting attorney of Ohio County, and is one of the prominent members of the Wheeling bar; Alexander R., Jr., is identified with mercantile enterprise in this city; Chandler is a lieutenant-colonel in the United States Marine Corps and was in command of the Tenth Regiment in the World war period; Harold W., the youngest son, is individually mentioned in following sketch; and the only daughter, Julia McClure, is the wife of Daniel Denney, a lieutenant commander in the United States Navy.

HAROLD WILLIAM CAMPBELL, cashier of the Fulton Bank & Trust Company in the City of Wheeling, is making a most excellent record in connection with financial affairs in the metropolitan district in which he was born and reared, his birth having occurred at Wheeling on the 23d of July, 1883. His father, Alexander R. Campbell, of staunch Scotch lineage, was born at Des Moines, Iowa, but was but two years of age at the time when the family home was established at Wheeling, West Virginia, where he was reared to manhood and where as a mere lad he assumed much responsibility in connection with the support of the family. As a young man he was a drug salesman and eventually he became general state agent in West Virginia for the Northwestern Life Insurance Company of Milwaukee, Wisconsin. His prominence and influence in connection with the local activities of the republican party made him a potent force in bringing the Wheeling District into line for republican success on various occasions when conditions were critical. The subject of this review is the youngest in a family of four sons: Clinton R. is a representative member of the Wheeling bar and in 1921 is serving as assistant prosecuting attorney of Ohio County; Alexander R., Jr., is engaged in mercantile pursuits at Wheeling; and Chandler is a lieutenant-colonel in the United States Marine Corps, in the service of which he enlisted at the age of eighteen years and upon competitive examination won the rank of second lieutenant. Colonel Campbell was in command of the Tenth Regiment during the period of the nation's participation in the World war, and trained the marines for work in the heavy artillery arm of the service. The one daughter of the family, Julia McClure, is the wife of Daniel Denney, a lieutenant commander in the United States Navy.

Harold W. Campbell gained his early education in the public schools of Wheeling and thereafter continued his studies in the University of West Virginia. He read law and was preparing to enter the legal profession, but found it expedient to deflect his course and take a position in the National Exchange Bank. Later he became assistant cashier of the South Side Bank, and after thus serving seven years he became one of the organizers of the Fulton Bank & Trust Company, the original corporate title of which, in 1909, was the Bank of Fulton, the present title having been adopted at the time of its reorganization in 1919. In the promotion of the enterprise Mr. Campbell was associated with Otto Schenk and Henry L. Roth, the latter of whom became the first president of the institution and who was succeeded by W. H. Nichols, the latter continuing to hold this office until his death, August 22, 1920, when Otto Schenk was elected to the presidency. Mr. Nichols became vice president at the time of organization and held this position until elected president. Mr. Campbell has been cashier of the bank from the beginning, and his forceful and conservative policies have contributed much to the success of the enterprise. The original capital stock of $25,000 was increased to $100,000 in 1919, and the surplus is now $20,000. The stock of the institution is all locally owned and the resources now aggregate $700,000. Lafayette Graner is trust officer of the bank. The building occupied is owned by the institution and was erected in 1910.

Mr. Campbell is liberal and progressive in his civic attitude, and he maintains his home at Echo Point, in which attractive suburban district he has recently erected a modern apartment building, besides being also the owner of his home place. He is a member of the Vance Memorial Presbyterian Church, is past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias and is affiliated with the York and Scottish Rite bodies of the Masonic fraternity. Mr. Campbell wedded Miss Maude Evans Dille, who was born and reared at Morgantown, this state, and who is a graduate of the University of West Virginia. Her father, Oliver Evans Dille, was a leading member of the Morgantown bar. The Evans family, represented in the ancestral line of Mrs. Campbell, early became the holder of a large tract of land in what is now West Virginia, the same having been granted to one of the family in recognition of his service as a soldier in the Revolution, and the Evans home having been the headquarters of Gen. George Washington when he was engaged in making surveys in the western part of Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Campbell have three sons, Alexander Oliver, Harold William, Jr., and Thomas Ray.

EDWARD J. McDERMOTT is proprietor and owner of the business conducted under the title of the Woodsdale Motor Car Company, with headquarters at Woodsdale, situated on the National Road and constituting a suburb of the City of Wheeling. In 1913 Mr. McDermott began business on the site of his present modern and well equipped building, the original structure, 50 by 150 feet in dimensions, having since been greatly enlarged to meet the demands and requirements of the constantly expanding business. Mr. McDermott is a distributor of the Peerless and Scripps-Booth cars for the Panhandle District of West Virginia and for several counties in Eastern Ohio. He began operation on a modest scale, and the enterprise now involves the enlistment of a working capital of approximately $75,000. An efficient corps of employes is retained and branch establishments are operated at Moundsville and Wellsburg, this state, and at Steubenville and Barnesville, Ohio.

Mr. McDermott was born at Buckhannon, Upshur County, West Virginia, September 5, 1884, and is a son of James and Catherine (Maloy) McDermott. Mr. McDermott was born in County Roscommon, Ireland, and was six years old at the time the family home was established in what is now West Virginia, in 1852. He was reared in Upshur County and was there successfully engaged in farm enterprise for many years. His death occurred in 1919, and his widow is still living and resides at the old homestead in Upshur County, West Virginia.

Edward J. McDermott attended the public schools and remained on the home farm until he was eighteen years old when, in 1902, he found employment as a telephone lineman his efficiency gaining him promotion to the position of foreman within two weeks after he initiated his service. Later he became master carpenter in connection with construction of railroad shops and stations on the Coal and Coke Rail way, and his next advancement was to the position of chief clerk and purchasing agent for the Davis Colliery Company then a subsidiary of the former company at Elkins. Later he served as head bookkeeper for a tannery at Hamilton until the plant was destroyed by fire. Prior to initiating his independent career he had attended the Mountain State Business College at Parkersburg, West Virginia, graduating with high honors in 1907. He made a splendid record as traveling salesman for a leading firm, The Kelly & Jones Company, engaged in the mill, mine and plumbing supply business at Pittsburgh, and for four years he sold to dealers and factories through West Virginia and in assigned districts in Ohio, Pennsylvania and Maryland. Incidentally he visited all parts of West Virginia, and established an excellent business reputation, while he had the distinction of making the largest single sale of valves ever turned in to his company. This sale was for 144 dozens, which were sold in the Uniontown coal district. Official appreciation of his work was shown in the tendering him of a more responsible position, in charge of a branch establishment in California. He did not accept this flattering offer, as he had decided to engage in independent business, and the unqualified success of his present enterprise has fully justified his decision. What he lacked in initial capital he made up in energy and progressiveness, and his vigorous and straightforward policies have been potent in the developing of his large and substantial business. Mr. McDermott is a staunch and active member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Knights of Columbus, and he and his wife are communicants of the Catholic Church.

At Kingsville, this state, Mr. McDermott wedded Miss Winifred King, and they have three daughters, Frances Angela, Marcella and Phyllis Marie.

GEORGE B. HERVEY is superintendent of the Wheeling plant of the La Belle Iron Works, one of the largest industrial organizations in the Ohio Valley and one for many years a substantial element in Wheeling's prosperity as a manufacturing center.

Mr. Hervey has been connected with the La Belle Company for a number of years. He represents a family whose earlier generations were chiefly distinguished by professional connections, his father having been one of the noted educators of West Virginia, while his grandfather was a distinguished minister of the Presbyterian Church.

The founder of the family in the Northern Panhandle of West Virginia was the great-grandfather, who came to Brook County about 1800. He was of Scotch-Irish descent. He reared his family in West Virginia, consisting of ten children, and several of his sons became ministers of the Presbyterian Church. One of these was Rev. David Hervey, who was born in 1795, and for many years was devoted to his work as a Presbyterian minister. He died at Wellsburg in Brook County in 1877.

John C. Hervey, father of George B. Hervey, was born in Brook County in 1822, was reared there, graduated from a college at West Alexandria and devoted his life to teaching and school administration. He taught in Brook County, this ate, Greene County, Pennsylvania, and in 1867 removed to Wheeling, where for twelve years he was superintendent of city schools, holding that office at the time of his death, in 1881. He was a thorough classical scholar, a cultured gentleman, and left a deep impress upon the educational story of his time. He was a republican, served for many years as an elder in the Presbyterian Church, and was also a Mason. John C. Hervey married Letitia Alexander, who was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, in 1825, and died at Wheeling in 1918, at the advanced age of ninety-three. He was the mother of six children: Dorothy, who died at Wheeling at the age of fifty-two, was the wife of Andrew A. Patterson, a farmer and real estate broker who died in Ohio; John A., who became an oil operator and died at Findlay, Ohio, at the age of fifty-three; Lee, whose home is at 19 Virginia Street in Wheeling; Ella, wife of John R. Clark, a retired farmer living at Woodlawn, near Wheeling; Jennie M., who died at Wheeling in 1918, unmarried, at the age of fifty-four; and George B.

George B. Hervey, who was born in Ohio County, West Virginia, July 24, 1867, began his education in the Wheeling public schools while they were still under his father's supervision. He graduated from Frazier's Business College at Wheeling in 1888, and for the following five years was connected with R. G. Dun & Company, mercantile agency, following that for one year he was paymaster for the Wheeling Steel & Iron Company, then a year as bill clerk with the Actna Standard Iron & Steel Company, and for two years was in the mercantile business.

His service with the La Belle Iron Works began in March, 1899, as weighmaster. He successively filled the office of paymaster, assistant superintendent and in 1907 was promoted to superintendent of the Wheeling plant, situated at the east end of Thirty-first Street. Mr. Hervey has under his immediate supervision 340 employees. The Wheeling plant is equipped with 140 cut nail machines, one skelp mill and one taeck plate mill.

Mr. Hervey was a thorough patriot and leader in war activities, encouraging men in the plant to do their best for the cause, aiding those who joined the colors, and brought a high degree of working efficiency to the plant. His unit in the Government's industrial activities. During part of the war this plant was devoted to the manufacture of plate for depth bombs and plates for heel nails for army shoes. Mr. Hervey is a republican, a member of the Episcopal Church and affiliated with Wheeling Lodge No. 28, E. P. E. He owns a modern home at 507 North Front Street.

Mr. Hervey married at Wheeling in 1892 Miss Gertrude Woodward Hughes, daughter of Jacob and Caroline (Woodward) Hughes, now deceased. Her father was in the real estate business at Wheeling. Mrs. Hervey was a granddaughter of Mr. Woodward, founder of the La Belle Iron Works in 1852. Mr. Hervey lost his first wife by death in January, 1899. She was the mother of two children, Helen, the younger, dying at the age of three years. Margaret Woodward, the only surviving child, lives in the Howard apartments in Pleasant Valley. June 14, 1904, at Bellaire, Ohio, Mr. Hervey married Miss Emma S. Miller, daughter of Morris V. and Emma Miller. Her mother is still living at Bellaire.

Her father was a locomotive engineer with the Pennsylvania Railroad. Mrs. Hervey is a graduate of the Bellaire High School and was a teacher in that city until her marriage. She is a direct descendant of Robert Morris, the distinguished financier whose aid to the Continental Union during the Revolution is a subject taken up in every American history. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Hervey were born five children: Helen Elizabeth, on April 7, 1905; Virginia Miller, in 1909; Robert Morris, on July 10, 1913; George Burdette, twin brother of Robert; and Anna Lee, born December 27, 1915.

ROBERT HAZLETT. There is perhaps no name in Wheeling associated more intimately with successful participation in financial and business affairs, with the institutions that have meant most to the city in its development and that nearly every branch of professional, civic and social activities than that of Hazlett. One member of this family is Robert Hazlett, vice president and secretary of the Dollar Savings & Trust Company, and for many years an engineer whose achievements in that field alone would afford him distinction.

His great-grandfather and the founder of the family in America was Robert Hazlett, who was born at Coleraine, County Antrim, Ireland. He was educated at Edinburgh University for the ministry, but was never ordained, and on coming to the United States he located at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, and taught school in that place. Subsequently he became a pioneer of Washington, Pennsylvania, where he was a merchant and later a banker, and where he spent his last years. His wife was Mary Caldwell, the daughter of Catherine Caldwell, whose maiden name was René, a French Huguenot and who has a place in history as being the founder of the first church of the Methodist Episcopal denomination in Western Pennsylvania, at Washington.

Samuel Hazlett, a son of the pioneer, lived all his life at Washington, Pennsylvania, and was a banker there. He died November 7, 1863. He married Sarah Johns, also a native of Washington, who died there December 10, 1873.

The history of the Wheeling branch of the family begins with a very able and distinguished physician and surgeon, the late Dr. Robert W. Hazlett. He was born at Washington, Pennsylvania, April 16, 1825, attended Washington and Jefferson College through the senior year and received his A. B. degree from that school. He was a collegemate of the distinguished American statesman James E. Blaine. Later he graduated from Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia and began practice at Wheeling. When the Civil war came on he joined the Second West Virginia Infantry as a surgeon, with the rank of major. Following the war he located at Wheeling, and under appointment from President Lincoln was pension examiner. Doctor Hazlett practiced medicine nearly half a century, and had the honor of serving as president of the West Virginia State Medical Association. He died at Wheeling September 2, 1899. He was a republican, and while reared a Methodist he became affiliated with the First Presbyterian Church at Wheeling. He was a director of the National Bank of West Virginia. He was also a member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

The wife of Doctor Hazlett was Mary Elizabeth Hobbs. That name, too, has some important associations with Wheeling. She was born at Cambridge, Massachusetts, September 23, 1829, and died at Wheeling, October 16, 1901. Her father was John L. Hobbs, a native of South Carolina, who for several years in his early life was manager of glass factories at Boston and Cambridge, Massachusetts, and on coming to Wheeling founded the Hobbs Glass Factory, which later was the Hobbs Brockunier Company and is now the H. Northwood Company.

The oldest of the children of the late Doctor Hazlett is Howard Hazlett, long one of Wheeling's foremost men of affairs. He was born at Wheeling, is head of the firm Howard Hazlett & Son, brokers, is president of the Mutual Savings Bank and has always manifested a strong interest in community affairs, especially the Y. M. C. A. and other institutions. The second son, Samuel Hazlett, was a banker and died at Wheeling in March, 1903. Edward Hazlett is a member of the firm Edward Hazlett & Company, stock brokers, at Wheeling. The fourth in the family is Robert. Catherine is the wife of C. R. Hubbard, with home at Echo Point, Wheeling. Mr. Hubbard is a director in the Wheeling Steel Corporation, was formerly president of the Wheeling Steel & Iron Company, and a director in the National Bank of West Virginia and the Hazel-Atlas Company. Three other children of Doctor Hazlett and wife died in infancy.

Robert Hazlett was born at Wheeling, December 24, 1863. He acquired a liberal education, beginning with the public schools of Wheeling and completing the course of these schools in 1880. He then prepared for college at Linsly Institute, and from there entered the Ohio State University at Columbus in 1883. He graduated with the class of 1887 as a civil engineer. He is a member of the Sigma Chi college fraternity, and was president of the senior class of 1887, and still has that honor. He was also president of the Ohio State University Oratorical Association.

The thirty-four years since he left college has been a period of intense activity on the part of Mr. Hazlett. On returning to Wheeling he practiced civil engineering, for some time was connected with the Wheeling Bridge & Terminal Company, and was assistant engineer in building three tunnels and the bridge across the Ohio River for this corporation. In 1891 he accepted a new post at Washington, D. C., as chief engineer of the Washington & Arlington Railway Company. As chief engineer he built the first electric line to the Arlington Cemetery, and included in this work was a proposed bridge across the Potomac near the Aqueduct Bridge. In 1893 Mr. Hazlett removed to New York City, and for two years was in the office of Job Abbott, consulting engineer, engaged in the preparation of station plans for the Bangor & Aroostook Railroad Company in Maine.

Mr. Hazlett returned to Wheeling in 1895 and became associated with Gillmore Brown under the firm name of Brown & Hazlett, engineers. This firm rebuilt and electrified the Wheeling & Elm Grove Railroad Company's lines, built the Parkersburg Electric Street Railway system at Parkersburg, West Virginia, built the waterworks system for the Wheeling Suburban Water Company, and did a great deal of other work involved in a general practice of municipal and street railway engineering. The partnership was dissolved in 1901, and after that Mr. Hazlett continued the profession alone. He was chief engineer in building the Panhandle traction line from Wheeling to Wellsburg, and also made the surveys and started the construction work in Fairmont and Clarksburg for the Fairmont & Clarksburg Street Railway Company.

In 1911 Mr. Hazlett was appointed postmaster of Wheeling by President William H. Taft, and served in that office until March 1, 1914, when he resigned to accept the position of secretary of the Dollar Savings & Trust Company of Wheeling, and since 1919 has also been vice-president as well as secretary.

Mr. Hazlett for many years has been a leader in the republican party in West Virginia. For six years he was a member of the first and second branches of the City Council of Wheeling, and for six years was county engineer of Ohio County. In November, 1903, he was elected to represent Ohio County in the House of Delegates, serving during the sessions of 1904-06. In November, 1905, he was elected a member of the State Senate, and served from 1906 to 1910. At the same time he was member of the State Republican Executive Committee. Mr. Hazlett is treasurer of the First Presbyterian Church of Wheeling, is affiliated with Wheeling Lodge No. 28, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Wheeling County Club, Fort Henry Club, Wheeling Chamber of Commerce, and the American Society of Civil Engineers.

Among other business interests he is president and a director of the Wheeling Belmont Bridge Company, president and director of the Wheeling Ice & Storage Company, a director in the Wheeling Mold & Foundry Company, a director in the Greenwood Cemetery Association. He was an associate member of the Military Training Camps Association, and was identified actively with all the local drives during the war.

March 15, 1909, at Wheeling, Mr. Hazlett married Miss Anne M. Cummins, daughter of James and Matilda (McKenna) Cummins, residents of Wheeling, where her father is a merchandise broker. Mrs. Hazlett is a graduate of the Rye Seminary at Rye, New York. The three children of their marriage are: Robert C., born June 7, 1910; James C., born March 4, 1912; and Catherine Hobbs, born August 1, 1913.

ISAAC LOEWENSTEIN. Of the men prominently identified with the financial and commercial interests of Charleston, few have gained a higher reputation for ability and fidelity than has Isaac Loewenstein, president of the Charleston National Bank. He has been active as a lawyer, manufacturer and banker of this city for near twenty-five years, and his career has been an example one, illustrating the heights to which a man may attain through the exercise of native ability and perseverance. His entire life has been passed at Charleston, and fully exemplifies the alert, enterprising character of which the people of this city have always been noted.

Mr. Loewenstein was born at Charleston, Septemb. 5, 1873, and is a son of Solomon and Henrietta (Fechheimer) Loewenstein. His father, a native of German immigration to the United States just prior to the Civil war and settled at Cincinnati, Ohio, where he met and married Miss Feckheimer, a native of New York, who had been reared at Cincinnati. During the war between the states Solomon Loewenstein enlisted in the Twentieth Ohio Volunteers and served under Maj. Willie McKinley, principally in West Virginia. For about eighteen months he was stationed on the Kanawha River opposite Charleston, and when he received his honorable discharge he took up his residence in this city, in 186 and here spent the remainder of his life. A harness maker by trade, he first opened a modest retail establishment, but later was joined by his sons Louis and Mose, and at that time the business became Loewenstein & Sons and extended its operations to wholesale dealing and manufacture of saddlery and harness. Louis Loewenstein died in 1903, but the father continued in the business until his death in 1909, when he was seventy years of age. He was survived by his widow until 192. After the death of the father the remaining members of the firm, Mose, began to fail in health, and died in 1910. The business was continued by the other sons, Joe and Abe, who had already been in the business, and Isaac, who, while not active in the business, still retains his interest therein. Joe and Abe still continue to operate this enterprise, which retains the honored style of Loewenstein & Sons. This is one of the old and substantial business concerns of the city and enjoys an excellent reputation and a high standing.

Isaac Loewenstein attended the public schools of Charleston, following which he enrolled as a student at the University of West Virginia, where he prosecuted a law course and was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Laws as a member of the class of 189. He was admitted to practice in the same year, and soon secured a large and representative clientele. From 189 he was a member of the law firm of McWhorter & Loewenstein, his partners being H. C. and L. E. McWhorter, but in 1909 he retired from the law to give his attention to the business of Loewenstein & Son. In 1915 they purchased the interests of Dr. L. Pritchard in the Charleston National Bank, and at the same time affected a consolidation with the National City Bank. Isaac Loewenstein, who had been a director in the latter institution, was elected president of the consolidated bank, and J. S. Hill, now state bank commissioner, became cashier. The Charleston National Bank, which was founded in 1884, is a United States depository and member of the Federal Reserve System. It is the largest national bank in West Virginia.

Mr. Loewenstein is a republican in his political allegiance. Although the scope of his work in various business and financial interests has always been broad he has also been active in all matters concerning the public welfare. In the promotion of charitable movements and matters tending to benefit the public weal he is an active and unostentatious worker. His labor have not only been an element in promoting his own success, but have also constituted a potent factor in the development of Charleston, and his influence has been all the more efficacious from the fact that it is moral rather than political, and is exercised for the public good. During the World War Mr. Loewenstein served as county chairman of all the Liberty Loan drives and put the county "over the top" every time. He is a member of the Charleston Rotary Club and of other civic and social bodies.

HARRISON B. SMITH. Now for over thirty years a prominent member of the Charleston bar, also a banker, the standing achievement of the career of Harrison B. Smith the George Washington Life Insurance Company, in the organization of which he was a leader and of which he is president.

This company was established in 1906 and had the great advantage of incorporating from the beginning the recommendations and principles derived from the work of the highest and other investigations of the general field of life insurance. It was inaugurated as a home company, supplying a direct and individual service which could not so well be supplied by the large and unwieldy companies, and another principle in its organization was to apply to the benefit of West Virginia the investment funds accruing to the company.

Operated on such a basis, the company from the start has enjoyed a generous support from the citizens of West Virginia, and the company has steadily emphasized its policy of building up the communities in which it sought business, and particularly the investment of its funds in West Virginia. After the period of vicissitudes inseparable from the experimental stage the company has grown in financial strength, in scope of business operation, and throughout its history the officers have held to a policy of slow and sound growth rather than uncontrolled expansion. The company now has nearly $3,000,000 of assets, has $17,000,000 of outstanding insurance upon lives, has an annual income of about $750,000 and has consistently maintained reserves protecting its insurance contracts largely in excess of legal requirements. With West Virginia as its primary field of investment, the management of this department has been so able that the company has had only one foreclosure proceeding, and in spite of the difficult period just past, in which the wisest financial judgment frequently failed, the company has never had to write off any bad or questionable loans or investments.

Harrison B. Smith was born at Charleston in 1866. He presents one of the oldest and most distinguished families of Western and old Virginia. His grandfather, Col. Benjamin Harrison Smith, was born in 1797 near Harrisonburg, Virginia, son of Benjamin Harrison and Elizabeth (Cravens) Smith and a lineal descendant in the male line of Capt. John Smith of Augusta County, Virginia. Benjamin Harrison Smith was an officer in the Revolutionary war. Col. Benjamin Harrison Smith settled at Charleston, Kanawha county, in February, 1822, and took up the practice of law, which was his life-long profession. In 1833 he was elected member of the Virginia State Senate, and twice re-elected. He served in the Virginia Constitutional Convention of 1855. He was also a member of the Wheeling Convention of 1852 which formed the State of West Virginia. President Lincoln appointed him United States district attorney in the West state, and he filled that office four years. In 1863 he was a candidate for governor on the democratic ticket, but was defeated. Col. Benjamin Harrison Smith, who died at Charleston, December 10, 1887, married Roxalana Noyes, native of Charleston and daughter of Isaac and Cynthia (Morris) Noyes. Their son, Maj. Isaac N. Smith, father of the Charleston lawyer and financier, was born at Charleston in 1831, being the only son of his parents. He graduated with the honors of his class from Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Virginia, and prior to the Civil war had built up a successful practice as a lawyer in Charleston and had served two years in the Virginia Legislature. In the interim of that time he made choice of the Confederacy, volunteered as a private in the Southern army, went all through the war and was promoted to major. After the war he resumed his law practice at Charleston, and for many years there was little important litigation in Kanawha County in which he was not engaged on one side or the other. As a lawyer and a citizen, like his father, he stood among the foremost in his day, and exemplified the long, brave and able traits of his ancestry. He was an elder in the Presbyterian Church. Maj. Isaac N. Smith died at Charleston, October 6, 1883. He had married Caroline S. Carrier, a native of Charleston and daughter of Alexander and Caroline W. (Shrewsbury) Quarrier. Their son, Harrison B. Smith, had the splendid example of both his father and grandfather before him at the outset of his career. He graduated from Princeton University in 1886, and was a law student at the University of Virginia in 1888. In 1889 he was admitted to the bar, and began practice at Charleston. Since 1904 Mr. Smith has been a member of the law firm Price, Smith, Spilman & Clay, an association of attorneys who stand at the very head of their profession in the state. It has been in addition to the burdens of an extensive law practice that Mr. Smith has participated actively in business and the financial life of Charleston and West Virginia. Besides his work as an organizer and president and directing head of the George Washington Life Insurance Company, he is president of the Elk Banking Company and a director of the Kanawha Banking & Trust Company at Charleston. He is a member of the Session of the Kanawha Presbyterian Church of Charleston, and has the honor of being a member of the executive committee of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States.

Mr. Smith married Katharine Bowne, daughter of Samuel W. Bowne, of New York. Their family consists of three children.

EDWARD MAYS is now in his second term as county superintendent of schools of Cabell County. He has given wisdom and discretion to the important duties of his office, and his qualifications rest upon his long and active experience in school work, including both rural and graded schools and close touch in his personal studies with some of the best higher institutions of education.

Mr. Mays was born in Cabell County, in Grant District, November 25, 1854. His grandfather, Charles H. Mays, was born in old Virginia in 1825 and was one of the early farmers in Cabell County, where he lived until his death in 1900. Charles H. Mays, father of the county superintendent, was born in Cabell County in 1854, and for many years was a successful farmer there. Since 1918 his home has been in Huntington, where he is connected with a tobacco warehouse. He is a democrat and a leading member of the Baptist Church. Charles H. Mays first married Susan Braley, who was born in Meigs County, Ohio, in 1855, and died in Cabell County in 1886. Her only child is Edward Mays. The second wife of Charles H. Mays was Fannie F. Flynn, a native of Cabell County. She is the mother of four children. Alva J., the oldest, now an employee of the Union Transfer Company at Huntington, was a corporal in the heavy artillery during the World war, spent a year overseas in France, and was on duty at the front. The second son, Everett, is also an employee of the Union Transfer Company. The third child is Mrs. Lillie Stewart, whose husband is a painter and decorator at Huntington. The fourth and youngest is Raymond, an employee of the Western Union Telegraph Company and, like his brothers, living with his parents.

Edward Mays attended the rural schools of Cabell County, finished a high school course at Milton, and in 1907 entered Marshall College at Huntington, where he has continued his advanced studies at intervals, is now a member of the junior class in the regular college course and has also taken several extension courses. Mr. Mays did his first teaching in rural schools of Putnam County for two years, and for eight years was a rural school teacher in his native county. For two years he was principal of the graded school at Ona, and in November, 1914, was called to his important task as county superintendent of schools. He began his elective term of four years on July 1, 1915. His second election occurred in November, 1918. His official headquarters are in the courthouse at Huntington, and his supervision extends over ninety-five schools, 132 teachers and a scholarship enrollment of 4,100.

Mr. Mays served a time on the State Grading Board for Teachers, and is a member of the Cabell County Teachers Association and West Virginia Educational Association, and in 1921 was chairman of the County Superintendents Section of the State Association. He was deputy assessor of Cabell County from 1910 to 1914. Mr. Mays is a member of the Baptist Church, is a past chancellor of Milton Lodge No. 106, Knights of Pythias, and was representative to the Grand Lodge of the state in 1914, is a past councillor of Milton Council No. 188, Junior Order United American Mechanics, and representative to the Grand Lodge of the state in 1919-20. He is affiliated with Lewis Temple No. 22, Pythian Sisters; Rainbow Council No. 30, Daughters of America at Milton. During the war he was a "Four-Minute" Man, assisting in all the drives, and was chairman of the Rural Schools Organization of Cabell County Chapter of the Red Cross. Mr. Mays owns his home on Smith Street in Milton. He married August 24, 1909, in Cabell County, Miss Ella Havens, daughter of John W. and Mary (Young) Havens, who still live on their farm near Milton. Mr. and Mrs. Mays have two children: Blaine C., born November 3, 1910; and Bernard H., born January 12, 1913.

GEORGE ROBERTS HEFFLEY. The first Court of Domestic Relations, formally created by legislative enactment and organized in West Virginia, was established in the City of Huntington, and the judge, appointed by the governor, who was delegated to open the business of this novel branch of the judiciary is George Roberts Heffley, who was called from a busy and successful private law practice to these duties.

Judge Heffley is a member of an old family of Somerset County, Pennsylvania. His ancestors settled in that section of Pennsylvania in Colonial times, when they came out of Germany. His grandfather, George Heffley, spent his life in Somerset County, where he was born in 1807 and died at Berlin in 1888. He was a blacksmith by trade. His wife, Julia Poorbaugh, was born in 1810 and died in 1900, likewise a life-long resident of Somerset County. Henry Heffley, father of Judge Heffley, is still living at Somerset, and was born at Berlin in the same county, June 25, 1842. He has been a resident of Somerset since the '70s, and all his life except for about five years has been spent in that county. This period he was in the West, when the Indians dominated the life of the plains, and was a teamster from Omaha to Salt Lake City. He retired from a successful career as a merchant at Somerset in 1903. By appointment of Governor Robert E. Pattison of Pennsylvania he served as associate judge of Somerset County, is a democrat and one of the very prominent members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in his community, being a trustee of the church. Henry Heffley married Eliza Roberts, who was born at Stoyestown, Somerset County, November 7, 1851. George Roberts Heffley is their oldest child. Susan is the wife of Andrew W. Kinzer, auditor for the Consolidation Coal Company and a resident of Somerset. Carrie is the wife of Robert E. Sullivan, an asphalt paving contractor at Somerset. Miss Grace lives with her parents.

George Roberts Heffley was born at Somerset, December 3, 1878, graduated from the high school of his native city in 1895, and subsequently entered Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, where he took the regular four-year course and graduated Bachelor of Literature in 1902. He was a member of the Theta Chapter of the Beta Theta Pi fraternity in university. In the spring of 1903 he began his law studies in West Virginia University and graduated LL. B. in 1904. Judge Heffley is a member of the Delta Chi law fraternity. He was admitted to the bar in 1904 at Morgantown, West Virginia, and has been a resident of Huntington since January, 1905.

He has been a member of the Huntington bar since January, 1905, and early in his career he proved himself the possessor of sound abilities as a lawyer, and the knowledge and character requisite for success in the profession.

The Domestic Relations Court of Cabell County was established by act of the Legislature, April 19, 1921, and the court was formally organized and began its work on the 11th of May of the same year. The appointment of Judge Heffley was made May 9th by Governor E. F. Morgan. Judge Heffley is a republican, a trustee of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Huntington, a member of Huntington Lodge No. 313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Guyan Country Club, Huntington Chamber of Commerce, the County and State Bar associations. During the World war he performed much gratuitous service, assisting recruited men of the county in filling out questionnaires.

June 6, 1911, at Huntington, he married Miss Sadle

Enslow, daughter of Dr. Corydon R. and Mary (Blo) Enslow, residents of Huntington, where her father is a physician and surgeon. Mrs. Heffley is a graduate of Marshall College.

GEORGE W. LUTZ. Some of the biggest things that have been done in Wheeling, whether commercial undertakings or enterprises of a strictly public nature, acknowledge as one of their chief actuating sources and inspiration George W. Lutz. Mr. Lutz was born in Wheeling, became a working factor in the city's industrial affairs when a boy, and in his mature years his interests have been distributed among a large number of Wheeling's best known industrial, financial and public undertakings.

Mr. Lutz was born July 17, 1855. His father, Sebastian Lutz, was born in Alsace, Germany, in 1813, was rearer of the Schwartzwald of Alsace, and in 1837 came to the United States and located at Wheeling. He was a butcher by trade, and for many years conducted the Old Home Hotel on Market Street, opposite the site of the present auditorium. He made that one of the popular hostleries of the day. Sebastian Lutz died at Wheeling in 1865. He was a democrat and a Catholic in religion. His wife, Anna Treusehler, was born in Alsace in 1829, and died at Wheeling in 1871. The oldest of their four children is Sophia A., living at Wheeling, widow of the late George Hook, who was clerk of the Ohio County Court sixty years and cashier of the Germania Half Dollar Savings Bank, now the Half Dollar Savings Bank of Wheeling. The second child is George W. Lutz. William Lutz is resident of Wheeling, interested in the Home Pearl Laundry Company. John J. Lutz, now a retired resident of Clairsville, Ohio, was one of the founders of the Home Pearl Laundry Company. By a previous marriage Sebastian Lutz had two children: Charles P., a railroad employe living at Chicago; and Louisa, of Wheeling, widow of Fred Swartz.

George W. Lutz attended parochial schools in Wheeling, also attended night course in the Frazier Business College, where he was graduated in 1868, at the age of thirteen. He then went to work as an employe of the Wheeling Tack Factory. He remained there about a year until injured, nearly losing his left arm. Two years following he was in the Coen, Armstrong & Coen Planing Mill, and then took up the business which has been his centric activity through all his active years, plumbing and gas and steam fitting. For one year he worked with Jacob Hughes and then with Trimble & Hornbrook, plumbers and gas fitters. After four years he bought the interest of Mr. Hornbrook in the establishment, and was an active partner with Mr. Trimble for eighteen years. On the death of Mr. Trimble he continued the firm name of Trimble, Lutz, and in 1907 the Trimble & Lutz Supply Company was incorporated. This is now the largest house in the state doing a wholesale and jobbing business in plumbing, steam fitting and gas supplies. The corporation owns a large brick structure at 112-122 Nineteenth Street. The present executive officers of the corporation are: H. Ebbert, president; P. H. Hornbrook, vice president; Harry J. Lutz, a nephew of George W. Lutz, secretary and treasurer; while George W. Lutz was president of the corporation until 1919, and has since been chairman of the Board of Directors. This business was in early years merely a firm for contracting in plumbing and gasfitting, but and Mr. Lutz's able supervision expanded its facilities until its business is in the front rank of its line.

Ten years ago the most discussed project in Wheeling was the building of a great auditorium, to occupy the historic site of the old Market House and Town Hall, building that would furnish facilities for a city market place and also a convention hall capable of entertaining large assemblages. The business man who was most persistent in keeping this project before the people and who has been justly called the father of the auditorium is George W. Lutz, who for a number of years has been and still is president and director of the Market Auditorium Company. The auditorium is one of Wheeling's most important public buildings. It is 506 feet long by 50 feet wide, was built a cost of $160,000 and houses the public market, and provides quarters for the Chamber of Commerce on the second floor in addition to the great auditorium or convention hall.

During the past thirty or forty years Mr. Lutz has been identified with a large number of commercial enterprises. He is still president and director of the Loveland Improvement Company of Wheeling, president and director of the Utility Salt Company; a director of the Security Trust Company, the Half Dollar Savings Bank, the Wheeling Ice Company, the Gee Electric Company and the American Spar Company. He is president of the West Virginia State Fair Association, was for three years president of the Wheeling Board of Trade, and is a member of the Country Club, the Fort Henry Club, the Carroll Club, the Hook Bass Fishing Club, the Isaac Walton Club, is a fourth degree Knight of Columbus and a member of Carroll Council No. 504 of that order, and is a past exalted ruler of Wheeling Lodge No. 28, B. P. O. E. Many definite acts of public spirit are credited to Mr. Lutz. It is recalled that at his own expense he installed twenty-three flower beds on Virginia Avenue on Wheeling Island as a means of adorning that section of the city. With other citizens he was instrumental in placing flower beds on the National highway at Fulton and in building a beautiful entrance to the city limits that has been greatly admired by the motorists who pass through Wheeling over the National highway. Mr. Lutz was a member of the various committees for selling the Liberty Loan quotas and other drives in the city. He is now engaged with the Civic Committee, acting as chairman, and as a member of the Wheeling Improvement Association, and is greatly interested in curing for Wheeling its new filtration plant and street lighting of Wheeling's principal streets.

In 1887, at Wheeling, he married Miss Eugene E. Hornbrook, daughter of Thomas and Triphina Hornbrook, now deceased. Her father was owner of the noted Hornbrook park, now known as Wheeling Park. Mrs. Lutz died September 7, 1917. Mr. Lutz has one of the finest homes in the city, at 308 South Front Street and purchased a forty-acre wooded farm for a summer home.

HENRY CLAY WARTH. In the law, business and public affairs Henry Clay Warth has been steadily accumulating honors and success since he engaged in practice at Huntington fifteen years ago.

He is descended from a great frontiersman and Indian fighter, George Warth, a native of old Virginia and one of the first settlers in Jackson County, West Virginia. He and his brother, John A., had a contract for carrying the mail over the trails from Jackson County into Meigs County, Ohio. As a mark of the service he rendered in these frontier days the Government erected a monument to the memory of George Warth at Great Bend, Meigs County. He lived that county the latter part of his life, owning a farm there. His wife was Ruth Fleahart, a native of Newton, Virginia, who died in Meigs County. His name is also commemorated in a locality in Jackson County known as Warth's Bottom.

A son of this pioneer, Robert A. Warth, was born in old Virginia in 1800, and was a small boy when the family moved to Jackson County, where he spent his active life as cooper and farmer. He died in Jackson County in 1892. He married there Mary Johnson, a native of old Virginia, who died in Jackson County. John A. Warth, their son, old father of the Huntington lawyer, was born at Warth's Bottom in Jackson County, August 6, 1847, and is now living at Gallipolis Ferry in Mason County, West Virginia. He is active career has been that of a successful farmer, and in 1903 he removed to Mason County, where he still owns and operates a farm. He is a democrat in politics. John A. Warth married Ann Stareber, who was born on Big Sandy in Jackson County in October, 1856. Their children are: Myrtle, wife of William Hall, a building contractor living at Ocean View, Virginia; Henry Clay; Arthur L., who lives on the home farm in Mason County, grows blooded stock and practices his profession as a veterinarian; and Mary Belle, who for a number of years was a teacher and is now a Government employee at Washington.

Henry Clay Warth was born at Willow Grove in Jackson County, February 11, 1878. He started with a rural school education, but in 1900 graduated from Marshall College at Huntington and in 1905 received the A. B. degree from Oberlin College of Ohio. He took his law course in the University of Virginia at Charlottesville, from which he received his LL. B. degree in 1907. Mr. Warth is a member of the Delta Chi college fraternity. Since his graduation in 1907 he has been steadily practicing law at Huntington, and has handled a large volume of business in both the civil and criminal branches. He was a member of the firm Warth, McCullough & Peyton. Their offices are in the Ohio Valley Bank Building on Third Avenue, and Mr. Warth is vice president of the Ohio Valley Bank.

He has been a leader in the democratic party in his section of the state. In 1912 he was elected to represent Cabell County in the House of Delegates, and served in the sessions of 1913 and 1915. He is prominent in the First Congregational Church, being director of the choir. Fraternally he is affiliated with Huntington Lodge No. 313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, Kiwanis Club and Huntington Chamber of Commerce, and is a director in the Community Service Organization of Huntington and a member of the Cabell County and State Bar associations. His home at 207 Water Street occupies a beautiful location on the banks of the Ohio River. He owns considerable other improved real estate, including a business corner at Ninth Street and Third Avenue. During the war Mr. Warth sought active duty in the U. S. C. A., was appointed a transport secretary, and performed the service of that organization for soldiers and sailors while being transported overseas. His regular station was the U. S. Huron, and he crossed the ocean six times.

In 1899, at Huntington, Mr. Warth married Miss Ruth A. Parsons, a daughter of Chester F. and Mandana (Shaw) Parsons, now deceased. Her father was for many years a hardware merchant at Huntington. Mrs. Warth is also a graduate of Oberlin College, Ohio, receiving her A. B. degree in 1905. They have one son, Henry, born August 30, 1906, now a student in the Huntington High School.

JOHN EDWIN THOMAS. Beginning when a boy, John Edwin Thomas was in the railroad service until he located at Huntington about twenty years ago. Here he became identified with the sale of mining machinery and equipment over West Virginia coal fields, and for some years past has been the manager and one of the executives in an important sales organization in this field, known as the Huntington Supply & Equipment Company.

Mr. Thomas was born at Syracuse, Meigs County, Ohio, September 6, 1871. His father, Joseph Thomas, was born at Lantrisant, South Wales, in 1824, and devoted practically his entire life to the coal mining industry. He was raised in his native town in Wales, and as a young man came to America, was married at Pittsburgh, followed coal mining at Syracuse, Ohio, and in 1874 located at Cannelton, Kanawha County, West Virginia. In 1881 he moved to Coal Valley, now called Montgomery, Fayette County, West Virginia, and was mine superintendent of the W. R. Johnson Coal Mining Company's mines situated at Crescent. He continued his duties for this company the remainder of his active career, and died at Montgomery in 1892. After becoming an American citizen Joseph Thomas voted as a republican, was an active member of the Baptist Church and was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He married Catherine Griffith, also a native of Lantrisant, South Wales, where she was born and received training. She died in Montgomery, West Virginia, in 1897. Of the four children of these parents John Edwin was the youngest. The oldest, Lydia, died at Montgomery in 1907, wife of John W. Carson, a passenger conductor on the Caven Creek branch of the Chesapeake & Ohio. Miss Kate, the second child, died unmarried at the age of twenty-one. Elizabeth is the wife of Dr. Thomas H. Elliott, a physician and surgeon at St. Elmo, Tennessee.

John Edwin Thomas was three years of age when his parents came to West Virginia. Was reared in and educated in the public schools of Cannelton and Montgomery, but left school when only fourteen and since then has been making his own way in the world. His first employment, lasting two years, was that of delivery boy for a grocery store at Montgomery. He then entered the service of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company at Cannelton, was station call boy, a year later was promoted to yard clerk at Covington, Kentucky, and was then transferred to Ashland, Kentucky, where until 1897 he was yard master's chief clerk. Leaving there, he became night yardmaster for the Norfolk & Western Railroad at Kenova, Wayne County, West Virginia. He was stationed at Kenova until 1899, and then at Buffalo, New York, one year.

Mr. Thomas became a resident of Huntington in 1901, and for three and one-half years he traveled over the coal fields along the Norfolk & Western Railroad as salesman for the Miller Supply Company, and at the end of that time he was taken off the road and put in charge of the machinery department of this company at Huntington, remaining with the firm a year and a half longer. The Huntington Supply and Equipment Company he organized in 1906. This company acts as manufacturers' agents for machinery and supplies, with Mr. Thomas as active manager. The company's offices are in the Robson-Pritchard Building at Huntington.

Among other business interests Mr. Thomas is a director in the Huntington National Bank and the Atlas Rubber & Belting Company of Cincinnati.

He has found a number of interesting duties and diversions in his life at Huntington. He is a deacon and chairman of the finance committee of the Presbyterian Church, votes as a democrat, is affiliated with Huntington Lodge No. 53, A. F. and A. M., Huntington Chapter No. 6, R. A. M., Huntington Commandery No. 9, K. T., Beni-Kedem Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Charleston, is a member of Huntington Council No. 53, of the United Commercial Travelers, the Huntington Rotary Club, and in the Chamber of Commerce he served two years as vice president and six years as a member of the Board of Directors. During the great war he was a member of committees and otherwise active in promoting the success of the various drives for the Liberty Loan and other causes. He was a "Four-Minute" speaker with the local war organization.

At Ashland, Kentucky, in June, 1904, Mr. Thomas married Miss Adelaide Fisher, daughter of Nathan E. and Sarah (Smith) Fisher, her mother a resident of Ashland, where her father died in 1912. Her father was an undertaker at Ashland.

REV. WILLIAM M. LISTER. The ordinary individual whose years are prolonged beyond middle age sees a future ahead wherein ease and a competency may await him and patiently or otherwise performs his duties until the appointed time, when he sinks more or less into oblivion. There are extraordinary men, however, who have already achieved distinction and won merited rewards before this middle age is reached, and when retirement comes in one direction just as efficiently prove their vitality in other fields, and, in fact, never find lack of interest to inspire or duties to gladly perform to family, church or country. With a splendid record to his credit as a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Rev. William M. Lister, one of Huntington's most valued citizens, has been equally successful in the real estate business, and for the past five years has devoted his interests to the development of an expanding enterprise. Reverend Lister, realtor, has succeeded Reverend Lister, minister of the Gospel, whose long career in the latter capacity had not only been fruitful of results, but had brought him the affection and esteem of people over a wide territory.

Reverend Lister was born July 21, 1866, in Caroline County, Maryland, a son of James Edward and Mary Elizabeth (Cain) Lister. His grandfather, Joshua Lister, was of English-Irish descent and belonged to a family which had immigrated to America in Colonial days and settled in Delaware, in which state he was born in 1776. He spent his entire life in his native state, engaged in agricultural pursuits, and died in 1846, aged seventy years, while his wife, Anna, also a native of Delaware, died when eighty-three years of age.

James Edward Lister, who now resides in Carroll County, Maryland, was born June 13, 1837, and resided in his present community all his life. As a young man he learned the trade of carpentry, which he followed for about thirty years, and then turned his attention to agriculture, becoming a practical farmer, a field of labor in which he gained a wide and well-deserved reputation for general ability, industry and progressive ideas. He now retired from active pursuits. Mr. Lister is a democrat in politics, and his religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he has always been a willing worker and generous contributor. He married Miss Mary Elizabeth Cain, who was born December 1, 1840, in Sussex County, Delaware, and died August 1, 1919, in Caroline County, Maryland. They became the parents of the following children: Martha Jane, who married John L. Reed, of Camden, New Jersey, a stationary engineer; Hester Ann, who died in Caroline County aged twenty-six years, as the wife of George L. Harr who is still engaged in farming in Caroline County; Martha Etta, who also died in that county at the same age, as the wife of John O. Pippin, a farmer, who is likewise deceased; Joshua L., a practical farmer and accounted one of the best in Caroline County, where he died at the age of forty-three years; William M., of this record; Laura Elizabeth, who died in Queen Anne County, Maryland, aged twenty-five years, as the wife of the late Arno Butler, who was an extensive farmer; Ida May, who died aged eighteen years; Maggie Lacey, who died when nineteen years of age; Emma, who died aged seventeen years; Georgia Luvina, the wife of Louis Butler, one of the progressive and practical agriculturists of Caroline County, Maryland; and Blanche, who died at the age of six months.

William M. Lister received his early education in the rural schools of his native community and then attended the high school at Denton, Maryland. This was followed by a course at the Wilmington Conference Academy, Dover, Delaware, where he pursued a classical course of three years. During 1894 he began his career as a pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church when he preached at Pinney Neck, Kent County, Maryland, under the supervision of the Wilmington Conference. Following this he further prepared himself for his chosen calling by a year attendance at the college at Wilmington, Delaware, and was then pastor for a year at Lumberville, Bucks County, Pennsylvania. Following this he held these pastorates: Woodruff, Cumberland County, New Jersey, three years; Green Creek, Cape May County, New Jersey, three years; Deerfield, Cumberland County, New Jersey, one year; Tabernacle, Camden County, New Jersey, one year. In 1904 he was transferred to the West Virginia Conference and preached at Friendsville, Garrett County, Maryland, three years; Aurora, Preston County, West Virginia, one year; and Webster Springs, Webster County, West Virginia, one year. Reverend Lister was then transferred to the Erie (Pennsylvania) Conference, and held the following charges: Wesley, Venango County, Pennsylvania, one year; Wattsburg, Erie County, Pennsylvania, one year; West Monterey, Marion County, Pennsylvania, one year and Brockport, Elk County, Pennsylvania, one year. He was next returned to the West Virginia Conference, but did not preach during the years 1913 and 1914, being resident of Sistersville, West Virginia, where he engaged in the manufacture of gasoline as foreman in the gauging department of the Riverside-Carter Oil Company. In 1915 he resumed preaching at Hamlin, Lincoln County, West Virginia, where he remained one year, and at the end of that time took a retired relationship in the West Virginia Conference, locating at Huntington in 1917. Reverend Lister still preaches occasionally and is holding his local church relations with the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Huntington, taking an active part in all church work. Since taking up his residence in this city he has been engaged in the real estate business, in which he has built up a prosperous and flourishing rental agency, his office being situated at No. 1040½ Fourth Avenue, Huntington.

R. A. Ireland

verend Lister is a member of Friendsville (Maryland) lodge, I. O. O. F., and is an apprenticed Mason.

In 1896, at Doylestown, Pennsylvania, Reverend Lister married Miss Jennie Black, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Black, of Lumberville, Pennsylvania, Mr. Black being a retired stone mason. Three children have been born to Reverend and Mrs. Lister. Lawrence Claude, a rail dispatcher at the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad station, Huntington, for the United States Government, who received three months' training at Camp Purdue, Indiana, during the World war and acted as assistant postmaster at the camp. He married Hazel Lunsford and they have a daughter, Lucille Lunsford Lister. Edward Lee is an operator of the machine in a motion picture theater of Huntington. Wilbert Samuel is a clerk for the Miller Lumber Company of Huntington.

J. MARSHALL HAWKINS. Included among the men prominently identified with the business interests of Huntington, as well as with the civic and social life of the community, is by character and achievement have attained more an passing distinction is J. Marshall Hawkins, president of the Mercereau-Hawkins Tie Company. His career has been an exemplary one in many ways, and fully typifies a true American spirit of progress. He located at Huntington a quarter of a century ago, and while adding to his own fortunes has associated himself with other blue-blooded citizens in contributing to the city's welfare.

Mr. Hawkins was born in Louisa County, Virginia, July 1, 1866, a son of Rev. Edward P. and Martha Jane (Anderson) Hawkins, and a member of a family that emigrated from England to America in Colonial times and settled in Virginia. Thomas P. Hawkins, the grandfather of J. Marshall Hawkins, was born in Orange County, Virginia, where he passed his entire life as an extensive planter, operating his broad acres with slave labor. His son, Edward P. Hawkins, was born in 1829, in Orange County, where he received his early education, and as a young man went to Louisa County, where he was married, entering the ministry of the Baptist Church, he preached in Louisa, Goochland and Spotsylvania counties until he had reached the advanced age of eighty-five years, when he died. Reverend Hawkins was one of the distinguished and greatly beloved members of the cloth, and his death, in Spotsylvania County in 1918, was sincerely mourned. He was a democrat and a member of the Masonic fraternity. During the war between the states he entered the Confederate army and served in the quartermaster's department. Reverend Hawkins married Miss Martha Jane Anderson, who was born in Louisa County, Virginia, where her death occurred. They were the parents of a large family of children.

The education of J. Marshall Hawkins was acquired in the rural schools of Louisa County, Virginia, which he attended until reaching the age of seventeen years. At that time he learned telegraphy and became an operator for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, with whom he remained several years, then transferring his services to the Chicago, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway, as secretary to the general manager in the Topeka office. He was there two years, after which he became private secretary to the president of the Lake Shore Railway at Cleveland, remaining ten years, and then became purchasing agent for the Union Car Works at Depew, a suburb of Buffalo, New York, a capacity in which he continued for five years. In 1897 Mr. Hawkins came to Huntington and went into the cross tied lumber business, in which he has been engaged to the present time. He is president of the Mercereau-Hawkins Tie Company, 603-4-5 First National Bank Building, manufacturers and wholesalers of railroad ties and hardwood lumber, operating in Virginia, West Virginia and Kentucky. Under Mr. Hawkins' capable and energetic management this business has been built up into the largest cross tie business in West Virginia, handling more than 1,000,000 ties annually. Mr. Hawkins is recognized not only as a man of marked business talents but one of earnest purpose and progressive principles. He has always stood for the things that are right, and for the advancement of citizenship, and is interested in everything that pertains to modern improvement in the direction of morals, education and civic responsibilities. He is a man of marked mental capacity and force of character, and the fact that he enjoys the same respect from his business colleagues as from those with whom he comes in contact in social relations is proof of his high standing.

In politics Mr. Hawkins is a democrat, and his religious connection is with the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church. As a Fraternalist he belongs to Huntington Lodge No. 53, A. F. and A. M., of which he is a past master; Huntington Chapter No. 6, R. A. M., of which he is a past high priest; Huntington Commandery No. 9, K. T., of which he is a past commander; Beni-Kedem Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Charleston, of which he is a past potentate; West Virginia Consistory No. 1, thirty-third degree, Wheeling; Huntington Lodge of Perfection No. 4, and Huntington Chapter, Rose Croix No. 4, of which he is a past wise master, having been the first to occupy this chair. He is also a past grand commander of the Grand Commandery Knights Templars of West Virginia, a member of the board of trustees of the Grand Lodge, A. F. and A. M., of the state, and president of the Huntington Masonic Temple Association, a position which he has held since the association erected the Masonic Temple in this city in 1913. Mr. Hawkins belongs also to Huntington Lodge No. 313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; the Guyandotte Club of Huntington, of which he was formerly president; the Guyan Country Club of this city; and the Huntington Chamber of Commerce. He is the owner of one of Huntington's modern homes, located at No. 1219 Fifth Avenue, in an exclusive residential district.

In 1891, at Huntington, Mr. Hawkins married Miss Nora B. Beuhring, daughter of Frederick D. and Frances (Miller) Beuhring, both deceased. Mr. Beuhring, who was a pioneer farmer and prominent citizen, at one time owned about one-half of the land upon which is now situated the City of Huntington. Mrs. Hawkins died in May, 1900, leaving two sons: Edward Donald and Howard Burke. Edward Donald Hawkins was born in May, 1896, and is a graduate of Huntington High School. He volunteered his services in the World war, prior to the draft, was accepted for service, and during the period of the struggle was in the Motor Transport Corps. He now assists his father and is a stockholder and director in the Mercereau-Hawkins Tie Company. Howard Burke Hawkins was born in May, 1900, and is a graduate of Huntington High School and the Virginia Military Institute, Lexington, Virginia, where he took a degree in chemical engineering. During the World war he enlisted in the Officers' Training Camp, was assigned to the field artillery service, and sent to Camp Taylor, Louisville, Kentucky, where he was located at the close of the struggle. He is now identified with the Hutchinson Lumber Company at Oroville, California, and is a stockholder in that concern. In 1908, at Huntington, J. Marshall Hawkins was united in marriage with Miss Blanche Miller Poage, daughter of John B. and Mary (Miller) Poage, residents of Huntington, Mr. Poage being a retired merchant.

RITCHIE A. IRELAND, M. D. With an extensive private practice to look after Doctor Ireland is also city health commissioner of Charleston. No position in any community offers greater potential opportunities for a really vital service than this office.

Doctor Ireland is fully sensible of his duties and opportunities, and has a courage, public spirit and professional abilities requisite of such an official. It is in an important sense to his credit that Charleston has become known for the efficiency of its Health Department and the carefulness with which the public health is guarded. A large part of his time is devoted to such subjects as milk inspection and testing, sewage and garbage disposal, water supply. He has put in force a ruling requiring all cows supplying milk for Charleston be tested for tuberculosis, and is gradually enforcing all the standard requirements recommended by the United States Bureau of Animal Industry. A number of articles from his pen have been contributed to Public Health Magazines on garbage and sewage disposal. Doctor Ireland organized the Public Health Nursing Association in Charleston for teaching child welfare and spreading knowledge of better living conditions among the poor. This association furnishes free nursing services to those who cannot afford to pay for private nurses. Through this association also has been developed a social welfare organization for the confidential exchange of information among the various charity and civic welfare bodies of Charleston and near vicinity. Through these activities Doctor Ireland is undoubtedly one of the foremost men in the state whose time and talents are enlisted in the great public health movement.

He was born in Ritchie County, West Virginia, in 1884, son of George M. and Mary (Law) Ireland, and is of English ancestry. His father's mother was a descendant of Alexander Lowther, a Revolutionary patriot. Thomas Ireland, father of George M. Ireland, cleared the land in the wilderness for his pioneer home in Ritchie County. George M. Ireland was a Union soldier, serving as captain of Company E, Sixth West Virginia Infantry.

Dr. Aetnae A. Ireland was liberally trained in preparation for his profession. He attended the public schools, graduated in 1905 from the Wesleyan University at Buckhannon, spent the year 1906 in the University of West Virginia, and from there entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, now a department of the University of Maryland, graduating in 1912. For one year he remained as an interne in Mercy Hospital at Baltimore. For about four months he had an experience with Dr. James McClung, mine surgeon, at Richwood, West Virginia, and in the spring of 1913 moved to Charleston, where he has been engaged in practice, his chief work being as a specialist in internal medicine. Doctor Ireland is a member of the County, State and American Medical associations, is president of the Kanawha Medical Society, embracing the counties of Kanawha, Clay, Putnam and Boone, belongs to the Dispensary Staff of Union Mission, is consulting internist at Charleston General Hospital, and is on the Nurses Teaching Staff at St. Francis Hospital. He is also a member of the Chamber of Commerce, of the Official Board of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, and is affiliated with the Masons and Elks. Doctor Ireland married Miss Ada Scott, daughter of H. J. Scott, of Pennsylvania, West Virginia. They have one son, James Dudley.

WILLIAM M. BROOKE is now sole owner of one of the important industrial enterprises of the Huntington metropolitan district, the business being conducted under the title of the Huntington Seating Company, and the manufacturing plant, one of the largest of its kind in the United States, being situated on Huntington Street, near the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad station in the suburban Town of Guyandotte.

Mr. Brooke was born in the City of St. Louis, Missouri, July 24, 1863, and is a son of John C. and Emily Love (Supplee) Brooke, the former of whom was born in Preble County, Ohio, in 1811, and the latter of whom was born in the City of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in 1816. The parents passed the closing period of their lives in the City of Huntington, West Virginia, where the mother died May 12, 1912, and the father in the year 1917. John C. Brooke was a son of John Brooke, who was born in Virginia in 1814, and who died in Preble County, Ohio, in 1868, he having been a pioneer settler and extensive farmer in that county and having been a representative of a family of English lineage, that was founded in Virginia in the Colonial era of our national history. John Brooke married a daughter of Rev. James B. Finley, who was a distinguished pioneer clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and they became the parents of a remarkable family of twenty children.

John C. Brooke gained his early education in the common schools of Preble County, Ohio, and as a lad he went to Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and entered the employ of the Bradstreet Commercial Agency. He continued his residence in Philadelphia until shortly after his marriage, when he removed to St. Louis, Missouri, and engaged in the wholesale and retail coal business. In 1865 he removed to Eaton, Ohio, and there organized and became president of the First National Bank. In 1868 he established a private bank in the City of Cincinnati, that state, and there in 1871 he organized an Excelsior School Furniture Company, of which he became vice president and general manager. A few years later he organized the Excelsior Furniture Company, which established its manufacturing plant at New Richmond, Ohio, and in 1889 he effected a reorganization of the enterprise, under the title of the Cincinnati Seating Company and with a factory at Harrison, Ohio. In 1891 the manufacturing headquarters were removed to Huntington, West Virginia, and the title of the corporation was changed to the Huntington Seating Company. Mr. Brooke continued as president of the company until his death. He was a liberal and progressive citizen, a business man, a republican in politics, and he and his wife were zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Of their children William M., of this review is the eldest; Finley S. is engaged in the real-estate business at Cincinnati, Ohio; Emily Love became the wife of John W. Maat, who is now a resident of Erie, Pennsylvania, and her death occurred at Washington, D. C., in 1911, when she was thirty-eight years of age.

William M. Brooke graduated from the high school in the City of Cincinnati as a member of the class of 1886, and thereafter he was a traveling salesman for the Church Furniture Company of Cincinnati until 1890. He then became a traveling salesman for a leading electrical appliance company in the City of Chicago, at his trade territory covered the southern states. In 1910 he became associated with his father's company, the Huntington Seating Company, for which he travels throughout the entire United States. In 1916 he purchased the interests of his father and brother and became sole owner of this important concern, which manufactures church furniture of all kinds and which is one of the largest and most important of the order in the Union, the father of Mr. Brooke having been the pioneer in the manufacturing of church furniture, and the Huntington Seating Company thus having prestige as the oldest company in this line of manufacturing in the United States.

Mr. Brooke is a stalwart advocate of the principles of the republican party, he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, he is affiliated with Huntington Lodge No. 313, B. F. O. E., and is a past exalted ruler of Dallas Lodge No. 11, B. F. O. E., at Dallas, Texas. He is a member also of Fidelity Lodge No. 123, I. O. O. F., at Huntington, and holds membership in the local Kiwanis Club, Chamber of Commerce and Jobbers and Manufacturers Bureau. His attractive and modern home is at 316 Main Street, Guyandotte, and he is the owner of the property.

At Atlanta, Georgia, in 1889, Mr. Brooke wedded Miss Anna Donna Forlow, who was born in Preble County, Ohio, in September, 1870, and whose death occurred at Huntington, West Virginia, December 31, 1912, no children having been born of this union. On the 25th of April, 1914, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Brooke and Miss Mae Elizabeth Lynch, daughter of Robert and Malinda Lynch, who resides at Point Pleasant, West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Brooke have one child, Malinda Love, who was born September 19, 1917.

JOHN F. SCHMIDLAPP, superintendent of motive power for the Ohio Valley Electric Railway Company, with residence and official headquarters in the City of Huntington, West Virginia, was born at Piqua, Ohio, August 14, 1872. His father, Carl Schmidlapp, was born in the City of Berlin, Germany, in 1849, and died at Piqua, Ohio, in 1911. The grandfather, John F. Schmidlapp, was reared near Berlin and followed farm enterprise in his native land until 1855, when he came with his family to the United States and settled near Piqua, Ohio, where he became a very successful farmer and where he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives. Both were devout communicants of the Lutheran Church, and he es-used the cause of the democratic party. John F. Schmidlapp was forty-four years of age at the time of his death. His wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Menzbacher, was born in the City of Berlin in 1827, and died at Piqua, Ohio, in 1912, their only child having been Carl, father of the subject of this review.

In the public schools of Miami County, Ohio, Carl Schmidlapp continued his studies until he had profited by the advantages of the high school at Piqua, and eventually he succeeded to the ownership of the fine 140-acre homestead farm, 2 1/2 miles north of Piqua, where he has long held precedence as one of the substantial and aggressive agriculturists and stock-growers of that part of the old Buckeye State. He was for thirty years president of the school board of his district, was influential in community affairs in general, was a democrat in politics, and was a most zealous communicant and supporter of the Lutheran Church, of which his wife likewise was a devoted member. He was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity for many years prior to his death. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Roberts, was born in Miami County, Ohio, in 1855, and she died while visiting her son John F. at Huntington, West Virginia, on the 29th of April, 1911, her remains being returned to Piqua and interred beside those of her husband. Of the children John F., of this sketch, is the eldest; he is the wife of William Zimmerman, manager of the Piqua (Ohio) Water Company; Harry owns and has active management of the old home farm; and Russell likewise is a progressive farmer near Piqua.

The public schools of Piqua afforded John F. Schmidlapp his early education, and there he was graduated from the high school as a member of the class of 1888. For one year thereafter he was employed as a laborer on what is now the Toledo Railway & Light Company at Toledo, Ohio, and his ability and effective service eventually led to his promotion to the position of superintendent of equipment. After leaving this position he was for three years chief electrician with the Sprague Electric Company at Lima, Ohio, and for a total period of twelve years, in three different intervals, he was in executive service with the Miami Valley Railway Company, with headquarters at Piqua, where he held the office of superintendent of equipment. In the interim of his service with this company he gave seven years of effective administration as superintendent of construction for the Cleveland Construction Company, the general offices of which are in the City of Cleveland, Ohio. In 1911 Mr. Schmidlapp became superintendent of equipment for the People's Railway Company of Dayton, Ohio, and in 1912 the company transferred him to Huntington, West Virginia, where he has since served as superintendent of motive power for the corporation now known as the Ohio Valley Electric Railway Company, the same having absorbed the People's Railway Company. With offices at Eighteenth Street, West, and Washington Avenue, Mr. Schmidlapp now has supervision of the activities of seventy employees, and technically and as an executive way he is well equipped for the responsible office of which he is the incumbent. He is independent in politics, is a member of the Huntington Chamber of Commerce and the West End Business Men's Club, and is the owner of his residence and other real estate in Huntington. In Ohio he still retains affiliation with Tippecanoe City Lodge No. 151, I. O. O. F.; and Quia Wigwam No. 153, I. O. R. M.

In the World War period Mr. Schmidlapp was a vigorous and loyal worker in all local patriotic service, having served as a member of the committees in charge of the campaigns in support of the Government war aims and having made his personal subscriptions as large as possible.

In 1897 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Schmidlapp and Miss Edith Hartman, who was born and reared at Piqua, Ohio, and who is a daughter of the late Louis and Fannie (Loganstein) Hartman, her father having been superintendent of a furniture factory at Piqua. Mr. and Mrs. Schmidlapp have one son, Harold, who was born November 16, 1900, who resides at Huntington and who is a salesman for the Republic Truck Company. He was not yet eighteen years of age when he entered the nation's military service in connection with the World War. He was stationed at Camp Sherman, Ohio, his command not having been called into overseas service.

HIRAM ELMORE PILCHER is one of the progressive and influential exponents of the real-estate and fire insurance business in the City of Huntington, where his offices are established at 607 Ninth Street. He is president of the Huntington Real Estate Association and is a director of each, the Huntington Business Men's Association, the local Credit Men's Association and the Chamber of Commerce. He served as city treasurer of Huntington for the fiscal year 1918-19, his political affiliation being with the democratic party.

Mr. Pilcher was born at Hinton, Summers County, West Virginia, June 18, 1882, and is a son of Charles T. Pilcher, who was born in Spotsylvania County, Virginia, March 12, 1850, and who was killed in a railroad accident at Thayer, West Virginia, May 2, 1911, he having been a locomotive engineer in the service of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company. He was one of the first engineers to run trains on this railroad out from the City of Huntington, where he maintained his residence from 1890 until his tragic death. For eighteen years he was engineer of the F. E. V. Limited between Huntington and Hinton. He was a staunch democrat, well fortified in his political convictions, and was a member of the Johnson Memorial Church, Methodist Episcopal, South, as was also his wife. Mr. Pilcher was affiliated with Huntington Lodge No. 53, A. F. and A. M.; Huntington Chapter No. 6, R. A. M.; Huntington Commandery No. 9, Knights Templars; and Ben-Edem Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Charleston. At Culpeper Court House, Virginia, in 1881, was solemnized his marriage with Miss Florence Garner, who was born at Stevensburg, that state, March 22, 1857, and whose death occurred at Huntington November 5, 1919, their home having been maintained at Hinton, until their removal to Huntington in 1890. Of their children the subject of this sketch is the eldest; Walter died at the age of seven years; Ernest Lee is secretary of the Florida Cane Maple Syrup Company at Tampa, Florida; and Roy is associated with his eldest brother in the real estate and insurance business at Huntington.

Hiram E. Pilcher was a lad of eight years at the time of the family removal to Huntington, and after profiting by the advantages of the public schools of this city he here attended Marshall College two years. In 1899 he graduated from the Mountain State Business College at Parkersburg. For two years thereafter he was clerk in the office of the roundhouse foreman of the Chicago division of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad at Garrett, Indiana, and during the following year he held a more responsible position, in the master mechanic's office at that place. He was then transferred to Huntington and assigned to service as trace clerk in the freight department, in which he eventually won promotion to the office of cashier. In 1906 he resigned his position and accepted that of chief accountant for the Wheeler-Holden Tie Company of Buffalo, New York, with which corporation he had charge of the accounting department in the Huntington office for a period of five years. In 1911 Mr. Pilcher resigned this position and assumed that of cashier in the office of the Huntington Advertiser, with which representative newspaper he thus continued his association until 1915, when he established himself in the real-estate and fire-insurance business, to which he has since continued to give his attention, his enterprise having been developed to one of major importance in these lines in the City of Huntington and in this section of the state. He is the owner of much valuable real estate at Huntington, including his attractive home property at 205 Belford Avenue.

Mr. Pilcher is a past senior warden of Huntington Lodge No. 53, A. F. and A. M.; is affiliated also with Huntington Chapter No. 6, R. A. M., and Huntington Commandery No. 9, Knights Templars, of which he served one term as recorder, and he is a member of Benikedom Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Charleston, and of Huntington Lodge No. 313, B. P. O. E., of which he served three years as a trustee. He was specially active in advancing local patriotic measures in the World war period, served as member of committees in charge of Government loan drives in Cabell County, as a member of the Local Draft Board, and aided in filling out questionnaires for the recruited men of the county. He is a member of the Johnson Memorial Church (Methodist Episcopal, South).

January 1, 1911, recorded the marriage of Mr. Pilcher and Miss Claudia Trainer, a daughter of William E. and Rosa Lee (Garner) Trainer, the latter of whom now resides at Garrett, Indiana, the father, a locomotive engineer in the service of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, having met his death in a railroad accident at Hicksville, Ohio, in 1903. Mrs. Pilcher graduated from a business college at Fort Wayne, Indiana, and prior to her marriage was in the employ of the American Bank & Trust Company of Huntington, and later of the Ohio Valley Bank of this city. She was a devoted companion and helpmeet to her husband, assisted him materially in the conducting of his real-estate and insurance business, and the supreme loss and bereavement of his life came when she died, of influenza, on the 13th of October, 1918.

FRANK PARSONS SLACK, secretary and treasurer of the West Virginia & Kentucky Insurance Agency, with offices at 531½ Ninth Street in the City of Huntington, is one of the prominent representatives of the general insurance business in this city and state. The company of which he is thus an executive is incorporated under the laws of both West Virginia and Kentucky, his father being vice president of the corporation and George I. Neal, of Huntington, being its president.

Mr. Slack was born at Elizabethtown, Hardin County, Kentucky, July 16, 1886, and is a son of John W. and Sallie (Dent) Slack, the former of whom was born at Bardstown, Kentucky, in November, 1851, and the latter at Louisville, that state, July 23, 1855, their marriage having been solemnized in that city, and their home being now maintained at Huntington, West Virginia. John W. Slack was reared and educated at Elizabethtown, Kentucky, where eventually he became successfully established in the mercantile business. In 1891 he removed to Owensboro, that state, where he was identified with the distillery business until 1896, when he engaged in the wholesale liquor trade in the City of Louisville. In 1902 he engaged in the general insurance business in the City of Cincinnati, Ohio, and in 1907 he established himself in the same line of business at Charleston, West Virginia, whence he removed to Huntington in 1914, he being now vice president of the West Virginia & Kentucky Insurance Agency. He is a stalwart advocate of the principles of the republican party, and he and his wife are communicants of the Catholic Church. Of their three children the subject of this sketch is the youngest; Ella Grace is the wife of Paul T. Monarch, who is connected with the Jeffrey-DeWitt Manufacturing Company of Kenova, this state, their home being at Huntington. John D. is engaged in the general insurance business at Huntington.

In the public schools of Louisville Frank P. Slack continued his studies until he had completed the work of the sophomore year in the high school. At the age of fifteen years he became associated with his father's insurance business, which he represented through South-eastern Kentucky with residence at Pineville, that state. In 1913 he established his headquarters at Georgetown, South Carolina, where he remained two years, as representative of the same insurance agency throughout that state. Thereafter he passed one year in New York City, and on the 1st of January, 1916, he assumed his present dual office, that of secretary and treasurer of the West Virginia & Kentucky Insurance Agency, which under his vigorous and well directed direction and progressive policies has developed the largest exclusive pay-roll insurance business in the United States. The agency insures employees of coal companies in health and accident indemnity, the coal operators collecting the insurance fees from the payrolls of their corporations. Mr. Slack is a stockholder in the Consolidated Insurance Agency of Huntington, and also in the W. E. Deegan Realty Company of this city. He is a member of the Huntington Chamber of Commerce, the Guyan Country Club, Kiwanis Club, is a progressive and public-spirited citizen and is independent in politics, his support being given to men and measures meeting the approval of his judgment. He owns his attractive home property at Trenton Place, Huntington.

November 29, 1914, recorded the marriage of Mr. Slack and Miss Elizabeth Ann Scobee, daughter of James A. Scobee, who is engaged in the wholesale lumber business at Winchester, Kentucky, his wife being deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Slack have a winsome little daughter, Sarah Hedrick, who was born May 10, 1917.

James Slack, grandfather of the subject of this view, was born at Slack's Landing, Pennsylvania, became a pioneer settler at Bardstown, Kentucky, and later owned and operated a tannery at Elizabethtown, that state, where he remained until his death. The family name of his wife was Scott, and she was a kinswoman of Gen. Winfield Scott, the doughty American warrior. John Dent, maternal grandfather of Frank P. Slack passed the greater part of his life in the City of Louisville, Kentucky, where he was a leading merchant for many years and where he served during the Civil war as United States provost marshal.

JAMES OVERTON MARCUM, superintendent of transportation and claim agent for the Ohio Valley Electric Rail Road Company, with headquarters at Huntington, has been connected with his present company since 1904, during which time he has gained steady promotion and added prestige. Mr. Marcum's career has been a somewhat varied one; he started life as a professional man and later entered various fields of endeavor, finally to find success and contentment in the railroad business.

Mr. Marcum was born in Smith County, Virginia, October 17, 1865, a son of Hon. William Wert and Eunice (Cox) Marcum. The Marcum family originated in England, whence the original ancestor of this branch of the family immigrated to America during Colonial days and settled in Virginia. The grandfather of James Overton Marcum Stephen M. Marcum, was born in August, 1818, in what is now Wayne County, West Virginia, and resided for the greater part of his life at Fort Gay in that county, where he followed the trade of gunsmith. In the evening of life he moved to Catlettsburg, Kentucky, where his death occurred in August, 1893. He married Miss Jane Dammor who was born in 1822, in what is now Wayne County, and died at the age of eighty-five years, in 1907, in Ming County, West Virginia.

Hon. William Wert Marcum was born December 17, 1844, in Kanawha (now Wayne) County, West Virginia and was reared in his native vicinity, where he was prepared for the law. In 1861, when still a mere lad, he enlisted in the army of the Confederacy for service during the war between the states, and continued as a soldier throughout the period of the long and bitter struggle of four years, being finally a member of the Eighth Virginia Cavalry. He fought at Gettysburg, in the various campaigns in Virginia and in numbers of bloody engagements, but came through unscathed and with a splendid record for bravery and fidelity to duty. On his return he resumed his law studies, and on his admission to the bar entered upon a brilliant career as a lawyer. He was distinguished for his erudition and mastery of his calling, and not only was accounted one of the leaders of the bar, but was called frequently to positions of importance. For twenty-seven years he followed his profession at Louisa, Lawrence County, Kentucky, then moving to Ceredo, Wayne County, West Virginia, where he continued until his death, January 15, 1912. Judge Marcum was a staunch democrat. He served as county attorney of Lawrence County for two terms, or eight years, and after coming to West Virginia became judge of the Criminal Court in Wayne County until that office was abolished by act of the State Legislature. Elected to the State Legislature, he served in that body during the session of 1911, and acted as floor manager for United States Senators Chilton and Watson. Judge Marcum was a devout member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, a strong supporter of its movements and a constant Sunday school worker. He likewise gave generous support to the churches of other denominations in the town and was a man of charitable impulses and actions. As a fraternalist he belonged to Lodge No. 32, A. F. and A. M., of Ceredo, West Virginia, of which he was worshipful master at the time of his death, having filled that chair for eleven years, and to Wayne Chapter, R. A. M. Judge Marcum married Miss Eunice Cox, who was born in June, 1841, in Smith County, Virginia, and died at Louisa, Kentucky, April 14, 1885. They became the parents of six children: James Overton; Belle, who married Will O'Neal, an attorney of Middlesburg, Kentucky; Grace, the wife of Charles C. Hill, of Catlettsburg, employed in the freight department of the Ohio Valley Electric Railway Company at Ashland, Kentucky; Dr. Frederick D., a successful practicing physician and surgeon of Ceredo; Edith, unmarried, a resident of Middlesburg, Kentucky, but employed in the Day and Night Bank at Ashland, that state; and Leo Frank, of Huntington, a bookkeeper in charge of the commissary for a coal company in Pike County. Judge Marcum took for his second wife Mary Elizabeth Burgess, who was born in Lawrence County, Kentucky, and now survives him as a resident of Huntington, and they became the parents of three children: Herma, the wife of Dr. L. G. Bryner, a dental practitioner of Huntington; Charles W., an employee of the McKinley Storage Battery Company, residing near Middlesburg Station, Wayne County; and Homer B., an attorney at Ashland, Kentucky, who during the World war held the rank of second lieutenant and was stationed at Petersburg, Virginia.

James Overton Marcum received his early education in the public schools of Louisa, Kentucky, and in a subscription school at Wayne, West Virginia, under Professor Taylor B. McClure, following which he studied law in the office and under the preceptorship of his father. Admitted to the bar in 1894, he practiced his profession at Wayne for one year and was then chief of police of Ceredo for a time and served as commissioner in chancery in Wayne County under Judge Thomas Harvey. On February 24, 1904, Mr. Marcum entered the employ of the Ohio Valley Electric Railway Company, and in order to familiarize himself with the system followed the vocation of motorman, at Huntington, for eight months. He then entered the claim department and is later made claim agent, and in March, 1918, in addition to these duties, assumed those connected with the office of superintendent of transportation. He occupies both of these posts at the present time and maintains offices on the second floor of the Miller-Ritter Building at Huntington. He is considered an entirely capable railroad man and has contributed greatly to the effectiveness of his company's service. He is a stockholder in the Consolidated Insurance Company.

Politically a staunch democrat, Mr. Marcum was democratic state committeeman of the Fifth Congressional District of West Virginia for four years, from January 1, 1916, to January 1, 1920, and during his residence at Ceredo served as mayor of that place for three terms. He is a member of the First Congregational Church of Ceredo and of the board of trustees thereof. Fraternally he belongs to Crescent Lodge No. 32, A. F. and A. M., of which he is a past lodge warden; West Virginia Consistory No. 1, thirty-third degree, of Wheeling, and Beni-Kedem Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Charleston. He also holds membership in the Huntington Chamber of Commerce and the Rotary Club of Huntington. Mr. Marcum owns a modern residence on the corner of Second Street and C Street, West, Ceredo, one of the modern, comfortable homes of that community, as well as other real estate at Huntington and Ceredo.

On November 6, 1890, at Wayne, West Virginia, Mr. Marcum married Miss Rebecca Vinson, daughter of K. Pharoah and Nancy (Wellman) Vinson, residents of Louisa, Kentucky, where Mr. Vinson is a retired lumberman and timberman. To this union there were born three children. Emma, the eldest, is a graduate of Marshall College, Huntington, and taught school at Ceredo and Wayne prior to her marriage to Fisher F. Skaggs, an attorney of Wayne. They have one child, James Franklin, born November 2, 1919. The second child of Mr. and Mrs. Marcum, Bessie, is a graduate of the Ceredo High School and Marshall College and at present is a teacher in the Ceredo Junior High School. The youngest of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Marcum, Edward L., now an employee of the Ohio Valley Electric Railway Company at Ceredo, is a veteran of the World war, having been in the service one year. He was first stationed at a number of training camps in different parts of the country, but was finally transferred to the medical department and assigned to the Government hospital situated at Forty-fifth Street and Lexington Avenue, New York City. He held the rank of corporal. Mr. Marcum married Miss Mabel Kessinger, of Kenova, West Virginia, and they have one child, Nancy Jim, born March 15, 1921.

NOSLE KIMBROUGH SNEED has no minor status as a general contractor in railroad and other heavy construction work, and is claimed by the City of Huntington as one of its progressive business men. He has been concerned with the carrying through of numerous contracts of specially important order.

Mr. Sneed was born in the historic and beautiful little City of Charlottesville, Virginia, on the 21st of May, 1876, and is a scion of a family that was founded in Virginia in the Colonial period of our national history, the original representatives of the family in America having come from Ireland. Benjamin Noble Sneed, grandfather of the subject of this review, passed his entire life in Virginia and became the owner of a large plantation adjoining Monticello, the fine old plantation of Thomas Jefferson, near Charlottesville, and he served as a gallant soldier in the Mexican war. Both he and his wife, whose family name was Goodloe, died on the old homestead near Charlottesville, and a portion of this fine estate is still owned by their son, Benjamin Noble Sneed, Jr., father of him whose name initiates this review. Of their family of eight sons and four daughters, seven of the sons were valiant soldiers of the Confederacy in the Civil war.

Benjamin Noble Sneed Jr. was born on the old home plantation near Charlottesville in 1850, and there he is now living retired after a specially successful career as an agriculturist in his native county. He is a stalwart in the ranks of the democratic party, and has been influential in public affairs in the community which has ever represented his home. He is a zealous member of the Baptist Church, as was also his wife, whose death occurred in 1910. Mrs. Sneed, whose maiden name was Caroline E. Moss, was born at Charlottesville in 1853. Of the children the eldest is Edward B., who is in the employ of the N. K. Sneed Company of Huntington; Gertrude, who died at the age of forty-three years, at Richmond, Virginia, was the wife of Ernest L. Taylor, who is still engaged in business in that city; Noble K. of this sketch, was next in order of birth; Alice died at the parental home when twenty-three years of age; Lillian is the wife of Harry G. Browning, a progressive farmer near Charlottesville; and Frederick W. has charge of the steam-shovel outfit of the N. K. Sneed Company of Huntington.

Noble K. Sneed was seventeen years of age when he left the Charlottesville High School and entered the employ of the Farmers Supply Company in that city. He continued this alliance until he was twenty-two years old, and then entered the employ of Langhorne & Langhorne, railroad contractors. From the position of stable boss he worked his way forward until he was admitted to partnership in the business, in 1905, when the name of the firm was changed to Langhorne, Langhorne & Sneed. He became the firm's general manager, and in 1917, after the death of his partners, he engaged in railroad contracting in an independent way. As a matter of business expediency, with the expansion of the enterprise, he effected in 1921 the incorporation of the business, under the present title of the N. K. Sneed Company, but he still continues as the sole owner of the business. As a contractor in railroad construction Mr. Sneed has one of the largest and most modern general equipments in the United States. He operates fourteen steam shovels and is prepared to carry through the heaviest of construction contracts. The firm of Langhorne, Langhorne & Sneed built the S. V. & E. Railroad from Shelby, Kentucky, to Jenkins, that state; the Silver Grove yards of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, these being among the largest terminal yards of that system; and handled many other important contracts. In his individual contracting Mr. Sneed dredged the Landale Channel of Buffalo Creek in Logan County, West Virginia, for a distance of ten miles for the Amherst Fuel Company; he double-tracked the line of the Hocking Valley Railroad between Marion and Delaware, Ohio; and has assumed other large and important contracts, his receiving of which indicates the high estimate placed upon him and his work. The general offices of his company are at 417-18 First National Bank Building in the City of Huntington.

The political allegiance of Mr. Sneed is given to the democratic party, he is a member of the Guyandotte Club at Huntington and the Redland Club at Charlottesville, and in his native place he also retains affiliation with Charlottesville Lodge No. 389, B. P. O. E. He is the owner of valuable real estate both in Charlottesville and Huntington.

On the 3d of November, 1897, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Sneed and Miss Lena Roberts Wood, who was born and reared at Charlottesville, Virginia, and who was there graduated in Charlottesville College. Her father, the late Llewellyn Wood, was a leading hardware merchant in that city for forty years, and there his widow, whose maiden name was Catherine Parkinson, still resides. Mr. and Mrs. Sneed have four children: Noble K., Jr., who was born February 10, 1900, was graduated from the Charlottesville High School and is now associated with his father's contracting business; Catherine, who was born in 1905, is, in 1922, a student in Ste. Anne's Seminary at Charlottesville; Allan Langhorne and Lena Wood, born respectively in 1909 and 1913, are attending the public schools of Charlottesville, where the family home is still maintained.

HARRY A. DAVIDSON is one of the vital and progressive business men of the City of Huntington, where he is president of the Superior Lumber Company. There may be a measure of ancestral predilection in his choice of vocation, for his grandfather, Isaac Davidson, who was born in Ohio, in 1826, and who died at Wellston, that state, in 1894, was a carpenter by trade and was long and actively engaged in business as a contractor and builder. The greater part of his life was passed in Jackson County, Ohio, and the family was founded in that state in the pioneer days.

Harry A. Davidson was born at Wellston, Jackson County, Ohio, December 11, 1887, and is a son of Thomas M. and Effie Alice (Hutchinson) Davidson, both natives of Lawrence County, Ohio, where the former was born in 1863 and the latter in 1866. Thomas M. Davidson was reared and educated in the old Buckeye State, and as a youth he learned the carpenter's trade under the direction of his father. He became a successful contractor in Ohio, and among the large factory buildings which he there erected were those of the Lehigh Cement Company and the Alma Cement Company at Wellston, and the plant of the Ironton Cement Company at Ironton. He has to his credit also the construction of more than 200 coal tipples. From 1909 to 1911 he was a resident of Paintsville, Kentucky, and in the latter year came to Huntington, West Virginia, where he is now engaged in the wholesale and retail lumber business which he conducts under the title of the Davids Lumber Company, with offices at 862½ Fifth Avenue. He is a republican in politics, has completed the circle of York and Scottish Rite Masonry, in the latter of which he has received the thirty-second degree, and he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Of the seven children the subject of this review is the eldest; Louis C. is engaged in the insurance business at Portsmouth, Ohio; Catherine died at the age of seven years; George E. is associated with the Dickers Lumber Company at Huntington, in the capacity of a manager; Loren I. is associated with the Davidson Lumber Company; N. Ruth is the wife of German Larrah, secretary and treasurer of the Superior Lumber Company at Huntington; and Pauline remains at the parent home.

In the high school at Wellston, Ohio, Harry A. Davidson graduated in 1906, and thereafter he attended the Case School of Applied Science, Cleveland, Ohio, where he had partially completed the work of the junior year and in connection with which he became a member of the Beta Theta Pi fraternity. In 1908 Mr. Davidson became first assistant chief engineer of the Dayton, Lebanon & Cincinnati Railroad, and after one year's service in this capacity he became associated with his father's contracting business and was superintendent of construction on the high school building at Jackson, Ohio. This work took his attention several months, and for two years thereafter he was in charge of his father's contract work in the erection of about 400 houses in the Big Sandy District of Kentucky. In October, 1912, he became yard foreman in the yards of the Superior Lumber Company at Huntington, a corporation that had been organized by his father in that year. Later he was salesman for the company, then assistant manager, and finally vice president. The organization was permitted to lapse in 1918, and Mr. Davidson then organized a new company under the same title, this company being incorporated under the laws of the state and he being its president. With well equipped yards and warehouse and with the best of facilities the company has developed a substantial wholesale and retail business in the handling of lumber and all other kinds of building supplies. The retail trade of the concern is one of the largest at Huntington, and the yards and offices of the company are established at 730 First Street. Harry S. Irons, vice president of the company, Henry O. Dunfee is its treasurer and B. C. Emerson its secretary.

Mr. Davidson is a staunch republican, and he and his wife hold membership in the First Congregational Church of Huntington. In the Masonic fraternity Mr. Davidson is affiliated with Huntington Lodge No. 53, A. F. & A. M.; Huntington Chapter No. 6, R. A. M.; West Virginia Consistory No. 1, A. A. S. R., at Wheeling, in which he has received the thirty-second degree; an Beni-Kedem Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Charleston. He is a member of Huntington Lodge No. 313, B. P. O. E. and of the Guyan Country Club. At 200 South Boulevard he owns one of the fine modern residence properties of Huntington, and of this attractive home his wife is a most gracious and popular chateleine.

On the 14th of August, 1918, Mr. Davidson entered the Officers Training Camp at Camp Taylor, Kentucky, and in the following November he received his honorable discharge, with the rank of second lieutenant, his command having not been called into active service in the World War.

At Catlettsburg, Kentucky, in 1910, Mr. Davidson married Miss Corinne Kitchen, daughter of the late William B. and Elizabeth (Trago) Kitchen, the father having been a successful farmer near Jackson, Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Davidson have three children: Barbara Alice, born March 18, 1912; Florence, born April 27, 1913; and Mary, born January 28, 1915.

JOSEPH ARTHUR GUTHRIE, M. D., is not only recognized as one of the leading physicians and surgeons at Huntington, but has also made a most valuable contribution to the city's metropolitan prestige by establishing and developing to the best modern standard the Guthrie Hospital, of which he is the proprietor.

Doctor Guthrie was born at Athens, judicial center of Ohio County of the same name, and the date of his birth was May 23, 1878. He is a scion of an honored noble family of the old Buckeye State, his grandfather, Joseph Guthrie, having passed his entire life in Meigs County, Ohio, where he became a prosperous farmer and honored and influential citizen of his community. His father, Joseph Guthrie, Sr., having been born in Maryland, and having been a pioneer settler in Meigs County, Ohio, where he passed the remainder of his life there where he developed the productive farm which later passed into the possession of his son Joseph, who there wisely resided until the close of his life.

Doctor Guthrie is a son of George P. and Esther Ann (Martin) Guthrie, both natives of Meigs County, Ohio, where the former was born in 1846 and the latter in 1841. The father became a prominent and successful owner of farm industry in Athens County, Ohio, where he established his residence shortly after his marriage and where he continued to reside until his death June, 1912, his widow being still a resident of Athens, Ohio, county seat. He was a republican of unwavering faith and was a zealous member of the Christian Church, as is also his widow. They became the parents of eight children, of whom Doctor Guthrie, of this review, was the fifth in order of birth. Eva is the wife of William Rankins, a farmer in Meigs County, Ohio; Annie is the wife of Benjamin Acklev, a farmer near Marion, that state; Margaret is the wife of John Stont, now engaged in the dairy business at Eugene, Oregon; Ma is the wife of Everett Blackwood, a jeweler in Salt Lake City, Utah; Ray, a skilled mechanic, resides at Mesa, Arizona; and Frank owns and has active management of the old home farm in Athens County, Ohio. In the high school at Athens, Ohio, Doctor Guthrie graduated in 1897, and thereafter he taught school in his native county for a period of one year. He next attended Ohio University, at Athens, until he had completed the work of his sophomore year, and there he was a member of the Philomathean Society. In preparation for his chosen profession he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons in the City of Baltimore, Maryland, and in this institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1903 and with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Each successive year since his graduation he has done effective post-graduate work in various leading clinics, including those of Mercy and Gustavus hospitals in the City of Chicago; those of the distinguished Mayo Brothers of Rochester, Minnesota; and of the New York Post-Graduate Medical School. In this continuous application that has kept him in close touch with advances made in his exacting profession Doctor Guthrie has specialized in surgery, and in founding his hospital at Huntington he has given his attention to the surgical phase of professional medicine.

In 1903 Doctor Guthrie established himself in general practice at Ravenswood, Jackson County, West Virginia, but one year later he found a broader field by establishing his residence at Huntington, where he has developed a specially large and representative practice. In 1910 Doctor Guthrie erected a substantial modern building at the corner of Sixth Avenue and Sixth Street, which he equipped the same as a thoroughly high-grade hospital. The patronage accorded to the institution so considerably increased that in 1916 it was found essential to build an addition to the hospital, and in 1920 another complete unit was added, with the result that the institution now has facilities for the accommodation of sixty patients. Adjoining the hospital is the thoroughly equipped nurses' home. The institution has the best of laboratory facilities, including X-Ray and radium apparatus; the operating room is of the best metropolitan type, and in the conjoined training school for nurses the graduates in 1920 and 1921 gained the highest averages in examinations of all nurses graduated in the State of West Virginia.

Doctor Guthrie is a loyal and valued member of the Cabell Company Medical Society and the West Virginia State Medical Society, besides maintaining active membership in the American Medical Association. He is a member of the local Kiwanis Club and the Guyan Country Club, is a republican in political allegiance, and both he and his wife are members of the Christian Church at Huntington, he being a member of its board of directors.

On the 19th of April, 1916, was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Guthrie and Miss Carrie Wilkinson, daughter of Andrew J. and Ollie Wilkinson, of Huntington, Mr. Wilkinson being a local representative of the American Book Company. Mrs. Guthrie graduated from Marshall College at Huntington, and also from Randolph-Macon College at Lynchburg, Virginia. Doctor and Mrs. Guthrie have three children: Joseph Arthur, born November 23, 1917; William Wilkinson, born February 1, 1920; and Margaret Ann, born January 15, 1922.

CARL ROUSH BIBBEE, who is serving as county agricultural agent of Cabell County, with headquarters in the City of Huntington, has made a splendid record of excellent constructive work in the furtherance of the agricultural and live-stock industry in his native state. He was born at Hanna, Wood County, West Virginia, November 9, 1897, a son of Paul H. Bibbee, who was born on a farm near Hanna, that county, January 26, 1858, and who is a son of John and Pernelia Ann (Barnett) Bibbee, both likewise natives of the Virginia County that is now Wood County, West Virginia, where the respective families were founded in the early pioneer days. John Bibbee was one of the extensive farmers of Wood County, and there he and his wife passed their entire lives.

Paul H. Bibbee has resided near Hanna, Wood County, from the time of his birth to the present day, and is one of the progressive and successful agriculturists and stock-growers of that county. He is a republican in politics and has held various local offices of public trust, including that of road supervisor of Clay District and that of member of the school board of that district, a position which he held six years. He and his wife are members of the Baptist Church. Mrs. Bibbee, whose maiden name was Sarah Francis Roush, was born at Mason City, Mason County, this state, August 13, 1862. Of the children the eldest is Paul Ceell, who served as a private of the first class in Hospital Train No. 54, with the American Expeditionary Forces in France in the World war. He was on the stage of conflict overseas for eighteen months, and is now a successful exponent of farm industry in his native county. Carl R., of this sketch, is the second son. The youngest is William J., who is, in 1922, a student in the high school at Parkersburg.

Carl R. Bibbee gained his preliminary education in the rural schools of his native county, thereafter graduated from the eighth grade of the city schools at Parkersburg, and graduated from high school as a member of the class of 1915. In 1921 he graduated from the College of Agriculture of the University of West Virginia, and received the degree of Bachelor of Science of Agriculture, he being affiliated with the Theta Chi fraternity at the university. While a student at this institution he there entered the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, received four years of military discipline, and he now holds the rank of second lieutenant in this corps. In connection with the nation's participation in the World war he was in service three months at Camp Gordon, Georgia, where he received his discharge December 13, 1918. For six months of that year he had previously served as assistant county agricultural agent of Berkeley County, and during the first eight months of 1919 he was assistant county agricultural agent of Wood County. For three months in the summer of 1920 he was employed by the Extension Division of the College of Agriculture, University of West Virginia as state camp instructor in Boys' and Girls' Club Work. On the 22d of July, 1921, he was appointed county agricultural agent of Cabell County, the office of which he is the present efficient and popular incumbent, his executive office being at room 205 in the Federal Building at Huntington. He is a republican in politics and holds membership in the Baptist Church.

November 24, 1921, recorded the marriage of Mr. Bibbee to Miss Isabel Stoker, of Morgantown, where her parents now reside, her father, Sheridan Stoker being there in the employ of the Standard Oil Company. Mrs. Bibbee graduated from the Morgantown High School and later attended the musical department of the University of West Virginia, she being a talented pianist. The following article from the 1921 Annual Report of the Director of Agricultural Extension is well worthy of reproduction in this connection:

"C. R. Bibbee, county agent in Cabell County, is a fine example of a club boy who has grown right into county agent work. He was one of the first club boys in the state and was one of the three boys who came to the first State Prize Winners' course at Morgantown, in 1911. He had entered the 200-hill corn club and won the prize, a trip to Morgantown, for the best ten ears of corn in Wood County. This recognition got Carl started. He began to produce seed corn, and his Reid's Yellow Dent seed corn was soon being sold by Parkersburg seed dealers, there being reason to believe that it was the first seed corn produced in Wood County. Working closely with his father in the seed-corn business, Carl was able to save enough money to put himself through Parkersburg High School. In the meantime he had received a quart of Government sample soy beans, and began raising soy beans for seed also. By the time he was ready to graduate from high school both his farm projects were going strongly and had enabled him to save some money to enter the university. After getting into the university he kept alive his club-work activities by working with one or two other boys in organizing the All-Stars, the state club of the leading club of boys and girls. Carl was assistant county agent in Berkeley County one summer. Then he was assistant county agent in his home county, Wood, another summer, and when the county agent suddenly died he carried on the whole county agent job for a time. His junior summer vacation was spent as camp instructor. Immediately after graduating he went to Cabell County as county agent, and is still on the job there. Is it any wonder Carl can understand his club boys? He knows what club work has done for him."

HERMAN LUTHER TUTWILER, M. D., is one of the leading physicians and surgeons of McDowell County, where he is engaged in practice at Iaeger, and his influence in civic affairs is indicated by his being a representative of McDowell County in the House of Delegates of the West Virginia Legislature.

Doctor Tutwiler is a scion of a family founded in Virginia in an early day. At Kezelltown, Rockingham County, in the beautiful Shenandoah Valley of that historic commonwealth, he was born on the 1st of April, 1873. His parents, Peter and Sarah A. (Sandy) Tutwiler, likewise were born in Rockingham County, the former in 1842 and the latter in 1846. At the time of his marriage Peter Tutwiler had a small farm, but his ability and energy gained to him cumulative success in the passing years and he became one of the substantial exponents of farm industry in his native county. Soon after the inception of the Civil war he enlisted in Company C, Fifth Virginia Regiment of Infantry, which became a part of the brigade commanded by Gen. "Stonewall" Jackson, and during the last three years of the war he was a sharpshooter. He took part in many major battles, including those of Winchester, Petersburg, Richmond, Antietam and Gettysburg, the wound which he received in the thigh at Gettysburg having incapacitated him about two weeks. He was a non-commissioned officer at the close of the war. In later years his association with his old comrades in arms was perpetuated through his affiliation with the United Confederate Veterans. For Tutwiler was a leader in the local councils and campaigns of the democratic party, was an influential member of the United Brethren Church, as is also his widow, and was a delegate to its general conventions on various occasions. His death occurred in 1912, and his widow now resides at Harrisonburg, Virginia. Four children likewise survive the honored father: Eugene C. is a merchant at Harrisonburg, Virginia; Dr. Herman L., of this review, was next in order of birth; Homer S. is a resident of Harrisonburg, Virginia; and Luella is the wife of Rev. E. C. Spessard, pastor of the United Brethren Church at Hagerstown, Maryland.

After completing a three years' course in Shenandoah Institute, Dayton, Virginia, Dr. Herman L. Tutwiler devoted himself to teaching in the schools of his native county for a period of three years. In 1897 he matriculated in the Medical College of Virginia, at Richmond, and from this excellent institution he received his degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1900. For eighteen months thereafter he was engaged in practice at Singers Glen, Virginia, and he then established his headquarters at Roanoke, that state, but in six years his practice was mainly in railroad construction camps. In 1907, with headquarters at Roderfield, West Virginia, he assumed charge of medical and surgical service in four mining camps—those of the Fall River Mining Company, Flanagan Coal Company, Hampton Roads Coal Company and Marine Commerce Coal Company, besides developing a large private practice of general order. In 1919 he sold his practice to Dr. Glenn W. Brewster, of whom mention is made on other pages, and removed to Iaeger, where he has been established in successful practice during the development of the mines of this district and the building of railroads to afford the requisite transportation facilities. He is now official physician and surgeon for the Garland, Pocahontas Coal Company, the Ward Pocahontas Coal Company, the C. R. Ritter Lumber Company and the C. B. Burey Lumber Company.

The doctor is a stalwart advocate of the principles of the republican party, and as candidate on its ticket he was elected representative of McDowell County in the State Legislature in November, 1920. He has proved a keen and effective representative of his constituent district, and worked for wise legislation in general and has been assigned to many important committees of the House of Delegates, including those of medicine and sanitation, insurance, state boundaries, mines and mining and insurance.

Doctor Tutwiler has served as vice president of the McDowell County Medical Society, and is a member also of the West Virginia State Medical Society, and the American Medical Association. He and his wife are zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in connection with which he is secretary of the District Sunday School Board, a member of the Holston Conference Church Extension Board, a member of the Board of Stewards of the Bluefield District, and chairman of the Board of Stewards of the church in his home village. In the Masonic fraternity Doctor Tutwiler is past master of the Blue Lodge at West Virginia, a member of the Chapter of Royal Arch Masons at Norfolk, a member of the Commandery of Knights Templars at Bluefield, a member of Bluefield Lodge of Perfection (Scottish Rite), and of the Temple of the Mystic Shrine of the City of Charleston. He is a past state counselor of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, and is serving in 1921-2 as deputy national counselor of this fraternity. He is noble grand of the Roderfield Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and chancellor commander of the Knights of Pythias Lodge at Chancellor.

April 17, 1901, recorded the marriage of Doctor Tutwiler and Miss Lillian Byerly, daughter of Peter D. Byerly, and they have one son, Herman Luther, Jr. A daughter, Mrs. L., died in early childhood.

Doctor Tutwiler was active and liberal in support of patriotic service in connection with the nation's participation in the World war, and in 1919 he was examiner of the Insurance, United States Department of Public Health and Bureau of War Risks.

H. F. Tutwiler M.D.

LEE ROY CRAIG is rounding out a quarter of a century continuous service with the Wheeling Works of the La Belle Iron Works, one of the oldest and most noted institutions in the iron and steel industry of the Wheeling District, through which a number of prominent Wheeling men have been entitled and in which some of the greatest steel and iron men of the country have been trained.

Several interesting distinctions are associated with the name Craig in the Wheeling District. While Lee Roy has won his active career to the La Belle Iron Works, one of his brothers is present city manager of Wheeling, and his father was one of the ablest educators the northern Panhandle of West Virginia ever had.

This educator was the late Felix Hughes Craig, who was born July 7, 1836, near Carmichaels in Greene County, Pennsylvania, and grew up on a farm just outside that village. He graduated from Greene Academy at Carmichaels and also as a student in Waynesburg College. Soon after getting a degree at Waynesburg College he entered the Union army, and served nearly four years. He was promoted to second lieutenant, then to first lieutenant, and at the close of the war had charge of his company. His command was Company D of the Twenty-second Pennsylvania Ringold Cavalry.

Following the war he was in business at Carmichaels for time, but soon began teaching at Beallsville, Pennsylvania, or nearly half a century his work and his enthusiasm were absorbed in educational affairs. It was Professor Craig who opened the West Liberty Normal School at West Liberty, West Virginia, in the capacity of its first principal, in 1871. Three years later he removed to Moundsville, West Virginia, as superintendent of schools there. After eight or nine years he went to Wheeling, was principal of the Webster School in that city two or three years, and for thirty-one years was principal of the Eighth Ward School, and the many hundreds of successive students in that school cherish special gratitude for the influence he exerted upon their young lives. For one year he was superintendent of schools at Buckhannon, but with this exception his life for over thirty years was devoted to educational interests in Wheeling. He had perhaps the unique record of having taught in every county in the state during the summer months. Felix H. Craig died July 29, 1917, at the age of eighty-one.

He married Mary Elizabeth Carman, who was born at West Richmond in Belmont County, Ohio, June 24, 1847, daughter of William C. and Eliza (Cooper) Carman. She is well educated in the common schools of Belmont County and in Franklin College of that state, and then entered the West Liberty Normal School of West Virginia, where she graduated in 1873, while Mr. Craig was still principal. She thereafter taught in the public schools of Moundsville.

Felix H. Craig was of Scotch-Irish descent and Mary E. Carman was of a mingled English and Scotch ancestry. The great-grandfather and the mother of Felix H. Craig were born in this country; while the great-grandfather and grandfather of Mary E. Carman were native Americans, and all the recent generations are of American nativity, so that the present generation is quite thoroughly American. Mr. Lee Roy Craig has the following brothers living: Jesse H. Craig, connected with the sales department of the Hollansbee Brothers Company of Pittsburgh; Charles G., a printer, now manager of the Great Falls Tribune at Great Falls, Montana; and Homer C., who is the present city manager of Wheeling. The one sister living is Eva Laura Craig, a teacher in the Wheeling High School.

Lee Roy Craig was born at Moundsville, West Virginia, September 17, 1878, but has lived nearly all his life in Wheeling and was educated here in the public schools, graduating from high school in 1897. Soon after leaving school he came connected with the La Belle Iron Works as storekeeper. He was successively advanced to timekeeper, paymaster, and for several years has been chief clerk of the Wheeling plant. The La Belle Iron Works are an industry of seventy years old. The Wheeling plant for several years has been devoted chiefly to the making of nails and all kinds of plate, such as steel skelp, shovel plate, truck plate, automobile stock and similar products.

Mr. Craig is a member of the Wesley Methodist Episcopal Church of Wheeling. August 5, 1907, at Wheeling, he married Miss Birdie D. Fisher, of that city. They have five children: Felix Hughes, Birdie Lee, Dorothy Evelyn, Leo Roy, Jr., and Paul Carman Craig.

WILLIAM WASHINGTON ROGERS, for fifty years a resident of Wheeling, a veteran Union soldier, has long been prominent in public affairs, and is especially well known to the bench and bar of Ohio County as law librarian of the county.

Squire Rogers was born in Bath County, Kentucky, June 6, 1842. He represents three old American families, the Rogers branch having come from Scotland in Colonial times, while the Smiths were from England and the Carralls from Ireland. His grandfather, Charles Rogers, was a native of Old Virginia, served as a soldier of the Revolution, and subsequently moved over the mountains to Bath County, Kentucky, where he acquired a large amount of land and developed a plantation with the aid of his slaves. He married Susanna Smith, and both died in Bath County. George Washington Rogers, father of Squire Rogers, was born in Bath County and spent all his life there. He owned land and was both a farmer and stock raiser. He was a whig in politics, and an active member of the Hardshell Baptist Church. He served with the rank of colonel in the Second Kentucky Dragoons in the Mexican war, and he died in 1847, soon after the close of that war. Colonel Rogers married Charlotte Carroll, who was born at Maysville, Kentucky, and died in that city in 1863. Her oldest child, John G., who died at Maysville, Kentucky, was a lieutenant-colonel in a Kentucky regiment of infantry in the Union army, and contracted the disease during his service which caused his death shortly after the close of the war. The second son, Charles S., was captain of Company B, Tenth Kentucky Cavalry, and subsequently died in the Soldiers Home at Danville, Illinois. William Washington Rogers was the third son and child. Eliza J., the oldest daughter, married, and both she and her husband are deceased. Charlotte Ann became the wife of Doctor Mitchell, of Sharpshooter, Kentucky, and they are deceased. Thomas F., the youngest child, died at Mount Sterling, Kentucky.

William Washington Rogers acquired his early education in the rural schools of Bath County, Kentucky, and lived on the farm until he was nineteen years of age. Early in the Civil war he joined the Union army, and on May 1, 1862, was commissioned second lieutenant of Company L of Second Regiment, Kentucky Veteran Cavalry Volunteers. Thereafter he was in continuously active service until mustered out and discharged June 17, 1865. He was at Shiloh, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge, Stone River, Bardstown, Kentucky, in two battles at Chickamauga, at Strawberry Plains, Kenesaw Mountain, Big Shanty, with Sherman on the march to the sea, as well as in the Atlanta campaign. He was wounded and taken prisoner at Bardstown, being captured by the rebel General Hooton, commanding the Texas and Georgia Rangers, but soon afterward was paroled, and returned to his command February 13, 1864. After leaving the Volunteer Union army Squire Rogers enlisted in the regular army, and had six years of service, much of it at western posts.

In 1870 he came to Wheeling, and for a year was driver of one of the old horse cars of the Street Railway Company. He then took up the produce business, and continued active in business until 1883, when he was elected squire or local magistrate. He filled this office twenty-eight years. He was elected and served six years as coroner of Ohio County, retiring from that office in 1917, and soon afterward was chosen law librarian of the county. His official duties are in the Law Library on the third floor of the courthouse.

Squire Rogers is a staunch republican. He is present commander of Holliday Post No. 12, G. A. R. He owns his home at 2334 Market Street. He did all he could with his means and influence to encourage sound patriotism during the World war, assisting in recruiting soldiers and aiding the various auxiliary organizations.

In 1872, at St. Clairsville, Ohio, Squire Rogers married Miss Mary E. Starkey, of Wheeling. She died in Wheeling in 1914. Her only son, John William, is a stationary engineer living at Wheeling. The daughter, Laura I., is the wife of J. E. McKenney, an iron worker at Wheeling. In 1919 Squire Rogers married Julia E. (Harris) Johnson, of Wheeling.

Some facts concerning the military record of this branch of the Rogers family have already been brought out. Reference should be made to Squire Rogers' nephew, Lieut.-Col. Arthur C. Rogers, now an officer in the regular army. He is a son of Squire Rogers' oldest brother, Lieut.-Col. John G. Rogers, previously mentioned. Arthur C. Rogers was a soldier in the Spanish-American war. In the World war he was with the American Expeditionary Forces, and his special service is concisely stated in a certificate given him, containing the following words: "For especially meritorious service as Division Ordnance Officer, Second Division, through all operations of that organization to August 15, 1918. His prompt grasp of new situations made his services especially valuable in the initial equipment of the Division, wherein the differences in administration and allowances to which the Marine Brigade had been accustomed made the task especially difficult. In spite of the tremendous losses of equipment through heavy casualties to personnel in the Chateau-Thierry defensive June 1 to July 9, 1918, and the Soissons offensive July 18 to 20, 1918, this officer's initiative and persistent energy made replacement of equipment possible during actual combat." This award was made by the Commander-in-Chief of the American Expeditionary Forces, May 26, 1918. He was again cited for bravery, zeal and devotion to duty June 20, 1919.

CLYDE CHARLES PUGH is a civil engineer by education and profession, and is now member of the firm Conrad & Pugh, civil and mining engineers, with offices in Wheeling.

Mr. Pugh is a birthright citizen of Wheeling and through his mother is identified with some of the pioneer families of this section of the Ohio Valley. Mr. Pugh was born on Wheeling Island, December 29, 1890. His father, Charles Lincoln Pugh, was born at Martins Ferry, Ohio. His mother, Diadema Curtis Oliver, was born at Wheeling in 1868, daughter of Fred and Nancy (Stevens) Oliver, both of whom died at Wheeling. Fred Oliver was an Ohio River steamboat pilot. Nancy Stevens was the daughter of a Wheeling pioneer who owned a great amount of property in this vicinity in the early days.

Clyde Charles Pugh was the only child of his parents, grew up at Wheeling, attended the public schools, and received his technical training in the University of West Virginia at Morgantown. He graduated in 1912 with the degree Bachelor of Science in Civil Engineering. While in university he was a member of the Phi Kappa Sigma fraternity. In September, 1912, he began his regular employment as a civil engineer in the Maintenance of Way Department of the Wheeling Traction Company, and in 1913 was similarly employed in the Maintenance of Way Department of the West Virginia Traction & Electric Company at Wheeling. In September, 1914, he became instructor of mathematics, physics and mechanical drawing in Linsly Institute at Wheeling, having charge of those subjects for six months. In February, 1915, he became a civil engineer for the C. B. Kimberly Company, general contractors of Wheeling. In January, 1917, he was appointed assistant county road engineer of Ohio County, and performed the duties of that office a year. In January, 1918, he became assistant engineer for C. C. Smith, civil and mining engineer of Wheeling, but in November, 1918, returned to the C. B. Kimberly Company, this time as one of its executive officers, being vice president until February, 1921. At that date he and H. A. Conrad established the firm of Conrad & Pugh, civil and mining engineers. Their offices are in the National Bank of West Virginia Building. Mr. Pugh is a member of the American Association of Engineers, is a republican, a Methodist, and is affiliated with Wheeling Lodge No. 28, B. P. O. E. At Pittsburgh in September, 1917, he married Miss Helen Majesky, daughter of John and Florence (Carle) Majesky. Her mother lives at Wheeling, where her father died in 1911. He was a hotel proprietor. Mr. and Mrs. Pugh have one daughter, Nancy Ann, born June 1, 1921.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL HOFFMAN, road engineer for Ohio County, has had a wide and extended experience as a civil and construction engineer, engaged both in railway and highway work and in other branches of his profession.

Mr. Hoffman represents one of the old and prominent families of West Virginia. He was born near Morgantown, March 25, 1888. His grandfather, John Henry Hoffman, was a native of Maryland, but in early life moved to what is now West Virginia, and he built a grist mill at Bruceton in Preston County. He had an active part in business affairs there, and about 1860 moved to Morgantown, where he established the Second National Bank and served as its cashier until his death in 1895. He married Louisa Evans, a native and life-long resident of Morgantown and a descendant of Col. John Evans, whose distinguished record as a pioneer frontiersman is told in connection with other family sketches in this publication.

Daniel Clark Hoffman, father of Alexander C. Hoffman, is prominently connected with Morgantown financial and business affairs. He was born at Bruceton, West Virginia in 1849, and has lived at Morgantown since about 1860. He finished his education in the University of West Virginia and for several years was employed in a wholesale grocery house at Baltimore. Returning to Morgantown, he became assistant cashier in the Second National Bank under his father, and in 1895 succeeded his father as cashier. On January 1, 1900, he organized the Citizens National Bank of Morgantown, and served it as cashier until 1908. Since then he has lived on his farm, the greater part of which is within the city limits of Morgantown. He is a democrat in politics, has for many years been connected with the Official Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Daniel C. Hoffman married Amelia Campbell, who was born in Wheeling in 1850, and died at Morgantown in 1901. She was the mother of two sons, the older being John Henry, manager of the J. E. Long Coal Company at Clarksburg, West Virginia.

Alexander C. Hoffman was educated in the public schools of Morgantown, graduating from high school in 1907, and completed his sophomore year in West Virginia University. Leaving university in 1910, he joined a surveying party in the interests of the New York Central lines in making a survey along the Monongahela River from the Pennsylvania line to Fairmont. Later he was with the engineering department of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Company, and subsequently was with the Kendall Lumber Company on railroad construction work and acting as logging superintendent in the Cheat Mountain District. In 1918 Mr. Hoffman became superintendent for the Rosedale Coal Company in opening its mine near Morgantown. On May 15, 1918, he gave up his civilian work to join the colors and was sent to the Fair Grounds Camp at Richmond, Virginia, and put in charge of the rolling stock of the camp. He was in service until mustered out December 15, 1918.

After his honorable discharge Mr. Hoffman became an assistant division engineer of the State Roads Commission with headquarters at Keyser. In July, 1920, he came to Wheeling as assistant road engineer, and on June 1, 1921 took up his present work as road engineer for Ohio County with offices in the court house. Mr. Hoffman is a republican, a member of the Presbyterian Church, and is affiliated with Morgantown Lodge No. 411, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

BUPORD CLEVELAND TYNES. In the course of his extensive experience as a lawyer Mr. Tynes, who is a well known citizen of Huntington, has favored the specialty of real property, one of the most fascinating branches of law practice. In the dozen years since his admission to the bar he has developed a busy program in this and general corporation practice.

He was born in Tazewell County, Virginia, May 3, 1884 and is descended from an old Scotch family that had it at in the Cheviot Hills along the River Tyne in Scotland. There were two brothers in the service of the British Government about the time the American colonies revolted and on their independence, one brother being an officer in the army and the other in the navy, and after the war they remained in this country, one of them being the direct ancestor of the Huntington lawyer. The latter's grandfather, Samuel Tynes, was a life-long resident of Virginia, living in Campbell County, and later in Tazewell County. He married Frances Moorman Haythe, also a native of Virginia. Their son, Achilles James Tynes, was born in Montgomery county, Virginia, November 29, 1834. His earlier years were spent in Campbell and Botetout counties, but in 1857 he moved to Tazewell County, where he married. In the meantime he had served four years as a Confederate soldier, being promoted from lieutenant to major. At the close of the war, when paroled at Charleston, West Virginia, he was major of commissary on General McCausland's staff, having previously served in a similar capacity under General Jenkins. Achilles James Tynes was one of the most public spirited and versatile citizens of Tazewell County, where he owned and operated a woolen mill, carried on extensive operations as a stock farmer, served twenty years as clerk of the County Board of Education and for forty years was an elder in the Presbyterian Church. He began voting as a whig, later was a democrat, and was a member of the Masonic fraternity. In 1864 Captain Tynes married Harriet Louisa Fudge, a daughter of Reuben Conrad Fudge and Nancy Wilburn Harman. The Fudges and armans have for several generations been prominently identified with the history and development of Southwest Virginia, and are among its largest and most influential families. The Fudge family came to Allegheny County, Virginia, from Holland prior to the Revolutionary war, in which they took part on the side of the Colonies. The early history of Tazewell County is replete with the exploits of Ezekiah Harman, famous Indian fighter, and progenitor of the Harman stock in Southwest Virginia.

Captain Tynes died at his home in Tazewell, Virginia, 1914. His widow is still living at Tazewell. They were the parents of eleven children, nine of whom, five daughters and four sons, are still living, the subject of this sketch being the youngest of the eleven children.

Buford Cleveland Tynes graduated from the Tazewell High School in 1901, and acquired a broadly liberal education preparatory to his professional career. He spent one year in the University of Virginia, in 1905 graduated from the Virginia Polytechnic Institute, receiving the degrees Bachelor of Science and Mechanical Engineer, remained as an instructor in the Polytechnic School for one year, and subsequently re-entered the University of Virginia, in the law school, where he graduated LL. B. in 1910. Mr. Tynes was a member of the college fraternity Phi Kappa Sigma, the Phi Delta Phi law fraternity and the Theta Kappa Nu honorary law fraternity, and is also a member of the Raven society of the University of Virginia.

In September, 1910, he located at Huntington and entered general law practice. From 1912 to 1919 he retained a law office in Huntington, but his main business as a lawyer was at Hazard, Kentucky, from which point he handled a large volume of land litigation. In 1919 he returned to Huntington, where his offices are in the Robson-Richard Building. Mr. Tynes is general counsel and general manager of a number of the larger land holding companies in Eastern Kentucky and Southern West Virginia, is director in several coal, timber and gas corporations and also a bank director.

Mr. Tynes is unmarried, is a member of the American, West Virginia and Kentucky Bar associations, is a democrat, Presbyterian, a member of the Guyandotte Club and the Guyan County Club of Huntington, the Huntington Chamber of Commerce, and towards the close of the World war is in the service of the Government. He enlisted in October, 1918, was in the Army Service Corps, and received a discharge November 20, 1918, at which time he was bedded for a commission as first lieutenant.

EDWARD L. WADDELL is one of the prominent coal men of West Virginia, being treasurer of the Panhandle Coal Operators Association, secretary of the Richland Coal Company, and his abilities as a business executive have brought him a number of important responsibilities in the commercial affairs of Wheeling and vicinity.

Mr. Waddell was born near Wheeling, but for a number of years his business interests took him to other states and cities all the way from New York to the Rocky Mountains.

With his home and most of his interests now centered at Wheeling, Mr. Waddell is near the seat of the Waddell family, which was established in this part of the Trans-Allegheny frontier only a few years after the close of the Revolutionary war. He is descended from an old Scotch family, the name originally spelled Woodhall. One of his ancestors was William Woodhall, a Scotch earl in 1296. The old Woodhall estate was close to Inverness, Scotland. On account of religious troubles in Scotland one branch of the Waddell family in 1680 moved to County Down, Ireland. The founder of this branch of the family in America was Edward Waddell's great-great-grandfather, John Waddell. He was born in County Down in 1727, and in 1737 accompanied an older brother to the American colonies. They first lived in Maryland, and later John Waddell went to the vicinity of Carlisle, Pennsylvania, and served with the Pennsylvania Militia in Cumberland County in some of the early Indian warfare and was also a soldier in the Revolution. In 1787 he established his home near Wheeling, in what is now West Virginia, and lived there the rest of his life. He married Mary Dickey, also a native of County Down, Ireland, and she died near Wheeling. Their son, Joseph Waddell, spent all his life on the old homestead near Wheeling and followed farming. He married Jane Brown, also a life-long resident of Ohio County.

Elijah Waddell, grandfather of Edward L., was born near Wheeling in 1820, and for a number of years conducted extensive farming operations in that vicinity. In 1854 he removed to Taylorville, Illinois, and died there the same year. He was a whig in politics and was one of the justices of the peace of Ohio County. He was an active member of the United Presbyterian Church. Elijah Waddell married Beth Ann Boggs, who was born near Wheeling in 1821, and died here in 1905. They became the parents of four children. The oldest, Susan Lee Ann, now living at Blairstown, New Jersey, is the widow of Dr. J. H. Storer, who was a physician and surgeon. The second of the family is H. E. Waddell. Mary Waddell is the wife of George Sisson, a retired farmer living at Roney's Point in Ohio County. William B., the youngest of the family, was born in 1852, became a merchant and died at Chicago in 1907.

Hanson E. Waddell, father of Edward L., was born near Wheeling, April 13, 1846. He grew up on a farm, attended rural schools, and at the age of fifteen entered West Liberty Academy, completing a two years' course there during 1861-62. Following that he attended a preparatory school at West Alexander, Pennsylvania. During the last year of the Civil war, 1864-65, when about eighteen years of age, he was appointed and served as an aide de camp on the staff of his uncle, Col. William J. Boggs, who commanded the One Hundred Sixty-first Virginia Infantry in the Union Army. After the war H. E. Waddell went to Pittsburgh and in 1866 graduated from the Iron City Business College. For a year he was bookkeeper and accountant in a general store at Metamoras, Ohio, filled a similar position at Bellaire for three years, and in 1870 became secretary of the Bellaire Implement & Machine Works, a place he held three years. From that he became secretary of the National Glass Manufacturing Company of Bellaire for one year, and ever since that time his business has been chiefly in the glass industry. In 1878 he was appointed traveling salesman for the Central Glass Company of Wheeling, and continued to give his active time to that corporation until he retired in 1910. He is a democrat, a member of the First Presbyterian Church at Wheeling, has filled a number of chairs in Wheeling Lodge No. 123, F. and A. M., and is also a past officer of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His home is at the Stamm Hotel in Wheeling, June 1, 1871, at Bellaire, Ohio, H. E. Waddell married Emma Virginia Hoover. She was born at Barnesville, Ohio, January 8, 1852. To their marriage were born four children. Harry, the oldest, died at Wheeling in 1893, at the age of twenty-one, having just begun his business career as a traveling salesman. The second of the family is Edward Lee. Charles H., born in 1876, was formerly in the automobile business and lives at Woodlawn, Wheeling. Ann Virginia is the wife of John McG. King, connected with the John A. Roebling Sons Company, wire manufacturers, and they reside at Denver, Colorado.

Edward Lee Waddell was born while his parents lived at Bellaire, on April 6, 1874. However, he was reared and educated in Wheeling, and finished his senior year in Linsly Institute in 1890. The following three years he was in the employ of the Hobbs Glass Company, then for four years was with the West Virginia Glass Company of Martins Ferry, being its representative in New York City and also representing the Co-operative Flint Glass Company of Beaver Falls. For five years he traveled in the interest of these glass companies out of New York City. A change of business experience came when he entered the service of Marshall Field & Company, of Chicago, and for six years he was division superintendent for the retail business. On leaving Chicago Mr. Waddell went to Wyoming, and for ten years was treasurer of the Monarch Coal Mining Company in the Sheridan field, one of the largest operating corporations in the West.

Mr. Waddell returned to Wheeling in 1918, and became associated with J. C. McKinley as a coal operator. Besides being secretary of the Richland Coal Company Mr. Waddell is secretary of the Richland Mining Company. He is secretary of the West Virginia Aircraft Company, secretary of the National Furniture Company, and is manager for the executors of the Louis Bennett estate. The late Louis Bennett was one of the prominent business men of the Ohio Valley, and at one time was candidate for the office of governor of West Virginia.

During the World war Mr. Waddell devoted much of his time to gathering data covering the coal situation for the National Fuel Administration. He is independent in politics, a member of the Second Presbyterian Church at Wheeling, is an apprenticed Mason and a member of the Fort Henry Club. His home is at Beech Glen on Romney Road, near the old Wheeling Park.

In 1905, at Chicago, Mr. Waddell married Miss Naomi Epstein. Her father was the late Doctor Epstein, who for many years practiced medicine at West Liberty, West Virginia, was equally distinguished for his erudite scholarship, at one time was a professor in West Liberty College, and was the first president of South Dakota State University. Mr. and Mrs. Waddell have three children: Harry Lee, born August 19, 1912; Edward Lee, born in 1915; and Richard Lee, born in 1918.

JOSEPH RIDGELY CALDWELL, M. D. Member of a family that has been in Ohio County, West Virginia, for considerably more than a century. Dr. Joseph Ridgely Caldwell is interested in the traditional occupation of the family, farming, though his larger prominence is due to his unusual attainments as a surgeon. Doctor Caldwell is a resident of Wheeling, and for some years past his talents have been almost exclusively taken up with his work as a surgeon.

His great-grandfather, John Caldwell, was founder of the family in Ohio County, West Virginia, coming from Pennsylvania soon after the close of the Revolutionary war. The grandfather's name was Joseph Caldwell. He was born in Ohio County in 1820 and established what is known as the Caldwell Homestead Farm at West Liberty, and was identified with it as a home and place of business the rest of his life. He died in 1906. His wife was Mary Ridgely, a native of Ohio County, who also died at West Liberty. William Ridgely Caldwell, father of Doctor Caldwell, was born near West Liberty in 1845, and is still living in that community. His time and energies have been bestowed upon farming and stock raising, but he is now retired. The old homestead of 300 acres is still owned by William R. Caldwell, and is operated by Dr. Joseph and his brother, James, and it is noted for its fine herd of pure-bred Holstein cattle. William R. Caldwell is republican in politics. He married Miss Nancy Gardin, who was born in Washington County, Pennsylvania, in 18—, and died at West Liberty in 1915. They had three sons: Samuel E., the oldest, is a merchant at West Liberty, a the second is Doctor Caldwell. James Caldwell lives the home farm and manages it and its dairy herd.

Joseph Ridgely Caldwell was born at West Liberty, June 2, 1872, attended the public schools of his native community, and graduated from the West Liberty State Normal School in 1892, having in the meantime taught for three years in Ohio County. He pursued his medical studies at Rush Medical College, now the Medical Department of the Chicago University, in Chicago, Illinois. He graduated M. D. in 1896, and then returned to West Liberty, where he was engaged in general practice until 1902, when removed to Wheeling. He is a member of the firm Caldwell, Drinkard & Bond, physicians and surgeons, who have an extensive suite of offices on the seventh floor of the Wheeling Steel Corporation Building. Doctor Caldwell is a Fellow of the American College of Surgeons, membership in which is confined to those who have evidenced special proficiency in the field of surgery. There are only twenty-seven members of the college from the State of West Virginia. Doctor Caldwell nearly every year attends the meetings of the American College, and keeps in the closest possible touch with every advance made in his art. He was county physician of Ohio County from 1902 to 1908, and he also served six years as a member of the Wheeling City Council. He is a republican, a Presbyterian, is affiliated with Nelson Lodge, No. 30, A. F. and A. M., West Virginia Consistory No. of the Scottish Rite, Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine, Wheeling, and is a member of Mystic Lodge, Knights of Pythias. He belongs to the Fort Henry Club at Wheeling and is a member of the County, State and American Medical associations.

In June, 1916, at Wheeling, Doctor Caldwell married Miss Ella Bond, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry W. Bond, of Wheeling. Her father is a shoe merchant. Doctor and Mrs. Caldwell have one daughter, Nancy Lee, born April 1919.

J. FRANK BYCOTT, a native of Wheeling, found his early opportunities for useful service with a Wheeling industrial and for a number of years has been a recognized expert in industrial accounting and is one of the men filling important executive responsibilities in the industrial affairs of Wheeling today. While he is an official in several corporations most of his time is given to his duties as auditor of the Whitaker-Glessner Company.

Mr. Bycott was born at Wheeling, December 8, 1883. His father, James Bycott, was born in Sheffield, England, in 1851, and served his apprenticeship in the famous iron and steel industry of his native city. He came to the United States at the age of twenty-two, settled at Wheeling and was employed in several technical capacities with the old La Belle Iron Works. This corporation sent him to open mills at different places. He retired from business in 1916, and is now living at South Wheeling. He is Presbyterian and a republican voter. James Bycott married Miss Emma Fullwood, who was born at Sheffield, England, in 1855. They became the parents of six children: Joseph, a roller with the American Sheet & Tin Plate Company, living at Mozart Heights, Wheeling; William H., chief engineer for the American Sheet & Tin Plate Company and also a resident of Mozart Heights; J. Frank Nellie, who died unmarried at the age of twenty-four; Thomas E., a roller with the American Sheet & Tin Plate Company, with home on South Jacob Street; and Anna, who was married in August, 1921, to Charles McQuay, locomotive engineer with the Pennsylvania Company and with home at Wheeling.

J. Frank Bycott was educated in Wheeling's public schools and in Frazier's Business College, and in 1901 at the age of twenty, went to work for the old Rivers Iron Works, now the National Tube Company. With the poration has gained a thorough and fundamental training in industrial accounting, and was chief of the cost department when he resigned in 1910. During the following year he was employed on cost work with the Wheeling Can Company, now a subsidiary of the Wheeling Steel Corporation. Since 1920 Mr. Bycott has been a member of the Official board of the Whitaker-Glessner Company. He went with the company as cost clerk and since August, 1920, has been editor, his offices being on the eleventh floor of the Wheeling Steel Corporation Building.

Mr. Bycott is also vice president of the Aekermann Manufacturing Company, with plant at Warwood, West Virginia, this being a subsidiary of the Wheeling Steel Corporation. From 1917 to 1920 Mr. Bycott was president of J. H. Chapman Sons Company, painters and builders supplies, at Wheeling. Mr. Bycott is a republican, a member of the Thompson Methodist Episcopal Church and is affiliated with Wheeling Lodge No. 23, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He and his family own a fine home in Lenox.

He married Miss Estella May Chapman, daughter of William H. and Virginia E. (Phillips) Chapman, now deceased. Her father was a well-known Wheeling business man, and for thirty-five years was head of the W. H. Chapman Sons Company, dealers in paints and builders supplies. Mrs. Bycott is well known socially, being a charter member of the Ladies Musical Club of Wheeling, a member of the Woman's Club, and for several years she employed talents as a vocalist with the choir of the Fourth Street Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. and Mrs. Bycott have three children: Harold Hamilton, born August 14, 1905, now a student in the Tridelpia High School; William H. Chapman Bycott, born in November, 1914; and Andrew Glass, born April 7, 1918.

TOM B. FOULK, Wheeling attorney, has been a very active participant in the professional and civic life of the city for the past seven years. He comes of a family noted for a scholarship and work as educators, and he himself was for several years after his graduation a teacher and instructor at the West Virginia University.

Mr. Foulk was born at Elkton, Maryland, September 20, 1866. His grandfather was Rev. John S. Foulk, who died in Oakland, Maryland, in 1890. The father, Wilson Matthews Foulk, was born in Pennsylvania in 1855, was married at Port Deposit, Maryland, and was a man of rugged intellect, broad scholarship, and gave the greater part of his life to the cause of education. For four years he had charge of the Rugby Academy at Wilmington, Delaware, and from 1891 to 1904 was superintendent of schools at Piedmont, West Virginia. From 1906 to 1916 he was superintendent of schools at Huntington, West Virginia, and then, after a short rest, was appointed State Historian and Archivist by Governor Cornwell, an office he filled until his death, which occurred in Charleston, January 25, 1919. He had completed his education in Dickinson College at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, and was a member of the Chi Phi fraternity. While at Piedmont he served three consecutive terms as mayor. He was a democrat and a member of the Episcopal Church. Wilson M. Foulk married Kate Anderson Bond, who was born at Port Deposit, Maryland, in 1861, and is now living in Huntington, West Virginia. Of her three children the oldest is Miss Virginia, a graduate of West Virginia University and now head of the Department of Mathematics in the Huntington High School. The two sons are Tom B. and Eric. The latter is a graduate of Purdue University in Indiana and is a mechanical engineer by profession, living at Huntington with his mother.

Tom B. Foulk received his early education in the public schools of Piedmont, graduating from high school in 1903. After he entered the West Virginia University and received his degree in civil engineering in 1908. He remained at Morgantown three years as an instructor in mathematics and graduate manager of university athletics. He is a member of the Phi Kappa Sigma Greek letter fraternity. Mr. Foulk studied law at Columbia University, in New York, for three years, receiving his degree of LL.B. in 1914, and on the 14th of November of that year began his practice at Wheeling. He has a substantial clientele in both law and chancery matters, and his offices are located in the Wheeling Steel Corporation Building. He is a member of the Ohio County, West Virginia and American Bar associations.

On May 13, 1917, Mr. Foulk enlisted in the First Officers Training Camp and was sent for training to Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana, but on account of physical disability in weight was honorably discharged July 3, 1917. Debarred from active participation in field duty, he nevertheless expressed his patriotism in various phases of local war work. He became secretary of the Wheeling Chapter of the American Red Cross, and still holds that office. This is the largest Red Cross chapter in the state, and during each year of the war it expended over $100,000 in various channels. Mr. Foulk was also a "Four Minute" speaker for the Liberty Loan, Thrift Stamps and other drives.

He is a director of the Ohio Valley General Hospital and Associated Charities. In politics he is a democrat, is a member of St. Matthew's Episcopal Church and Sunday school superintendent, is affiliated with Bates Lodge No. 33, A. F. and A. M., Wheeling Consistory of the Scottish Rite, and in Wheeling Lodge No. 23, B. P. O. E. He has filled all the chairs except exalted ruler. He is a member and director of the Kiwanis Club and served as vice president during its first year.

Mr. Foulk resides at 39 Zane Avenue on Wheeling Island. He married at Wheeling, May 12, 1917, Miss Alice Belle McClure, daughter of James H. and Belle (Chambers) McClure, who reside on South Broadway on Wheeling Island. Mr. McClure is a retired merchant. Mr. and Mrs. Foulk have four children: Kitty Belle, born May 25, 1918; Mary Louise, born June 17, 1919; Bess Bond, born September 24, 1920; and Tom B., Jr., born January 23, 1922.

AUDRY I. MARPLE, D. D. S. Included among the leaders of the Cabell County dental fraternity is Dr. Audry I. Marple, who has been engaged in a successful and constantly-growing practice at Huntington since 1914. Doctor Marple's equipment for his profession includes a thorough training, devotion to his calling, technical skill and practical knowledge, and a sympathetic nature that has gained him confidence, friendships and added patronage. He is a native of Upshur County, West Virginia, and was born September 9, 1886, his parents being Rev. Omar U. and Mary E. (McDermott) Marple.

Rev. Omar U. Marple was born January 17, 1864, in Upshur County, where his early educational training in the public schools was supplemented by a course at Buckhannon Wesleyan College, following his graduation from which he entered the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church. During his long, industrious and useful career as a minister Reverend Marple has filled many pulpits in West Virginia, including those at Wheeling, Salem, Benwood, South Charleston and Belington, and at the present time is pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Dunbar. His ministerial work has been prolific of good results, and wherever he has been assigned he has won the affection and esteem of his people. In politics he is a republican. Reverend Marple married Miss Mary E. McDermott, who was born in Upshur County, West Virginia, November 17, 1862, and they became the parents of four children: Stella, residing with her parents, the widow of the late L. B. Pugh, who was a mechanical engineer; Festus O., M. D., of Huntington, an eye, ear, nose and throat specialist, who served during the World War in the United States Army Medical Corps, with the rank of first lieutenant; Dr. Audry I., of this record; and O. Upton, who is engaged in agricultural pursuits in Upshur County.

Reared in Upshur County, Dr. Audry I. Marple attended the public schools there, following which he pursued a course in the preparatory school of the West Virginia University at Morgantown, and then entered the University of Cincinnati (Ohio) College of Dental Surgery, from which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1914, receiving the degree of Doctor of Dental Surgery. While at college he was admitted to membership in the Psi Omega Greek letter college fraternity, and he served two years as president of his class. Almost immediately after his graduation Doctor Marple commenced the practice of his profession at Huntington, where he has built up a large and representative practice among the best families in the city, his offices being located at No. 211 First National Bank Building. He is highly regarded in his calling and belongs to the various leading dental bodies. He served as secretary of Huntington Dental Society for three years, served for one term as secretary of the State Dental Society and was chairman of the organization committee for two years in the state society. In politics he is a republican, and his religious connection is with the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he is serving as a member of the board of stewards. He belongs to the Guyan County Club, is a member of the board of directors of the Kiwanis Club and acts as manager of the Kiwanis Male Chorus. Doctor Marple is the owner of a modern home at No. 302 Twelfth Avenue, located in one of Huntington's exclusive residential districts. In April, 1917, Doctor Marple enlisted in the United States Army Dental Corps, received his commission as first lieutenant and was assigned to service at Camp Wheeler, Macon, Georgia, where he remained until receiving his honorable discharge December 16, 1918.

In 1916, at Huntington, Doctor Marple was united in marriage with Miss Bess Lowry, who was educated at Marshall College, Huntington, a daughter of John M. and Bess (Mann) Lowry, residents of this city, where Mr. Lowry is engaged in the drug business. Doctor and Mrs. Marple are the parents of two children: John Lowry, born February 4, 1917; and Sarah Lee, born August 17, 1920.

CHARLES EDGAR CHAPMAN has devoted the greater part of his active years to the furniture and undertaking business in Huntington, and is senior member of the firm Chapman & Klingel, funeral directors. Huntington has been his home city nearly all his life, and he is one of the popular and successful younger citizens of that community.

He was born in Cabell County, February 4, 1883. His father, Charles E. Chapman, Sr., was a native of Kentucky, but was married in Cabell County, West Virginia, going there as a young man. He was born November 2, 1848, and for over half a century has been in the service of one trade, that of a stationary engineer. Since 1887 his home has been in Huntington, where he has served successively the Consumers Ice Company, the J. M. McCoach and Company and the Gwinn Milling Company, and is still on duty as a stationary engineer with a large glass manufacturing company. He is a democrat and an active member of the Christian Church. Charles E. Chapman married Miss Almedia Ash, a native of West Virginia, who died in Cabell County in 1887. Of their three children Charles E. is the youngest. Irvin, the oldest, died at the age of twenty-two while employed in a newspaper office at Huntington. The only daughter, Maggie, is the wife of Noah Ferrell, a coal miner at Montgomery, West Virginia.

Charles Edgar Chapman acquired a public school education at Huntington, and left high school at the age of eighteen to enter the offices of the Huntington Advertiser, beginning as printer's devil, and remained there five years, being advanced to the post of circulation manager. Mr. Chapman in 1906 became an employe of J. C. Carter and Company, furniture dealers and undertakers, and spent ten years with that firm, learning every detail of the business and the profession of undertaker. In February, 1916, he established the Chapman Undertaking Company, and changed this on March 3, 1917, to the Chapman Furniture and Undertaking Company. On June 17, 1919, he sold his interest in this business, and then formed his present partnership with D. B. Klingel. Chapman & Klingel are funeral directors, making that service the sole object of their best endeavors. They have well equipped funeral parlors, with every facility for complete and adequate service in this line, at 920-22 Sixth Avenue.

Mr. Chapman is president of the Mount Pleasant Land Company of Huntington, and is owner of considerable real estate, including a dwelling at 3135 Fifth Avenue, while his own home is in the building occupied by the funeral parlors.

He has two farms, totaling about 156 acres, in Way County, West Virginia.

Mr. Chapman is a democrat, a member of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, is a past master of Western Star Lodge No. 11, A. F. and A. M., past king of Guyandot Chapter No. 10, R. A. M., is junior warden of Huntingtont Commandery No. 9, K. P., is a member of Huntingtont Lodge of Perfection No. 4, Rose Croix Chapter No. 4 of the Scottish Rite at Huntington, West Virginia Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite at Wheeling, and Beni-Kedem Temp. of the Mystic Shrine at Charleston. He is also active in other fraternal orders, including Marshall Lodge No. 12, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Banner Camp No. 5, Modern Woodmen of America, Ancient Order of United Workmen, Huntington Council No. 53, United Commercial Travelers, and is a member of the West Side County Club and the Huntington Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Chapman has to his credit a long and interesting service in the National Guard of West Virginia. He enlisted in 1901 and served sixteen consecutive years, rising to the commission of first lieutenant. He was first lieutenant of his company in the Second West Virginia Infantry when he went to the Mexican border in October, 1916, and was on duty there until January 21, 1917.

June 24, 1906, at Catlettsburg, Kentucky, Mr. Chapman married Miss Lucile Rolph, daughter of Lewis K. and Margaret (Wiley) Rolph, the latter living with her daughter in Huntington. The father, who died in Huntington 1918, was for many years a steamboat clerk on the Ohio River. Mr. and Mrs. Chapman have one daughter, Alice Margaret, born October 30, 1912.

BALLARD E. BOSWELL is a native of old Virginia, with prominent family connections there since Colonial times. He has had a veteran and successful experience in the insurance field, beginning in his native state, but for some years past has been established at Huntington.

Mr. Boswell was born in Charlotte County, Virginia, October 12, 1858. The Boswells came to Virginia from England. His grandfather, John Iverson Boswell, spent all his life in Lunenburg County, Virginia, owned a farm and plantation and was also a local merchant. His first wife and the grandmother of the Huntington business man was a Miss Coleman, a native and life-long resident of Lunenburg County. She was the mother of six sons and one daughter, all now deceased. The second wife of John I. Boswell was a Miss Summerville, who also was born in Lunenburg County. She became the mother of three sons and one daughter, and two of the sons were Confederate soldiers and gave up their lives fighting for that cause.

Dr. John Iverson Boswell, father of Ballard E., was born in Lunenburg County, September 18, 1829, was reared there was properly educated, graduating A. B. from the University of Virginia, and later receiving his medical degree from Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia. He began practice in Charlotte County, moved to Mecklenburg County in 1859, and finally retired from his country home to Chase City in the same county in 1890, and died there in 1895. His life was filled with the good offices and kindly deeds of a successful physician and surgeon, whose practice was largely in country communities. Throughout the period of the Civil war he was a surgeon in the Confederate Army. He always voted as a democrat, and was very diligent in the performance of his duties as a member of the Baptist Church.

In Charlotte County Doctor Boswell married Miss Mary L. Robertson, who was of Scotch-Irish ancestry. She was born in Charlotte County, March 13, 1832, daughter of Charles Henry Robertson, who was born in the same county in 1800 and died there in 1880, having devoted his life to his plantation interests. He served as a captain of the local militia. The first wife of Charles H. Robertson and the mother of Mary L. was a Miss Osborne, a life-long resident of Charlotte County. She reared a family of two daughters and five sons, all deceased. The second wife of Charles H. Robertson was Miss Dora Judd, a native of Massachusetts, who died in Mecklenburg County. Of his six children four ached mature years and two are still living: Judd A. Iversen, a merchant of Chase City; and Clarence B., a successful farmer in Charlotte County. The wife of Doctor Iversen survived him a number of years and passed away at Chase City in June, 1921. She was the mother of seven children: Charles M., a banker of Chase City; Ballard E.; Miss Margaret, who died in 1914; John Iversen, Jr., a real estate operator in New York City; Henry Lee, who was a traveling salesman, lost his life in a hotel fire in Chicago in 1901; Thomas G., who is in the life insurance business at Richmond, Virginia; Henson Robertson, a banker at Charlottesville.

Ballard E. Boswell spent his early life on his father's plantation in Mecklenburg County. He attended the rural schools there until he was nineteen, and for two or three years longer remained on the farm. In 1880 he removed to Ichita Falls, Texas, then a new city and a frontier of northern Texas. After this extended sojourn in the South he returned to the home farm, but soon located at Richmond, and was actively engaged in the insurance business in that city from 1885 to 1906.

Mr. Boswell came to West Virginia in 1906 to act as general agent for the Union Central Life Insurance Company of Cincinnati at Wheeling, but in 1907 transferred to Huntington. Since 1908 he has also been in the real estate and fire insurance business.

Mr. Boswell is a democrat, is a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Huntington, and was, like most insurance men, one of the active leaders in local war work, erecting himself particularly in the sale of the Liberty bonds.

On December 14, 1905, at Williamsburg, Virginia, he married Miss Anne W. C. Stubbs, daughter of Dr. Thomas Jefferson and Mary (Coseham) Stubbs, now deceased. Her father was a distinguished educator in the old college town of Williamsburg, and for twenty-seven years held the chair of mathematics in William and Mary College there.

WILLIAM B. GREER graduated from a technical school and immediately returned to his native city of Wheeling and entered the service of the Whitaker-Glessner Company, and he devoted his talents and energies to that corporation with uninterrupted fidelity to the present time. He is the company's purchasing agent.

Mr. Greer was born in Wheeling, December 10, 1873. On his paternal side his ancestry is connected with the Old Iversen family of Allegheny, Pennsylvania, and is of Scotch descent. His father, David Greer, was born in Hubersville, Ohio, in 1845, in 1860 went to Wheeling and the following year, though only sixteen years of age, joined the First West Virginia Regiment of Infantry as a Union soldier and fought for the flag of the Union till the end of hostilities. After the war he returned to Wheeling and soon became identified with the city gas works, and was in the service of that public utility nearly a half a century. He died at Wheeling in 1913. He was a publican, a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and was a Lutheran and Odd Fellow. David Greer married Barbara Baker, who was born in Wheeling in 1852, and is still living in that city. Her three sons are William John and James, all residents of Wheeling.

William B. Greer attended public schools at Wheeling and finished his education in the Mechanics Art School of Springfield, Massachusetts, where he received the degree of Mechanical Engineer in 1892. It was in 1893 that he entered the service of the Whitaker-Glessner Company, starting in the mechanical drafting room, and has had an increasing range of responsibilities with the corporation. As purchasing agent his offices are on the ninth floor of the Wheeling Steel Corporation Building.

Mr. Greer owns a modern home at Edgewood, Wheeling, and was one of the original incorporators of the village, serving as village recorder two years and as a member of the council three years. He is a republican, and is affiliated with Wheeling Lodge No. 28, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. In 1893, at Wheeling, Mr. Greer married Miss Theresa Speaker, a native of the city. They have one daughter, Madeline C., wife of L. R. Tuttle, of Cleveland, Ohio.

EMIL C. RAUSCHENBERG, superintendent of the Wheeling Mold & Foundry Company, learned pattern making when he was boy, and as a journeyman, foreman and superintendent has been closely identified with the foundry business forty years or more.

Mr. Rauschenberg, who is a recognized leader in the industrial affairs of Wheeling, was born at Dawson in Terrell County, Georgia, December 24, 1867. His father, August Rauschenberg, was born in Germany in 1832, and learned the trade of pattern maker before he came to the United States in 1847. He followed the trade of pattern making all his life and died at Atlanta, Georgia, in 1911. He first lived at Dalton, Georgia, then removed to Dawson in 1866, and in 1871 located at Atlanta. During the Civil war he was a musician in the Confederate Army four years. He voted as a democrat, and was a member of the German Lutheran Church and the Masonic fraternity. His wife, Annie, was born at Bremen, Germany, in 1841, and died at Atlanta in 1891. Of their nine children the oldest is Emil C.; Owen was master mechanic of the Birmingham Rolling Mill at Atlanta when he died at the age of thirty-eight; Miss Rosie is secretary and treasurer of the Austell Ayers Company at Atlanta; Franz A. is a mechanic in the employ of the Wheeling Mold & Foundry Company; Lena is the wife of a rancher living at Tucson, Arizona; Fritz is a minister of the Presbyterian Church near Atlanta; Annie is the wife of Doctor Cousins, a physician and surgeon at Atlanta; William, the eighth child, died at the age of sixteen; and Mary, the youngest, died aged eleven.

Emil C. Rauschenberg received all his formal school education in the public schools of Atlanta. He afterward took a technical course with the International Correspondence School of Scranton, and by private study and experience has gained the equivalent of a good general education and become a master of his technical profession. Between the ages of nine and ten he went to work in an Atlanta foundry, serving an apprenticeship as a pattern maker. From Atlanta he removed to Shelby, Alabama, in 1883, following his trade, spent six months in Birmingham in 1885, two years at Anniston, Alabama, four months at Dallas, Texas, then returned for a short time to Shelby and to Atlanta, and for seven years was connected with the Chattanooga Foundry & Pipe Company, now called the U. S. Pipe Company. After two years at his trade in Cincinnati Mr. Rauschenberg came to Wheeling in 1900. For over twenty years he has been with the Wheeling Mold & Foundry Company, beginning as pattern maker, at the end of six months was promoted to foreman of the pattern shop, and in 1902 to superintendent of the foundry, and since 1911 has been superintendent of the entire plant, with 1,200 employees under his supervision. This is one of the prominent industries of Wheeling, and the plant and offices are located on what is known as the Peninsula.

Mr. Rauschenberg is a republican, a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Wheeling, Wheeling Lodge No. 28, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and the Wheeling Chamber of Commerce. He is a director in the Fulton Bank & Trust Company, and owns a farm $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Wheeling. During the war Mr. Rauschenberg had special responsibilities, keeping up the morale of his own plant and encouraging the support of the Government among the employees.

At Shelby, Alabama, in 1888 he married Miss Sarah E. Horton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Horton, farming people who lived at Rome, Georgia, where her father died. Mrs. Rauschenberg died September 13, 1916, leaving three children: Annie, wife of George P. Hoge, a farmer at Charlottesville, Virginia; Lena, wife of Don R. Crawford, connected with the Auto Sales Company of Wheeling; Mildred, wife of James F. Connors, an attorney at law at Cleveland, Ohio. Mr. Rauschenberg contracted a second marriage on October 13, 1917.

ERASMUS S. EVANS. It would not do proper credit to the strenuous career of E. S. Evans of Terra Alta to class him merely as a successful and very active business man. Such record of his career as it has been possible to compile from his own modest confessions and the words of others must be allowed to present a story that is one of the most interesting in connection with the life of any West Virginia citizen.

"Jim" Evans, as everyone among his friends knows him, has been identified with business of one kind or another in Preston County since early manhood. He was born in Allegheny City, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, January 4, 1880, son of Owen and Mary A. (Evans) Evans, both natives of Wales, but not related. They were married in Pittsburgh, where Owen Evans was a puddler in the steel mills. He left that work, and when his son Jim was seven years of age settled on a farm at Glade Farms in Preston County, where he died in January, 1893, at the age of forty. His widow is now living at the home of her son Erasmus at Terra Alta, he being the second of her four children. The others are: Mayross R., who died at Pittsburgh; Anna, wife of Isaiah Umble, of Terra Alta; and Owen C., a farmer at the old homestead at Glade Farms.

Jim Evans grew up on that homestead from the year 1887. There were country schools in the vicinity, but the few days he attended them did not greatly influence his intellectual growth or future career. He reached manhood with the ability hardly to write his name legibly. Up to the age of twenty-two he remained with his mother. In the meantime he had acquired some practical skill in more lines than one, was able to do blacksmith and carpenter work, and several winter seasons he spent in the woods, logging, hauling props and ties. He also dug the stone and burned it and scattered the resulting product of ten thousand bushels of lime over the home farm.

His first experience away from home was at Markleysburg, Pennsylvania, where he engaged in the buggy, harness and farm implement business. The capital for this enterprise he had acquired as a logger and as a teamster for Lloyd Lininger. That arduous work ended with a siege of pneumonia, and in the early stages of his convalescence he weighed seventy-five pounds and had the encouraging assurance of three doctors that he would never get well. He took six hundred dollars to Markleysburg and with it bought a small stock of buggies, implements and harness, and borrowed two hundred dollars in cash to erect a business house on a lot he leased from a church. At Markleysburg he remained twenty-one months. He left there with twenty-eight hundred dollars and a good pair of horses, and for six months following he was on the road selling harness and hardware for the Floyd & Bohr Company of Louisville. He covered thirty-five counties of West Virginia on horseback. The third stage of his business adventure was returning to his first love, lumbering. With Lloyd Lininger as a partner he engaged in the sawmill business near Fearer in the Hazelton locality. The firm took a contract from Cupp & Lakle to chop, log, saw and deliver on the car at Friendsville, Maryland, 5,000 feet of lumber of various grades and dimensions. After ninety days the firm had put in $1,500.00 without prospect of any return. At this juncture Mr. Evans bought out his partner, and, going it alone, in three months he cleared two thousand dollars. He sold out the timber he had acquired, also the mill, and had about twenty-five hundred dollars as working capital to connect with his next enterprise.

Perhaps it is only due justice to say that Mr. Evans had a natural talent for business. As a youth he learned the art of auctioneer, and while at Markleysburg he cried many sales all over that section of country, including the auctioning of ladies' boxes at all church and other entertainments. It was a business into which he naturally fitted, and he has never given it up entirely, even now officiating on the auction block. Twice a year he holds a large auction of commodities acquired through his business deals, and these sales account for thousands of dollars in the volume of gross profits of the firm.

Incidentally Mr. Evans began trading horses when a boy. There was a period of time, following his lumber enterprise above noted, when he made horse trading his chief business. He traveled from town to town, taking in all the county fairs, and followed the National Pike from Wheeling to Baltimore, traded horses from Barbour County, West Virginia, to Pittsburgh, selling them at auction. Once while attending the Tunnelton camp meeting he made thirty-three trades in a single day, though not making a profit in every transaction. The year of his horse trading he cleared fifty hundred dollars, and then abandoned it as a settled business, though it has reappeared as a diversion from time to time.

At about this stage in his fortunes he went back to visit his mother, whom he found alone on the farm burdened with the duty of milking four cows. She had saved up credit enough to keep her son Jim churning with an old tashod churn for four days. Becoming disgusted, he asked his mother why she kept so many cows, and the reply was that they and their care afforded her her chief pleasures. He could not understand this philosophy, and while she was not looking he put his feet behind the churn and shoved it off the high porch into the yard, and a few hours later was leaving home to find problems that were not so perplexing.

About that time he decided he needed an education. His first recourse was to Morgantown, seat of the university. He knew of the institution there because he had spent fifty hundred dollars of the money he had made at logging to send his brother through school. While aware of his own ignorance, he did not reveal it to the professor in charge, when he paid his tuition, and he was assigned courses involving textbooks and Greek history, mathematics and English grammar. None of his varied previous experiences furnished him a key to these books, and telling the professor to keep his tuition he sought educational opportunities elsewhere. Profiting by this experience, when he presented himself to the head of the Mountain State Business College at Parkersburg he made a complete confession of a profundity of ignorance and humbly requested that he be given an opportunity to learn what children at the beginning of their school careers were taught. While he could not arrange to enter regularly in the absence of a common school education, Mr. Menzies, the commercial teacher, permitted him to sit near his desk and come to him with his problems when other pupils were away, so as not to be aware of the mistakes and crudities of the new pupil. Following that suggestion he remained in the school four months, and at the end his teacher commented him by saying that he had made more advancement than any other pupil in the school.

Almost twenty-eight years of age when he left business college, Mr. Evans returned to the road for the Woodward Manufacturing Company of Parkersburg, selling harness, hardware, buggies and wagons. He covered more than half of the counties of the state by rail and team and worked for the company from March 1, 1909. He then changed his business, engaging with H. J. Speicher & Company of Accident, Maryland, organizing a stock company and selling purebred stallions. It was a proposition testing his selling ability to the utmost, but from the time he started, on October 1, 1909, he sold and delivered twelve head of horses, representing a total value of $3,000.00, by September 13, 1910. With the Woodward Company his salary was seventy-five dollars a month and expenses. Mr. Speicher doubted the salary with expenses, and the first month he was raised to two hundred dollars, the second month was given another fifty dollars, and the third month he worked at three hundred dollars and expenses, getting his salary whether he sold a horse or not.

Leaving Mr. Speicher Mr. Evans came to Terra Alta. October 17, 1910, and put in a stock of horses, buggies, harness, operated a livery service until July, 1911, and a bought, sold and traded horses, harness, buggies and wagons finally selling out to C. W. Johnson after clearing $2,200. Then followed a period of trading and trafficking, and got rid of everything he had but a set of heavy team harness which he traded for a horse, the horse for a blacksmith shop and thirty days later exchanged it for a buggy, harness and implement business at Bruceton Mills, and this in turn traded to Mr. Thomas for his farm, and that for part of the farm he now owns near Terra Alta.

All these adventures and experiences led Mr. Evans into what seems to be his permanent field. In January, 1912, he signed a Ford contract giving him the agency of Presto County. After selling seven cars he had a disagreement with the company. But in the fall of 1912 he made a nentract, purchasing fifty Ford cars, but instead he sold thirty-seven and also taught the owners how to drive them, kept his own books, and with the assistance of one mechanic operated the garage which he had established in 1912 in a building mill conducted by Mr. Freeland. With this initial success he has never lost the complete confidence of the Ford company, and this is a big business at Terra Alta, dealing in the Ford car and truck. He built the Evans Garage at Terra Alta in 1914, a structure of brick and hollow tile with frontage of fifty feet and a depth of ninety feet, and almost two stories high. In 1917 he built an addition 25x90 feet, two stories high, and his varied enterprise has required still further building space in Terra Alta. In 1916 he opened a garage in Oakland, taking the Ford agency for Garrett township, Maryland. He remodeled a building for a garage, and in two years later, and is now planning the erection of a splendid big garage there.

The measure of his business success can only be briefly outlined. In 1920 the volume of business amounted to $5,000.00. During 1921 six hundred Ford cars were sold through his agency and fifty-two Fordson Tractors, besides over seven hundred horses and a thousand cattle, the total volume of this business amounting to fully a million dollars. Over forty people are on his pay roll, and it requires five thousand dollars a month to meet salaries and expenses.

Mr. Evans has been too busy for interests outside these briefly described herein. He is a layman in the orders of the Knights of Pythias, the D. O. K. K., the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Woodmen of the World. While at Markleysburg, Pennsylvania, in March, 1904, he met Miss Emma B. Thomas. Twelve years later, on April 15, 1916, they were happily married. In the meantime Miss Thomas, who had completed her education in the Pennsylvania Normal School at California, had taught in the rural schools in Uniontown and five years in Homestead, Pennsylvania. She is a daughter of Isaac and Elvira (Frazier) Thomas, whose other surviving children are Charles Thomas and Mrs. Effie Bender. The first child of Mr. and Mrs. Evans was Georgie Marie, who was born May 19, 1918, and died May 3, 1919. On October 23, 1921, twin babies, Guy and Ruth, were born.

HARRY WALTERS GEE was an enthusiastic student of everything connected with electricity, and soon after leaving school and before reaching his majority he opened the small shop which by subsequent development has become the Gee Electric Company, a manufacturing and jobbing concern that now does business over half a dozen states.

Mr. Gee, who is secretary and general manager of this company, was born at Johnstown, Pennsylvania, April 12, 1880. The grandfather, George Gee, was a native of Nottingham, England, and as a young man came to America and settled near New Richmond in Clermont County, Ohio. In later years he became one of the large farm owners of that section, and lived there on his farm until his death. He married Anna Gregg, a native of Pennsylvania, and of Pennsylvania Dutch ancestry. She also died on the homestead near New Richmond. These grandparents had five children: Raymond, who was a Washington wheat farmer and died near Spokane in 1913, at the age of sixty-eight; Maria, wife of Andrew Castlen, still in business as a general merchant at New Richmond; Charles E.; Annie, of New Richmond, whose first husband was Benjamin Reece, a farmer, and she is now the wife of George Ebaugh, also a farmer; and Horace, a farmer near New Richmond.

Charles E. Gee was born on the farm near New Richmond in 1848, was reared there, and as a young man went to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and entered the service of the Singer Manufacturing Company. Later he was in the service of the same company at Johnstown, Pennsylvania, and in 1885 was transferred to Wheeling as his headquarters. There he continued as general superintendent of the Singer Manufacturing Company for thirty-five years. During his last years he was connected with the Gee Electric Company, and died at Columbus, Ohio, in November, 1916. He was a republican, but outside of his home and business his unagging interest was in the First Presbyterian Church of Wheeling. It was largely through his work and support that the Eighteenth Street Mission of that church enjoyed its prestige as an instrument for good in the city. He was connected with the mission thirty-five years and was superintendent fifteen years. Charles E. Gee married Lucinda McFarland, who was born at New Richmond in Clermont County, Ohio, in 1847, and is still living at Wheeling. Of her five children the eldest, a daughter, and the youngest, a son, died at birth. The other three are: Eugene C., who was a first-class sergeant in the Signal Corps in the Porto Rican campaign in the Spanish-American war, and is now an electrical engineer with the Pacific States Telephone Company at San Francisco; Minnie Ellsworth is the wife of Dr. Charles F. Bowen, an X-ray specialist at Columbus, Ohio; and Harry Walters is the youngest.

Harry Walters Gee was about five years of age when the family removed to Wheeling, and he received his education in the city schools, graduating from high school in 1896. The following two years he was employed by the George K. McMechen Company of Wheeling. Then, at the age of eighteen, he opened a very small shop for electrical supplies at 1124 Market Street. At the beginning he did practically all the work of the business, but his enterprise had the promise of great development in it, and before long his shop was crowded and he removed to 1126 Market Street, later to 1215 Main Street, where he took over an adjoining storeroom at 1217, and in 1910 established the business at its present location on Main and Fourteenth streets. The Gee Electric Company was incorporated March 3, 1909. The officers are: Otto Schenk, president; Henry G. Stifel, vice president; while Mr. Gee is secretary and general manager and A. A. Wheat is treasurer. In its manufacturing and other departments the company employs seventy-five men, and as jobbers and manufacturers the products are shipped throughout Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio, Illinois, Kentucky, Virginia and Maryland.

Besides the responsibility of directing this business Mr. Gee is a director in the Fidelity Investment Association of Wheeling. He is a director of the West Virginia State Fair Association, of the Wheeling Country Club, and is vice president and director of the Industrial Relations Association. He is a member of the Fort Henry Club and the Old Colony Club, of the First Presbyterian Church and in politics is a republican. He was a leader in war movements in Wheeling, being a member of the Pershing Limit Club, and helped in all the drives for funds for Liberty Loan, Red Cross and other causes. He received a medal of honor for selling Liberty Bonds.

Mr. Gee owns a fine modern home, with well-kept grounds, on Stamm's Lane, National Road, Wheeling. He married at Wheeling in 1906 Miss Elizabeth A. Stifel, daughter of Louis C. and Elizabeth (Stamm) Stifel, both representing old and prominent families in this section. Her father was a partner in J. L. Stifel & Sons, calico manufacturers, one of the big industries of Wheeling. Mrs. Gee is a graduate of the Pennsylvania College for Women at Pittsburgh. Five children were born to their marriage: the first, a daughter, dying at birth; Charles Louis died at the age of sixteen months; Eleanor was born August 24, 1915; William Stifel on August 26, 1917; and Harry W., Jr., on October 8, 1919.

DANIEL HOWARD COPPOCK is a stock and bond broker, with headquarters at Columbus, Ohio, but now has a branch office and is completely identified with the business life of Wheeling.

Mr. Coppock, who was a first lieutenant of cavalry during the World war, was born at Dayton, Ohio, February 1, 1878. His grandfather, Joseph Coppock, spent all his life at Ludlow, Ohio, where he owned and operated stone quarries. Isaac Coppock, father of the Wheeling business man, was born at Ludlow in 1835, was reared and married there, became a farmer, and from about 1858 for half a century continued farming and the operation of stone quarries at Dayton. After 1903 he lived retired at Ludlow, where he died in 1918. He was a republican, and a very faithful member of the Church of the Friends. Isaac Coppock married Martha Ellen Hutchins, who was born in Dayton in 1843, and died at Liverpool, Ohio, in 1905.

Daniel Howard Coppock, only child of his parents, was educated in the public schools of Dayton and prepared for college in the high school at Ann Arbor, Michigan, where he graduated in 1898, and then continued in the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, through the Sophomore year. Mr. Coppock for a number of years was a very successful hotel man. Beginning in 1900, he was clerk in the Cadillac Hotel at Detroit. For two years, beginning in 1905, he was proprietor of the Cook House at Ann Arbor, for six years conducted the Wagner Hotel at Sidney, Ohio, and from 1913 to 1916 was proprietor of the Jefferson Hotel at Portland, Oregon. Then returning to Ohio, he was proprietor of the Park Hotel at Coshocton from 1916 to 1918.

Mr. Coppock joined the colors in August, 1918, was trained at Camp Sherman, Ohio, for six months, was commissioned a first lieutenant in cavalry, then transferred South, spending two days at Camp Gordon, Georgia, six months at Camp McClellan, Alabama, three months at Fort Sam Houston in Texas, one month at Fort Riley, Kansas, and was then returned to Camp McClellan, where he received his honorable discharge August 3, 1919. He is still a first lieutenant in cavalry in the Reserve Corps.

From November 1, 1919, Mr. Coppock was engaged in business with main offices at Columbus, Ohio, until March 1, 1921, when he opened a branch office at Wheeling in the Board of Trade Building. He is associated with Claude Meeker, and they do a general stock and bond brokerage business.

Mr. Coppock is a republican, a member of the Episcopal Church, and in Masonry is affiliated with the Lodge at Jacksonville, Alabama, and the Knights Templar Commandery at Piedmont, Alabama, and also the Scottish Rite Consistory of Alabama. He is a member of Coshocton Lodge of Elks.

In 1900, at Detroit, Mr. Coppock married Dorothy M. Burke, who was born at Ada, Michigan, and finished her education at St. Mary's Academy at Monroe, that state. Mr. and Mrs. Coppock have one son, John B., born June 25, 1903, now in the senior class of the high school at Columbus, Ohio.

CHARLES H. WATKINS, JR. Many industries and commercial establishments have contributed to the growing prestige of Wheeling as one of the leading business cities of the Ohio Basin, and among them is Watkins & Company, proprietors of the largest furniture store between Pittsburgh and Cincinnati. The president of this company is C. H. Watkins, Jr., who has been in business at Wheeling ever since he left school.

The present company is successor to and includes the history of eight successive retail stores at Wheeling. The oldest of these was the Palace Furniture Company, Incorporated, in 1896, while in the same year three employees of House & Hermann organized a partnership under the name White, Handley & Foster. C. H. Watkins, Jr., became interested in this partnership in 1900, at which time the firm became Foster & Watkins. The following year he acquired Mr. Foster's interests and incorporated C. H. Watkins, Jr., & Company. This in turn in 1903 consolidated with the Palace Furniture Company, under the management of Mr. Watkins. The Palace Furniture Company in 1917 acquired the furniture business of W. F. Sharbaugh & Sons Company. Another important department was added in 1917 with the purchase of the clothing store of Walker Allen & Son. In 1918 the Palace Furniture Company acquired the business of House & Hermann, an old Wheeling business firm which then ceased to exist. The new combination was known as Watkins, House & Hermann, and more recently, to avoid confusion, the corporate name of Watkins & Company was adopted. This is now not only the outstanding furniture business in the state, but is a complete department store, occupying a large frontage at 1302-1308 Main Street. The official personnel of the company are: C. H. Watkins, Jr., president; Marsh Watkins, vice president; J. Wilson White, secretary-treasurer.

Charles Hamilton Watkins, Jr., was born on Wheeling Island, March 7, 1871. Watkins is a very old American family of Welsh ancestry. There were three brothers, named Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego Watkins, who came from Wales and settled in the colonies of Delaware and Maryland, whence their descendants have scattered to all parts of the country. The great-great-grandfather of the Wheeling business man was Peter Watkins, who was born Delaware, December 30, 1712. During the Revolution he held letters of marque from the Continental Congress. He was killed on board a United States Man of War, April 12, 1788. His son, Thomas Watkins, was born March 1771, and was an early pioneer of Southern Ohio, locating in Guernsey County, where he followed farming until his death on August 7, 1844. On November 2, 1802, he married Elizabeth Worley, who was born in Belmont County, Ohio, October 12, 1786, and died in Guernsey County, March 1, 1831. Their son, John Watkins, grandfather of C. H. Watkins, Jr., was born in Guernsey County, Ohio, November 11, 1804, and as a young man settled on Wheeling Island, thus having a home convenient to his business as a steamboat engineer and river pilot. The last years of his life he was toll taker at the old bridge between Bridgeport and Wheeling Island. He died at the age of seventy-two. December 12, 1828, John Watkins married Sarah Dille Hunter, who was born December 12, 1800, and died at Wheeling Island in 1866.

Charles H. Watkins, Sr., was born on Wheeling Island March 21, 1841, and spent all his life in Wheeling. He was an accountant, and for a number of years was manager of M. Marsh & Son. He died at Forest View, Elm Grove, Wheeling, in October, 1908. He had a record as a soldier of the Union Army in the Civil war, having enlisted in 1861 in Carlin's Battery D, First West Virginia Light Artillery. He was taken prisoner at the battle of Lexington, and was in Libby Prison until he and a companion, William Pebler, made their escape from that famous warehouse prison. As a result of his stay there he was incapacitated for further duty, and after 1864 was not in the army. He served three years as city clerk of Wheeling, but after resigning would never seek another political office. He was one of the founders of the Thompson Methodist Episcopal Church of Wheeling and very active in its affairs. C. H. Watkins, Sr., married Rachel Ann Marsh, who was born at East Wheeling in 1844, and died in 1906. A record of their children is: Miffin Marsh and William Brown, both of whom died in infancy; Charles H., Jr.; John Wagner, who died at the age of twenty years; Harry Adams, owning and operating a ranch near Fruita, Colorado; Edna Rachel, wife of French D. Walton, former city editor of the Wheeling Intelligencer and now conducting a successful publicity business at Wheeling; Joseph Jacobs, a dealer in automobile accessories at Clarksburg, West Virginia; Roy Naylor who died at the age of four years; and Wilbur Whally who was associated with his brother, Charles, in business and died of the influenza, January 30, 1919.

Charles H. Watkins, Jr., attended the public schools of Wheeling, but at the age of sixteen left school to go to work in a retail store. For a short time he was assistant bookkeeper of L. S. Delaplain Son & Company, and then kept books for J. W. Hunter until 1896. His first independent effort in a business was as member of the firm Exley, Watkins & Company, operating a preserving plant, and Mr. Watkins retained his financial interest in this business until 1907. However, after 1900 he was not active in the management, having, as noted above, acquired the interests of his partner in the firm Foster & Watkins, with which he had been previously associated as a silent partner. Then the firm Foster & Watkins was changed to C. H. Watkins, Jr., & Company, and Mr. Watkins has been the leading spirit in the successive changes and increases in this great mercantile and department store. He has direct personal charge of the undertaking department of the business. There are seven departments altogether.

Mr. Watkins is a republican in politics, and for four years was a member of the West Virginia Republican State Committee. He was for ten years a member of the Wheeling City Council, serving in the second branch six years and in the first branch four years. He is on the Official Board of the Thompson Methodist Episcopal Church, served for some time as president of the Men's Bible Class, and is ated with Wheeling Lodge No. 28, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. During the war Mr. Watkins was a "War Minute" speaker and helpfully interested in all the ways for funds for the Red Cross, Liberty Loan and other needs.

September 18, 1890, he married on Wheeling Island, Miss Alice M. Sadler, daughter of William Hall and Margaret (Mrs.) Sadler, now deceased. Her father was a river man nearly his life and later an interior decorator.

Mr. and Mrs. Watkins have an interesting family of five children. The oldest is Marsh, vice president of Watkins Company, and a prominent Wheeling business man whose name is noted more in detail below. The second child, Margaret Ford, died at the age of four years. James Walter, who was born June 30, 1900, is a salesman for Watkins & Company, and a graduate of Linsly Institute at Wheeling, having been a member of both the football and basketball teams of the institute. The fourth child, Roy Nor, born August 4, 1904, is in the junior class of the Wheeling High School, while Dorothy V., born July 31, 1907, is in the first year of her high-school work.

Marsh Watkins was born July 14, 1891. He graduated from the Wheeling High School and received his law degree from West Virginia University in 1912. He was very prominent in all student activities at the university, making a member of the Varsity Football Team and also played baseball, and was a member of the Phi Kappa Sigma, and the university societies Sphinx Club and Mountain Club. Marsh Watkins practiced law at Wheeling until 1918. April 7, 1918, he enlisted for the war, was commissioned a first lieutenant of the Army Service Corps, Department of Judge Advocate General, in August, 1918, was stationed at Camp Upton, Long Island, and in October, 1918, transferred to the infantry. He received his honorable discharge in December, 1918, and on his return to Wheeling gave up his law business to join his father as vice president and assistant manager of Watkins & Company. He is a republican and for many years was a municipal judge of Wheeling. Marsh Watkins is a member of Thompson Methodist Episcopal Church, Wheeling Lodge No. 5, F. and A. M., is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason in West Virginia Conf. No. 1, a member of Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and Wheeling Lodge No. 28, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He also belongs to the American Legion.

May 7, 1917, at Wheeling, Marsh Watkins married Miss A. Marie Young, daughter of George H. and Mary (Aunt) Young, the latter still living at Wheeling. Her father, who died at Wheeling in 1904, was chief clerk in the local offices of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway. Mrs. Marsh Watkins is a graduate of the high school at Saraburg, Ohio. They have one daughter, Ruth Eileen, born May 18, 1918.

AULUS REPS. At the northwest corner of the Court Square in Parkersburg is a business house conducted under the name Reps & Company, but whose sole proprietor is Julius Reps, one of the city's most substantial merchants and a man whose relations with the citizenship has met the strictest test imposed upon integrity and honor.

Mr. Reps was born on a farm in Butler County, Pennsylvania, December 23, 1853, the first of the two children of a only one now living of Ernest and Anna Margaret (Mrs.) Reps. His parents were natives of Germany, the one of Prussia and the latter of Hesse-Darmstadt. They came separately to the United States. Ernest Reps as a young man had to give service to the German Army, and it was only one cause of dissatisfaction with conditions in Europe which made it almost impossible for a man to leave above his circumstances. Thus it was that he came to the United States when about twenty-one years of age, and had learned the trade of locksmith, but in this country could find no regular employment in that line. He then learned the trade of tanner in Pennsylvania, and followed that business for some time. Shortly after his marriage he bought a small tract of land in Butler County and turned his energies to farming. From Western Pennsylvania he moved to Adams County, Ohio, where his wife's people lived, and in that section of the Ohio Valley he and his good wife lived out their years and are buried.

On a farm in the hills of Adams County, Ohio, Paulus Reps grew to manhood. He had worked within the measure of his strength on the farm and in the home, but he also eagerly pursued knowledge in the district school. At the age of eighteen he passed a successful examination for a teacher's certificate, and the first term he taught was for six months, at the salary of $30 a month. For sixteen years teaching was his chief profession.

Mr. Reps has been identified with the citizenship of Parkersburg over thirty years. In 1890 he and others entered the mercantile business, but in the course of years he bought out his partner, though he has always continued the firm name of Reps & Company.

His first wife was Anna Pfauwer, of Adams County, Ohio. She died, leaving two children, Ida E. and George Ernest, the latter associated with his father in business. The second wife was Cora Ellen Crosser. The three children born to their marriage are: Helen Doris, Mrs. Harlan DeVore; Thelma Virginia; and Russell Paul.

Mr. Reps came to Parkersburg with little of this world's wealth. He had an idea and backed it to the extent of his ability. During subsequent years he has enjoyed a steady increase in returns, and is accounted one of the substantial and successful business men of the community. From early boyhood he has been a great lover of music, and that love seems to be an inheritance of his children, several of whom have developed special proficiency in the art. Mr. Reps is a Methodist, a republican, and a member of the Parkersburg Chamber of Commerce.

JOHN W. BELTZ is continuing in the City of Wheeling the substantial business founded by his father, and in addition to operating a well equipped planing mill and dealing in building materials he has developed also a prosperous contracting business in connection with building construction. About the year 1870 the firm of Beltz & Flading established this enterprise, the original headquarters having been the old Fisher Foundry Building on Market Street, whence removal was later made to the corner of Nineteenth and Eoff streets, where the business has since been continued, the present plant having been utilized since 1888, in which year the title of the firm was changed to Beltz, Flading & Company. The present building was erected about that time, and affords about sixty thousand square feet of floor space, a planing mill having been operated from the initiation of the business. Mr. Flading retired from the firm in 1893, and the title of the concern was then changed to J. W. Beltz & Sons Company. The honored father, John W. Beltz, Sr., died in 1907, after having been actively identified with the business thirty-seven years and after having gained secure status as one of the substantial and representative men of his home city. When the new firm was formed his sons, John W., Jr., and Henry E., became his associates in the business.

John W. Beltz, Sr., was born in Wheeling, a son of Peter Beltz, who was a mechanic and who also became identified with farm industry. John W. Beltz, Sr., served about a four years' apprenticeship to the trade of cabinet-maker, and finally he became a successful contractor and builder in his native city, many of the substantial buildings erected by him in early days being still in use and in excellent preservation. He represented the Sixth Ward as a member of the City Council several terms, was liberal and progressive as a citizen, was a democrat in politics, and he and his wife were devout communicants of St. Alphonsus Catholic Church. The maiden name of Mrs. Beltz was Virginia Grammer, and both she and her husband passed their entire lives at Wheeling, she having survived him by ten years. Of the five children John W., Jr., immediate subject of this sketch, is the eldest; Henry is employed in connection with the business founded by his father; Edward died at the age of forty years; Mary died in early youth; and Miss Anna resides in Wheeling.

John W. Beltz, Jr., was born, reared and educated in Wheeling and here gained early experience in connection with his father's business, so that he was well fortified when, upon the death of his father, he assumed control of that industry, which has been signally prospered under his management. The enterprise is continued under the title of J. W. Beltz, and employment is given to about fifty persons. Mr. Beltz is a stockholder in a number of banking institutions, and while he has had no desire for political activity he is significantly progressive as a citizen and takes loyal interest in all that concerns the welfare and advancement of his native city. He and his wife are communicants of St. Alphonsus Catholic Church, he is affiliated with the Knights of Columbus, and is a member of the Carroll Club. His attractive home is in the Third Ward.

Mr. Beltz wedded Miss Mary Schaub, daughter of the late Louis Schaub, who founded the Central Glass Works at Wheeling and who continued as general manager of the same for thirty-five years, when he retired, he having been sixty-five years of age at the time of his death. Mr. and Mrs. Beltz have no children.

WILLIAM HENRY GORMAN. While the teaching profession cannot be classed as one of the important gainful occupations, it remains to-day as it always has, perhaps the greatest opportunity for a personal service that will continue its influence for good throughout succeeding generations. A West Virginian whose life has been largely devoted to education on this true basis of personal service is William Henry Gorman of Monongalia County. Mr. Gorman was born in Grafton, Taylor County, Virginia, April 28, 1858. He acquired a common-school education. He began teaching at the age of twenty-four. His first term was in his home school, in which he is teaching to-day, known as the Flats School. He has been a teacher for thirty-nine years, and has missed only one term of consecutive service. Altogether he has taught twenty-seven years in his home district.

Mr. Gorman cannot estimate in terms of tangible wealth the value of the work he has done as a teacher. However, he can point to many of his former students, who received their early inspiration for bigger and better things while in his school and are now doing well in the world of work and men. Among these are his own four children.

Always in his teaching he has emphasized the fact of personal responsibility and a loyal performance of the duties of citizenship.

HON. JOHN JAMES DAVIS. While the youngest of the Eastern States, West Virginia has supplied a due proportion of leaders in national affairs, and perhaps no one family has more distinction in this respect than that of Davis, one of whose representatives was the late John James Davis of Clarksburg, an eminent lawyer in that city for sixty years.

Davis is one of the commonest names in Wales. There is a tradition that the ancestor of the Clarksburg family was the Prince of Powys, who fought the Saxon king of Northumberland in the bloody battles of Chester and Bangor. Among the Davises that came to America in colonial times, some settled in Maryland.

Caleb Davis, grandfather of John James Davis, was born at Oldtown, Allegheny County, Maryland, March 15, 1767. He was probably a son of John Davis of Maryland, whose brother was Capt. Rezin Davis of Rawlings Continental Regiment in the Revolutionary war. Caleb Davis for many years lived at Woodstock, Shenandoah County, Virginia, and died there, April 25, 1834. His wife, Mary (Upp) Davis, was born in November, 1774, and died September 2, 1827. They were the parents of two sons, John and Rezin, and four daughters.

John Davis was born at Woodstock, Shenandoah County, Virginia, July 11, 1797, and moved to Clarksburg in 1825. He served here an apprenticeship at the saddler's trade under Col. Charles Lee, and later he and his brother, Rezin Davis, engaged in the saddle and harness business at Clarksburg. John Davis was a prominent citizen of Harrison County, held the office of sheriff, for several years was justice of the peace, and was a strong Southern sympathizer at the time of the Civil war, his second son, Rezin Caleb, being a Confederate soldier. July 12, 1825, at Clarksburg, John Davis married Eliza Arnold Steen. They reared four children: Jane Steen, John James, Rezin Caleb and Al Eliza. Rezin Caleb Davis (now deceased) was for many years an able lawyer in practice at Louisville, Kentucky. Eliza Arnold Steen, wife of John Davis, was born July 17, 1799, and died May 10, 1866. She was a pioneer school teacher in Harrison County; Stowell Jackson was one of her pupils. Her parents, James and Jane (Small) Steen were Scotch-Irish Presbyterians, natives of Ulster, Ireland and came to America from there. John Davis and his wife were Presbyterians and he was a ruling elder in his church. John Davis died at Clarksburg, November 9, 1863.

John James Davis, whose career is the principal subject of this article, was born at Clarksburg, May 5, 1835, spent all his life in that city and died March 19, 1916, was nearly eighty-one years of age. He possessed gift of talent that made it possible for him to utilize the benefit of a liberal education and prepare himself for a career of usefulness when still quite young. He attended the Northwestern Virginia Academy of Clarksburg, at the age of seventeen began the study of law under Judge George H. Lee in that city, finishing his law course in the Brookes Branch School of Law at Lexington, Virginia, and was still in his twentieth year when he began active practice in his native city. His work as a lawyer with increasing years an experience brought him a reputation among the leaders of the State bar, and he did not give up his practice altogether even in old age, continuing his profession for sixt years.

The late Mr. Davis had a historic service in the formation of the State of West Virginia. He was elected a member of the Virginia Legislature in 1861, and in the same year served as a member of the second convention at Wheeling which provided for the organization of the new State of West Virginia. In 1870 Mr. Davis was elected a member of the West Virginia Legislature. For many years he was one of West Virginia's recognized leaders in the democratic party, was active in a number of national campaigns and he himself was elected and served with distinction as a member of the Forty-second and Forty-third congresses. Among other positions of honor and responsibility conferred upon him, he was a member of the Board of Visitors of the West Point Military Academy, a regent of the University of West Virginia, a director of the State Insane Hospital. Mr. Davis was a Mason, and was a ruling elder in the Southern Presbyterian Church. During the early seventies he built a large and handsome brick residence in Clarksburg, and that was the home of his later years, he reared his children there, and it has been one of the social centers of the city and state.

August 21, 1862, John James Davis married Miss Anna Kennedy at Baltimore, Maryland, where she was born November 24, 1841. She died at Clarksburg, April 25, 1917, nearly fifty-five years after her marriage. Her parents, William Wilson and Catherine Esdale (Martin) Kennedy, were of Scotch ancestry and both of them lived and died in Baltimore, where her father was a lumber merchant. Mrs. Davis was a college woman, and her liberal education supplemented marked qualities of heart and mind that made her a great aid to her husband and his successful career and in the training of their children.

Of the children of John James Davis the oldest is Lillie, now Mrs. John A. Preston, of Lewisburg, West Virginia. Miss Emma K., who occupies the old homestead in Clarksburg, has been prominent in the social life and welfare work of that city, serving as secretary of the Red Cross during the World war and is now chairman of the Harrison County Red Cross Unit, and during the 1920 political campaign was assistant chairman of the Harrison County Democratic Committee. The third daughter, Anna, is the wife of Rev. H. G. Richardson of the Unitarian Church at Yonkers, New York. The only son is the distinguished American diplomat, John William Davis, to whose career a special sketch is dedicated.

HON. JOHN WILLIAM DAVIS, who was the Solicitor-General of the United States throughout the period of the Great War, and supplemented this service by three years

W. A. Taylor.

American Ambassador to the Court of St. James, is a native son of West Virginia, and earned his early honors in public affairs while a practicing lawyer at Clarksburg. The original qualities of his mind and character he inherited in almost equal measure to his father, the late John James Davis, and the rich and beautiful nature of his mother, Anna (Kennedy) Davis.

He was born at Clarksburg, April 13, 1873, and had every advantage that a good home and a liberal education could supply. Graduating in 1892, and as LL. B. in 1895 from Washington and Lee University of Virginia, he was admitted to the bar in 1895. He remained at Washington and Lee as Assistant Professor of Law during 1896-7. He received an honorary degree LL. D. was bestowed upon him in 1915 by the University of West Virginia, by Washington and Lee in 1916, in 1919 by University of Birmingham, England, and Union College and Yale in 1921, and by the University of Glasgow, Scotland. He began the practice of law at Clarksburg with his father in the firm of Davis and Bassel in 1897.

He was elected a member of the West Virginia House of Delegates in 1899; was democratic candidate for presidential elector at large in 1900; a delegate to the Democratic National Convention in 1904 at St. Louis, and was one of the strong candidates before the convention in San Francisco in 1920, for the democratic nomination for president. Mr. Davis was elected to Congress from the First West Virginia District in 1910, and re-elected in 1912, serving in the Sixty-second and Sixty-third congresses.

He resigned his seat in Congress to become Solicitor-General of the United States, August 30, 1913. At no other period in American history was this office burdened with so heavy details of responsibility as the period from 1913 to 1918, practically coinciding with the period of the world war. In November, 1918, Mr. Davis was appointed and confirmed as Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Great Britain, and continued as the American representative at the Court of St. James until 1921. Since his return to America, Mr. Davis has been engaged in the active of law at New York City.

Mr. Davis was counselor of the American Red Cross from 1913 to 1918. He served as a member of the American delegation for conference with Germans on the treatment of exchange of prisoners of war at Berne, Switzerland, in September, 1918. He is an honorary bencher of the Middle Temple, England; was president of the West Virginia Bar Association in 1906; is a member of the Phi Kappa Psi, Phi Beta Kappa, a Mason and an Elk and a member of the Metropolitan, University, National Press, Navy Chase, and Lawyers clubs of Washington and is a trustee of the Washington and Lee University and a director of the Rockefeller Foundation.

June 20, 1899, Mr. Davis married Miss Julia T. McDonald, native of Kentucky. She died in 1900, leaving a daughter, Julia McDonald Davis. January 2, 1912, Mr. Davis married Ellen G. Bassel, daughter of the late John Bassel, prominent Clarksburg lawyer.

PETER HANSEN KOBLEGARD came to Clarksburg nearly forty years ago, and during his youth and early manhood as associated with his cousin, John Koblegard. Out of that association and experience he eventually established himself in the wholesale business, and is still the active head of the Koblegard Company, leading dry goods merchants.

He was born of Danish parents in North Schleswig, Germany—now a part of Denmark—July 5, 1871, one of the four sons and one daughter of Andreas and Anna Maria (Hansen) Koblegard. His father, who was a farmer and shepherd lived at Wilstrup in Germany, where Peter H. Koblegard spent the first thirteen years of his life. About that time his cousin, John Koblegard, who had established himself in a business way at Clarksburg about 1869, came to Denmark on a visit, and when he returned to America Peter Koblegard accompanied him and thus began his connection with the City of Clarksburg. Peter H. Koblegard arrived in America with a common-school education. He supplemented this with two terms of three months each in the public schools of Clarksburg, and in addition was making rapid progress in the English language and in the knowledge of American affairs by his practical work. For three years after coming to Clarksburg he was employed by Ruhl, Koblegard & Company, wholesale groceries and produce, worked two more years for the same firm at Weston, and then for eight years was on the road as a traveling salesman for the house, with headquarters at Clarksburg, Weston and Buckhannon. While on the road he acquired a financial interest in the retail grocery store at Buckhannon, and at the time of his marriage in 1896 left the road and establishing his home at Buckhannon, took an active part in the management of the business.

Returning to Clarksburg in 1898 Mr. Koblegard organized the Koblegard Company, wholesale dry goods and notions. This is a successful business with now nearly a quarter of a century of existence. Mr. Koblegard had the general management from the beginning and is now president of the company. The business is held in one of the substantial structures in the wholesale district of Clarksburg, the building having been erected in 1901. In the success of the Koblegard Company, Mr. Koblegard has found his chief satisfaction in a business way, though in the meantime he has acquired other business and financial interests.

Clarksburg has always been able to count upon him as a public-spirited and reliable citizen when some cause needed advancement. As soon as he reached his majority he was naturalized as an American citizen, and in politics is a republican, but votes an independent ticket when occasion demands. During the period of the World war he was chairman of the Y. M. C. A. drive in Harrison County, when $31,000 were raised for that purpose, and he was also chairman of the United War Work campaign when $108,000 was raised in the county. In this campaign he had charge of the division composing Harrison, Doddridge and Ritchie Counties. Mr. Koblegard has been a director of the Clarksburg Chamber of Commerce since its organization, is a member of the Rotary Club, and for many years has been active in the First Presbyterian Church, being chairman of the Men's Department. The distinction which doubtless affords him the greatest measure of satisfaction is due to his interest in Sunday School work and as president of the McClelland Bible Class, a class named in honor of a late pastor of the church, Rev. Henry T. McClelland. The class was organized April 25, 1915, and such has been the effectiveness and work of the organization that it is known in Sunday School circles from coast to coast. This class in a competition against twenty-seven other Bible classes in the United States, won first place in the international "four square contest," in 1920. Mr. Koblegard for several years has been Chairman of the Business Committee of the West Virginia Sunday School Association. He was an organizer and the first president of the Clarksburg Council of Boy Scouts, and continued to act as president for three years until other business interests obliged him to resign.

In 1896 Mr. Koblegard married Miss Marian Rebecca Hurst. Her father, Col. John L. Hurst, of Buckhannon, was a soldier and officer under General Custer. The only son of Mr. and Mrs. Koblegard is Hurst Hansen Koblegard, who while a student in Princeton University volunteered in the Naval Aviation Corps. He is now vice president and general manager of the National Mould & Machine Works of Clarksburg.

W. B. TAYLOR is a resident of the old college town of Bethany, but for a number of years has been active in banking and other affairs at Wellsburg, where he is president of the Farmers State Bank.

The Farmers State Bank of Wellsburg was organized in 1912 and opened for business on the 1st of August of that year. It has a capital of $70,000, surplus and undivided profits of $24,000, resources in excess of $700,000, and deposits of $520,000. Its stockholders are all local people, and it is a bank of general commercial service, safely and conservatively managed, and has been a source of great value to the business and industry of the West Virginia Panhandle. The promoter of the bank was S. S. Hedges, who served as cashier until August, 1921, when he retired. The first president was C. B. Reeves, who in 1913 was succeeded by W. B. Taylor, who had been vice president from the organization. H. C. Wells became vice president, succeeding Mr. Taylor.

W. B. Taylor has a notable record both as a minister and as a business man. He first became identified with this section of West Virginia as one of the officials of Bethany College. Mr. Taylor was born in Mason County, Kentucky, March 28, 1865. His father, George M. Taylor, was a building contractor, a native of Bracken County, Kentucky, and about 1870 returned to that county as his home. W. B. Taylor was reared in Bracken County, attended school there, finished his literary education in Transylvania University at Lexington, and did post graduate work in the University of Chicago. For five years of his early life he taught school in Bracken County, was also superintendent of his father's farm, and had proved his business judgment and energy long before finishing his education. He did seven years' work in six at the university. While a student he began preaching as a minister of the Christian Church. For seven years was pastor of a North Side church in Chicago and for two years was general superintendent of church work in that city. Mr. Taylor for three years was pastor of a church at Ionia, Michigan, and while there began dealing in and developing Michigan lands, buying up a large tract of "cut-over" land and promoting a settlement of Danes.

Rev. Mr. Taylor came to Bethany College as its vice president in 1905. For eleven years he remained active in the business administration as teacher of philosophy and sacred literature. For five years he was pastor of the Christian Church at Bethany, and for eight years past has been pastor of the West Liberty congregation. Mr. Taylor covered a large area in promoting the interests of Bethany College.

He has always been interested in politics, particularly the cause of good government and social welfare. He was a participant in an interesting triangular fight for the republican nomination for Congress in 1920. While in Chicago he worked with other forces for good government in driving the gray wolves out of the City Council. He was on the executive board of his church while in Illinois, and in Michigan was president of the Missionary Society. Mr. Taylor is treasurer of the Kiwanis Club of Wellsburg, was chairman of the Brooke County Chapter of the Red Cross, and during the war was chairman of the County Council of Defense and perfected an efficient organization of the entire county, so that every quota was more than filled.

In Cynthia, Kentucky, in 1895, Mr. Taylor married Miss Ammie Jean Eales, of Cynthia. They are the parents of seven children: Robert Graham Taylor, assistant cashier of his father's bank; Joy, a Y. W. C. A. and social service worker at Miami, Florida; Henry M., a student in the University of West Virginia; Ammie Jean and Gladys, students in Bethany College; and William B., Jr., and Eloise.

JAMES WILLIAM ENGLE, D. D. For almost thirty years the West Virginia Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church has recognized in Doctor Engle one of the ablest and most devoted ministers, a man of exalted character who has not only represented his church but has made his life an expression of the essential meaning of Christian service.

A native of West Virginia, James William Engle was born in Barbour County, December 19, 1865, youngest of the nine children of William and Tabitha (Criss) Engle. His father was born in Pendleton County, son of Solomon Engle who was of English lineage. His mother was born in Barbour County, daughter of Isaac Criss. Doctor Engle had an example to direct his choice of a profession in both his father and grandfather who were local Methodist preachers. His father was also a carpenter by trade and lived on a farm.

When James William Engle was seven years of age his parents removed to Gilmer county, where he grew to manhood on a farm, attended rural schools, and was further educated in the West Virginia Academy at Buckhannon, West Virginia, and the Ohio Wesleyan University. At the age of eighteen he began teaching and for five or six years alternated between teaching and attending school. Gro City College conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Divinity in 1911.

Doctor Engle was converted and became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at the age of nineteen, and at the age of twenty-seven he began preaching. After three years of supply work he joined the West Virginia Conference in 1894, and since then has been pastor of churches at the following places in the order named: Weston, G. Beverly, Ravenswood, McMeekin, Parkersburg, Terra Alta, Grafton, Huntington and Clarksburg. Between the pastorates of Grafton and Huntington, he was District Superintendent of the Charleston District for three years. Doctor Engle is now engrossed in his congenial and important responsibilities as pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Clarksburg.

Besides the service represented in the pastorate and the district superintendency several other honors commensurate with his abilities have been conferred upon him. He is member and president of the Publishing Committee of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, is a member of the board of the Epworth League representing the Fourth General Conference District of the Methodist Episcopal Church, is a trustee of West Virginia Wesleyan College, and trustee and president of the West Virginia Anti-Saloon League. He was a delegate to the General Conference of the church in 1920. Doctor Engle is a republican, and fraternally is a Knight Templar Mason and Shriner.

October 15, 1895, Doctor Engle married Miss Dora B. McCray who was born and reared in West Virginia and was a successful teacher before her marriage. Her parents, now deceased, were Evan David and Martha Jane (Bartlett) McCray, the former was born and reared in Lewis County, West Virginia, and the latter was a native of Charlottesville, Virginia, and as a child came to Upshur County, West Virginia, with her parents. Her father, Eleazer Bartlett, was a prominent farmer and citizen of Upshur County, and served as a Confederate soldier.

Evan McCray was a son of Robert and Margaret (Bennett) McCray. Margaret Bennett was a daughter of William Bennett, who was a son of Joseph Bennett, a native of New Jersey, and son of an Englishman who came from London to this country as a soldier under General Braddock in the French and the Indian war. After the conclusion of his military service he settled in what is now Pendleton County, West Virginia. William Bennett was born in Pendleton County, after his marriage moved to Lewis County, his wife being Rebecca McCally, daughter of James McCally who was a captain of British Marines, but resigned in order to join the colonists in their struggle for independence. One of the oldest and most prominent families in the annals of West Virginia is the Bennett.

Doctor and Mrs. Engle have one son, James Paul, who is now eighteen years of age and is a student in West Virginia Wesleyan College.

JAMES SERAPHIN RODNEY. A resident of Clarksburg since 1903, James Seraphin Rodney has made a progressive record as a business man, and his working interests throughout this period have been in the business of mining machinery and general contractors' supplies. He is active in civic affairs as well as in business circles.

Mr. Rodney was born at New Castle, Delaware, June 11, 1880, son of John H. and Annie (Reeves) Rodney. His mother who is still living was born in South Carolina and is descended from a signer of the Declaration of Independence, George Read. John H. Rodney, now deceased, was a lawyer by profession, a native of Delaware, and son of Hon. George B. Rodney who not only gained distinction as a lawyer, but at one time represented Delaware in Congress. This branch of the Rodney family is of English ancestry, and one of them was Caesar Rodney who was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence.

James S. Rodney was reared at New Castle, was educated in private and public schools, and from the age of eighteen up the tasks and responsibilities of life on his own terms. While both his father and grandfather were miners, he chose a business career. He followed various lines of employment until 1903, and on coming to Clarksburg he entered the service of the West Virginia Mine Supply Company, then managed by D. R. Potter, its founder. Subsequently Mr. Rodney for about five years was on the road as a traveling salesman for this company. In 1916 and O. W. Robinson bought the business, and it is one of the largest concerns of the kind in the state dealing in machinery and mill, mine and contractors' supplies.

Mr. Rodney is a Knight Templar Mason and Shriner, a member of the Clarksburg Rotary Club, is a leader in politics and a member of the Episcopal Church. In addition to his business he is now giving much time to his duties as a member of the city council, an office to which he was elected in 1921.

In 1906 Mr. Rodney married Miss Louise Everett, daughter of Captain William Everett of the United States Army. They have two children, Louise E. and Emily Rodney.

ROY F. ASH. The young men who volunteered for service in the World's war returned to their own land to find conditions greatly changed. Industrial affairs and economic conditions, as always in the wake of a great international catastrophe, were unsettled in a degree that made it a difficult task for the returned soldiers to place themselves in the scheme of things, and, indeed, such conditions prevail to a great degree at the present time. Among those who tried after seeing much active service was Roy F. Ash. He soon recognized that the man with special ability would have the better chance in readjusting himself, and accordingly trained himself through special study for the insurance business, with the result that he is at present a member of the successful insurance firm of Ash & Lynch, Clarksburg.

Mr. Ash was born on a farm in Doddridge County, West Virginia, November 15, 1895, but was only two years old when his parents removed to Harrison County, where he was reared. He is a son of Harvey H. and Ruth Elizabeth (Henson) Ash, both of whom were born in Doddridge County. His paternal grandparents were Silas and Mary J. (Crawford) Ash, and they, too, were born in Doddridge County, where the Ash family has long been numbered among the oldest and most highly respected people. The father of the Ash family to settle in Doddridge County was John Ash, the great-grandfather of Roy F. Ash, who came from North Carolina to old Virginia and then to what is now West Virginia. He and a brother, William Ash, were born in England, whence they came to America and settled in North Carolina. From that colony they enlisted as patriot soldiers in the Colonial army for service during the revolutionary war, in which struggle for independence William Ash was killed. Silas Ash, the grandfather of Roy F. Ash, served with gallantry in the Union army during the war between the states, and at the close of hostilities remained in the United States regular army for the campaign against the hostile Indians on the western plains. After leaving the army he engaged in the oil business and died at Clarksburg, where his death occurred.

Roy F. Ash is one of three sons, his brothers being Noah and Russell H., the former older and the latter four years younger than he. There was a sister who died in infancy. Roy F. Ash was reared on the home farm to the age of fifteen years, attending the rural schools, and then moved to Clarksburg, where he obtained a high-school education. He then entered the West Virginia University, at Morgantown, which he left in his junior year to volunteer in the United States Army when this country became involved in the World's war. He was accepted and sent to Fort Benjamin Harrison, at Indianapolis, to enter the Officers' Training School, and later, upon examination, was commissioned a second lieutenant in the regular army and sent to Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, to the Sixtieth Infantry, where he was transferred to Camp Greene, South Carolina, and there was appointed aide on the staff of General Crawford's Sixth Infantry Brigade, Third Division, and as such embarked in April, 1918. In France he was promoted to a first lieutenantancy and subsequently returned to the Sixtieth Infantry Regiment and served until the signing of the armistice. Later he was with the Army of Occupation until June, 1919, when he was sent back to the United States. At Washington, D. C., he received his honorable discharge, September 5, 1919. He is a member of the American Legion and in 1921 served as post commander at Clarksburg.

Upon his return to the United States, and after receiving his honorable discharge, Mr. Ash attended the Carnegie Institute at Pittsburgh, to prepare himself, in a three-month course, for the life insurance business. At the end of that time he came to Clarksburg and has since been a member of the firm of Ash & Lynch, representing the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company, with offices in the Goff Building. He is a thirty-second degree Mason of the Scottish Rite, a Noble of the Mystic Shrine and an Elk. His religious connection is with the Christian Church. Mr. Ash is unmarried.

DIEGO DELFINO, M. D. An especially varied and interesting professional career has been that of this representative physician and surgeon of Fairmont, Marion County. Doctor Delfino was born at Villa San Giovanni, Province of Reggio, Calabria, Italy, on the 6th of May, 1875, and is a son of John Vincente and Maria Antonia (Filiccano) Delfino, the former of whom was but thirty-three years of age at the time of his death and the latter lost her life in the Italian earthquake of 1908. As a boy Doctor Delfino attended the schools of his native town, and after proper education along academic lines he entered Messina University, in the medical department of which excellent Italian institution he completed the full course and was graduated in 1903, after having been a student in this university for six years. He initiated practice in his native town, but in the latter part of 1907 he took the post of ship physician and surgeon on a trans-Atlantic passenger steamship plying between Naples and New York City. In 1908 he retired from this position and, after passing a successful examination before the Vermont State Board of Medical Registration, he established himself in practice at Burke, that state. He became a member of the local medical society and also of the American Medical Association at the time of his residence in Burke. Following the disastrous Italian earthquakes of 1908, the Doctor made a visit to his native land, and upon returning to the United States he engaged in practice at Canton, Ohio. Later he established himself in practice at Columbus, the capital city of that state, where he remained until 1919, when he came to Fairmont, West Virginia, where he has built up a substantial practice and where he has gained secure civic and professional prestige. While a resident of Columbus, in 1918, the governor of Ohio sent Doctor Delfino on a mission to Italy, in connection with World war issues, and he spent several months in Europe.

In 1912 was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Delfino to Miss Minnie Richner, of Canton, Ohio, and they have three children: Mary Ellen, John Vincent, and Cosimo.

SAMUEL GEORGE. For half a century the late Samuel George was perhaps the central figure in point of extent of enterprise in the commercial life of the historic old town of Wellsburg. He was a manufacturer, banker, merchant, and was serving in the State Senate when he died.

Wellsburg's most notable industries are perhaps the S. George Paper Company and the George-Sherrard Paper Company, both of which derived their original impulse from the late Mr. George. About 1873 he and two other associates converted an old cotton mill into a paper mill for the manufacture of paper bags. With various changes this business was continued until 1892, when the S. George Company was incorporated. The chief output in former years was paper for flour bags, and about 1882 the line was broadened to shipping bags of different kinds, and the output now is five times what it was a few years ago. The president of the S. George Company is George Bowers.

The George-Sherrard Company was incorporated in 1906 and has a plant about double the capacity of the older institution. The plant represents an investment of about four hundred thousand dollars, has modern equipment, and produces a similar line of paper products, including flour bags, cement plaster and lime bags. Both plants use similar material. The paper fabric for such bags is re-enforced by manila thread, and about 3,000 tons of this material is required annually in the manufacture. Much of it is secured from worn out rope and about twenty-five per cent imported direct. These paper companies used natural gas as fuel for about a quarter of a century, but the fuel is now coal, mined in the near vicinity of Wellsburg. The S. George Company employs about sixty men, and the George-Sherrard Paper Company from 90 to 100.

The late Samuel George was born on a farm in Brooke County in 1827, his parents having been substantial farming people and early settlers of Brooke County. Samuel George had only limited school advantages of his time, but possessed a natural intelligence, an industry and self reliance that made him a notable character in his environment. When he was about sixteen years of age he engaged in the Ohio River flatboat trade, making a number of trips south to New Orleans and transporting commodities to the southern market and returning with loads of sugar and other supplies. Mr. George was a resident and active business man of Wellsburg from 1852. He was identified with the pork packing industry in the later years of that industry. He was a wholesale grocery merchant during the Civil war, and at one time he was the chief wool buyer for all this section. Prior to engaging in the business of paper manufacture he opened a private bank known as the Wellsburg Bank or S. George Bank, and when it was reorganized in 1903 and incorporated as the Wellsburg Bank & Trust Company he was elected its first president. He was chosen member of the State Senate in 1900, and was a member of the Senate when he died on August 6, 1903, at the age of seventy-six. Samuel George also built and operated the electric railway at Wellsburg, and he employed his power and influence as a financier in many ways for the substantial development and progress of the community. He was a very active member of the Presbyterian Church.

His second wife was Eliza Kimberland, of Brooke County. She was the mother of seven daughters and two sons. Of these five daughters and the two sons are still living. The sons are Samuel George, Jr., president of the Wellsburg Bank & Trust Company and also general manager of the George-Sherrard Paper Company. The other son is T. H. George, secretary and treasurer of the S. George Company.

BENJAMIN H. POWERS, laundry owner and operator, has through successive changes developed the largest business of this kind in Huntington. He is one of the younger business men of the city, and before taking up the laundry industry had an extensive training and experience with the Huntington branch of Armour & Company.

Mr. Powers was born in Wayne County, West Virginia, December 6, 1888. His father, Harvey S. Powers, was born in Scott County, Kentucky, in 1856, was reared there, and as a young man moved to the southern part of West Virginia, where he married and during his active career engaged in farming and the business of cattle buyer. Soon after his marriage he moved to Wayne County and in 1898 to Cabell County. He retired from the farm in 1916, and lived in Huntington until his death in January, 1918. He was a republican and an active member of the Methodist Church. His wife, America Watts, was born in West Virginia in 1860, and is living at Huntington. Their children were: Era, wife of George H. Gibson, in the laundry business at Huntington; Ira, in the real estate business at Huntington; Utoka, who died in Wayne County in 1909, at the age of twenty-four, wife of George Chatterton, a farmer in that county; Benjamin H.; Walker, in the laundry business at Huntington; Ada, wife of Perley E. Beckner, who has extensive farming interests near Beldin, Nebraska; Nettie, wife of Harry Leap, a dairy farmer near Huntington; and Nannie, wife of Floyd Crouse, a druggist at Huntington.

Benjamin H. Powers during his boyhood attended the rural schools of Wayne and Cabell counties. He spent years as a student in Marshall College at Huntington, left college in 1906. During the next four years he employed as houseman in the local plant of Armour Company, and then for five years was salesman for corporation.

Mr. Powers entered the laundry business in 1915, when he established the Model Laundry at Twentieth Street, Third Avenue. He continued this five years. In 1916 he bought the Tri-State Laundry at Sixteenth Street and Tenth Avenue, and changed it to the Powers Brothers Laundry, and his brother Ira being his partner until 1920, when Benjamin acquired the sole ownership. In 1921 he changed the name of the old Tri-State Laundry to the Peerless Laundry, in that year he sold the Model Laundry and bought Ideal Laundry on Thirteenth Street, between Second and Third avenues and changed the name of this to the Powers Brothers Laundry. He therefore is in active charge of operations of two laundry establishments, and in connection with the Peerless he established and operates the Huntington Wet Wash Laundry. He has therefore developed facilities sufficient to handle a large part of the laundry business originating in Huntington and surrounding communities.

Mr. Powers is also a stockholder of the National Rubber Company of Pottstown, Pennsylvania, and in the DuPont Automobile and Motors Company of Indianapolis in the Jay Pepsatone Company of Huntington. He is a republican, a member of the United Brethren Church, is affiliated with Reese Camp No. 66, Woodmen of the World, Huntington Lodge No. 33, Knights of Pythias, the Huntington Chamber of Commerce. As a successful young business man he has acquired considerable real estate in Huntington, including his home in the restricted section of High Lawn on Latolue Avenue.

In September, 1911, at Catlettsburg, Kentucky, Powers married Miss Lena Bevan, daughter of Miles M. Viroka (Johnson) Bevan, the latter a resident of 2915 Fifth Avenue in Huntington. The father, who died at Huntington, February 8, 1921, was at that time deputy sheriff of Cabell County. Mrs. Powers had a good education, being a graduate of the Huntington High School and also attended the West Virginia Business College at Huntington.

LEON SHACKELFORD. The various branches of business life give an opportunity to certain individuals to express their abilities in a certain and practical manner, and directly afford channels along which the development of a community may flow in a natural manner. To no one else or person is the present prosperity of Huntington due, to the combination of all taken as a whole. The county seat of Cabell County is known as the home of some of the most important industries and interests, which have gradually developed, sometimes from small beginnings, and are solidly founded upon the bed rock of honorable purpose and upright dealing. One of these thoroughly reliable houses is that operating as the Huntington Drug Company, the leading wholesale drug company between Cincinnati, Ohio, and Wheeling, West Virginia, the treasurer of which is Leon Shackelford.

Mr. Shackelford was born November 18, 1892, at Huntington, West Virginia, a son of John and Blanche (Wooten) Shackelford. His father was born December 12, 1859, at Charlottesville, Virginia, and at the age of fourteen years came to West Virginia with a railroad construction gang as a water boy, and thus assisted in building the Norfolk & Western Railway. Settling at Huntington during the very early days of the city's history, he developed a business as a stone contractor and did the masonry work on nearly every railroad station between Huntington and Parkersburg. Subsequently he engaged in mercantile pursuits until 1901, when he became a merchandise broker and continued in that line until his death, while on a visit to Battle Creek, Michigan, March 29, 1921. He was a republican in politics. A very devout Christian, he was an active member and generous supporter of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church of Huntington. Fraternally he was affiliated ith Huntington Lodge No. 53, A. F. and A. M.; Huntington Chapter No. 6, R. A. M., and Huntington Commandery No. 9, K. T., in all of which he had numerous friends. Mr. Shackelford married Miss Blanche Woody, who was born November 15, 1863, in West Virginia. She survives her husband and is a resident of Huntington. They were the parents of two children: Leon, of this notice; and John, Jr., who died at the age of three years.

Leon Shackelford attended the public schools of Huntington and then entered Marshall College, from which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1910. At that time he secured employment as collection clerk with the first National Bank of Huntington, and through industry, ability and ability worked his way up to the post of first clerk. He resigned from that position in 1917 to accept that of treasurer of the Huntington Drug Company, an office which he has since occupied and in which he has been largely instrumental in securing the prosperity that the business has enjoyed. This, the leading wholesale drug business in the territory between Wheeling, West Virginia, and Cincinnati, Ohio, is incorporated under the laws of the state of West Virginia, its officers being W. S. Vinson, resident; W. C. Price, vice president; Leon Shackelford, treasurer; and James Murphy, secretary. The jobbing house and offices of the concern are situated at the corner of Seventh Avenue and Seventh Street.

Mr. Shackelford is vice president of the Huntington Association of Credit Men and a member of the Kiwanis Club, and takes a great interest in civic affairs and the business prosperity of the city. He also holds membership in the Bryan County Club, and is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, belonging to Huntington Lodge No. 53, A. F. and A. M., and West Virginia Consistory No. 1, A. A. S. E. M., of Wheeling, and is also a Noble of Beni-Kedem temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Charleston. He owns a modern residence at No. 630 Sixth Street, a comfortable home, and is administrator of his father's estate, consisting principally of extensive real estate holdings at Huntington. In May, 1918, Mr. Shackelford enlisted in the United States Army and was sent to the Richmond Schools Training Detachment, where he remained two months, being then sent to Camp Taylor, Louisville, where he was commissioned a second lieutenant. He was mustered out December 18, 1918, at still holds his commission as a second lieutenant in the field Artillery Reserve Corps.

On May 28, 1918, Mr. Shackelford was united in marriage at Lynchburg, Virginia, with Miss Ruth Daniel, daughter of Mr. Louis A. and Mattie (McCue) Daniel, residents of Huntington, where Colonel Daniel is proprietor of a hotel. Mrs. Shackelford is a graduate of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, Lynchburg, Virginia, and a woman of numerous accomplishments and graces.

JOHN W. HOUGHTON. Among the business men well known to the citizens of Huntington, one who is identified with an important industry of the city is John W. Houghton, superintendent of the Steel Products Company. Mr. Houghton comes of an old and honored New England family, and was born at Boston, Massachusetts, June 30, 1878. His father was John W. Houghton, and his mother was the daughter of Marinus and Rose (Janse) Houghton, and a grandson of Henry Houghton.

Marinus Houghton was born in 1826, in Massachusetts, and spent the greater part of his life at Boston, where he followed the time-honored trade of rope-making. He died in Boston in 1915, in the faith of the Congregational Church, of which he had been an active and generous supporter all his life. In politics he was a republican. Mr. Houghton married Miss Rose Janse, who was born at Boston in 1845, and who still makes that city her home.

They were the parents of seven children: Josie, who married Pliny M. Brackett, who is engaged in the wholesale shoe findings business at Boston, Massachusetts; William, who is identified with the Boston Elevated Company, of Boston; Henry, who is retail manager for the G. Shimer Company, music publishers of Boston, Massachusetts; Charles, who is store manager for the Cloverdale Creamery Company of Malden, Massachusetts; Katie, who married Frank S. Atwood, of Boston, an employee of the United States Government at the Watertown Arsenal; John W., of this review; and Annie, who married Herman T. Rogers, an employee of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad at Quincy, Massachusetts.

John W. Houghton was educated in the public schools of Boston, where he was graduated from high school in 1895, following which he served his time as an apprenticed machinist at Boston for four years. When he had mastered his trade he was engaged therein at Boston until 1905, when, feeling the need of further training, he began a course of two years at the Mechanical Drawing School of Boston. Thus prepared, he began experimental work on shoe machinery, and continued to be thus occupied for a period of seven years, during which time he was located at different times at Boston, Quincy and Beverly, Massachusetts, as an employee of the United Shoe Machinery Company. In 1911 Mr. Houghton accepted a position with the Victor Talking Machine Company, in the capacity of "trouble man," and worked at Camden, New Jersey, for one year, then transferring his services to the Remington Arms Company of Eddystone, Pennsylvania, also as "trouble man," and continued this connection for two years. He then took a position with the United States Government as district gauge supervisor for the Pittsburgh District, remaining in that capacity until the close of the World war, and in January, 1919, became assistant to the secretary of the Claims Board, Pittsburgh District, a post which he retained until November of that year. Mr. Houghton then accepted the position of superintendent of the Steel Products Company of Huntington, which he holds at this time. The product of this company is a mine car coal-loading machine, used in loading the cars in the mines. The offices of Mr. Houghton are situated at Twentieth Street and Second Avenue, Huntington. He is a democrat in politics and a member of the Baptist Church. Fraternally he is a thirty-second degree Mason, belonging to Rural Lodge, A. F. and A. M., of Quincy, Massachusetts; and Georgian Consistory of Pittsburgh; and also holds membership in Syria Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Pittsburgh; John Hancock Lodge No. 224, I. O. O. F., of Quincy, Massachusetts; and Cabell Encampment No. 25, I. O. O. F., of Huntington. He is likewise a member of the Guyan Country Club of Huntington and the Huntington Chamber of Commerce. He owns a comfortable, modern home at 625 Thirteenth Street.

In 1906, at Boston, Massachusetts, Mr. Houghton was united in marriage with Miss Jeannette Keddy, a graduate of the Mahone Bay Academy, and a daughter of Esrom and Elenor (Zwicker) Keddy, residents of Mahone Bay, Nova Scotia, where Mr. Keddy is a retired lumber dealer. Mr. and Mrs. Houghton have one child, Mildred G., born June 5, 1908.

CAPT. THOMAS WEST PEYTON. Four generations of the Peyton family have been represented by a Capt. Thomas West Peyton. To the people of Huntington, Barboursville and the surrounding vicinity the name is inseparably connected with military achievements, for a Peyton has borne a share of the fighting in the Revolutionary war, the War of 1812, the Civil war and the great World war. The present representative of the name is one of the leading younger attorneys of the Huntington bar, and at the present time occupies the office of mayor of Barboursville.

Captain Peyton was born August 13, 1891, at Huntington West Virginia, and is a son of Capt. Thomas West and Mary T. (Hovey) Peyton. The family originated in England, and the immigrant to America was the great-great-great-great-grandfather of the present Captain Peyton. Henry Peyton II, a direct descendant of Sir Edward Peyton of Isleham, England. Henry Peyton II was born at London, England, in 1630, and immigrated to America in young manhood, settling in the Virginia colony, in what is now Westmoreland County, where his death occurred in 1659. His grandson, Valentine Peyton, the great-great-great-grandfather of Captain Peyton, served as an officer during the Revolutionary war. The great-grandfather of Captain Peyton, the first Capt. Thomas West Peyton, was born at Aquia, Virginia. He was a captain in the First Regiment, District of Columbia Militia, during the War of 1812, and served as brigade quartermaster of Young's Second Brigade. Later he was made United States consul to Cuba, and while on his way to the United States for instructions died on shipboard and was buried at sea.

The grandfather of Captain Peyton, the second Capt. Thomas West Peyton, was born on the Island of Cuba, May 13, 1818. As a young man he made his home at Alexandria, Virginia, but later removed to New Orleans, Louisiana, where he was a customs house official up to the outbreak of the Civil war, when he became one of the organizers of the Washington Artillery and later was made captain of Company C, Continental Guards of Louisiana. This was mustered into the service as the Eleventh Regiment, Louisiana Volunteer Infantry, and he was made captain of Company C. He met a soldier's death on the battlefield of Murfreesboro in January, 1863. Captain West married Miss Sarah O'Dowd, who was born in Ireland, February 22, 1834, and died at Huntington, West Virginia.

The father of Captain Peyton, Capt. Thomas West Peyton III, was born August 10, 1860, at Barboursville, Virginia (now West Virginia), and died at Huntington, June 10, 1912. He was reared at New Orleans until he was thirteen years of age, at which time his widowed mother brought her family to Huntington, and in 1873 Captain West entered Marshall College here, from which he was graduated at the age of sixteen years. Following this he studied law in the office of Eustace Gibson, a very prominent attorney of Huntington, and after his admission to the bar made rapid strides in his calling and at his death was accounted one of the leaders of his profession. A democrat in politics, he was called upon frequently to serve in offices of prominence and high responsibility, and was clerk of the Circuit Court of Cabell County for one term of six years, from 1885 to 1891. Captain Peyton was a member and active supporter of the Johnson Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church, South. As a fraternalist he belonged to Minerva Lodge No. 13, A. F. and A. M., of Barboursville, of which he was a past master; Huntington Chapter No. 6, R. A. M., of which he was a past high priest; Huntington Commandery No. 9, K. T., of which he was a past eminent commander; Beni-Kedem Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Charleston; and Huntington Lodge No. 313, B. P. O. E. He was one of the organizers of the Huntington Light Infantry, which later was reorganized as a unit of the West Virginia National Guard, and rose from the ranks to be captain of Company I, Second Infantry, West Virginia National Guard. Captain Peyton married Miss Mary T. Hovey, who was born at Ravenswood, West Virginia, and died at Huntington, January 3, 1902. They became the parents of the following children: Capt. Thomas West; Capt. Albert H., a captain in the Ninth Infantry, U. S. Army, a veteran of the World war, who served in France for one year as a captain in the Fifty-first Infantry, Sixth Division, was in the Vosges defensive sector and took part in the Argonne drive, and since his return has been stationed at Camp Travis, Texas; John Thornburg, a veteran of the World war, who served in France six months and became a sergeant-major with Headquarters Company, One Hundred and Fiftieth Infantry, Thirty-eighth Division, and is now employed in the plant of Kingan & Company at Tampa, Florida; and Robert Edwin, who is completing his training for the career of a physician and surgeon in the medical school of Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Maryland.

Capt. Thomas West Peyton IV received his early education in the public schools of Huntington, following which he attended Morris-Harvey College, Barboursville, until his senior year, and then spent one year in the University of West Virginia. For two years he studied law in the office of his father, and in October, 1912, was appointed deputy County Court clerk of Cabell County, in which capacity he acted until December 31, 1914. He was then appointed deputy Circuit Court clerk of Cabell County and deputy Criminal Court clerk of the same county, and served in these positions from January 1, 1915, until December 15th of the same year. In the meantime, April 6, 1915, he had been licensed to practice law by the Supreme Court of West Virginia, and entered upon the labors and duties of his profession January 1, 1916. He has gained a prominent place in the ranks of his calling, and on January 1, 1920, became a member of the well-known law combination of Warth, McCullough & Peyton, which is justly considered as one of the strong and capable associations of legal talent at Huntington. The offices of this concern are situated in the Ohio Valley Bank Building.

Captain Peyton is a democrat and has shown some interest in public and political affairs, particularly in his home community of Barboursville, of which he was elected mayor January 5, 1922, taking office February 1, 1922. He is a dutiful member of the Barboursville Methodist Episcopal Church, South, where he is serving as chairman of the board of stewards. Fraternally he holds membership in Huntington Lodge No. 313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and his professional connection is with the Cabell County Bar Association.

Captain Peyton enlisted in the First Officers' Training Camp, at Fort Benjamin Harrison, in May, 1917, and on August 15th of that year received his commission as a first lieutenant. He was then sent to Camp Sherman, Ohio, and assigned to the One Hundred and Fifty-eighth Depot Brigade, and while there was assistant to the camp adjutant, instructor Fourth Officers' Training School, and judge advocate of the General Court Martial. While serving in the capacity of instructor of the Fourth Officers' Training School he was promoted captain, in July, 1918, and was assigned to command of Company A, Eight Hundred and Two Pioneer Infantry, with which he left for overseas August 30, 1918. He entered the Argonne offensive September 30, 1918, and continued in this general movement until the armistice was signed. He received his honorable discharge August 1, 1919, at Camp Sherman, and immediately returned to his practice at Huntington. Captain Peyton is the owner of a modern residence on Water Street, Barboursville.

On July 24, 1912, Captain Peyton was united in marriage at Cadetsburg, Kentucky, with Miss Gay Vaughan, a daughter of Arthur L. and Pauline (Pippetoe) Vaughan, who reside at Kessler's Cross Lanes, Nicholas County, West Virginia, where Mr. Vaughan is a dealer in coal and timber lands. Mrs. Peyton was graduated from normal school and taught in the Nicholas County schools prior to her marriage. She is likewise a graduate nurse of the Huntington General Hospital, and a veteran of the World war, in which she served as a Red Cross nurse. Captain and Mrs. Peyton have no children.

FRANK A. CHAPMAN, a Wellsburg lawyer whose services have a wide and important scope in the development of the industrial and commercial affairs of this section, represents one of the first and most prominent families identified with pioneering enterprise in Hancock County, West Virginia.

He is a descendant of Capt. George Chapman, who served as a captain under General Washington at Valley Forge. The Wellsburg lawyer still has his old sword. Another relic of this Revolutionary ancestor is a copper button, silver plated, and there is a similar button preserved at Mount Vernon. This button was part of a uniform used in the Revolution, and on the outer margin are engraved the initials of the thirteen colonies, while at the center are two letters, G. W., standing for George Washington, and in a circle around this are the words "Long live the President." Capt. George Chapman moved from Maryland, and there is official record of his purchase on October 15, 1793, of 814 acres bordering the Ohio River, including the site of the later town of New Cumberland in Hancock County. Captain Chapman died at New Cumberland in 1812, and his will, dated that year, disposed of 1,250 acres among his seven children. Three-quarters of a mile from the village of New Cumberland he built a fort. He was one of the prominent men of the time, and part of his land he developed as a deer park. His old home, however, was continued as a residence for several generations, and Frank A. Chapman of Wellsburg remembers when it was so used. Capt. George Chapman was laid to rest in the family plot on the old farm.

Of his seven children Thomas Chapman spent his life

H. A. Chapman,

the old homestead and died in 1845. His son, Capt. H. Chapman, was an officer in the Civil war. The oldest son of Thomas was Alfred, who succeeded to the old homestead and spent his life there. Alfred Chapman was a pioneer in developing the coal resources of that section, opening one of the first mines and constructed a tramway from the mine opening to the bank of the Ohio River, so the boats could be loaded direct. He shipped some of the first coal sent down the Ohio River. He was also a deer wood grower, introducing some of the high-grade hickory sheep to this section. His interests as a breeder extended to fine horses and cattle. Alfred Chapman lived at the old homestead in 1889, at the age of seventy, having been born in 1814. He married Sarah Mary Wiley, who was born in Ohio in 1822, and died in 1916, at the venerable age of ninety-four and with well preserved faculties to the end. Both were early members of the Church of the Disciples, Alfred Chapman having joined that denomination under its founder, Alexander Campbell, and was often entertained at the Chapman home. Alfred Chapman and wife reared four children: Thomas Stanton, John Benton, who owns a portion of the old home place and is living at Toronto, Jefferson County, Ohio, at the age of seventy-three; Ellen Barberly, deceased; and William Jackson, who still lives at New Cumberland and owned the old homestead until 1920, it having been in the family continuously for 127 years.

Thomas Stanton Chapman was born in 1845 and died in 1905. In 1871 he moved to Halliday's Cove in Hancock County and there developed one of the finest fruit farms in the state. His chief service was as a horticulturist, and he was never active in politics. He finally retired to Wellsburg, where he died. He married Christina Foreman, a neighbor girl, daughter of Robert Parkes and Rose Ann (Hall) Foreman. She is living at the age of seventy-two, and takes pride in doing her own housework and in finding faithfully to her duties as a member of the Church of the Disciples. Her two children were: F. A. and Minnie Viola. The latter was the wife of George M. Stafford, and she was killed in an elevator accident at Newburgh in October, 1920.

Frank Alfred Chapman was born June 3, 1869, at the Chapman farm, and grew up on his father's fruit farm. He attended the common schools, graduated from Bethany College in 1894, receiving the degrees Bachelor of Science and Master of Arts, and in 1898 received his law degree from West Virginia University. Mr. Chapman has been in practice at Wellsburg since June, 1898, and has looked after a large volume of practice alone. His work has been almost entirely in civil and corporation practice. He has acted as a railway attorney, has organized three banks, is attorney for the Pittsburgh and West Virginia Railroad Company, was one of the original directors of the Bethany & Huntington Traction Company, and is attorney for several other large industries, having handled the land transactions for the Follansbee Brothers and has since acted as attorney for the Follansbee Iron and Steel industries. Mr. Chapman has always had high ideals of his responsibilities as a lawyer. He has advised the courts as the last resort, at many times has succeeded in adjusting differences without resort to expensive litigation. While he has attended a number of democratic state conventions, he has been in politics without personal aspirations. He is one of the few good roads advocates in this section of the state. Mr. Chapman is a special authority on land titles and has done a great deal of abstract work, and this has given him a knowledge of local history involved in the early land grants. His investigations show that the first lands were entered between Bethany and West Liberty about 1772. He also tells an interesting landmark, explaining the name of Baltimore & Ohio Station known as the Bored Tree Station. This is very close to the southwest corner of Pennsylvania, where a hole was bored in a big tree as one of the landmarks made by the surveyors when laying out the Mason Dixon line. Mr. Chapman has never married. He has chairs in the Elks, Knights of Pythias, Modern Woodmen of America and is also a member of the Ancient Order United Workmen. In 1903 he organized the Wellsburg Bank & Trust Company, and has been its vice president ever since. Mr. Chapman and others realized the need of a banking institution adequate to the commercial needs of Wellsburg, and he won over the old private banker, the late Samuel George, to his ideas, resulting in the reorganization of the old George Bank into the Wellsburg Bank & Trust Company.

WILLIAM SAYRES BUTLER, assistant to the general superintendent of the Western General Division of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, has been identified with this line for a period of twenty-six years, during which time he has worked his way upward steadily from the position of machinist to one of the most important and responsible posts of the road. Mr. Butler was born at Yorkshire, England, October 5, 1874, a son of Frank and Mary (Sayres) Butler.

Frank Butler, who is now a resident of Middlesboro, Kentucky, is also a native of Yorkshire, England, born in 1853. He was reared and married at his native place, where he learned the trade of furnaceman, and in 1878 came to the United States and located at Chicago, where he was employed at his vocation. In 1882 he removed to Lowmoor, Alleghany County, Virginia, where he became superintendent of furnaces for the Lowmoor Iron Company, and in 1895 went to Middlesboro, Kentucky, where he has continued to follow his trade. He is a republican in his political allegiance, and as a fraternalist is identified with the Knights of Pythias. Mr. Butler married Miss Mary Sayres, who was born at London, England, in 1853, their marriage occurring in 1872. They became the parents of four children: William Sayres; Alice, who married Gatewood L. Schumaker, an insurance man of Covington, Virginia; Frank R., general foreman for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad at Lexington, Kentucky; and Edward Walter, paymaster for a large contracting concern at Detroit, Michigan.

William S. Butler attended the public schools of Roanoke, Virginia, and after graduating from the high school of that city in 1890 entered the Virginia Polytechnic Institute at Blacksburg, Virginia, and completed a mechanical engineering course in 1892, receiving the degree of Mechanical Engineer. For three years he followed the trade of machinist with the Lowmoor Iron Company at Lowmoor, Virginia, and then removed to Clifton Forge, that state, where he secured employment with the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company, remaining two years. He severed his connection with that road to return to Roanoke, Virginia, where for 2½ years he was identified with the Norfolk & Western Railroad Company, following which he was variously situated at different places in the South, with several railroad systems, until 1899. In April of that year he returned to the Chesapeake & Ohio as a machinist at Handley, West Virginia, and at the end of 2½ years was promoted to be roundhouse foreman. A little later he gained further promotion, to the post of general foreman. In 1904 he was made assistant master mechanic at Lexington, Kentucky, with the same company, and in 1905 was transferred to Hinton, West Virginia, in the same capacity. In 1909 he came to the Huntington shops as assistant master mechanic, having jurisdiction over all departments of the large shops at this place, and in the following year was appointed master mechanic, his jurisdiction being extended to include the Huntington, Logan, Big Sandy and Ashland divisions of the Chesapeake & Ohio system. In 1920 he was made assistant to the general superintendent, Western General Division, a post which he holds at this time. Mr. Butler's offices are situated in the passenger depot, second floor, on Seventh Avenue, between Ninth and Tenth streets. While Mr. Butler's chief interest is centered in the work of the railroad, he has other connections, and is secretary and treasurer of the Huntington Investment Company. In his political affiliation he recognizes no party lines, taking an independent stand and voting for the man rather than the organization. He is a member of Hinton Lodge No. 62, A. F. and A. M., and a life member of Hinton Lodge No. 821, B. P. O. E. and belongs to the American Railway Association.

In January, 1895, at Rich Patch, Virginia, Mr. Butler married Miss Lillie W. Stull, daughter of Cornelius T. and Nannie (McCoy) Stull, the latter a resident of Rich Patch, where Mr. Stull, now deceased, was formerly a prosperous farmer. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Butler: Stanley Cornelius; Maude, the wife of Record Paul Trumbo, car inspector for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad in the Huntington shops; Bessie, the wife of William Diehl, head bookkeeper for the Huntington National Bank; and William Stull, residing with his parents, a senior in the Huntington High School. The Butler home is a comfortable, modern residence, situated at No. 1425 Boulevard Avenue, in addition to which Mr. Butler is the owner of other real estate at Huntington and a farm of 715 acres at Rich Patch, Virginia.

Stanley Cornelius Butler, son of William S. Butler, is a graduate of the West Virginia University, where he specialized in agriculture. During the World war he enlisted in the United States Army, and left the training camp with the rank of second lieutenant, going overseas with the Machine Gun Company of the Three Hundred and Thirtieth Infantry, Seventy-ninth Division. He was promoted to first lieutenant while in France, where he spent eighteen months in active service, and during this time took part in a number of battles, including the major engagement in the Argonne sector, where he was seriously wounded. Upon his return to the United States and subsequent honorable discharge from the army he accepted a position as instructor and director of agriculture and athletics at the district high school at Kingwood, West Virginia, where he now makes his home.

JOE WITCHER DINGESS. One of the younger members of the Cabell County bar, who has just entered upon the practice of his profession at Huntington, with every promise of attaining a leading place therein in the future, is Joe Witcher Dingess. He was born at Hamlin, Lincoln County, West Virginia, March 8, 1900, and is a son of Jerry Witcher and Belle (Hainor) Dingess.

Jerry Witcher Dingess, now a resident of Huntington, was born April 8, 1879, near Hamlin, West Virginia, and was reared on a farm in Lincoln County, where he received a rural school education. He was married in that county, and as a young man formed a connection with the American Book Company, working for that concern's interests in Lincoln County until 1901 and then removing to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. In 1905 he located at Huntington, being still identified with the same company, but in 1908 severed his connection therewith to become district manager, covering the southeastern states, for the Columbus Heating and Ventilating Company of Columbus, Ohio, a position which he retained until 1912. In that year he was appointed postmaster of Huntington, during President Wilson's administration, but resigned his office in 1917 to accept a position with the John C. Winston Book Company of Philadelphia. He is in the educational department of this company, and while his home remains at Huntington, his territory is the entire United States. As a democrat Mr. Dingess has been prominent in the ranks of his party, and in the past has been candidate for mayor of Huntington and for state senator, but met with defeat for the offices because of his residence in a strong republican district. He is a devout member of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church of Huntington. Mr. Dingess assisted in the organization of the old Westmoreland County Club, of which he was a charter member. In Lincoln County he was united in marriage with Miss Belle Hainor, who was born September 28, 1876, near St. Albans, West Virginia, and Joe Witcher is their only child.

The early education of Joe Witcher Dingess was secured in the public schools of Huntington, and after his graduation from high school in 1917, he attended

Washington and Lee University, taking a full course in the law department. As a member of the class of 1918 he was given the degree of Bachelor of Laws. While attending college Mr. Dingess was admitted to membership in the Sigma Nu and Phi Delta Phi college fraternities. On September 27, 1921, he entered upon the practice of his profession at Huntington, where he maintains well-appointed offices in the Ohio Valley Building. His professional career thus far has been a limited one, but he has already attracted a good clientele and is regarded as one of the rising young attorneys of the city.

Politically Mr. Dingess is a democrat, and his religious connection is with the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church. He belongs to the Guyan Country Club and the Gyp Club. During the World war he held the rank of corporal in the Students Army Training Corps at Washington and Lee University. He is not married.

WILL DELAFIELD HEREFORD, M. D. For seven years Will Delafield Hereford has figured prominently in the medical profession of Huntington, and has maintained throughout his career a high standard of ethics and honorable principles. A man of skill and capability, an authority on the diseases of children, he has risen in his profession and has deservedly won the position he holds among his fellow physicians.

Doctor Hereford was born May 21, 1880, at Saint Albans, Kanawha County, West Virginia, a son of Cassius Dade and Anna May (Roth) Hereford. He traces his ancestry directly back to Peter Hereford, of England, born in 1300, and belongs to the branch of this old and honored family which was transplanted from English soil to American during Colonial times, the immigrants settling in Virginia. Sydenham Hereford, the grandfather of Doctor Hereford, was born in King William County, Virginia, in 1809, and as a young man moved to a pioneer into Putnam County, West Virginia, where he was a distinguished physician and surgeon for many years. He died at Red House, Putnam County, in 1855, full of years and honors. Sydenham Hereford married Miss Poweree, of Maryland, who died at Red House, West Virginia, in 1862, aged thirty-five years.

Cassius Dade Hereford was born November 14, 1849, in Putnam County, where he was reared and educated, and as a young man went to Marshall, Missouri, where he engaged in mercantile business. In 1872 he returned to West Virginia and settled at Saint Albans, where he engaged in general merchandising and eventually became the leading merchant of the place, with a trade that extended all over the countryside. As he grew in prominence in business circles he extended the scope of his operations and added to his interests, and was one of the organizers of the Bank of Saint Albans, of which he was president until his death in November, 1918. A democrat in politics, he was prominent in civic affairs and served as mayor of Saint Albans for one term, in addition to filling other public trusts. As a churchman he was a strong supporter of the Baptist faith and a liberal contributor to the movements of that denomination. Fraternally he was affiliated with the Masons, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Improved Order of Red Men, and in the last named was state keeper of the wampum of the Grand Lodge of West Virginia for several years. He was a man of the strictest integrity and enjoyed the confidence of all with whom he came into contact. Mr. Hereford married Miss Anna May Roth, who was born at Corder, Lafayette County, Missouri, and survives him as a resident of Saint Albans. They became the parents of five children: Harry Kendall, who died at the age of six months; Will Delafield, of this review; Cassius Dade, Jr., who died at the age of eight months; Walter Donaldson, a graduate of Washington and Lee University, degree of Bachelor of Arts, and of the West Virginia University law department, degree of Bachelor of Law, and is now a prominent attorney of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; and Herbert Roth, of Saint Albans, is connected with the United States Ordnance Plant at South Charleston.

Berbert Roth Hereford, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Hereford, was born in St. Albans, West Virginia, April 28, 1892. He attended the Hoge Military Academy, University of Oklahoma, Washington and Lee University and Smithfield Business College. He enlisted in the Second West Virginia (Infantry) Regiment at Charleston, West Virginia, May 4, 1917, as a musician in the Regimental Band. On September 25, 1917, the regiment left Kanawha City, West Virginia, where they were in camp, for Camp Shelby, Hattiesburg, Mississippi. The regiment was stationed there until ordered for Camp Merritt, New York, September 25, 1918. They embarked on the English ship Demosthenes at Montreal, Canada, October 3, 1918, landed in Liverpool, England, October 15, following, from Liverpool went to Winchester, South Hampton, crossed the English Channel and landed at La Havre, France. From there the regiment was sent to Le Mans, France, where it was split, sending the band to Base Hospital at Nevers, France, and ordered from there to Gondrecourt, France, for medical examination, detached there from the Second West Virginia Band and attached to the Sixth U. S. Engineers' Band in the Third Division, stationed at Otterding, Germany, arrived with this regiment December 25, 1918, was stationed there until receiving sailing orders for the States, August 9, 1919. Mr. Hereford was shipped back as casual on the U. S. S. President Grant from Brest, France, and discharged at Camp Dix, New Jersey, August 26, 1919.

He married Miss Ruby Barker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. I. L. Barker, February 11, 1922. Mr. Hereford is now employed at the U. S. Naval Ordnance Plant, at South Charleston, West Virginia.

After attending the graded school at Saint Albans and a high school at Charleston, Will Delafield Hereford enrolled as a student at West Virginia University, where he passed through the junior year. He then entered the Baltimore Medical College, from which he was graduated with the class of 1903, receiving the degree of Doctor of Medicine. While at college he was admitted to the Phi Sigma Kappa and Theta Nu Epsilon Greek letter college fraternities. Later he took post-graduate work for one year at the Baltimore Medical College, and in 1904 entered upon the practice of his profession at Saint Albans, remaining there until 1910. He then changed his line of operations to Macon, Georgia, where he remained until 1915, and in that year went to New York City, where he did special post-graduate work in the cases of children for about a year. In 1915 he came to Huntington, where he has since followed his profession, paying particular attention to his specialty, in which he has gained something more than a local reputation. He has won recognition as a well-trained and able member of his profession, and is thoroughly abreast of all progress made in medical science. His offices are located at 1008-9 First National Bank Building, Huntington, where he maintains a large medical library and all of the latest appliances known to his profession. Doctor Hereford is a member of the Cabell County Medical Society, the West Virginia State Medical Society, the American Medical Association and the American Congress on Internal Medicine. In his political allegiance he supports the principles and candidates of the democratic party, but has never sought preferment at the hands of his party or his fellow-citizens. His religious faith is that of the Episcopal Church. Fraternally Doctor Hereford is identified with Washington Lodge No. 58, A. F. and A. M., of Saint Albans; Tyrian Chapter No. 1, B. A. M., of Charleston; Huntington Commandery No. 1, E. K. T.; and Beni-Kedem Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Charleston. He also belongs to the Guyan Country Club of Huntington.

In 1905, at Scott Depot, West Virginia, Doctor Hereford married Miss Sallie Handley, daughter of Fred G. Handley (Morris) Handley, who reside at Scott Depot, where Mr. Handley is a retired agriculturist. Doctor and Mrs. Hereford have no children.

BENJAMIN BRUCE BURNS. The wide-awake operator in lumber in almost any section is able to accomplish results under normal business conditions, and that many have availed themselves of advantageous circumstances the prosperity of a number of large concerns evidences. It is in this field that has been secured the success of Benjamin Bruce Burns, a leading lumber operator of Huntington, West Virginia, whose identification with various important interests has served to add to their prosperity and general growth.

Mr. Burns was born at Burnsville, Braxton County, West Virginia, December 1, 1869, a son of Capt. John M. and Mary (Campbell) Burns. The Burns family is of Scotch-Irish origin and the progenitor of the branch to which Benjamin B. Burns belongs immigrated from Ireland to America about the time of the War of the Revolution, settling in the Colony of Virginia. The grandfather of Mr. Burns, Benjamin Burreddge Blackburn Burns, was born in Maryland, whence he removed to Marion County, Virginia, and died at or near Fairmont, West Virginia, prior to the birth of his grandson, after a long and successful career passed in agricultural pursuits. He married Margaret Stewart, who was born in Pennsylvania and died in Center County, that state.

Capt. John M. Burns was born in 1834, in Maryland, and was reared in what is now Marion County, West Virginia, but was married in Highland County, Virginia. At the outbreak of the war between the states, he enlisted in Company A, Thirty-first Regiment, Virginia Volunteer Infantry, with which he served during the entire period of the war, for a time being under the command of the great Southern leader, Stonewall Jackson. An intrepid soldier and officer, he saw much hard fighting during the war, and at the battle of Port Republic, Virginia, received a serious wound. About the time that peace was declared he located at Burnsville, where he became a pioneer in the lumber industry and where he gained widespread interests. He established a sawmill and lumber yard at Burnsville, which place was named in his honor, and some time thereafter, with two of his brothers, David and Gideon M., and J. R. Hoffman, inventor of the band mill, installed the third mill of that character in the United States, at Burnsville. Mr. Burns was a democrat, but not a politician, although a good citizen who supported worthy civic measures. He was an active member of the Presbyterian Church and belonged to the Masonic fraternity. His death occurred at Burnsville in 1877, when he was but forty-three years of age, death probably being hastened by his war experiences. Mr. Burns married Mary Campbell, who was born in 1839, in Highland County, Virginia, and died at Huntington in 1919, and to this union there were born six children: Gertrude, who died in childhood; Margaret II., who died unmarried at Huntington, West Virginia, aged forty-six years; Benjamin Bruce, of this review; Daisy C., who died unmarried at Huntington, aged forty-four years; Lucretia M., who is unmarried and a resident of Huntington; and John M., formerly a lumber operator, who died aged thirty-two years at Asheville, North Carolina.

The education of Benjamin B. Burns was started in the public schools at Burnsville, and later he went to Baltimore, Maryland, where he completed his graded and high school courses. Graduating from the latter with the class of 1888, he went to Elizabeth, West Virginia, whither the mills had been removed from Burnsville, and became associated with the old firm of Burns Brothers, under which name the business established by his father was then being conducted. He continued thus until 1899, when, together with C. L. Ritter and M. N. Offutt, he founded the Tug River Lumber Company, with headquarters at Welch, West Virginia, where they operated four years. Following this the same firm operated at Bristol, Virginia, for six years. Messrs. Burns, Ritter and Offutt are still associates in the lumber business, their interests therein having been incorporated into the Rockcastle Lumber Company in 1909. Mr. Burns is secretary and treasurer of this concern. He is also vice president and treasurer of the Ritter-Burns Lumber Company, secretary and treasurer of the C. L. Ritter Company, secretary and treasurer of the C. L. Ritter Lumber Company, vice president and treasurer of the Ritter Hardwood Lumber Company, and general manager, secretary and treasurer of the Turkey Foot Lumber Company. Mr. Burns removed to Huntington to reside in 1910, and in this city maintains offices on the eleventh floor of the First National Bank Building. The lumber interests with which he is identified are among the largest in West Virginia.

Mr. Burns is an independent democrat in his political views. He is a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Huntington, of which he is treasurer, belongs to the Guyandot Club, the Guyan Country Club and the Chamber of Commerce, and is prominent fraternally, being a thirty-second degree Mason of Huntington Lodge No. 53, A. F. and A. M., Huntington Chapter No. 6, R. A. M., Huntington Commandery No. 9, K. T., West Virginia Consistory No. 1, of Wheeling, and Acca Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Richmond, and holding membership also in Huntington Lodge No. 313, B. P. O. E. He owns a modern residence on Park Hills, Huntington.

In 1902, at Victoria, Texas, Mr. Burns was united in marriage with Miss Ethel Brownson, daughter of John M. and Catherine (McDowell) Brownson, the latter of whom resides at Victoria, Texas, where Mr. Brownson, now deceased, was formerly president of the First National Bank. Mrs. Burns is a graduate of Bellwood Seminary, Anchorage, Kentucky. Three children have come to Mr. and Mrs. Burns: Katherine B., a student at Madeira School, Washington, D. C.; Ethel, a high school student at Huntington; and Benjamin Bruce, Jr., a student at the McCallie School, Chattanooga, Tennessee.

JOSEPH LINDELL KEENER, who has been identified closely with the banking, industrial and civic affairs of the City of Morgantown for a quarter of a century and has won success and prominence both as a man of large interests and as a public-spirited citizen of enlightened and progressive views, was born at Taylortown, Greene County, Pennsylvania, January 13, 1871, a son of the late George Ira and Nau (Hickman) Keener, natives of the same county. In 1879 George I. Keener removed to a farm near Clay Center, Kansas, subsequently going to Oklaboma, where he died near Hobart, that state, in 1902, at the age of fifty-four years.

Joseph Lindell Keener was graduated from the public schools of Clay Center, Kansas, in 1887, following which he was self-educated as a stenographer. He made use of this vocation in his youth and also kept a set of land title abstract books at Clay Center until December, 1890, when he became identified with the Equitable Mortgage Company at Kansas City, Missouri, as a stenographer and assistant in the examination of titles. He remained with this concern until May, 1893, at which time he went to Lake Charles, Louisiana, and became bookkeeper for the First National Bank, there working his way to assistant cashier, a post which he held at the time of leaving the institution in November, 1897. He then became cashier of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Morgantown, West Virginia, a position which he occupied until the fall of 1912, when he became vice president.

Mr. Keener is president of the Bishop Garage and Supply Company, president of the Morgantown Post Company, president of the Chaplin Collieries Company, secretary and treasurer of the United States Window Glass Company, treasurer of the Morgantown Savings and Loan Society, and is also secretary and treasurer of the United States Sheet & Window Glass Company, of Columbus, Ohio, now building a large window glass plant at Shreveport, Louisiana. He is also a vice president of the West Virginia Manufacturers Association, is a Rotarian and a member of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. He is a member of the Mont Chateau Club of Morgantown; the Fairmont Country Club of Fairmont, West Virginia; the Duquesne Club of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; the Pittsburgh Athletic Association, also of that city; and the Transportation Club of New York City. He belongs to Morgantown Commandery, Knights Templar, and Ori Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Wheeling, West Virginia.

On May 23, 1900, Mr. Keener was united in marriage with Miss Ida Irons, daughter of George Irons, at Kansas City, Missouri, and to this union there have been born a son and a daughter: Louisa, born September 11, 1905; and Joseph L., Jr., born February 1, 1907.

J. LOUIS DAWSON, district sales manager of the Iron Engine Company at Huntington, is one of the young generation of business men who has advanced to a position of influence and importance through the medium of his own efforts. He entered upon his career of self-support when he was only a small lad, and the success that he has gained has come as a result of his faith in self, his unwavering perseverance and a native ability that has aided him materially in the overcoming of such obstacles as have appeared in his path.

Mr. Dawson was born at Tazewell, Tazewell County, Virginia, May 7, 1888, and is a son of John H. and Evelyn (Graham) Dawson. His grandfather, James Dawson, was born at Tazewell, where he was reared, educated and married, and where he was a pioneer blacksmith, a trade which he followed throughout the active part of his career. In 1887 he retired and removed to Bluefield, West Virginia, where he died in 1892. He married a Miss Metheny, who was born and died at Tazewell, and one of their sons, William Russell Dawson, is now assistant general manager of the Norfolk & Western Railroad.

John H. Dawson was born at Tazewell, Virginia, in 1848, and spent his entire life at that place, where he divided his time between farming and blacksmithing. He died in the faith of the Christian Church in September, 1888, the same year that his son J. Louis was born. He married Evelyn Graham, who was born in Tazewell County, Virginia, in 1853, and who survives him as a resident of Henley, Ohio. They became the parents of four children: Robert Otis, who died aged eleven years; Ollie, who died when seven years of age; Nellie, who died at the age of thirty-two years; and J. Louis.

J. Louis Dawson was six months old when his father died, and when he was four years of age was taken by his mother to Wise County, Virginia. There it was that he acquired such schooling as he was able to obtain, in all about three six-month terms. Although this was the extent of his attendance at an institution of learning, Mr. Dawson today possesses a remarkably good education, which he has acquired in the different positions he has held, in reading and studying at home, in his travels, and in his association with business people and well-selected acquaintances. When he was only eight years of age he entered the coal mines at Toms Creek, Virginia, where he worked for five years, and then removed to Norton, Virginia, where he was successively employed in the mines, in the coal company's store and in the engineering department until 1907. He next secured employment with the Clinchfield Coal Corporation at Dante, Virginia, starting in the engineering department, where he remained until made mine foreman, and in 1910 came to Gary, West Virginia, as mine foreman for the United States Coal and Coke Company, a position which he filled for about one year. Mr. Dawson next accepted a position with the New River Pocahontas Consolidated Coal Company at Berwind, West Virginia, where he remained as mine foreman until June, 1912, then removing to Big Creek, West Virginia, where he was manager for the Black Hawk Colliery Company for four years. In 1916 he was made superintendent for the Amherstdale Coal Company at Amherstdale, West Virginia, but after six months resigned to begin selling electrical mine supplies for the Virginian Electric and Machine Works of Charleston, West Virginia, covering Virginia, West Virginia and Kentucky, until Deember, 1918. He then started as sales engineer for the Ironton Engine Company of Ironton, Ohio, covering West Virginia out of Huntington, and in September, 1919, was promoted to be district sales manager, with offices at Huntington, a position which he still retains. The Ironton Engine Company manufactures electric storage battery motors for use in coal mines, and during the period of its incumbency of his present office Mr. Dawson has built up the leading business of its kind in West Virginia, Virginia and Kentucky. He maintains well-appointed offices in the Cobson-Pritchard Building, Huntington.

J. L. Stearns

Mr. Dawson is a republican in politics, and as a fraternalist is prominent, belonging to the following orders: Huntington Lodge No. 53, A. F. and A. M.; Huntington Lodge of Perfection No. 4; Huntington Chapter No. 4, A. M., Knights of the Rose Croix; Albert Pike Council, Knights Kadosh; West Virginia Consistory No. 1, of Wheeling, a thirty-second degree Mason; Beni-Kedem Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Charleston; and Mizpah Lodge No. 213, K. of P., of Big Creek, West Virginia, which he helped to organize, of which he was representative to the Grand Lodge in 1915 and 1916, and of which he is a past chancellor. He is a stockholder in one of the leading coal companies of West Virginia and of another in Virginia, and is the owner of a modern brick residence at No. 609 Twelfth Avenue, Huntington, and of a home at Henley, Ohio, occupied by his mother.

In 1913, at Logan, West Virginia, Mr. Dawson married Miss Maude Kilgore, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. Newton Kilgore, the latter of whom is deceased. Mr. Kilgore is a resident of Wise, Virginia, where he is a leading criminal lawyer of the locality and active in republican politics. Three children have come to Mr. and Mrs. Dawson: J. Louis, Jr., born in August, 1914; Dorothy Virginia, born in November, 1916; and Maude Elizabeth, born in March, 1919.

HAROLD JAMES SPELMAN, of Huntington, holds the position of division engineer with the West Virginia State Road Commission, and is giving most effective technical and executive service in this important office. He was born at Rochester, New York, March 15, 1888, and is a son of James O. and Mary (Coles) Spelman, of that city. He has one brother, Edwin B., of Rochester, New York.

Harold J. Spelman was graduated in 1910 from Cornell University, Ithaca, New York, with the degree of Civil Engineer, he being a member of the Kappa Psi fraternity at that institution. After his graduation Mr. Spelman was for seven years engaged in professional service with the New York State Highway Department, and thereafter he was for eighteen months in the employ of the United States Bureau of Public Roads, with headquarters at Charleston, West Virginia. In this period he had direct charge of all Federal-aid highway work in this state. In April, 1919, he accepted his present position, that of division engineer of the West Virginia State Road Commission. His offices are maintained at Huntington.

Mr. Spelman and his wife are communicants of Trinity Protestant Episcopal Church of Huntington. He is a Mason, an associate member of the American Society of Civil Engineers, a member of the Cornell Society of Engineers, and a certified member of the American Association of Engineers.

At LeRoy, New York, on the 2d of September, 1912, Mr. Spelman wedded Miss Mary B. Wells, daughter of George Harrison Wells and Mary (Anderson) Wells, of that place. Mr. and Mrs. Spelman have one daughter, Mary Virginia, born September 28, 1914.

Oliver Wolcott Spelman, grandfather of the subject of this review, was born in Connecticut, in 1820, and died at Buffalo, New York, in 1895. He was a pioneer in the western part of the old Empire State, was there a school teacher when a young man, and later he was a merchant, a traveling salesman and a newspaper editor. He was a descendant of Richard Spelman, who came from England and settled at Middletown, Connecticut, in 1700. About the same time another branch of the family was founded in Virginia. Mrs. Harold J. Spelman is affiliated with the Huntington Chapter of the Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

EDGAR J. LOY, serving his second term as postmaster of Romney, has for many years been regarded as one of Hampshire County's most useful citizens. He was an educator in the early part of his life, has had his share of experience as a practical farmer and horticulturist, was county surveyor and has been one of the active men in the democratic party.

The Loys are a pioneer family in this section of old Virginia. Its founder was William Loy, one of four brothers who came from England. One of these brothers settled in New Jersey, another in Maryland or Pennsylvania, and one in the Shenandoah Valley of old Virginia. William Loy, the pioneer, established himself on the Fairfax grant, some where in Hampshire County, and made some of the first improvements on the land in that vicinity. The second generation was represented also by William Loy, whose home was in the Augusta locality of the county, where he spent his life as a farmer and is buried at the old homestead. He was a veteran of the war with Mexico. That homestead has been in the possession of three successive generations and is now owned by another William Loy. The third generation of the family was represented by George Loy, who was born in the Ruckman community, was a farmer there and also a Primitive Baptist minister. In performing his church labors he traveled much over Virginia, Pennsylvania and Maryland, being the first Baptist preacher from the South to venture across the Mason and Dixon line into Pennsylvania at the close of the war. He married Jane Ann Cool, and both are buried in the Mount Zion graveyard near Augusta. They had four sons and three daughters: William, Jonathan, Robert and Harrison; Mary, who married Isaiah Heare; Eliza, who died unmarried; and Tamar, who became Mrs. Robert Gray.

William Loy, father of Edgar J. Loy, was born November 22, 1842, near Ruckman, and has spent practically all his life on the farm and in the community where he was born and where his father and grandfather before him lived. He had only a limited education in local schools and largely trained himself. To the task and responsibilities of farming at the homestead he has devoted nearly all the years of his active life. He was a Confederate volunteer in 1861, and went with the first troops from Romney to Harpers Ferry, being mustered into Gen. A. P. Hill's command. He was also with General Early's army in the infantry and for a time was in General Imboden's cavalry command. He was wounded in the battle of Fishers' Hill, Virginia, and captured by the Federals, and for nine months was in prison at Point Lookout, Maryland, being released at the close of the war. He was a very excellent soldier. He has kept up his associations with old Confederate veterans and was a member of the camp as long as it held together. Aside from his army experience he has lived a rather quiet and modest life, participating in politics as a democrat, and, while not a church member, clings to the faith of his father, the old-school Baptist.

In his home community William Loy married a neighbor girl, Miss Rebecca Starkey, daughter of John Starkey. She died in 1919. Their children were: Edgar Johnson; Annie J., wife of R. G. Cool, of Chambersburg, Pennsylvania; Sarah J., of Cumberland, Maryland; Martha J., wife of Jonathan Heare, of Cumberland, Maryland; and Miss Addie J., of Cumberland, Maryland.

Edgar J. Loy was born at the old homestead April 17, 1868, and until past his majority he lived in the environment of his forefathers. He acquired a common school education, attended for two terms the Shenandoah Normal School at Harrisonburg, Virginia, and at the age of twenty began teaching. Teaching was his active profession for fourteen years, and for twelve years of that time he carried a first-grade certificate. For eight years he was a member of the Board of County Examiners of teachers in association with County Superintendent E. W. Noland.

After leaving the school room he devoted his attention to farming and surveying. He served his locality as notary public for sixteen years. In 1904 he was elected county surveyor as successor of Robert Monroe. During the next eight years he covered the whole of Hampshire County in the prosecution of his work. His interest in local history was aroused by the fact that in some of his surveying he was following the footsteps of George Washington and other pioneer surveyors who established the first corners in this region. Mr. Loy after leaving the office of county surveyor was for two years manager of the Moorefield Nursery and Orchard Company, and then took up his duties as postmaster of Romney. His first commission was dated February 13, 1916, and his second commission is dated June 5, 1920, both bearing the signature of Woodrow Wilson. The Romney Post Office was a difficult one during the World war, since it was the central office for the county in handling all the added burdens of business connected with the winning of the war, including the War Stamp sales.

The Post Office was robbed January 20, 1919, entailing a loss of about $5,000.

Mr. Loy has attended many local and district conventions of the democratic party, and cast his first vote in 1892, for Mr. Cleveland. His support has been given regularly to the national candidate.

In Hampshire County, June 30, 1890, he married Miss Martha R. Ruckman, daughter of James T. and Caroline (Fohs) Ruckman. She and Mr. Loy grew up in the same neighborhood and were schoolmates.

JOHN A. CHAMBERS, who is serving as local magistrate in the City of Bluefield, Mercer County, where he is also president of the Bluefield Transfer Company, was born on his father's farm at Peterstown February 7, 1851, and is a son of Augustus F. and Mary Jane (Chambers) Chambers, both natives of Monroe County, this state, where the father was born on a farm near Peterstown in 1837, and the mother was born in Peterstown. Augustus F. Chambers was seventy-five years of age at the time of his death, which occurred at Bluefield, and his wife passed to eternal rest when sixty years of age. He was a son of Col. William F. Chambers, who came from New Jersey and established his residence in Monroe County, West Virginia, as now constituted, in the early days and who became a man of prominence and influence in public affairs in that county. Augustus F. Chambers became through self-discipline a man of superior education, even as by his own efforts he achieved worthy success in material affairs. He was an implacable adversary of the secession of the Southern states and made many ardent speeches against the movement. When the Civil war was precipitated he was conscripted by the Confederate government, but he refused to fight in the military ranks of the South, but did consent to act as cook for a time, as a matter of expediency. He finally made his escape through the Confederate lines and after reaching the State of Ohio he enlisted for service in the Union Army. As a business man Mr. Chambers was for many years engaged in freighting with teams and wagons from Portsmouth, Ohio, to various points in West Virginia and Virginia, including Lynchburg, Petersburg and Richmond—this having been prior to the era of railroads. At the time of the Civil war the family of Mr. Chambers succeeded in passing through the lines and finding refuge in Ohio, whence all members returned to Monroe County, West Virginia, in 1866. Mr. and Mrs. Chambers were earnest members of the Methodist Church. They became the parents of seven sons and seven daughters, all of whom survived the honored father and twelve of whom are still living, John A. of this review being the oldest of the number.

Owing to local conditions John A. Chambers was enabled to attend school for a total of about three months only, and the institution in which his limited early training was thus obtained was a log cabin, with slab seats and oiled paper in lieu of glass at the rude windows. He passed much of his boyhood and early youth in making trips with his father's overland freighting outfits, and he gained from his father a splendid fund of practical information, while his self-discipline has enabled him to widen effectively his mental ken through association with men and affairs and through well directed reading. He has ever been a stalwart advocate of the principles of the republican party, and made stump speeches in its behalf before he had attained to his legal majority. He has continued to serve in this way in connection with party campaigns in the long intervening years. That he gained a good working education in his youth needs no further voucher than the fact that when he was twenty years old he successfully taught school at Rock Camp. He was employed principally at farm work until the time of his marriage, and then engaged in farm enterprise in an independent way. With his family he finally removed to a farm which he rented in Summers County, but his political activities so offended landlords in that county that they would not continue to rent him land. In 1894 he removed with his family to Bluefield, and here he later erected his present modern and attractive residence on Bluefield Avenue. From the modest teaming business which Mr. Chambers here established has been developed the substantial and prosperous enterprise now conducted by the Bluefield Transfer Company, of which he is the president. He has served as magistrate for twenty years. He continues a vital supporter of the cause of the republican party, and he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

In 1873 Mr. Chambers wedded Miss Elizabeth S. Crotty, who had been a childhood schoolmate and who is a daughter of the late James T. Crotty. Mr. and Mrs. Chambers have five sons and three daughters, and the youngest of the number, Claude, served most loyally with the American Expeditionary Forces in France in the World war, besides having been with the allied Army of Occupation in Germany after the signing of the historic armistice.

ARCH C. MORGAN. In keeping with the somewhat diversified experience that has characterized his career Mr. Morgan is one of the very busy men of affairs in the City of Huntington, though his chief business is as district manager for the Fidelity Investment Association.

Mr. Morgan's family has been in the Upper Panhandle of West Virginia, in the section around Wheeling, for four generations, his great-grandfather having been associated with that little group of pioneers represented in the Van Meter community of Ohio County almost at the beginning of settlement. Mr. Morgan himself was born in Ohio County, August 10, 1877.

His father, Louis B. Morgan, was born in Ohio County, February 11, 1844, and spent most of his active life in that vicinity, where he conducted extensive farming operations until 1888, when he moved into the City of Wheeling, and thereafter worked at the potter's trade. He died at Wheeling, July 4, 1913. He was a democrat in politics, a Mason, and one of the most earnest and liberal supporters of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He married Emma Cordelia Dunlap, who was born in Ohio County, August 26, 1849, and is still living at Wheeling. They had a family of seven children: John Gaylord, a potter, who died at Wheeling in 1909; Julius Erville, a dealer in wholesale paints at Wheeling; Ira, who died at the age of two years; Louie Bertha, wife of Frank L. Lowe, a stock salesman at Huntington; Arch C.; Callie Eudora, at home; and Nellie, who died at the age of three years.

Arch C. Morgan spent his early life on the farm and attended rural schools, but his consecutive schooling was ended when he was eleven years of age. For about three years he was on trains of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad as a newsboy, and was then taken off the train service and for a year was assistant office agent for the Union News Company at Wheeling. His next work was in the pottery industry, and for four years altogether he was with the Warwick China Company of Wheeling and with the Wheeling Pottery Company. Beginning in 1896, Mr. Morgan for two years represented Eastern Ohio and Northern West Virginia as a traveling salesman for the G. H. Hammond Company. For another two years he had an interesting experience on the road, following the vaudeville and other theatrical circuits with a troupe of canary birds which he had himself trained and which he exhibited over most of the United States. When he retired from the road Mr. Morgan located at Wheeling and was in the wholesale butterine and egg business until 1913, when he joined the Elkins Coal and Coke company as salesman, with headquarters at Wheeling and Cleveland. Early in 1915 he became associated with the Delity Investment Association as a bond salesman, at first his headquarters at Parkersburg, but in 1917 was transferred to Huntington as district manager for this company. His offices are in the First National Bank Building.

In addition to his active work for this company Mr. Morgan is a stockholder in the Emmons-Hawkins Hardware Company of Huntington, the First National Bank, the Ideal Oil and Gas Company of Huntington, the Klimate Int'l Company of Wheeling.

He is a democrat, a member of the Presbyterian Church, affiliated with Huntington Lodge No. 313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and the Guyan Country Club. He has one of the fine homes in Huntington, at 1545 Fifth Avenue. August 8, 1917, at East St. Louis, Illinois, Mrs. Morgan married Miss Elizabeth Stoddard Emmons, daughter of Col. DeLos W. and Mary Jane (Stoddard) Emmons, now deceased. Her father was an active associate of the old Central Land Company and one of the founders of the City of Huntington. Mrs. Morgan is a graduate of a college in Cincinnati, and also attended Marshall College at Huntington.

Rev. J. TAYLOR STINSON, pastor of the First Baptist Church at Bluefield, Mercer County, is a native of Virginia and member of a family represented in the Baptist ministry for three generations.

He was born on a farm in Russell County, Virginia, February 8, 1880, son of John Thomas and Virginia (Taylor) Stinson. His paternal grandfather was Rev. Robert Stinson, a native of Russell County and a Baptist minister, his maternal grandfather, Emby Taylor, was a native of Russell County and a Confederate soldier. John T. and Virginia Stinson were born in Russell County, and are still living on their farm there.

One of a family of seven sons and two daughters, J. Taylor Stinson began his education in country schools, taught six terms, at the age of twenty became a member of the Baptist Church and in 1905 was ordained to the ministry. In that year he entered Richmond University, and while a student he served the Baptist churches located at Cartersville, Columbia and Perkins as pastor. He graduated A. B. from Richmond University in 1909, spent one year in Union Theological Seminary at Richmond and did post-graduate work in Temple University at Philadelphia. He is a member of the Anacredital, which is an honor society of University of Richmond, and has been for several years a member of the Board of Trustees of the university. He preached for six years at the three churches above named and for two years was pastor of the Tarwallet Church at Lumberland Court House, Virginia. For eight years he was pastor of the church at Lebanon in his native county, and while in Russell County he also served the churches at Bethel and Green Valley and organized the Glade Church in Russell County and Steelsburg Church in Tazewell County.

Rev. M. Stinson accepted the call to the First Baptist Church of Bluefield in February, 1919, and in his three years' ministry there has received over 400 members into his church. He is a member of the committee having in charge the Baptist College Building at Bluefield. He is president of the Ministerial Association of Bluefield, is a member of the Rotary Club, and is a Mason.

In 1904 he married Miss Melissa Katharine Kiser, daughter of George L. Kiser, of Russell County. They have one daughter, Kathleen Virginia.

JOHN D. RAKE is the efficient cashier of the First National Bank of Richwood, Nicholas County, with which substantial and representative institution he has been connected in this capacity since November 29, 1919, when he was advanced from the position of assistant cashier to that of cashier.

Mr. Rake was born in Jackson County, West Virginia, July 31, 1890, and is a son of Daniel M. and Sarah E. (Smith) Rake, the former of whom was born in Kentucky, October 2, 1861, and the latter of whom was born in Noble County, Ohio, June 10, 1865. In the public schools of his native state Daniel M. Rake continued his studies until he had profited by the advantages of the high school, and he was seventeen years of age when he became a resident of West Virginia. Here he made an excellent record as a farmer, merchant and traveling salesman, and after his marriage he established his residence on a farm in Jackson County, where he resided until 1912. He then removed to Galia County, Ohio, where he is now the owner of a valuable farm property of 240 acres, and where he is a substantial and representative citizen of his community. His political support is given to the republican party, he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and his fraternal alliances are with the Masonic fraternity and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Of the children in the family circle the oldest is Julia, who is the wife of Seldon H. Curry, of Cleveland, Ohio; Elizabeth is the wife of Emmet Hatton, of Portsmouth, Ohio; John D., of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; James C., a graduate of the high school, remains at the parental home; Ora is, in 1922, a student in Rio Grande College, and is also Sue, both having previously graduated from high school.

After having fully profited by the advantages of the public schools of his native county John D. Rake continued his studies in the West Virginia State Normal School at West Liberty until his graduation in this institution, his educational work having included also attendance in Western Reserve College, Ohio, and the University of West Virginia. He made an excellent record in the pedagogic profession and was for three years principal of the high school at Williamsburg, Greenbrier County. He gained his initial banking experience at Fayetteville, Fayette County, where he was advanced to the position of assistant cashier of the bank whose service he had entered. In 1919 he took a position as assistant cashier with the First National Bank of Richwood, and soon afterward, on the 29th of November of the same year, he was advanced to his present executive office, that of cashier. The other officers of the bank are as here designated: H. W. Armstrong, president; H. S. Smith, vice president, both of these executives being directors, as are also Dr. James McClung, Frederick L. Space, J. A. Tensure, E. G. Fuerheim and J. W. Rake.

Mr. Rake is a republican in political allegiance, and in the Masonic fraternity his affiliations are with Fayetteville Lodge No. 57, A. F. and A. M., and Richwood Chapter No. 37, R. A. M., besides which he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Sigma Nu college fraternity.

ISAAC H. ROBBINS, M. D., is recognized as a man of high professional ability and is distinctly one of the leading physicians and surgeons of Nicholas County. He is established in successful general practice at Richwood, and significant evidence of popular appreciation of his civic loyalty and progressiveness is that afforded in his being now mayor of this thriving little city, to which executive office he was elected January 5, 1922, for the regular term of three years.

Doctor Robbins was born at Mount Olivet, Robinson County, Kentucky, July 7, 1868, and is a son of Caleb W. and Pernelia M. (Cray) Robbins, both natives of Bourbon County, that state, where the former was born in 1825, at Flat Rock, and where the latter was born in 1830. The father was reared on one of the fine farms of his native county, and his early education included a course in Georgetown College, one of the excellent institutions of the Blue Grass State, his wife having attended the Millersburg Female College. As a young man Caleb W. Robbins taught school for some time, and after his marriage he settled on a farm in Bourbon County, whence he later removed to Robinson County, where he continued to be engaged in farm enterprise. He then removed to Nicholas County, where he engaged in farming, and later moved to Morgan County, Kentucky, where he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives. His wife held membership in the Methodist Church, while he was a member of the Christian Church. Mr. Robbins was a stalwart advocate of the principles of the democratic party, served as justice of the peace and in 1876-7 he represented Nicholas and Robinson counties, Kentucky, in the legislature of his native state. Of the family of eleven children only four are living in 1922, the eldest of this number being Dr. M. A. Robbins, who is engaged in the practice of medicine at Carter, Kentucky; Doctor L. F. is a representative physician and surgeon at Ashland, that state; Lena is the wife of Simon Williams, of Seattle, Washington; and Doctor Isaac H., of this review, is the youngest of the number.

In his native state Dr. Isaac H. Robbins was reared to adult age, and there his early educational advantages were those of the public schools. In 1889-90 he was a student in the medical department of the University of Louisville, and after these two years of discipline he attended the Kentucky School of Medicine for one year. In 1892 he graduated from the Eclectic Medical College in the City of Cincinnati, Ohio, and in 1895 he took a post-graduate course in the Scudder Eclectic Medical College. In 1899 he graduated from Barnes Medical College, St. Louis, Missouri, and he thus holds the degree of Doctor of Medicine both in the regular and the Eclectic schools of practice. In 1892 he engaged in practice at Olive Hill, Kentucky, and later he was engaged in practice in turn at Carter, Salt Lick and Moorehead, that state. From the last mentioned place he returned to Salt Lick, where he conducted a hospital in connection with his general practice until he came to West Virginia and engaged in practice at Craigsville, Nicholas County. Later he amplified the scope of his professional field by establishing his residence in the City of Richwood, where he has built up and retains a large and representative general practice. The doctor is a member of the Webster, Nicholas, By Manual Medical Society, the West Virginia State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. At Moorehead, Kentucky, he still maintains affiliation with the lodges of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is a director of the Citizens Bank of Richwood, is a stockholder in the Richwood Stone Company and has valuable real estate interests both in Nicholas County and in the State of Florida. He is a resourceful and loyal supporter of the principles of the democratic party, and his vital interest in the welfare of his home city has been marked by the objective appreciation indicated in his having twice been elected mayor of Richwood, of which municipal office he is the vigorous and progressive incumbent at the time of this writing.

At Newfoundland, Elliott County, Kentucky, in 1889, was solemnized the marriage of Dr. Robbins and Miss Ruth E. De Hart, who was born and reared in Virginia. Of the five children of this union four are living: Mildred M., a graduate of the high school and of a business college at Clarksburg, is now employed as stenographer in the offices of the Cherry River Boom & Lumber Company; John W., who graduated from the high school, was one of the gallant young representatives of West Virginia in the nation's military service in the great World war, he having taken part in a number of the important battles in which the American Expeditionary Forces were involved in France and having at one time been severely gassed; Harry E. is, in 1922, a student in the Richwood High School; and Virginia Ruth is the youngest member of the parental home circle.

EMERSON E. DEITZ had the distinction of serving as the first mayor of Richwood, Nicholas County, and has been closely and prominently associated with the development and progress of this vital little city, in which he now conducts one of the leading mercantile enterprises.

Mr. Deitz was born at Hominy Falls, this county, December 13, 1869, and is a son of Joseph D. and Virginia (Ellis) Deitz, both likewise natives of Nicholas County, where the former was born in July, 1841, at Mount Lookout, and where the latter was born in June, 1840, at Hominy Falls, the respective families having been founded in Nicholas County in the early pioneer period when this section of old Virginia was virtually on the frontier. Joseph D. Deitz was reared on a pioneer farm, received his youthful education in the common schools of the locality and period, and after his marriage he settled on a farm near Hominy Falls where he passed the remainder of his life as one of the substantial exponents of agricultural and live-stock industry in his native county. For a number of years Mr. Deitz was engaged also in conducting a general country store. He was a consistent member of the Baptist Church, as is also his widow, who is now one of the venerable native daughters still residing in Nicholas County (1922). Of the nine children seven are living: Fannie is the wife of W. M. Beckner; Emerson E., of this review, and John W. are twins; Bettie is the widow of John McCombs; Vida is the widow of David F. DeHart; Etta is the wife of A. C. McClung; and Josie is the wife of J. B. Pullen.

After attending the public schools at Hominy Falls Emerson E. Deitz further fortified himself by a course of study in the West Virginia State Normal School at Summersville. He became a successful teacher in the rural schools of his native county, and also continued his association with farm enterprise, under the influences of which he had been reared. In 1900 he established his residence at Richwood, a place whose development to an important literary industrial city has been one of the progressive revelations in this part of the state, and a year later he was elected the first mayor of the city, an office of which he continued the incumbent two years, and in which he gave a most effective and popular administration. He has served also as recorder of the City Council, and was postmaster at Richwood eight years. As a republican he has been influential in political affairs in his native county, he is one of the leading merchants of the city, and is a director of the Richwood Banking & Trust Company. He is a trustee of the Baptist Church at Richwood, of which his wife likewise is a zealous member, and he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Modern Woodmen of America and with Richwood Lodge No. 122, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

In the year 1899 Mr. Deitz wedded Miss Bessie M. Spencer, who was born and reared near Richwood, this county, her paternal grandfather and his children having owned fully 2,000 acres of land in this locality, including the site of the present city of Richwood. Mr. and Mrs. Deitz have six children: Delta, Deloris, Eugene, Cleora, Oakford and William H. Miss Delta Deitz graduated from high school and thereafter attended both Dennison University, at Granville, Ohio, and Broadus College, West Virginia. She is now a popular teacher in the high school at Richwood. Deloris, the second daughter, graduated from the local high school and is, in 1922, a student in Broadus College. The eldest son, Eugene, is a student in the Richwood High School.

CHARLES W. LLOYD. Numbered among the men who have accepted the opportunities offered for advancement by the coal industry of West Virginia, and who have found success and position therein, is Charles W. Lloyd, secretary and treasurer of the Logan-Elkhorn Coal Corporation of Huntington. Mr. Lloyd's career has been one of constant industry and consistent progress since he started life on his own account some thirteen years ago, and the prestige which he has achieved has been gained solely through the medium of his own efforts.

Mr. Lloyd was born in Lee County, Virginia, October 29, 1886, and is a son of Lafayette and Dorothy (Jesse) Lloyd. His grandfather, Absalom Lloyd, was born in Virginia, where the family has been well known for many years, and died in Lee County before the birth of his grandson. He had been a pioneer into that county, where he was a planter and, prior to the Civil war, a slave holder, a man of some prominence and influence in his community. He married Rebecca Lytton, also a native of Virginia, who passed away in the same community as her husband.

Lafayette Lloyd was born February 11, 1842, in Lee County, Virginia, where he has spent his entire life in agricultural pursuits, in which he has made a success through industry, the use of progressive methods and the exercise of good management and intelligence. At the present time he is living in retirement in a comfortable home in Lee County, enjoying the fruits of his early labors. He is democrat in his political allegiance, a member and strong supporter of the Baptist Church, which he joined in his youth, and a member of the Masonic fraternity. Mr. Lloyd married Miss Dorothy Jesse, who was born June 22, 1846, and to this union there have been born the following children: Alma, who is the wife of William E. Thompson, a civil engineer of Pennington Gap, Lee County, Virginia; Edna, who is the wife of Richard L. Wood, a merchant of Huntington Gap; D. Sheff, forester and timber dealer of Huntington Gap; and Charles W.

Charles W. Lloyd was educated in the rural schools of Harrison County, Virginia, including the high school at Pennington Gap, and after his graduation from the latter, as a member of the class of 1909, secured employment in a general store at that place which was owned and conducted by his brother-in-law, R. L. Wood. After being thus employed for one year he entered the service of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company in the capacity of fireman, and after one and one-half years decided that railroading was not his forte and accordingly resigned his post and entered the Pennington Gap Bank as bookkeeper. One year later, in 1915, he accepted a position with the Stonegate Coal and Coke Company at Big Stone Gap, as bookkeeper, and on October 1, 1916, came to Huntington and worked for the Stonegate Coal Company as bookkeeper until January, 1918. He then accepted a position with the Logan-Elkhorn Coal Corporation, and, starting as a bookkeeper, was advanced to secretary and treasurer January 1, 1922. This concern is incorporated under the laws of the State of West Virginia, and its general offices are situated in Rooms 7 and 8, American Bank Building, Huntington. The officers of the concern at this time are: J. K. Parsons, president; W. S. Parsons, vice president; and Charles W. Lloyd, secretary and treasurer. Mr. Lloyd is a democrat in politics, but has not devoted any time to devote to public affairs or to seeking advancement of a political character. He is a member of the Elks (Kentucky) Lodge No. 119, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, in which he is greatly popular.

At Pennington Gap, Virginia, in 1910, Mr. Lloyd was married in marriage with Miss Mattie Barner, the daughter of James and Mattie (Robinette) Barner, residents of Galatia, Virginia, where Mr. Barner is successfully engaged in merchandising. To Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd there have been the following children: Charles, born August 16, 1911; Charlotte, born September 2, 1913; Helen, born January 6, 1915; and Marcella, born March 3, 1918. Mr. Lloyd is the owner of one of the modern homes of Huntington, a comfortable, attractive brick residence located on Seventh Avenue, which was erected in 1922.

HOWARD POST. In realty circles of Clarksburg a name that is well and favorably known is that of Howard Post, who has been identified with a number of large and important transactions during recent years, and who is also prominently known in public life, being an ex-member of the State Legislature. He is a native son of Harrison County and a product of its agricultural life, having been born on a farm, June 23, 1874. His parents, John B. and Mary (Adams) Post, were also born in Harrison County, and his maternal grandfather was a son of Samuel Adams, who came from old Virginia to Harrison County at an early date.

John B. Post, who was an agriculturist by vocation, entered in young manhood in the Union army, and during the struggle between the states served in the capacity of teamster. He returned to farming at the close of the war, and was interested in merchandising, and was a man of ability and integrity who had the respect and confidence of his fellow-citizens. He was a republican in politics, and died at the age of forty-eight years in the faith of the United Brethren Church, of which his wife was also a member. She died at the age of seventy-two years. They were the parents of ten children, as follows: Sarah Ella, who was the wife of Charles Jarvis; Michael R., a merchant of Jarvisville, this state; Edith M., who became the wife of Ed Farris; William S., of Colorado Springs, Colorado; John, who became the wife of Ed K. Somerville; Howard, of this record; Hiram O., of Clarksburg; Truman

A., of Doddridge County, this state; Martin Luther, who died at the age of eighteen years; and A. Earl, who resides on the parental homestead near Jarvisville, Harrison County.

Howard Post was reared on the home farm, where his boyhood experiences were much the same as other farmers' sons of his day and locality, and after passing through the rural schools enrolled as a student at the Classical and Normal Academy, Buckhannon, West Virginia. After teaching the rural school in his parental home district for two years, Mr. Post became an employee in the mercantile house of R. T. Lowndes, at Clarksburg, where he remained 2½ years, and then embarked in business on his own account as a merchant at West Milford, where he remained three years. Disposing of his holdings, Mr. Post next had one year's experience as a commercial traveler for a wholesale grocery house, then returning to the employ of R. T. Lowndes, with whom he remained seven years. In 1909 Mr. Post turned his attention to the real estate and insurance business, in which he has continued to the present time, being at present a member of the firm of Post-Peterson Company, with offices in the Goff Building. He is accounted one of the able realtors of Harrison County, with a thorough knowledge of land values, and is known to be reliable in representation and straightforward in all his dealings.

A staunch republican in politics, Mr. Post has long been interested in public affairs. In 1920 he was elected a member of the Lower House of the State Legislature, and as a legislator served with credit to himself and to the benefit of his constituency. In fraternal relations he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and all of its branches, and holds membership also in the Clarksburg Retary Club. He is an official member of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Clarksburg.

In 1896 Mr. Post married Miss Mary Gasten, who was born and reared in Harrison County, daughter of John W. Gasten, a prominent farmer of that county. To this union there have been born the following children: Harold, Lena, Rachel, George, and Howard, Jr. Harold and Lena are married, and Miss Rachel, who is now a kindergarten teacher, is a graduate of the Beechwood School for Girls.

SAUL THOMAS represents a family that was established in Clay District in Monongalia County in Indian times. His great-grandfather, William Thomas, lost his life in an Indian massacre here and was buried on the farm now owned by Saul Thomas and has been in the continuous possession of this family since the first clearings were made in the woods there.

Saul Thomas, whose post office is at Wana and whose home is twenty-four miles west of Morgantown up Scotts Run, was born in the district, December 14, 1851, son of R. S. and Mary (Johnson) Thomas and grandson of William Thomas the second, who spent most of his life at the old homestead and died there. R. S. Thomas was born in Clay District at the old homestead and died at this old homestead which is now owned by Saul Thomas. Mary Johnson was a native of Pennsylvania and she died eight years before her husband. After his marriage R. S. Thomas moved to Ritchie County, but at the death of a brother and at the request of his father returned to take charge of the farm. He was a democrat and for a number of years held the office of justice of the peace. He and his wife had two children, the daughter being Sarah Jane, widow of Ingram Kent and living at Brave, Pennsylvania.

Saul Thomas spent all his life at the old homestead and as a youth took charge of the farm. He has kept adding to his possessions until he has 484 acres in one body and has always kept a large number of cattle. Some of his neighbors say this is the finest farm in Monongalia County. It is made additionally valuable by an oil well and four gas wells and Mr. Thomas still retains his coal rights.

At the age of twenty-eight he married Margaret A. Marsh of Ritchie County. They have reared five children: Mary Eleanor who holds a life certificate as a teacher and for a number of years was connected with the home schools; Nancy Ann; Martha Jane, wife of William Sanders, an oil operator in Ohio; Laura Dell and Ralph Marsh. Mr. Thomas is an advocate of good roads, and has been able to put some of his ideas into practice through his service for some years as local overseer of road building.

W. DAVIS ALEXANDER was in earlier years a prominent river man, and represents a family that was identified with Ohio River traffic for many years. Mr. Alexander has since given his abilities to the commercial and general upbuilding of Moundsville and is president of the Mercantile Banking & Trust Company of that city.

This company was organized in 1903 and a few years later absorbed the second oldest banking institution of the county, the Farmers & Mechanics Bank, which was established in 1893. The home of the company is the finest office building in Moundsville, the third floor being occupied by the Masonic bodies, the second floor by offices, while the bank is on the ground floor. The bank has every equipment for general service, including safety deposit vaults, and its charter permits it to exercise its facilities for acting as executor of estates and guardianship. The total resources of the Mercantile Banking & Trust Company aggregate over one and a quarter millions of dollars. The capital is $100,000; surplus, $80,000; and deposits are over a million. The officers of the company are W. D. Alexander, president; Thomas Scott, vice president; and C. A. Showare, secretary and treasurer.

W. D. Alexander as a boy went on river boats and followed the river for twenty-five years, becoming captain and pilot. He left the service in 1888, and since then has been an extensive real estate owner and dealer and was one of the firm Beam & Alexander which established the drug business at Moundsville now owned by his old partner, J. H. Beam. Mr. Alexander has been president of the Board of Trade, and in every way has been interested in the general development of the city. He secured several of its important industries, and with J. A. Miller negotiated the purchase of the fifty-four acre tract for the site of the United Zinc Smelting Company.

Mr. Alexander married Miss Ella K. Cresap, a member of a very prominent and historic family of colonial period of the country. Her grandfather, Michael Cresap, came to the Ohio Valley from Oldtown, near Cumberland, Maryland, and purchased a large tract of land in and around Cresap Grove, in Marshall County, West Virginia. He was a romantic and conspicuous figure in the early border warfare of pioneer days. Mr. and Mrs. Alexander have living two children: Mary Virginia, wife of C. D. Williamson, a prominent dentist of Moundsville; and Eleanor Louise Grubb, whose husband, Louis D. Grubb, is a Wheeling architect.

JOSEPH Z. TERRELL. The warden of the State Penitentiary is peculiarly an office that represents an opportunity for disinterested service to the state, and is unaccompanied by any compensating advantages, honor or financial emolument. Seldom has West Virginia had a man in this position who has served more faithfully the interests of the unfortunate under him and the state as a whole than the present warden, Joseph Z. Terrell. Mr. Terrell until he accepted the appointment of warden had given all his time from boyhood to railroading, and was prominent in the service of the Baltimore & Ohio.

He was born in Hanover County, Virginia, December 28, 1873. His father, Nicholas Terrell, a retired farmer, still owns the old homestead in Virginia but at the age of eighty-one is living with his son at Moundsville. Joseph Z. Terrell had a common-school education and as a youth learned telegraphy and became a railroad operator. In 1892 he entered the service of the Baltimore & Ohio as an operator on the Cumberland Division, and his name is still retained on the company's roll. He was operator, agent, yardmaster and held various other places in the operating, accounting and traffic departments, all his service being given to the Cumberland Division between Brunswick, Maryland, and Grafton, West Virginia. For several years he was agent at Romney and at Keyser, and was also freight and passenger agent.

October 1, 1918, Mr. Terrell was selected by Governor

Cornwell as warden of the West Virginia Penitentiary Moundsville. He had not been previously known as a real figure in politics, and partisan politics have been excluded from his administration. Mr. Terrell would have averse to classification as a prison reformer. He has tended sessions of the Prison Congress, has studied prison management from the light of his own experience, and other institutions as well, but in all his administration has made common sense the basis of any changes he instituted. At the beginning of his term he instituted measures that would eliminate waste and insure economy and has the satisfaction of seeing the income from the penitentiary almost equal the expenses, though for a number of years previously there had been a heavy deficit. He introduced certain modifications of the honor system, particularly in the operation of the prison farm, but most factually changed the spirit of the men under him by wholesome and just discipline and by emphasizing the old principle that work is the solution for the evils arising out of idleness. Prisoners have been treated as human beings, and he has encouraged athletics, has introduced wholesome entertainment, including moving pictures, and so far as possible has conducted the institution with a view to inculcating a proper sense of individual responsibility and respect for law and training the individuals for responsible citizenship.

Mr. Terrell is a Knight Templar Mason and an Elk, and his hobby is horseback riding. Mrs. Terrell is an active member of the Woman's Club of the Wheeling District and both belong to the Episcopal Church.

His first wife was Miss McAdams, of Morgan County, who died in 1907, leaving one son, Claude M., now an attorney, who graduated from the law department of the University of Virginia in 1920 and is in the office of prominent firm of New York City corporation lawyers, Hornblower, Miller & Garrison. In 1909 Mr. Terrell married Miss Lee of Mineral County, West Virginia, and they had a daughter, Barbara Lee.

THOMAS SCOTT has lived in Marshall County practically all his life for more than seventy-five years, was a successful farmer until past fifty, and since then has been the real estate business at Moundsville and a progressive factor in that city's development and expansion.

Mr. Scott was born in Marshall County, February 1, 1845, son of John and Margaret (Ingraham) Scott. His parents were natives of County Armagh, Ireland, and in 1835 they crossed the ocean to New York, went on to Pittsburgh, and in 1844 settled in what is now Marshall County, West Virginia, on the Washington Survey. The Washington Survey is now known as Round Bottom and lies two miles below Moundsville. It is said to have been owned and personally surveyed by George Washington, who later sold the tract to Archibald McLean. Thomas Scott now owns about three hundred acres of this noted bottom, a district whose agricultural possibilities have been supplemented by important coal operations. John Scott was a ship carpenter by trade, a skilled mechanic, and in December, 1847, accepted employment with a firm of ship builders at New Orleans, but had worked there only a short time when he died in January, 1848, at the age of fifty. He was born in 1798. He had left his family in Marshall County when he went south, and he was survived by his widow and three children.

The mother of Thomas Scott measured up to the first standard of womanhood and motherhood. She had been educated as a girl, but she came to America a bride knowing nothing of practical affairs. After the death of her husband a neighbor allowed her the use of a small cottage and a few acres, and there she kept her children together and she experienced the full meaning of hard times. Later she became the wife of H. J. McLean, a neighbor. H. J. McLean died in Moundsville. His father was the Archibald McLean previously mentioned as the purchaser of the Washington Survey. Archibald McLean had erected a farmhouse here. He was the father of two sons and one daughter. His sons, Joseph and Horatio, secured a part of and, and Horatio J. McLean owned his share until his death, and 263 acres of his portion is now owned by Thomas Scott. E. H. McLean, a son of Joseph McLean, acquired a greater part of the old survey, and after his death these lands were sold, and a part of this tract is also owned by Thomas Scott. After the death of Horatio McLean his widow lived with her children, and died at the age of seventy. She was born in 1808. Her six children by her marriage to John Scott were: George, who as a youth went to Illinois and never returned; John, who was drowned at the age of eighteen; Andrew True, who became a tanner and is now deceased; Esther Jane, who was married to C. Mathews, former sheriff of Moundsville, and died leaving two children, W. B. Mathews, clerk of the Supreme Court at Charleston, and Mrs. S. H. Sickafosse of Moundsville; Thomas; and Winfield, who was an infant when his father died and he died in 1877.

V. M. Prantz

Thomas Scott was only three years old when his father died. He lived with his mother on the little home, acquired common-school education, and at the age of eighteen began farming. Four years later he leased the farm he still owns, and he now has 344 acres in that district. Mr. Scott is one of the men who greatly improved methods in the live-stock industry in this section of West Virginia. In 1883 he bought some pure-bred Holstein cattle, probably the first in West Virginia, and he developed a herd that are prize winners in many exhibitions and which furnished breeding stock for dairymen throughout this region. Mr. Scott in 1894 built a home at Moundsville, and after 1896 retired from the farm and in July, 1897, opened an office for general real estate. He has sold much of the coal rights under the Round Bottom section. He has been interested in every phase of town development, was active in the Board of Trade, was one of the promoters of the Mercantile Banking & Trust Company, and has been a director since the bank started. He has always avoided public offices. While now a republican he voted in 1884 for St. John, the prohibitionist candidate for President, and is one of the few original prohibitionists who remained loyal by their party until its mission and purpose were achieved in the national prohibition amendment. He frequently served as local chairman of the county.

In 1874 Mr. Scott married Miss Clara Johnson of Monroe county, Ohio. She is survived by two daughters, both living at home. Miss Mary I. is a graduate kindergarten, taught in Pittsburgh and New York City, and is now doing field work for the Wheeling Y. W. C. A. and is also active in the Foreign Mission Society of her church. The second daughter, Norma J., is her father's housekeeper.

LESTER N. FRANTZ, vice president, cashier and active manager of the American Bank & Trust Company of Huntington, has been identified with the organization and management of several prosperous banks in the state, and is also a leading coal operator and widely known business man.

Mr. Frantz was born in Fayette County, West Virginia, June 17, 1882. His first American ancestor came from Holland to New York in the early Dutch colonization period. His grandfather, David Frantz, was born in old Virginia in 1814, and was a pioneer farmer of Greenbrier county, West Virginia, where he married and where he spent the rest of his life, passing away in 1899. Noah D. Frantz, father of the Huntington banker, was born in 1853, spent his early life in old Virginia and married, for several years followed farming in Greenbrier County, and 1879 removed to Fayette County, where he continued his business as a farmer. He died at Huntington in January, 1921. He was a democrat and a member of the United Brethren Church. His wife, Martha Hedrick, now living in Huntington, was born in Greenbrier County in 1857. Lester N. is the oldest of their children. Elsie is the wife of Walter Bailey, a building contractor in Fayette County. Stephen D. is cashier of the Bank of Mullens in Wyoming County. Edna is the wife of H. K. Miles, a farmer in Fayette County. Lacy is in the insurance business in Wyoming County. Truma, the youngest of the family, lives with her mother.

Lester N. Frantz acquired his early education in Fayette County, and at the age of seventeen began teaching in the rural schools of that county. He taught for four years, graduated in 1901 from the Fayetteville Academy in the normal course, and in 1907 completed his commercial education in the Dunsmore Business College of Staunton, Virginia.

Since then for a period of fifteen years Mr. Frantz has been broadening his enterprise and activities in the field of banking and the coal industry. His first experience as a banker was as bookkeeper in the Bank of Mount Hope in Fayette County. He was promoted to assistant cashier, and while thus connected began his coal operations at Mount Hope. In 1910 he organized the Bank of Mullens in Wyoming County, and served as its cashier until 1916, and is now vice president of that institution. He is also president of the First National Bank of Pineville in Wyoming County.

In 1916 Mr. Frantz and his associates bought the controlling interest in the American Bank & Trust Company at Huntington, which was established and chartered as a state bank in 1907. Mr. Frantz is really the active head of this bank, with title of vice president and cashier. Under the present management the bank building at Fourth Avenue and Tenth Street has been remodeled and the company has enjoyed great prosperity, the total resources of the institution aggregating over $1,600,000.

Mr. Frantz is president of the Swastika Silver & Copper Company, owning and operating a large silver mine in Arizona. He is secretary and treasurer of the Kentucky Land Company of Huntington, secretary and treasurer of the Blanchard-Frantz Realty Company of Huntington, and president of the Mullens Smokeless Coal Company of Mullens. He owns a store and office building at 1113 Fourth Avenue and also a splendid home at 1034 Eighth Street.

Mr. Frantz is a member of the West Virginia Bankers Association and has been vice president of the West Virginia section of the American Bankers Association. He has served as a director of the Chamber of Commerce, for two terms was president of the Kiwanis Club of Huntington and has served as district governor of the Kiwanis clubs of West Virginia. He is a democrat, a member of Mullens Lodge, A. F. and A. M., Beckley Chapter, R. A. M., Huntington Commandery No. 9, K. T., West Virginia Consistory of the Scottish Rite at Wheeling, Beni-Kedem Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Charleston, and Huntington Lodge No. 313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is a member of the Huntington Country Club and the Guyandotte Club. During the World war Mr. Frantz was a member of all the committees for the Liberty Loan and Red Cross drives, and was a "Four-Minute" speaker in Cabell County.

In June, 1908, in Fayette County, he married Florence Harland, daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Moon) Harland, the latter a resident of Huntington. Her father was a mining superintendent and died in Fayette County. Mrs. Frantz is a graduate of the Normal School at Montgomery, West Virginia, and she taught in Fayette County three years before her marriage. Seven children have been born to them and constitute the family circle: Ethel, born in 1909; Florence, born in 1911; Dorothy, born in 1913; Lucile, born in 1915; Lester N., Jr., born in 1917; Edna, born in 1919; and Marjorie, born in 1921.

WILLIAM CLIFFORD DE FOREST, M. D. More than a quarter of a century has passed since the Clarksburg community first saw William Clifford De Forest as a physician and surgeon. He has been steadily at work in his vocation and is one of the able medical men of Harrison County.

He was born at Warren, Ohio, March 26, 1866, son of Theodore Remind and Nancy (Van Wye) De Forest. His father was a native of Sharon, Pennsylvania, only a few miles from Warren, Ohio, a son of Isaac De Forest. The name De Forest is of French origin. One branch of the family became Huguenots, and on account of religious persecution were driven from France and came to the American colonies. Many of the prominent men of that name are descended from this earliest ancestor. At one time the De Forest family owned a large part of the farm now occupied by the City of Sharon, Pennsylvania. Theodore R. De Forest was a mining engineer by training and profession. Going over the great plains to the Pacific Coast, and after returning from the West he continued his profession and eventually was connected with some gold and silver mining propositions in Old Virginia.

William C. De Forest spent the first sixteen years of his life at Warren, Ohio, where he attended the public schools. His later education was acquired at Christiansburg, Virginia, and he began the study of medicine there under a local physician. For two terms he attended medical lectures at the Old Virginia Medical College at Richmond, and then entered Baltimore Medical College, now the University of Maryland, where he completed the required course and received his degree in 1895. The following year, after some professional work in Old Virginia, Doctor De Forest located at Sardis, West Virginia, and in 1907 came to Clarksburg, where he has now been steadily in the service of the profession. He is a member of the Harrison County, West Virginia State and American Medical associations. He is also affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

In 1891 Doctor De Forest married at Christiansburg, Virginia, Miss Celia Elizabeth Cummings, who was born and reared in that city. Three children have been born to their marriage: Clayce Remine, William E. and Helen Blanche. These children have been given the very best of educational advantages. The older son, C. R. De Forest, was born at Radford, Virginia, January 22, 1892, finished his high-school education in Clarksburg, took his preliminary medical work in the University of West Virginia at Morgantown, and for a time was assistant instructor in bacteriology and pathology at the university. In 1920 he graduated M. D. from the University of Maryland at Baltimore, and for one year was house surgeon in the Jersey City, New Jersey, Hospital. In September, 1921, he returned to Clarksburg and became actively associated with his father in the practice of medicine and surgery. He is a member of a Greek letter fraternity at Morgantown.

The other son, William E. De Forest, finished his literary education in West Virginia University, and in 1921 graduated in pharmacy from the Max Morris School of Pharmacy at Macon, Georgia. He is now a pharmacist at Clarksburg.

THOMAS S. BONAR at the age of four score is still a familiar figure on the streets of Moundsville, with much of the vigor of his early years and has reached a green old age in spite of a hard service as a soldier in the Civil war and his long continued duties as a farmer and business man since then.

The Bonar family in Marshall County has done its full share in converting the native forests into valuable farms. It is one of the most numerous families in the county, all the members of the present generation tracing their descent from one of three brothers who came here in pioneer times. Many of the descendants of these pioneers have intermarried. They have been numbered among the county's best citizens, and Thomas S. Bonar is especially held in high esteem by all.

The common ancestor of the families was William Bonar who came west from Havre de Grace, Maryland, to the Youghiogheny River in Western Pennsylvania. His sons, John, David and James, were the founders of the family in West Virginia, and all of them lived in Marshall County. John Bonar was born in Western Pennsylvania and married Rebecca Calhoun. Their son, Martin, was the father of Thomas S. Bonar. Martin Bonar was born on Fork Ridge in Marshall County and spent his life here, dying at the age of fifty-three. He cleared up a farm. His wife, Jane Porter, was born near Flossburg, Maryland. Her father, John Porter, had come from Maryland to West Virginia as a young man, married here Susan Major, and they then returned to Maryland where his wife died. When Jane was eight years of age her father brought her and her little sister back to West Virginia to live with her grandmother. Jane Bonar lived on the old homestead until her death at the age of seventy-one. She reared eleven children, and the three survivors are Thomas S., Jesse L. Moundsville and Mary Ann, widow of William Donley Wellsburg, West Virginia. Four of the sons were soldiers in the Civil war, John W., Martin Porter, Thomas S. and James C., all in different commands. Martin Porter was captain Company B of the Twelfth West Virginia Infantry, having recruited the company in Marshall County and served until failing health obliged him to resign his commission.

Thomas S. Bonar who was born on Bowman Ridge, Marshall County, November 14, 1841, was reared and educated there and as a young man served a period in the State Militia. He answered the first call for three year men, joining the First West Virginia Volunteer Infantry and was with that regiment all through the three years. He re-enlisted, but was unable to pass the examination on account of physical disability due to two wounds he received. One was in the shoulder and the other in the hand. When leaning against a post a shell struck the post and practically disabled his shoulder. After the war Thomas S. Bonar engaged in farming on the old homestead which he bought, and he remained active in its responsibilities except for five years when he operated a store at Moundsville. Mr. Bonar made a specialty of sheep raising while on the farm. He has been active in public affairs as a republican, and twice served as deputy sheriff and also as county assessor. Mr. Bonar is a member of Marshall Union Lodge No. 8, A. and A. M., Moundsville Chapter No. 86, R. A. M. He has been a Mason for more than fifty years, his anniversary was celebrated in his lodge April, 1921, upon which occasion he was presented with a past masters gold badge. He also a member of J. C. Caldwell Post No. 21, G. A. R., Department of West Virginia, in which he is serving his second term as junior vice commander of the Department of West Virginia, and in 1914-1915 served as assistant quartermaster general, Department of West Virginia.

He and his good wife have lived together since their marriage in 1865, a period of fifty-six years. Her maiden name was Martha Bonar and they were first cousins. She was a daughter of John and Lucinda (Gorby) Bonar, her father being a brother of Martin Bonar. Mr. and Mrs. Bonar reared seven children: Frank W., a dealer in musical instruments at Denver, Colorado; John Hubert, who died at the age of twenty-three while a student of medicine, Cincinnati; William P., a Moundsville physician to whom further reference is made below; Eustace Irwin, a teacher, Mansfield, Ohio; Martin, a professor of medicine in the State University at Morgantown; Alvilda J., Mrs. John Faust, of Meadowbrook, West Virginia; and Bertha, Mrs. C. D. Kidd, of Adamson, West Virginia.

Dr. William P. Bonar spent two years in preparation for his career in West Virginia University and finished his course in Baltimore. He has since been in practice at Moundsville, and for eleven years has been a lecturer on obstetrics in the Reynolds Training School of the Memorial Hospital at Glendale. He is a member in good standing of the American, State and County Medical associations, a secretary two years and president one year of the county society. He has an extensive practice, and he and his family live at the same residence as his parents. Doctor Bonar married Grace Bonar, daughter of James A. Bonar, also descendant of the original Bonar family of Marshall County. Doctor and Mrs. Bonar have four children, Alma Elfrieda, Naomi Jean, Mathew Dale and Robert Reed.

JAMES D. PARRIOTT. For more than a century the Parriott family have had influential relations with Marshall County and Moundsville. While he therefore represents one of the old families, James D. Parriott, Moundsville attorney, is in every sense a citizen of progressive and advanced ideas, a worker for the welfare of the community and one constantly studying to keep Moundsville abreast with modern progress.

His great-grandfather was Christopher Parriott, who came from England prior to the Revolution and joined the colonists in their war for independence. He enlisted for Maryland, was in Washington's army at Valley Forge, and ouled in the battle of Trenton, and after that war he adoled to Romney, Virginia, where he died in 1820 in advanced years. This patriot had four sons, Joseph, John, ens and William, all of whom settled on the Flats of Creek, in the immediate locality of the modern City Moundsville. These men were not only early settlers but prominent in the affairs of the community. John Parriott represented this district in the Virginia Legislature, and introduced the bill which provided for the creation of Marshall County from part of Ohio County in 1835. He had the name named in honor of Chief Justice Marshall who had recently died. He was a member of the first court of the county and the first sessions of court were held in a Parriott home. John Parriott also served as sheriff of Marshall County. Joseph Parriott, who spent his life here and died at the age of ninety-one was a delegate to the first Annual Convention to consider the problem of erecting a state from the western counties of Virginia. Joseph Parriott was the grandfather of James D. Parriott.

John Parriott's father was the late Capt. George W. Parriott, who had a distinguished record as a Union soldier in the 69th West Virginia Infantry, being promoted from private to captain. He participated in the border warfare and he and his company once succeeded in recapturing the colonel and another part of the regiment which had been taken by the enemy. Captain Parriott died in 1883 at the age of forty-nine. For ten years he had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, closing his ministry at Masontown in Preston County. He married Jane
 A. Marshall, who died in 1920 at the age of 47.

James D. Parriott, youngest of the six children of Captain Parriott, was born at New Martinsville in Wetzel County, on 16, 1880. He attended public schools, the Manning-ton High School, the State University, and graduated in 1907 with the class of 1909. In the meantime he had taught for four years, and from 1903 to 1907 was county superintendent of Marshall County, in a period marked by many progressive changes in the local school system, changes that have given new standards to educational work.

Three years after beginning his law practice Mr. Parriott was elected prosecuting attorney in 1912, and he served for two terms, eight years. In 1914 West Virginia went dry, and he had the responsibility of providing effective enforcement of the state laws in his county. He has been a delegate to state conventions, active in politics, a leader in local patriotism during the war, and a man who can be relied upon to give his support to any undertaking involving the honor and welfare of his locality. Mr. Parriott is a member of the Moundsville Country Club, is active in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is a trustee of West Virginia Wesleyan College. He is a member of West Virginia Societies: Sons of the Revolution, and of Maj. H. W. Hunter Chapter, Sons of Veterans of the Civil War, besides other fraternal orders. He married Miss Bessie Sadler of Fayette County, Pennsylvania. They have three children, Foster, John and Joseph.

JOHN C. SHREVE taught his first school at the age of twenty, and since then has given his complete thought and energy to education as a career. He is regarded as one of the leading authorities on school supervision in the state, and has a successful record as teacher, principal and superintendent.
 Mr. Shreve is now superintendent of the schools of Moundsville.

He was born at Burchfield, Wetzel County, West Virginia, September 13, 1883. His grandfather, Benjamin Shreve, settled in Wetzel County before the Civil war. Silas Shreve, father of Superintendent Shreve, was reared in Clay County and is still living on his farm there. He married Jane Taylor, a native of Greene County, Pennsylvania, but her grandfather was a pioneer of Wetzel County where he took up land. A brother of John C. Shreve is Francis Shreve, of the faculty of the Fairmont State Normal.

John C. Shreve grew up on a farm, attended the district schools and also had some summer normal work to qualify him for teaching. In the intervals of teaching he attended the West Liberty Normal School, where he graduated in 1911, but prior to this had been principal of the Folsom schools and the Jacksonburg schools. In 1914 Mr.

 Shreve received his Bachelor's degree from the West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buckhannon. For two years he was district superintendent of the Lincoln District in Marion County, became principal of the Magnolia High School at New Martinsville one year, was then superintendent of the Clay District schools at Littleton in Wetzel County, and on July 1, 1921, entered upon his duties as superintendent of the City Schools of Moundsville. In 1917
 Mr. Shreve received the Master of Arts degree from Ohio State University.

Moundsville is one of the larger independent school districts of the state. There are five school buildings, with a staff of sixty-eight teachers, and three principals under the superintendent. The high school has a staff of thirteen teachers and an enrollment of 290 while the total enrollment for the city is 2,256.

Mr. Shreve is a member of the State Educational Association and former treasurer of the Northwest Teachers Association. He is a worker in the Methodist Episcopal Church and Mrs. Shreve is active in the Ladies' Aid Society and the Woman's Club of Moundsville.

He married in 1916 Miss Marjorie Olive Hixenbaugh, of Littleton, where she had been a teacher. They have three children: John Willard, Robert Dayton and Frederick Hixenbaugh.

HENRY O. ALESHIRE is vice president of the Huntington National Bank. For nearly thirty years he has been identified with banking institutions in Huntington and is one of the ablest financiers and business men of that city.

Mr. Aleshire was born at Gallipolis, Ohio, April 19, 1869. The Aleshire family is of Scotch-Irish ancestry and was established in Page County, Virginia, in Colonial times.
 Reuben Aleshire, grandfather of the Huntington banker, was born in Loudon County, Virginia, in 1806, and as a young man went to Gallipolis, Ohio, where he married and where he conducted a flour milling business. He died in 1886. His youngest son, James B. Aleshire, had a distinguished record in the American army. He was born at Gallipolis in 1856, son of Reuben and Margaret (Shepard) Aleshire. Margaret Shepard was a native and life-long resident of Gallipolis, where she was born in 1813 and died in 1889. James B. Aleshire graduated from West Point Military Academy in 1880 and has been an army officer forty years. He served as major chief quartermaster of volunteers during the Spanish-American war, in 1901 was appointed to the same rank in the regular army, in 1907 to quartermaster-general and in 1912 was raised to the rank of major-general, chief quartermaster, and served until retired for disability September 12, 1916. General Aleshire is an uncle of the Huntington banker. Edward S. Aleshire, father of Henry O., was born at Gallipolis, Ohio, in 1842 and for many years was in the flour milling industry in that city. In 1896 he removed to Huntington, West Virginia, and became manager for the Armour & Company branch house in this city. He died at Huntington in 1904. He was a democrat, very attentive to his duties as a member of the Episcopal Church, and was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity. He also had a military record, gained in the Civil war. He was mustered into service May 23, 1862, in the Eighty-seventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He was appointed first lieutenant of Company A of that regiment June 9, 1862, and was mustered out October 1, 1862. He re-enlisted and was made captain of Company F, Second Ohio Heavy Artillery, August 29, 1863, and served until mustered out August 23, 1865. With the Eighty-seventh Ohio he participated in the siege and battle at Harpers
 Ferry and in the surrender of that post on September 15, 1862. As a captain of the Second Ohio Heavy Artillery, he commanded Fort Lytle at Bowling Green, Kentucky, from October 11, 1863, to May 26, 1864, and was member of the General Court Martial at Bowling Green and member of the General Court Martial at Louisville. In May, 1864, he moved with his command to Charleston, Tennessee, where he engaged with the enemy under General Wheeler. Afterward he moved to Loudon and then to Knoxville, and commanded Fort Dickinson at Knoxville and was judge advocate General Court Martial and Military Commission, Twenty-third Army Corps, Army of the Ohio.

Capt. Edward S. Aleshire married Justine Onderdonk, who was born in New York State in 1845 and resides at 1143 Sixth Avenue in Huntington. They were the parents of seven children: Walter, who died at the age of seventeen; Henry O.; Edward S., Jr., secretary and treasurer of the Standard Printing & Publishing Company of Huntington; R. P. Aleshire, a prominent citizen of Huntington; Halsey W., member of H. W. Aleshire Company, merchandise broker at Huntington; Morris B., whose address is 250 Fifth Avenue, New York City, where he is in the advertising business; and Justine, who died in infancy.

Henry O. Aleshire was educated in the public schools of Gallipolis, Ohio, graduated from high school, and in 1892 removed to Huntington, where he entered the First National Bank as bookkeeper and was promoted to teller. After a few years he became bookkeeper and teller for the Commercial National Bank of Huntington, and with that institution served several years. For about five years he was bookkeeper and teller for the Huntington National Bank. He then returned to the First National as teller, and for three and a half years was office manager at Lynchburg, Virginia, for Armour & Company. On his return to Huntington Mr. Aleshire again served with the First National Bank as teller a year and a half, and when the First Trust Company & Savings Bank was organized in 1910 he was elected secretary and treasurer, holding that office until the company was absorbed by the First National Bank. Then with other associates he organized the Day and Night Bank of Huntington, which opened for business March 25, 1912. Mr. Aleshire was cashier and later vice president and executive head of the Day and Night Bank. January 1, 1920, it was absorbed by the Huntington National Bank, and Mr. Aleshire joined the latter institution and has since been vice president.

During the World war he was associated with all the local patriotic activities, was a "Four-Minute" speaker, and Governor Cornwell appointed him a member of the State Council of Defense and he was county chairman under appointment from W. G. McAdoo for the third, fourth and fifth loan campaigns. He is a democrat, treasurer and vestryman of the Episcopal Church, member of the Guyandotte Club, Huntington Country Club, Old Colony Club and Huntington Lodge No. 313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Mr. Aleshire has one of the most attractive homes on the South Side, at 1001 Twelfth Avenue.

In 1902, at Huntington, he married Miss Grace Shepard, daughter of Calvin and Margaret C. (Menager) Shepard. Her mother, living with Mr. and Mrs. Aleshire, is descended from one of the pioneer French families of Gallipolis, Ohio. Her father, now deceased, owned and operated salt mines near Pomeroy, Ohio. Mrs. Aleshire finished her education in private schools in Cincinnati and Pittsburgh.

JOHN H. GORBY is in the fifteenth consecutive year of his service as superintendent of city schools of New Martinsville. For his record here and elsewhere he is one of the leading schoolmen of the state, and he represents a family of long standing and prominent associations with Wetzel County.

Mr. Gorby was born at Bellaire, Ohio, November 20, 1873. However, both his father and grandfather were native West Virginians. His grandfather, William Gorby, was born in 1820, and spent his active life as a farmer near New Martinsville where he died in 1917. Jesse K. Gorby, father of Superintendent Gorby, was born at New Martinsville, July 2, 1846, but was married and lived for a few years at Bellaire, Ohio. He later returned to Wetzel County and has a long record of active participation in the farming and fruit growing of this section. He now lives in New Martinsville, but is associated with his six children in the ownership and operation of a splendid fruit farm three miles east of New Martinsville. Jesse K. Gorby served as a member of the Board of Education of the Magnolia District number of years, is a republican, is prominent in Methodist Episcopal Church, having served as class leader and as Sunday school superintendent. During the Civil he enlisted in the Second West Virginia Veteran Regiment Company I, and served eighteen months. Jesse K. G. married Mary Shirley, who was born in England in 1841 and died at the old home farm in 1902. Their six children were: Ella, wife of Rev. Adison E. Barnes, who was a forty-two years in his profession as a minister of Methodist Episcopal Church. He and his wife are retired at New Martinsville. John H.; Charles T., member of the firm Gorby Brothers, grocery merchants at Martinsville; Ida May, wife of Lewis Oneacre, a drugist at New Martinsville; George I., associated with the Chase Store Company at Pasadena, California; Kersey J. of the firm Gorby Brothers at New Martinsville.

John H. Gorby grew up on the old homestead in Wetzel County, attended rural schools, the high school at New Martinsville, and in 1902 graduated in the scientific normal courses from the West Virginia Conference Seminary, now West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buckhannon. In the meantime at the age of eighteen he had begun teaching and for seven years was in rural school work in Wetzel County. Then followed his college work at Buckhannon three years and during 1902-04 he was a teacher in grammar schools at New Martinsville; was principal of the West Side School at Grafton from 1904 to 1907, and the latter year was made superintendent of the New Martinsville schools. In fourteen years he has maintained a steady growing efficiency in public school work, and because of length of his service has had the pleasure of seeing many of his early plans mature and result in great benefit to the entire school system of his district, which employs fifty teachers and has an enrollment of 1,500 pupils.

Mr. Gorby has constantly kept in touch with advanced educational methods, attending summer schools at the Virginia University and Wesleyan College. He has the B. degree from Wesleyan College. His own home, a modern residence at 714 Maple Avenue, New Martinsville. Mr. Gorby is superintendent of the Sunday School of Methodist Episcopal Church and is a member of the official board and chairman of the Finance Committee of the church. He is a worker in the County and State Teachers associations, and a member of the National Education Association. He is affiliated with Wetzel Lodge No. 39, A. O. U. and A. M. Mr. Gorby during the war devoted much of his time to building up patriotic sentiment in the schools, also took part in the loan and other campaigns throughout the county. He was food administrator of the county, chairman of the Junior Red Cross of the county, and "Four-Minute" speaker. Mr. Gorby served as president of the Wetzel County Farm Bureau from February, 1918, until July, 1921, when he resigned.

In 1908 he married Miss Irene Bucher, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Bucher, who live on a farm near New Martinsville. Mrs. Gorby was a trained nurse.

CHARLES FREDERICK WIENEKE had an active association with the business and civic life of Moundsville for twenty years, and in 1921 he entered upon his duties as mayor of the city. His administration has been commended as one of the most progressive municipal governments of the state.

Mr. Wieneke was born near Wheeling in Ohio County, February 7, 1876, son of Edward and Elizabeth (Fisher) Wieneke. His father was a native of Bremen, Germany, came to the United States when a young man, and has spent his active career in the dairy business. He married Elizabeth Fisher in Ohio County, where she was born, a daughter of Charles Fisher, a pioneer of Wheeling.

Charles F. Wieneke was reared and educated near Wheeling, and at the age of twenty-one left home and on October 8, 1902, came to Moundsville as clerk in the Postoria Gum Company. He was in the offices of that company six years. During the past two years Mr. Wieneke has operated a vulcanizing and tire repair shop, and has a prosperous business as a dealer in tires and automobile accessories.

M. J. Ferguson

is a democrat in politics, and in April, 1921, was elected mayor in a republican city, beginning his official term on the first of May. His has been a non-partisan and honest administration. He has surrounded himself with capable men handling the various departments of the municipality. Moundsville has a paid fire department of four engines with suitable apparatus, the pressure being furnished by a reservoir on the hill above the city at an elevation of over 200 feet. There is a police chief with three patrolmen, and the general public utilities are operated by private companies. Mr. Wieneke has kept city improvements moving forward, including paving and sewer construction. Mayor Wieneke is unmarried. He is a popular member of the Knights of Pythias and Independent Order of Odd Fellows and is a member of the Calvary Methodist Episcopal Church.

DAVID C. LUTES, a leading undertaker and funeral director in the City of Moundsville, Marshall County, was born in the Bowman Ridge District of this county, October 13, 1859, a son of William and Nancy (Jefferson) Lutes. William Lutes passed his entire life in Marshall County and was a farmer by vocation, as had also been his father, David Lutes, who was one of the early settlers in the Taylor's Ridge District of this county. William Lutes was eighty-two years of age at the time of his death and his wife died at the age of eighty years. Of their children seven attained to maturity: Isabel (Mrs. G. W. Carmichael) died at the age of twenty-six years; Mary A. is the wife of J. E. Fish and resides on a farm near the old Lutes homestead; Elizabeth J. is the wife of R. G. Dakan, a merchant at Rosebys Rock, this county; Amanda M. is the wife of Oscar Yeaders, a merchant near the old Lutes homestead farm, which is owned by his wife; John J. owns and operates a part of the home place; David C., of this sketch, was the next in line of birth; and James I. is a retired merchant residing in Glen Easton, this county.

David C. Lutes was reared on the home farm, received the advantages of the public schools of the locality and continued his association with farm enterprise for six years before his marriage. He thereafter conducted for eleven years a general store at Rosebys Rock, and after disposing of this business, in 1902, he removed to Moundsville, the city seat, where he established and has since conducted a well ordered undertaking business, with the best of modern facilities and equipment. In his store he has also developed a prosperous trade in the handling of wall paper and chinaware. He is a stalwart democrat but has invariably refused to become a candidate for public office.

At the age of nineteen years Mr. Lutes wedded Miss Alice Taylor, who likewise was born and reared in the Bowman Ridge District of Marshall County. They have four children: Charles Grover resides at McMechen, Marshall County, and is in the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company; Harry H. likewise resides at McMechen; Clarence R. is associated with his father, in charge of the wall paper and chinaware department of the business; Clarence A., who is the wife of J. Herbert Riggs, a traveling salesman, lives at Moundsville, is a valued assistant in connection with his father's undertaking business, she having been the second woman in West Virginia to receive a license as an embalmer.

EDWARD C. GRISELL was numbered among the representative business men and most highly honored citizens of Moundsville, Marshall County, at the time of his death, which here occurred on the 3d of March, 1919. He was born at Jerusalem, Monroe County, Ohio, February 21, 1854, and was a son of Rev. Simeon Grisell, who was a minister of the Society of Friends and who came with his family to Marshall County, West Virginia, and established his home at Rocky Run. Here he continued his ministerial services a number of years, and he then removed to Bartley, Nebraska, in which state he became a pioneer and in which he remained until his death, when somewhat more than eighty years of age. The lineage of the Grisell family traces back to Spanish origin, and it is interesting to record that one of the battles of the great World war was fought on Grisselle Ridge, the ancestral home of the family. Representatives of the name went from France to England, and thence came three brothers of the name to America, one settling in Pennsylvania and two in Ohio.

Edward C. Grisell was a young man at the time of the family removal to Marshall County, his early education having been acquired in the schools of his native state, where he became a successful teacher in the rural schools of his native county and where also he learned the carpenter's trade. In 1879 he found employment in the cradle factory of J. A. Schwob, at Moundsville, West Virginia, and after the death of Mr. Schwob he became a partner with the latter's two sons, J. W. and C. C., in continuing the manufacturing business, under the title of J. A. Schwob Company. In 1891 an undertaking department was added to the business, and of this department Mr. Grisell had charge at the time when the factory was destroyed by fire, in August, 1910. He thereupon purchased the undertaking department, and sold his interest in the other part of the business. Under the title of Grisell & Son the undertaking enterprise has since been continued, the son having assumed full charge of the enterprise after the death of the honored father. Mr. Grisell was an earnest member of the First Methodist Church of Moundsville, as is also his widow; he was a member of the local lodge of Elks and in the Masonic fraternity had received Scottish Rite degrees, besides being a member of the Mystic Shrine. He was one of the prominent figures in the Masonic fraternity in West Virginia and had served as district deputy grand master and district deputy grand lecturer of the Masonic grand lodge of the state. He was a liberal and public-spirited citizen, served as a member of the board of education and was always ready to support measures advanced for the best interests of the community. A man of genial personality and highest integrity, he commanded unqualified popular confidence and esteem.

April 1, 1880, recorded the marriage of Mr. Grisell to Miss Amelia L. Schwob, and he is survived by two children, Elmer F., who continued the undertaking business of the firm, and Mrs. Harry Kern, of McMechen, this county. The son is well upholding the prestige of the family name, in both civic and business relations. As a professional embalmer he holds licenses in both West Virginia and Ohio. He is a republican in politics, as was also his father. He married Miss Bessie M. Conner, of Marshall County, and they have two sons, Elwood and Curtis.

MILTON JAMESON FERGUSON. In financial and business circles of Huntington the name of Milton Jameson Ferguson is recognized as one of the most capable and successful business men of his day and city. In the capacity of vice president he is the active head of the Ohio Valley Bank, and his identification with numerous other enterprises of an important character entitles him to the recognition which is his and the respect and confidence in which he is held. He is a native of Wayne County, West Virginia, and was born July 13, 1869, his parents being William S. and Sarah Alice (Bing) Ferguson.

The Ferguson family originated in Scotland and was transplanted to America during Colonial times, when the original immigrants settled in Virginia. Jameson Ferguson, the grandfather of Milton J., was born in Wayne County, Virginia (now West Virginia), and there spent his entire life as a successful farmer, dying in 1869. He married Cynthia Walker, also a native of Virginia, who likewise passed away in Wayne County. His father had been a pioneer of that locality and devoted his career to the pursuits of agriculture.

William S. Ferguson was born in 1834, in Wayne County, where he was reared and married. Brought up as an agriculturist, he followed that vocation during the early years of his life, but became interested in medicine and eventually pursued a course at the Cincinnati School of Medicine, from which he was graduated with his professional degree. During the last twenty-five years of his career he followed medicine and surgery in Wayne County, gaining a high place in his calling and winning the affection and trust of a large practice, and died suddenly in 1905, while on a visit to Lexington, Kentucky. He was a democrat in politics. Doctor Ferguson married Sarah Alice Bing, who was born August 30, 1827, in Meigs County, Ohio, and died in January, 1906, in Wayne County, and they became the parents of the following children: John B., an attorney at law, who died at Tracy City, Tennessee, May 4, 1918; Sarah Alice, who died at the age of four years; Byron Lee, who died at the age of three years; William Webster, who died when two and one-half years old; Bernard Llewellyn, who passed away at the age of twenty-four years; Milton Jameson, of this review; and Eva Jane, residing on the old homestead in Wayne County, the widow of James T. Dickerson, a teacher in the public schools, who died in Wayne County in 1914.

Milton Jameson Ferguson received his early education in the public schools of Wayne County, following which he attended Fairview High School at Wayne and the United States Military Academy at West Point. After one year he left the latter institution, in 1889. Prior to this, when only sixteen years of age, he had commenced teaching school in Wayne County, and on leaving the military academy he resumed teaching, which he had followed on and off during the time he was completing his education. His career as an educator covered six years of teaching, and was terminated in 1891, when he entered the First National Bank of Huntington in the capacity of collection clerk and bookkeeper. He won promotion during the eighteen years that followed to the position of assistant cashier, but in April, 1909, resigned his post with the First National to accept the trusteeship of the Hutchinson Lumber Company at Huntington. In September of the same year he severed his connection with this concern and became cashier of the American Bank and Trust Company of Huntington, remaining therewith three years and four months, and in January, 1913, resigned and organized the Ohio Valley Bank of Huntington, of which he became cashier. He was elected vice president in January, 1916, and retains this position today, his fellow-officials being: Dr. H. D. Hatfield, president; second vice president, H. C. Warth; and E. McClane, cashier. The Ohio Valley Bank of Huntington has capital stock of $150,000, surplus and profits of $45,000, and deposits of $1,000,000, and is one of the successful and highly regarded banking houses of this part of the state. Mr. Ferguson also has other interests, being president of the Central States Granite Company, president of the Parker Paint and Wall Paper Company and member of the advisory board of the West Virginia Mortgage and Discount Corporation of Charleston, West Virginia. He owns a modern residence at No. 1131 Fifth Avenue, one of the comfortable homes of Huntington, in addition to which he is the possessor of the old home farm in Wayne County, a fruit farm in Cabell County and a seven and one-half-acre homestead on the Guyan River.

Fraternally Mr. Ferguson is a thirty-second degree Mason and holds membership in Huntington Lodge No. 53, A. F. and A. M.; Huntington Lodge of Perfection No. 4, A. & A. S. R.; Huntington Rose Croix Chapter No. 4, A. & A. S. R.; West Virginia Consistory No. 1, of Wheeling; and Beni-Kedem Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Charleston. His political tendencies make him a republican, although he has not taken an active part in politics. However, he is a public-spirited citizen, possessed of civic pride, and supports all worthy movements. During the World War he was prominent all the time in local war activities, helping in all the drives for all purposes, contributing to the various patriotic organizations to the limit of his means, buying bonds and War Savings Stamps liberally and being especially active in the Liberty Bond drives.

On June 3, 1896, Mr. Ferguson married at Huntington Miss Annie C. Ellis, a daughter of Jacob L. and Ann (Carr) Ellis, both now deceased. Mrs. Ferguson was born November 25, 1868, at Buffalo, Putnam County, West Virginia, and died October 23, 1903, at Huntington, having been the mother of three children: Lillian Ellis, born April 10, 1897, a graduate of Marshall College, Huntington, and of Eastern College, Manassas, Virginia, who later attended New York University, and is now the wife of Dr. Arthur

H. McFarland, a physician and surgeon of Minneapolis; Kathleen Bing, born October 8, 1898, a graduate of West Virginia University, who attended Wellesley College, and is now a teacher in the Junior High School, Huntington, residing with her father; and Milton Carr, born October 9, 1903, a student of West Virginia University, Morgantown. On August 4, 1910, at Huntington, Miss J. Ferguson married Miss Helen K. Baum, a graduate of the Dayton (Kentucky) High School, and daughter of Nicholas J. and Louisa (Weinmann) Baum, residents of Huntington, where Mr. Baum is vice president of Paragon Printing and Publishing Company. Mr. and Mrs. Ferguson have one daughter, Helen Louise, born November 4, 1913, who is now attending the Huntington grade schools.

THOMAS M. RICHARDS has shown distinctive resourcefulness and executive ability in his progressive administration of the extensive business of the Richwood Store Company, which conducts a chain of general stores, with headquarters establishment in the vigorous little city of Richwood, Nicholas County.

Mr. Richards was born at Scranton, Pennsylvania, October 10, 1868, and is a son of David T. and Margaret (Carr) Richards, the former of whom was born at Carbon, Pennsylvania, December 25, 1833, and the latter of whom was born at St. Clair, that state, in 1835. The father graduated in a well conducted seminary in the old Maryland state, and for many years he was engaged in the mercantile business, he being now one of the venerable, highly honored citizens of Scranton, Pennsylvania, where the death of his wife occurred. He has been for many years in active affiliation with the Blue Lodge and Chapter bodies of the Masonic fraternity, and in the former a past master. His political support is given unreservedly to the republican party. Of the seven children four living at the time of this writing, in 1922: Mary A., widow of W. W. Patterson; Thomas M., of this sketch; the next younger; Miss Anna M., remains with her venerable father; and Edith is the wife of F. W. Mansfield.

Thomas M. Richards is indebted to the public schools of his native state for his youthful education, and he has been actively identified with mercantile business from early youth to the present time, the while his career has been marked by consecutive advancement. In the place of his residence at Richwood, West Virginia, he has been an exponent of civic as well as business progressiveness, has been a ready supporter of measures and enterprises that have tended to conserve the best interests of the community. He was one of the organizers and served as vice president of the First National Bank of Richwood, the largest and most substantial banking institution in Nicholas County. In 1905 Mr. Richards became manager of a general store at Richwood, and since the Richwood Store Company was organized and incorporated he has been general manager of its chain of stores in this section of the state.

Mr. Richards is loyally aligned in the ranks of the republican party, and is a trustee of the Presbyterian Church at Richwood. In the Masonic fraternity he is affiliated with Hyde Park Lodge No. 339, A. F. and A. M.; Richwood Chapter No. 87, R. A. M.; Sutton Commandery No. 16, Knights Templar; and Beni-Kedem Temple of the Mystic Shrine in the City of Charleston. He is a member also of Clarksburg Lodge No. 482, B. P. O. E., and of Lackawanna Council of the Royal Arcanum.

In the State of Pennsylvania was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Richards and Miss Jeannette A. Penwell, and her death occurred in 1919, the surviving children being four in number: Thomas R., a graduate of the Richwood High School, is now his father's business assistant; Margaret A., likewise a high-school graduate, was graduated also from the West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buckhannon, and she now holds a position in the First National Bank of Richwood; Eldon graduated from the local school and is, in 1922, a student in Lafayette College; and David P. is a lad of nine years. For his second wife, Mr. Richards wedded Miss Juvia J. Martin, of Spartanburg,

John A. Dill

Pennsylvania, and she is the popular chateleine of their home at Richwood. To this union was born a son, Harold Lee, on April 11, 1922.

HAPMAN L. BORDEN is identified with important business interests in the City of Bluefield, and aside from this is known and valued as a progressive and loyal citizen who has deep interest in all that concerns the communal welfare.

Mr. Borden was born at Blacksburg, Montgomery County, Virginia, September 13, 1873, and is a son of J. H. and Margaret Borden. The father was for many years actively identified with the stone-construction work of the Norfolk and Western Railroad, and in later years he resided upon and under his supervision to his farm, situated between Blacksburg and Christiansburg, in Montgomery County, Virginia, where he remained until his death, at the age of seventy-years. He was a Confederate soldier in the Civil war, was wounded while taking part in an engagement at Fryer's Ferry. In post-bellum days he became a staunch supporter of the principles of the republican party, and he and his wife were earnest members of the Christian Church. Mrs. Borden likewise having been seventy-six years of age at the time of her death. Of their five children the eldest of this review is the eldest.

Hapman L. Borden supplemented his public-school education by an agricultural course in the Virginia Polytechnic Institute at Blacksburg, he having been reared on the homestead farm. In the administration of President Harrison the father of Mr. Borden was appointed postmaster at Cambria, the name of the railway station of Christiansburg, Virginia. The father resigned this office the day that Grover Cleveland was inaugurated president of the United States, but in the meanwhile the subject of his sketch had become assistant postmaster under his father and had virtual charge of the Post Office at Cambria. Thereafter he became steward of the Bluefield Inn at Bluefield, West Virginia, a hotel then conducted by the Norfolk & Western Railroad Company for the benefit of the employed in construction work for that road. At the expiration of one year Mr. Borden was appointed clerk and bookkeeper of this hotel, in which dual office he continued for years. For the ensuing four years he was timekeeper of the Pocahontas division of the Norfolk & Western Railroad, and the next three years found him in service as assistant car distributor for the same system. He then became local manager of the Atwater interests at Bluefield, in which responsible position he has since continued the efficient incumbent. He was associated with the organization of the Mutual Bank & Trust Company, and since its consolidation with the Bluefield National Bank he has continued a director of the latter. He is likewise a director of the Bluefield Hardware Company.

Mr. Borden is an active member of the Bluefield Chamber of Commerce, is a republican in political allegiance and a member of the Bluefield Country Club and the Rotary Club. He and his wife are zealous communicants of the local parish of the Protestant Episcopal Church, in which he is serving as a member of the vestry and as a member of the building committee to supervise the erection of a new church edifice.

On the 20th of October, 1901, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Borden and Miss Arabella Rigby, daughter of Mrs. Rigby, she having been born in the State of Ohio, where her parents established their home upon coming from England to this country. Mr. and Mrs. Borden have one son, James C.

JAMES W. GARVIN is one of the leading business men of the City of Monrovia, Marshall County, where he is president of the City and County Bank and also of the Crystal Sand Company. He was born in Ohio County, West Virginia, in August, 1863, and is a son of David B. Garvin, who was born in Pennsylvania and who was a child of about one year at the time when his father, James Garvin, settled on a farm about two miles distant from Wheeling, West Virginia, this farm being now owned by J. C. Garvin, brother of him whose name introduces this paragraph.

James W. Garvin was reared on the home farm, received the advantages of the country schools of the locality, and he continued his active association with farm enterprise until 1896, when he opened a small general store at Monrovia, the business which he thus established being now one of the oldest in this city. Eventually he confined his business exclusively to dry goods, and from a modest inception the enterprise has grown to one of most prosperous order. He continued the business in an individual way until 1908, when he admitted O. V. Ault to partnership, and it has so continued to the present time. The Crystal Sand Company, of which he is president, controls a substantial business in the sale of cement, wall-plaster, sand, gravel, etc., and Mr. Garvin finds much demand upon his time and attention also in directing the policies of the City and County Bank, of which he is president and of which specific mention is made following.

Mr. Garvin was a member of the Monrovia Board of Education nine years, and was president of the board at the time of the erection of the present modern school buildings. He is one of the loyal and liberal business men and influential citizens of Monrovia, where he has achieved success through his own ability and well directed efforts. He and his wife are zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in their home city, and he is its treasurer, as well as a member of its board of trustees.

Mr. Garvin married Miss Clara Ward, of Kirksville, Iowa, in which state she was born and reared, and they have five children: Ray W. is an employee of the Clarksburg Export, at Clarksburg, this state, and is a successful young newspaper man; Marie is a member of the class of 1922 in the West Virginia Wesleyan College, at Buckhannon; Dean is a commercial salesman; and Reed and Lotta are the younger members of the parental home circle, the former being a high-school student.

THE CITY AND COUNTY BANK in the City of Monrovia, judicial center of Marshall County, is one of the substantial and well ordered banking institutions of this section of the state. It was organized and incorporated in 1912, in May of which year it initiated business. Its original capital stock of $25,000 was increased to $50,000 in the year 1918, and the following year recorded its increase to the present paid-in capital of $100,000. The bank now has a surplus fund of $15,000, and its deposits at the time of its report, June 30, 1921, aggregated $332,097.22.

B. F. Hodgman, the chief promoter in the establishing of this representative financial institution, has continued from the beginning a member of its board of directors, and James W. Garvin has been president of the bank from the time of its incorporation. W. E. Peabody, first vice president, and F. Harris, second vice president, likewise have served as such from the inception of the business, and John Fish, the original cashier, is now cashier of a bank at Sistersville, Tyler County. The second cashier was Benjamin Peabody, and in 1916 he was succeeded by the present incumbent, A. D. Ayres. The well equipped building utilized by the bank was purchased for the purpose in 1918 and was fully remodeled, modern safety vaults of the best type being installed and also an improved type of burglar alarm.

CLARENCE BROWN DILLE has been a member of the Morgantown bar for forty-three years, and among its distinguished members. By his learning, industry, ability and character he holds a high rank, while he is no less valued in the community as a liberal minded and enterprising citizen. He was born at Kingwood, Preston County, West Virginia, May 28, 1857, and is a son of the late Judge John Adams and Linnie Suter (Brown) Dille.

The Dille family has been identified with the affairs of Morgantown, of Monongalia County and of the State of West Virginia for three-quarters of a century, and for two generations has held honorable place at the bar of the county. The founder of the family in Monongalia County and, perhaps, its most distinguished member was the late Judge John Adams Dille, of Morgantown, who was born in Washington County, Pennsylvania, July 19, 1821. He was the son of Ezra Dille, a native of New Jersey, who settled at Prosperity, Washington County, Pennsylvania, early in the nineteenth century, where he married a daughter of David McFarland and sister of Maj. Samuel M. McFarland. The McFarland family was prominent in Washington County prior to the Revolutionary war. Daniel McFarland, great-grandfather of Clarence B. Dille, held the rank of colonel in the American Army during the struggle for the winning of American independence, and had command of the organization known as the "Rangers," who were volunteers from Monongalia County, Virginia, which county extended at that time from Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, to the Gauley River, Virginia, in service on what was then the frontier. His son, John McFarland, was a captain in the American Army and was killed at the battle of Lundy's Lane, his sword, which was held tightly grasped in his hand in death, being one of the prized possessions of Clarence B. Dille. Maj. Samuel McFarland, son of Daniel McFarland, was an attorney of Washington County, Pennsylvania, for many years. He was an ardent abolitionist, and in 1856 was the candidate of the abolition party for the office of vice president of the United States. He willed his fortune "to the Freedmen," but the will was broken, his family becoming his heirs.

John Adams Dille was educated in the free schools of Pennsylvania and at Greene Academy, near Washington, Pennsylvania, (now Washington and Jefferson College), an institution which he entered in 1839, taking the full course. Poor health caused him to leave school before he graduated, but later he received his Master of Arts degree. In the spring of 1843 he came to Kingwood, Preston County, West Virginia (then old Virginia), where during that and the following year he read law and taught a select school, which school later became known as Preston Academy. He was licensed to practice law in March, 1844, entered upon his professional career at Kingwood in the same year, and in 1845 became a member of the law firm of Brown and Dille, the senior member of which was the Hon. William G. Brown, the law preceptor of the junior member. This association was terminated in 1849, when Judge Dille became senior member of the law firm of Dille and Hagans, the junior member being the Hon. M. B. Hagans, which association continued until the removal of Mr. Hagans to Cincinnati in 1850, when he was elevated to the bench.

Judge Dille early won a prominent place at the Preston County bar and became active in public affairs of the community generally. He served as a delegate from Preston County in the Constitutional Convention of West Virginia in 1861, in which body he was conspicuous as a member of the committee of judiciary and county organizations, and after the framing of the constitution went before the people of different sections of the state, where his efforts had much to do with its adoption. He was also one of the distinguished citizens sent to the national capital for the purpose of the admission of the new state of West Virginia into the Union. In 1862 Judge Dille was elected, without opposition, to the office of judge of the Second Judicial Circuit, composed of the counties of Monongalia, Preston, Taylor and Tucker and was re-elected and remained on the bench until 1873. In the fall of 1864 Judge Dille removed his residence to Morgantown, where, after he left the bench, he entered private practice and looked after his landed estates in Monongalia and Preston counties. His death, which was widely mourned, occurred December 19, 1896.

In 1819 Judge Dille was united in marriage with Rachel Jane Hagans, daughter of the late Elisha M. Hagans, of Kingwood, West Virginia. Mrs. Dille, who was a graduate of Washington (Pennsylvania) Seminary, died April 12, 1852, leaving one son, Oliver Hagans Dille. In 1853 Judge Dille married Linnie Suter Brown, a daughter of Thomas Brown, of Kingwood, and a graduate of Washington (Pennsylvania) Seminary. She bore him a son and a daughter: Clarence Brown, and Mary, who married Prof. F. L. Emery, who was a distinguished professor of mechanics in the West Virginia University and who departed this life December 31, 1919. Mrs. Dille died in 1905.

Clarence Brown Dille attended the public schools in boyhood and youth and was then sent to the University of West Virginia, from which he secured his Bachelor of Arts degree in 1877 and his Bachelor of Laws degree in 1880. In the meantime he took a six-year course at Chautauque. He was admitted to the bar of West Virginia in September, 1878, and in that year entered practice at Morgantown in association with his father, under the firm name of Dille and Dille, which partnership was terminated by the death of the senior member in 1896. From the year 1900 to 1914 Clarence B. Dille was the senior member. Dille and Dille, Thomas Roy Dille, his nephew, being the junior member. Since the latter year he has practiced alone. Mr. Dille's legal talents are of a solid rather than a showy character. He is thoroughly grounded in elementary principles and possessed of a fine discrimination in the application of legal precedents. While he is a fluent speaker, his style is argumentative and noticeable for purity and accurate use of words. He is a thorough scholar, not only in the learning of the law, but in general literature. Mr. Dille is a ruling elder in the First Presbyterian Church of Morgantown.

On January 18, 1915, he was united in marriage with Miss Lucy Beltzhoover, a daughter of the Hon. George W. Beltzhoover, an attorney of Sheperdstown, West Virginia, who has been in practice at that place for more than fifty years and is a leading member of the bar.

RICHARD JASPER MCFADDEN, a leading contractor of Moundsville and a valued member of the Board of Commissioners of Marshall County, was born on a farm about four miles distant from Moundsville, on the Waynesburg Road, January 7, 1859, a son of Galbraith S. and Permelia Hill (Morton) McFadden, the former of whom was born at West Middleton, Washington County, Pennsylvania, August 25, 1825, and the latter of whom was born June 18, 1832. Both of the parents died in 1905, the father on the 8th of November and the mother on the 12th of February. Their son Thomas having died in September of the same year. Galbraith S. McFadden was a son of James J. Fadden, a native of Ireland, whose wife was a Miss Stunt and a representative of the historic Stuart clan of Scotland. Within a short period after his marriage James McFadden established his residence in Washington County, Pennsylvania, and later he became postmaster and a justifier of the peace at Buena Vista, that state. He was sixty-eight years of age at the time of his death and his wife lived to the age of ninety-one years.

Galbraith S. McFadden was a venturesome youth, twenty-two years when he made the long overland journey to California, with a wagon and ox team. He built the first sixty-foot over-shot water wheel in California, the same being used for the operation of a pioneer stamp mill at Placerville. He remained in California about eight months, then returned and at Moundsville, Virginia (then West Virginia), he married Permelia Hill Morton, daughter of Richard Morton, a farmer and real estate dealer, most of whose realty at Moundsville, on Seventh Street, still remains in the possession of his descendants. The old Mormon homestead was on Parris Run. Galbraith S. McFadden erected a hotel on the old Morton House site in 1875, which was originally known as the Mound City Hotel. Prior to his marriage Mr. McFadden made a second overland trip to California. On his first trip he had taken with him a dog from Pennsylvania, and at Salt Lake City he left this animal in care of Brigham Young, head of the Mormon Church. On the return trip he brought the dog with him, though Young was reluctant to part with it, as he had become attached to the animal. In the period prior to the Civil war Mr. McFadden visited the Southern States and became indignant at the treatment accorded to slaves. His opinions were expressed freely and caused him to become obnoxious to the Southern planters, from whom he escaped through the aid of an aged negro whom he befriended. After his marriage he passed six years in the farm of his father-in-law, near Moundsville. He had ability as an architect and drew the plans for the West Virginia penitentiary buildings, including the warden's house.

reserved as warden of the prison four years and eight months, and within his regime only one prisoner made a permanent escape. He had great faith in the future of Goddsville and he erected numerous buildings, established saw mills, opened coal mines on the opposite side of the river, and was one of the leaders in progressive enterprise in his day. To prevent the historic Indian mound that is a title to the city from being used as a beer garden, he bought the property, which he retained until his death, the same being now owned by the state and maintained as a park, in accord with provision made incidental to the sale of the property. He was a staunch republican and served two terms in the West Virginia Legislature. When a considerable number of years he was so desirous of once more visiting the Pacific coast that he set forth on the trip, in company with his son Richard J., and they were at Salem, Oregon, when he was suddenly stricken with illness that terminated his life. Of the children Richard J. is the eldest; James Adams and Margaret died in infancy; Ella is the wife of William F. Steifel, of Wheeling; William H. resides at New Orleans; Elizabeth Bell is the wife of W. F. Weaver, of Pittsburgh; and Thomas died in December, 1905.

Richard J. McFadden received somewhat limited educational advantages and by self-discipline has effectively overcome this handicap. As a young man he followed various occupations in different sections of the Union, and was for some time located at Sault Ste. Marie, Canada. He was employed in erecting steel cranes for steel mills, and in grading work and house-moving, and finally he engaged in contracting, in street paving, sewer construction, railroad construction, etc. He has filled important contracts in bank street-paving, and in his substantial contracting business he has employed at times as many as fifty men. He served four years as a member of the City Council of Wheeling and was once a candidate for nomination for the West Virginia Legislature. In 1921 he is serving his third year as a commissioner of Marshall County, and in his election he has the largest majority ever given to a candidate for this office in the county up to that time. As commissioner he is an advocate of progressive policies and measures in furtherance of the civic and material advancement of the county, and he is one of the leading men of his home city, his political support being given to the republican party.

December 18, 1884, Mr. McFadden married Clara, daughter of Charles E. and Laura A. (Wishart) Jackson, and being a native of Marshall County and her father having been born in Marion County, a daughter of Marshall and Jane (Hamilton) Jackson. Mr. and Mrs. McFadden have the parents of two children: Laura, who died in 1911, was the wife of Dr. J. W. Hartigan, of Morgantown; and Nelle is the wife of John H. Fair, of Wheeling, their only child being a son, Jack.

LOYD D. GRIFFIN. The important post of division chief internal revenue collector at Clarksburg is held by Lloyd D. Griffin, who, since entering upon his duties in June, 1911, has displayed the same energetic action and capacity of painstaking effort that made his term as sheriff of Harrison County notable. A native of this county, he has passed his entire life within its limits, and during his career has had experience in several lines of endeavor which has broadened his views and added to his equipment of valuable public service.

Mr. Griffin was born on a farm in Harrison County, West Virginia, November 26, 1877, and is a son of Benjamin C. and Almira Ann (Swiger) Griffin, natives of the county, where they spent their lives. Benjamin C. Griffin, who was a son of James Griffin, likewise a native of Harrison County, was a farmer by occupation, and was reared in a Christian home, his father being a Baptist minister. When the Civil war came on Benjamin C. Griffin offered his services, was accepted in the Union army and served throughout the great struggle that followed. At its close he returned to the peaceful occupation of agriculture, but the hardships which he had endured during his military experience had affected his health, and he died in 1879, when he was about forty-three years of age. He was a faithful member of the Baptist Church, as was also Mrs. Griffin, who survived him for many years and died at the home of her son, Lloyd D., in 1919, aged nearly seventy-seven years. There were eight children in the family, as follows: Lemuel J., and Cora B., both now deceased; Pernelia E., now Mrs. Sebastian Kelly; James A., deceased; Rosa Ann, now Mrs. Seymour Stark; George N.; Florence M., also deceased; and Lloyd D.

When Benjamin C. Griffin died he left his widow with little more than a family of children, but the worthy woman was equal to the emergency and managed to keep her children together. Lloyd D. Griffin was given the advantages of a grammar school education, which he supplemented with much study, and at the age of twenty years became a teacher, a vocation which he followed for nine years, during which time, in the summer seasons, he applied himself to farming. Also, on several occasions, he was employed on public works. Eventually he took a commercial course at the Mountain State Business College, Parkersburg, and with this preparation secured a position as assistant bookkeeper for the West Virginia Bank, at Clarksburg, an institution with which he was identified for ten years, in this time working his way up to the position of assistant cashier. Mr. Griffin resigned this position to enter upon the duties of sheriff of Harrison County, to which office he was elected as the republican candidate in November, 1916, the first republican to be elected in many years. He filled the office for one term of four years from January, 1917, and established an excellent record for faithful service and capable handling of the responsibilities of the position. On June 1, 1921, Mr. Griffin became division chief internal revenue collector, a position which he still retains, and in which he has also a creditable record for work well and thoroughly performed. Mr. Griffin is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and a Noble of the Mystic Shrine. His religious faith is that of the Baptist Church.

On May 1, 1902, Mr. Griffin was united in marriage with Miss Alberta P. Rogers, daughter of John G. and Melvina (Bogges) Rogers, of Harrison County, and to this union there has been born one son: Joe Rogers, a student at the University of Pittsburgh.

OAKEY STITT GRIBBLE. M. D., is established in successful practice in the City of Clarksburg, as a specialist in the treatment of diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat, a field in which his special study and broad experience give him position of no minor authority. The doctor was born on a farm near West Union, Doddridge County, West Virginia, August 11, 1876, and is a son of John M. and Elizabeth A. (Gray) Gribble, both likewise natives of what is now the State of West Virginia, where they were born in Preston County—the father in 1848 and the mother in 1847. The parents now maintain their home at West Union and the father is living retired from active business. In former years John M. Gribble was numbered among the representative farmers of Doddridge County, and later he became interested in oil production industry and in banking enterprise. For many years he was president of the Doddridge County Bank, at West Union. He was a valiant young soldier of the Union in the Civil war, and for a long period of years he was a leader in the local councils of the republican party, he having served one term as sheriff of Doddridge County, where he established his residence about 1875, upon removal from Preston County. He and his wife are earnest members of the Baptist Church and in their home county their circle of friends is coincident with that of their acquaintances. Of their children three sons are living: Wallace Bruce, who is associated with the Hope Gas Company, of Clarksburg; Dr. Oakey S., who is the immediate subject of this review; and William Dexter, who is engaged in the coal business at West Union.

Doctor Gribble supplemented the discipline of the public schools by taking a preparatory course in the University of Pennsylvania, where also he completed a course in the department of dentistry, from which he received, in 1901, the degree of Doctor of Dental Surgery. In the meanwhile, however, he had determined to prepare himself for the medical profession, and with this purpose in view he entered the medical department of the University of Maryland, in Baltimore, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1904 and with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. For the ensuing year he was resident physician in the Davis Memorial Hospital at Elkins, West Virginia, and thereafter he was engaged in successful general practice at Beverly, Randolph County, until 1911, when he became resident physician in Bay View Hospital, Baltimore, Maryland. After he thus engaged one year he returned to Randolph County and engaged in practice at Mill Creek. Later he returned to Baltimore for special post-graduate work, and shortly afterward he was there appointed resident physician at the Presbyterian Eye, Ear, Nose & Throat Hospital. He retained this position until 1916, when he resigned and established himself in practice at Clarksburg where he has since continued a successful specialist in the diagnosis and treatment of diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat.

When the nation became involved in the World war Doctor Gribble, in the latter part of 1918, volunteered for service in the medical corps of the United States Army, and in the same he received a commission as captain, in September of that year. He was assigned to Camp Greenleaf, Georgia, where he remained until January, 1919, when he returned home on a furlough, his honorable discharge having been granted in the following March.

Doctor Gribble is actively identified with the Harrison County Medical Society, the West Virginia State Medical Society, the Southern Medical Association and the American Medical Association. In his home city he is a member of the staff of physicians and surgeons of Mason Hospital. He is a Knight Templar Mason and a noble of the Mystic Shrine.

October 3, 1906, recorded the marriage of Doctor Gribble to Miss Neva Alice Hutton, who was born and reared in Randolph County, a daughter of Eugene E. and Flora B. (Osborn) Hutton, the former a native of Randolph County and the latter of Barbour County. Eugene E. Hutton is a merchant at Huttonsville, Randolph County, a town named in honor of the family of which he is a member, he being a son of Alfred Hutton, whose kinsman, Col. Elihu Hutton, was a distinguished Confederate officer in the Civil war. Doctor and Mrs. Gribble have no children.

JESSE FRANK WILLIAMS, M. D., has found in his native county ample scope and opportunity for effective service in his chosen profession and is established in successful general practice in the City of Clarksburg. He was born on a farm in Harrison County, March 17, 1882, and is a son of John Wesley and Victoria Virginia (Chidester) Williams, both likewise natives of Harrison County and representatives of old and honored families of this section of West Virginia. The paternal grandparents of Doctor Williams were Jeremiah and Susan (Morrison) Williams, and the maternal grandparents were James and Rebecca (Hoff) Chidester. The doctor was the third in order of birth in a family of five children, one sister having died at the age of six years. Dr. Harvey C. is a veterinary surgeon and prosperous farmer of Harrison County; Minnie May is the wife of Howard Jones; and Mary Elizabeth remains at the parental home. John W. Williams was reared and educated in Harrison County and has long been numbered among its representative farmers and substantial citizens, both he and his wife, who still reside on their homestead farm, being earnest members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Doctor Williams passed his boyhood and early youth on the home farm and gained his youthful education in the public schools, and at the age of seventeen years he became a teacher in a rural school district, his pedagogic service being limited to one term. In 1904 he was graduated in the West Virginia Wesleyan College. In consonance with his ambitious purpose, he entered the medical department of the University of Maryland, in the City of Baltimore, and in this institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1908. After thus receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine he gained valuable clinical experience by one year of service as resident physician in the Maryia General Hospital at Baltimore. On the 1st of November 1909, he opened an office at Clarksburg, and here he built up a large and successful practice that gives him rank as one of the leading physicians and surgeons of native county. He is an influential member of the Harrison County Medical Society, and is identified also with the West Virginia State Medical Society, the Southern Medical Association and the American Medical Association. He has served several years as county health officer and is president of the Clarksburg Board of Education. The doctor is a republican in politics, and he and his wife have membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church. He received the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite of Masonic fraternity, besides being affiliated also with the Mystic Shrine and the Knights of Pythias. He is a member of the Masonic Club in his home city, member Clarksburg Chamber of Commerce and a Rotarian.

The year 1907 recorded the marriage of Doctor William to Miss Anna Morrison, of Braxton County, this state, as they have three children: Jesse Frank, Jr., John West (II), and Martha Virginia.

ISAAC HARDING DUVAL, whose death occurred on the 10 of July, 1902, at Wellsburg, Brooke County, West Virginia gained much of distinction in connection with the history of West Virginia and was one of the most revered citizens of Brooke County at the time of his death, even as he was one of the most venerable native sons of this county, his birth having here occurred September 1, 1824. His father was one of the founders of the first glass factory west of the Alleghany Mountains, and he died when the son Isaac H. was a child. As a youth Gen. Isaac H. Duval went to Fort Smith, Arkansas, and joined an elder brother who was there conducting a trading post. The future adjutant general of West Virginia became a scout on the western plains and gained much experience on the frontier. In 1848, doubtless in connection with the Mexican war and admission of Texas as a state, he took a company of Indians to Washington, District of Columbia, for the purpose of effecting treaties, there having been in the party representatives of twenty different tribes from the Texas frontier. His western adventures included his having command of a company which left Coffers Station, Texas, in 1849, crossed the plains to the newly discovered gold fields of California. He was also a member of the historic Lopez expedition to Cuba, an attempt being made to aid the Cubans in gaining national independence.

In the early '50s General Duval returned to the old home in what is now West Virginia, and in 1853 he engaged in the mercantile business at Wellsburg. He thus continued his activities until the outbreak of the Civil war, when he promptly tendered his services in defense of the Union. He was elected major of the First West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, which enlisted on the first call for a term of three months. He continued in service by re-enlistment and served as major of his command until he was advanced to the office of colonel of the Ninth West Virginia Volunteer Infantry. In this office he had for some time commanded the Second Division, Eighth Army Corps. He was twice wounded in action, first at Fort Republic and later Opequan, besides having had eleven horses either killed or wounded under him. He led the Veteran Corps to the scene of conflict near Richmond, Virginia, and aided in preventing the escape of General Lee and his forces. At Staunton, Virginia, he captured the cavalry under command of General Rosser, and at that place he learned of the surrender of General Lee. At Staunton also an attempt was made to assassinate him. After the declaration of peace General Duval had charge of a military sub-division established at Wheeling. He served four years and nine months as gallant soldier and officer and took part in thirty-five battles.

After the close of the war General Duval bent his splendid energies to the civic and material rehabilitation and advancement of West Virginia. He had won in his military career promotion to the brevet rank of brigadier general. After the war the general was soon elected to Congress, which he served four terms, with characteristic loyalty and efficiency. He served two terms in the West Virginia Senate as four terms as a member of the House of Delegates of the State Legislature. He held for two years the office of assistant general of West Virginia, and for fourteen years was collector of internal revenue, an office from which he retired in 1884. He was a stalwart and influential advocate of the principles of the republican party, and was a broad-minded, liberal and progressive citizen. He continued his residence at Wellsburg until the close of his life. General Duval was a man among men, and few had broader or ripper experience in connection with human activities and service. His youthful career on the western frontier he was the friend and associate of such historic persons as Kit Carson, Aert Pike and Buffalo Bill.

In 1853 was solemnized the marriage of General Duval and Miss Mary Deborah Kuhn, daughter of Adam Kuhn, the first president of the old National Bank of Wellsburg, Virginia, now West Virginia. Mrs. Duval continued to reside in the old home at Wellsburg until she, too, passed to the life eternal, her death having occurred April 23, 1914, and her memory being revered by all who came within the compass of her gentle and gracious influence. Of the children eight attained to maturity: Walter K. is a resident of Spokane, Washington; Mrs. Anna Datzell, a widow, resides at Los Angeles, California; Adam Isaac is a resident of Findlay, Ohio; William H., a commercial salesman, resides at the old home in company with his two sisters, Mrs. Weirich, a widow, and Mrs. Caldwell, whose husband likewise resides in this fine old homestead; Frank owns a residence upon a part of the old home farm in Brooke County; and Harding H., youngest of the surviving children, is the present sheriff of Brooke County.

Harding H. Duval, who is now giving effective service as sheriff of his native county, gained his early education at the schools at Wellsburg, in which city his birth occurred March 18, 1867. As a youth he passed a few years in the West, where he worked on the cattle range and was at a time employed in a store at Omaha. After his return to West Virginia he became associated with T. A. Gillespie & Company, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, a concern in railroad construction work and general contracting. Later he became inspector for the Whittaker-Glessner Company at a new manufacturing plant at Beechbottom, Brooke County, and in this capacity he served until the fall of 1920, when he was elected sheriff of Brooke County, as a nominee on the republican ticket. In the election he received 104 majority and ran 400 votes ahead of his party ticket. As sheriff is giving a most efficient and satisfactory administration, and in his native county his circle of friends is limited only by that of his acquaintances. He married Miss Edna Meek, of Cross Creek District, Brooke County, and they have two children, Thomas H. and Edna Harding. Thomas Harding is chief deputy in the office of his father.

JOHN WELTON JOHNSTON, M. D., maintains his office at 41 Goff Building, in the City of Clarksburg, and the scope of character of his professional practice marks him distinctly as one of the leading physicians and surgeons of Harrison County. The doctor was born at Petersburg, Grant County, this state, March 9, 1859, and is a son of Dr. John and Sallie C. (Welton) Johnston. Rev. John Johnston was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, of staunch Scotch-Irish lineage, and was reared and educated in his native land, whence he came to the United States in 1853. He landed in the port of New York City and soon afterward came to what is now the state of West Virginia. After residing a brief interval at Moorefield he established his residence at Petersburg, and there, in 1864, was solemnized his marriage to Miss Sallie C. Welton, who was born at that place, a daughter of Job Welton, her father having been a man of wealth and influence in Grant County. John and Sallie C. Johnston became the parents of eight children, namely: William Seymour, Job Welton, Margaret Ann, John Edward, Joseph Eggleston, Felix Seymour, Mary Foote, and Sallie M. Rev. John Johnston was a man of high education and fine intellectual gifts. He came a clergyman of the Presbyterian Church and for the long period of forty-one years was engaged in the work of the ministry at Petersburg, where he died in September, 1894, aged seventy-three years and revered by all who had come within the sphere of his benignant influence. His widow was eighty-five years and six months of age at the time of her death. Rev. John Johnston owned, resided upon and gave his personal supervision to one of the excellent farms near Petersburg, and it was on this homestead that Doctor Johnston, of this review, was reared to adult age, his literary or academic education having been gained largely under the able tutelage of his father. At the age of eighteen years Doctor Johnston became a clerk in a drug store at Petersburg, and in 1881 he went to the State of Kansas, where he found employment in a drug store at Nickerson. In 1883 he returned to West Virginia, and in the autumn of that year he was matriculated in the College of Physicians & Surgeons in the City of Baltimore, Maryland, from which institution he received his degree of Doctor of Medicine in the year 1885. For one year thereafter he was engaged in practice at Thomas, West Virginia, and he then established his residence at Davis, a town six miles distant from Thomas, in Tucker County, where he not only developed a substantial practice but also became actively identified with business interests. The doctor continued his residence at Davis until January 2, 1900, when he found a broader sphere of professional service by removing to the City of Clarksburg, where he controls a large and representative general practice. In 1896 he took a post-graduate course in surgery at the Post-Graduate School & Hospital in New York City, and he is known as a specially skilled surgeon, with many successful operations, both major and minor, to his credit. He is a stalwart in the local ranks of the democratic party, and fraternally is a Knight Templar Mason and a member of the Mystic Shrine.

December 2, 1887, recorded the marriage of Doctor Johnston to Miss Mary P. Bye, and of this union have been born four children: Paul Welton, who was born in 1889, died in 1892; Paxson Bye, who was born in 1892, died in 1894; Margaret was born August 2, 1897, and remains at the parental home, as does also Sarah Eloise, who was born June 1, 1900.

IRVING D. COLE, M. D. Since removing to Clarksburg, Doctor Cole has largely confined his professional practice to special work in the eye, ear, nose and throat, and as a specialist he is widely known throughout that section of the state.

Doctor Cole is a native of Harrison County, born on a farm July 21, 1881. His parents, Daniel M. and Elizabeth (Wolverton) Cole, were of English ancestry and of Old Virginia stock, were born in Barbour County, West Virginia, but spent all their married lives on a farm in Harrison County. His father died in 1911 at the age of sixty-two and the mother is still living. They were the parents of ten children and eight survive.

Doctor Cole grew up on the farm and after the rural schools he entered Broadus College, then located at Clarksburg, where he was graduated in 1901. For three years he taught school and then entered West Virginia University for the purpose of preparing himself for the law. A year and a half later an illness interrupted his law studies and when he recovered he made an entire change in his professional plans and entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, where he was graduated M. D. in 1908. Doctor Cole first practiced at Hillsboro in Pocahontas County and enjoyed a good business and an increasing professional reputation there for about seven years. During 1914-15 he spent two periods of post-graduate work in eye, ear, nose and throat at Chicago and New York, and after this he located at Clarksburg, where he has practiced as a specialist since 1915. Besides his large private practice he is a member of the staff of St. Mary's Hospital, being the eye, ear, nose and throat specialist, and is also a lecturer to the Hospital Training School. Doctor Cole is a member of the Harrison County, West Virginia, American and Southern Medical associations, and in 1919-20 was secretary of the County Medical Society. He is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, a member of the Mystic Shrine, and is a Baptist.

July 21, 1908, he married Miss Regina Francee, daughter of Jacob and Ida J. (Cullimore) Francee, of Baltimore. Doctor and Mrs. Cole have a daughter, Jane, born in 1909.

ALEXANDER JACKSON FLETCHER was an ambitious young man of twenty-four years when he came to Clarksburg, judicial center and metropolis of Harrison County, and, with a capital of little more than $100, engaged in the general merchandise business, on a modest scale, as may naturally be inferred. He brought to bear energy, fair and honorable policies and careful management, with the result that his enterprise prospered from the start and he eventually developed one of the foremost mercantile establishments in the city. He continued his active association with this line of business about twenty-nine years, and then sold out to turn his attention to the banking business, in which likewise he has made a record of admirable achievement. In 1903 he became associated with other representative citizens in the organization and incorporation of the Farmers Bank of Clarksburg, of which he has since served continuously as president. Among others prominently concerned in the founding of the new institution were Ira C. Posh (its first vice president), Hon. Harvey W. Harmer, Hon. J. E. Law, Dr. M. J. Bartlett, Dr. J. B. Smith and other citizens of high standing. The bank bases its operations on a capital stock of $100,000, an idea of its unequivocal success is afforded in the statement that in 1921 its resources are in excess of $1,500,000, and its deposits nearly $2,000,000. In Clarksburg Mr. Fletcher has been a true apostle of civic and material progress, and he has here maintained secure place as a representative business man for virtually thirty years. He is a staunch democrat, and while ever regardful of civic stewardship, he has had no desire for public office. He and his wife are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Alexander Jackson Fletcher was born at Farmington, Marion County, West Virginia, February 2, 1866, and is a son of Charles and Amelia (Baker) Fletcher, both of whom likewise were born and reared in that county, where the respective families were established in the pioneer days. Charles Fletcher, Sr., grandfather of the subject of this review, was a native of Pennsylvania, the original representatives of the family having come from England and settled in Virginia, in the colonial period of our national history. Charles Fletcher, Sr., was still a young man when he came to what is now West Virginia, settled in Marion County, and turned his attention to farm industry, with which he there continued his alliance during the remainder of his life. Charles Fletcher, Jr., learned the blacksmith trade and was successfully following the same in his native county at the time of his tragic death in a railroad accident, in 1869, when his son Alexander J. was but three years old. The widowed mother reared her four children with earnest solicitude and continued her residence at Farmington until the close of her gentle and gracious life. Her father, Jacob Baker, was a native of Pennsylvania, of German ancestry, became a pioneer settler in Marion County, West Virginia, and lived to the patriarchal age of 106 years. He whose name initiates this review is the youngest of the four children. His two brothers, Dorsey W. and Michael A., still reside in Marion County; and the only sister, Catherine, is deceased.

Alexander J. Fletcher obtained in his youth a good common-school education and initiated his business career as clerk in a general store in his home town. For seven years he was in the employ of a leading mercantile firm at Fairmont, county seat of Marion County, and it was after severing this association that, at the age of twenty-four years, in 1890, he initiated his independent mercantile enterprise at Clarksburg, as noted in a preceding paragraph.

In 1886 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Fletcher to Miss Mollie A. Bowers, who was born in the State of Pennsylvania, and they have four children: Nellie C. (Mrs. G. K. Allman), Mabel C. (Mrs. Frank Graham), Ray Jackson, and Ward Bowers. The two sons are now conducting a prosperous business at Clarksburg, under the firm name of the Fletcher Automobile Company. Both were in the nation's military service in the World War period, Ray J., having soon received an honorable discharge, on account of physical disability, and Ward having become an instructor in the aviation department. All four of the children received the advantages of the West Virginia Wesleyan College.

REV. PATRICK H. McDERMOTT, S. T. L., the honor pastor of the Catholic parish of the Church of the Immaculate Conception in the City of Clarksburg, Harrison County, was born in Wheeling, this state, January 31, 1863, and a son of Michael and Catherine McDermott, both natives of Ireland and both devout communicants of the Catholic Church.

Father Patrick H. McDermott received his academic literary education at St. Charles College, Maryland, a completed his ecclesiastical course at the Theological Propaganda University, Rome, Italy, from which graduation institution of the "Eternal City" he received his degree of S. T. L. He was ordained to the priesthood of the great mother church of Christendom on the 30th of October, 1892, at Rome, and after his return to the United States he gave three years of effective service as chancellor of St. Joseph's Cathedral in his native city of Wheeling. He was then assigned a pastoral charge at Wytteville, West Virginia, where he remained three years. For nearly thirteen years thereafter he was pastor of a church at Rowlesburg, West Virginia, and on the 1st of February, 1912, he entered upon his earnest service in his present pastoral charge of the important parish of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, at Clarksburg. Here he has labored with all of consecrated zeal and devotion, and under his regent both the spiritual and temporal affairs of the parish have been signally advanced and prospered. The services of the Catholic Church at Clarksburg were maintained under mission auspices until 1864, when the present parish was organized by Rt. Rev. Monsignor Daniel O'Connor, who became the first pastor and who continued as the revered spirit and executive head of the parish until his death, in 1919. Father O'Connor was a native of Maryland and was a man of fine intellectual and administrative powers. Under his vigorous and earnest administration the parish grew and prospered for nearly forty years, and he was influential also in general community affairs. Under his direct were erected the first church edifice, the first priest's house, the first school building of the parish, as well as all other buildings required to meet the needs of the growing church organization. The original church was a brick structure erected in 1865, and it served as the parish house of the parish until 1921, when the ancient building was razed, in order that the site might be utilized for the new modern church edifice which is here to be erected under the direct supervision of the present pastor, Father H. McDermott. The parochial school was opened in 1865 as the educational work of the church has kept pace with the growth and progress of the community. In the two schools now maintained by the parish the enrollment of pupils numbers almost 450 at the time of this writing, in the winter of 1921-2. One school, known as St. Joseph's Academy, is under the direction of the Sisters of St. Joseph, and the other school is in charge of the Xaverian Brothers.

In the year following his assumption of this pastoral charge Father McDermott initiated the erection of the present St. Mary's High School Building, which was completed in 1914 and which, with its equipment, represented an expenditure of about $83,000. The present residence of the Xaverian Brothers of the parish was completed at cost of about $14,475. The parish now has about 1,500 communicants.

The second pastor of the Church of the Immaculate Conception was Rev. John A. Reynolds, whose earnest service covered a period of about nine years and continued until his death, January 16, 1912. His memory is revered in the community, which benefited greatly by his presence and loving labors. Father Reynolds was born at Baltimore, Maryland, and prior to coming to Clarksburg had been service as a priest at Wheeling, West Virginia.

R. L. Ramsay

Father McDermott has manifested a spirit of progressiveness not only in connection with the work of his parish but also as a liberal and public-spirited citizen of broad outlook and mature judgment. He has gained inviolable place in the confidence and high regard of the people of Clarksburg and Harrison County.

ROBERT L. RAMSAY, who is engaged in the practice of his profession at Wellsburg, judicial center of Brooke County, is secure status as one of the representative members of the bar of this part of his native state, and both in his individual practice and his official service as prosecuting attorney of Brooke County he has won noteworthy victories in connection with cases of maximum importance.

The association of the Ramsay family with what is now the State of West Virginia began when the widowed paternal grandmother of the subject of this review came with her children to New Cumberland, Hancock County, and joined her brother, Peter G. Headley, who there opened the first coal mines of that district, about 1840. Mr. Headley is a native of Scotland, a man of marked ability and initiative energy, and he was long one of the leading citizens of Hancock County, where he died in 1892, at the age of seventy-four years. He was a delegate to the first republican convention held in Virginia, that of 1856, and he continued a stalwart supporter of the party cause during the remainder of his life, while he was influential in its councils after the State of West Virginia had been created. In his early days he shipped coal down the rivers by barge, and he became the owner of a large part of the land now comprised in the City of New Cumberland. His sister Isabel became the wife of Robert Ramsay, who died in Scotland, and it was after this bereavement that she came to America and joined her brother at New Cumberland, where she passed the remainder of her life. Her two sons were John and William, the latter being now a resident of Guernsey County, Ohio.

John Ramsay was born in Scotland, in 1856, and he was about twenty years of age when, with his young wife, he accompanied his widowed mother to the United States. In the present Hancock County, West Virginia, he became manager and superintendent of his uncle's coal mines, and he is now successfully operating a mine at near Hollidays Cove, at county, his home being in that vigorous little industrial city. The maiden name of his wife was Elizabeth Lumsdon, and they have two sons and four daughters, Robert L., of this review, being eldest of the number; Anna is the wife of Samuel Smith, of Hollidays Cove; Isabel is the wife of William Breen, of that place; John likewise resides at Hollidays Cove; Edith remains at the parental home; and the last is the wife of Floyd Tarr, of Hollidays Cove.

Robert L. Ramsay was born at New Cumberland, Hancock County, March 24, 1877, and his early education was obtained in the public schools of his native county. In 1901 he was graduated in the law department of the University of West Virginia, and for four years thereafter he was associated in practice with the late Senator J. R. Donahue of New Cumberland. Since 1906 he has been actively engaged in practice at Wellsburg. In 1903 he was elected prosecuting attorney of Brooke County, and in 1912, as a democrat, he was defeated for election to the office of state senator from his district. His defeat was compassed by only 56 votes in the district. Though he lost Ohio County, he carried every precinct in Hancock County, which gave a republican majority of 800. In 1916 Mr. Ramsay was re-elected prosecuting attorney of Brooke County, and his successful and notable administration in this office terminated in 1921. As prosecutor during this period he handled many important cases, including the celebrated Galechek murder case, one of the most notable ever tried in the West Virginia courts. Galechek, a merchant of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, had become infatuated with Mary Ondrick, a versatile young adventuress, by whom he was lured to Follansbee, Brooke County, and, in accordance with the well laid plot of the woman and her accomplices, the victim was finally taken from the automobile in which he was being transported, was handcuffed and thrown off the Steubenville bridge, to meet his death by drowning. In the prosecution that followed this dastardly crime Hobert, or "Pittsburgh," Grimm was condemned and executed and three accomplices were given life sentences, including the Ondrick woman, who had previously made a confession. The case was remarkable in the effective gathering of the circumstantial evidence that unraveled the nefarious plot, with difficulties at every turn, and finally bringing the guilty parties to justice. The work which Mr. Ramsay did in connection with this cause celebrated much to broaden his reputation and to give him state wide fame as a resourceful criminal lawyer and prosecutor.

Mr. Ramsay has been influential in the council and campaign activities of the democratic party, has repeatedly been a delegate to its state conventions in West Virginia, and as a campaign speaker has frequently covered the First Senatorial District of the state. He is affiliated with the Wheeling Lodge of Elks and with the Kiwanis Club at Wellsburg.

Mr. Ramsay married Miss Edna Brindley, daughter of Jefferson Brindley, and the two children of this union are Robert and Charlotte.

JOHN PATRICK MCGUIRE, M. D., who controls, in the City of Clarksburg, Harrison County, a professional practice that indicates alike his ability and personal hold upon popular confidence and esteem, claims the old Keystone State of the Union as the place of his nativity, his birth having occurred at Altoona, Pennsylvania, November 13, 1873. He is a son of John and Mary (O'Reilly) McGuire, both natives of Ireland, where the former was born in 1834 and the latter in 1849, she having been a young woman when she severed the home ties and immigrated to the United States, to which country her brother Thomas had preceded her.

John McGuire was born in County Fermanagh, Ireland, and was a lad of eleven years when, in 1845, his parents, Philip and Bridget (O'Reilly) McGuire, came to America and established their residence in Blair County, Pennsylvania. Philip McGuire was born in 1793, in Ireland, and died at Altoona, Pennsylvania, in 1854. His mother was a daughter of an English army officer, General Hamilton, who had been a member of Cromwell's forces, and thus Doctor McGuire of this review can claim both Irish and English ancestry. John McGuire was reared to manhood in Pennsylvania and he gave a number of years' service as a locomotive engineer, being killed in an accident while on duty in this capacity, the 24th of April, 1880. Of his family of seven sons and one daughter, three of the sons died in infancy. Dr. Thomas J., eldest of the surviving children, is a representative physician and surgeon in the City of Parkersburg, West Virginia; Rev. Philip P. is pastor of St. Vincent Catholic Church in the City of Baltimore, and with him his venerable mother is making her home at the time of this writing, in the spring of 1922; Dr. John P., immediate subject of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; Dr. William C., likewise a physician and surgeon, is engaged in successful practice at Huntington, this state; and Mary P. (Mrs. Krugh) resides in the City of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

In the parochial and public schools of his native city Dr. John P. McGuire acquired his early education, and thereafter he pursued higher academic studies by attending St. Michael's College at Toronto, Canada. Thereafter he completed the prescribed four years' course in the medical department of the University of Maryland, at Baltimore, and he received his degree of Doctor of Medicine on the 13th of May, 1905. In the following month he established himself in practice at Clarksburg, West Virginia, and here he has gained secure success and vantage-ground as one of the able and popular representatives of his profession in Harrison County. He keeps in close touch with the advances made in his profession and is actively identified with the American Medical and the Southern Medical associations, and the West Virginia State Medical and Harrison County Medical societies. He and his wife are communicants of the Catholic Church, and he is affiliated with the Knights of Columbus and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On the 21st of September, 1908, was solemnized the marriage of Doctor McGuire to Anna (Mulheran) Summers, who was born at Clarksburg, on the 20th of June, 1878, a daughter of Thomas and Margaret (O'Ryan) Mulheran. Thomas Mulheran was born in Ireland and was six years old at the time of the family immigration to the United States. He served as a teamster with the Union army in the Civil war, and he was a resident of Clarksburg at the time of his death, July 3, 1887. His widow, who still maintains her home in this city, was born at Kingwood, Preston County, this state, June 20, 1853. Doctor and Mrs. McGuire have no children.

JAMES THOMAS BRENNAN, M. D. In the present century of expanding horizons in medical science, of marvelous discoveries and undreamed of surgical achievements, the profession seems almost to have reached a point where its accomplishments are no less than miracles. Among the capable and well trained physicians and surgeons of the younger generation engaged in practice at Clarksburg, one who is making rapid strides in his calling is James Thomas Brennan, M. D. Doctor Brennan is a native of Clarksburg, and was born January 24, 1888, being a son of Thomas P. and Annie C. (Clifford) Brennan, and a grandson of John J. and Eleanor (Flanagan) Brennan. The grandparents were born, reared and married in Ireland, emigrating from County Mayo to the United States soon after their marriage and settling at Clarksburg, where John J. Brennan engaged in the shoe business as a merchant. There he and his worthy wife passed the remainder of their lives. Thomas P. Brennan was engaged in the coal business in early life, but later became the proprietor of a grocery. He is best remembered, however, as the proprietor of the old Hotel St. Charles of Clarksburg, where he was a most genial and popular host. This hostelry was well known to the traveling public and under Mr. Brennan's able management became a favorite stopping-place. Mr. Brennan died when only forty-nine years of age. His widow, who still survives him as a resident of Clarksburg, was born in Harrison County, a daughter of James Clifford. She and her husband were the parents of three children: Mary Rose, the wife of Andrew J. Boyles; Dr. James Thomas, of this review; and Miss Bernadette, a teacher of music.

James Thomas Brennan was reared at Clarksburg, where he received his primary education, and after attending the public schools completed his literary education at Rock Hill College, near Baltimore. He then entered the medical school of Harvard University, from which he was graduated in 1914, receiving the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and for three years thereafter served as an interne at Carney Hospital. When the United States became involved in the World's war, he volunteered his services in the Medical Corps of the United States Navy, and, being accepted, was commissioned junior lieutenant and sent to Washington, District of Columbia, where he remained in the service until July, 1919. He was promoted to the rank of senior lieutenant, and as such received an honorable discharge after something more than a year spent in the service. At that time he returned to Clarksburg, where he established himself in offices at 206 Empire Building, and since then has been engaged in building up a desirable general practice. Doctor Brennan is a close student of his calling and keeps fully abreast of its numerous advancements. He is a member of the Harrison County and the West Virginia State Medical societies, the American Medical Association and the Association of Military Surgeons of the United States Navy. In politics he is a democrat, and his religious faith is that of the Catholic Church. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Knights of Columbus, in both of which he has numerous friends.

On October 21, 1918, Doctor Brennan was united in marriage with Miss Irene Gertrude Little, of Boston, Massachusetts.

ULYSSES WOODWARD SHOWALTER, M. D. Nearly thirty years of devotion to his profession is the record of Dr. Ulysses Woodward Showalter, a veteran medical and surgical practitioner of Clarksburg; thirty years of his life given to the calling which he chose as his life work in young manhood; nearly a third of a century spent in the alleviation of the ills of mankind. Such is indeed a faithful service, a record of which no man could be ashamed. Always giving his best to his work, never sparing himself that the task to which he had dedicated himself might be completed, his life has surely been a useful one and he may now look back over the years that have passed with a sense of duty well done and take a pardonable pride in the accomplishment of a great work.

Doctor Showalter was born on a farm in Barbour County, West Virginia, April 27, 1858, a son of William U. and Sarah Elizabeth (Woodward) Showalter. His father was born near Uniontown, Pennsylvania, November 12, 1822, and died in Independence, Preston County, West Virginia, September 22, 1900. He was a son of Henry and Mary (Bilheimer) Showalter, natives of Pennsylvania, of Dutch descent, who were pioneer settlers at Fairmont, West Virginia, removing later to the State of Illinois, where they died. On October 3, 1850, William U. Showalter married Sarah Elizabeth Woodward, who was born December 11, 1822, in Harrison County, West Virginia. She was a daughter of John Mills and Susan E. (Gillis) Woodward, natives of Maryland and Harrison County, respectively. They resided in this county for many years, the father following agricultural pursuits, although he was, by trade, a maker of sickles for reaping grain. Both he and his wife were of English lineage, mainly. To William U. and Sarah Elizabeth (Woodward) Showalter there were born the following children who grew to maturity: Susan E.; Charles L. and Mary Caroline, both now deceased; Ulysses W., of this review; Jerre D., also deceased; Nancy Ellen; and Margaret M. The mother died August 4, 1903. She and her husband were Methodists in church faith, and in politics he was a republican. He had a good education for his day, and for many years, practically all his manhood, was a teacher in the public schools.

Ulysses W. Showalter grew to manhood on the home farm and attended the rural schools, subsequently pursuing a course at the Fairmont Normal School. This was supplemented by a course at Kingwood Academy, following which he adopted temporarily the profession of educator and taught for fourteen consecutive terms. In the meantime he read medicine under a preceptor. His last position as a teacher was that of principal of the Newberg schools of Preston County. Previous to that he had been principal of the public schools of Philippi, West Virginia. Quitting the school-room as a teacher, he entered the Baltimore Medical College and graduated in medicine in 1892, at that time receiving his degree. For the next six years Doctor Showalter practiced his calling at Independence, Preston County, where he was well known, going then to Kingwood, in the same county. In 1901 he came to Clarksburg, and in association with Dr. A. K. Kessler established the Kessler Hospital, with which he was connected up to 1905. For two years thereafter he was superintendent of the Clarksburg City Hospital and then for four years had a private hospital of his own. He is now engaged in the private practice of his profession, with offices at 158 West Main Street. Doctor Showalter has always been progressive in his profession. If any branch of his calling has received especial attention from him, it is obstetrics. During his professional career, he has delivered to the date of this writing 4,050 living babies. In politics Doctor Showalter is a republican, and he and his wife are members of the Methodist Church. In his fraternal relations he is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite and Knight Templar Mason and a Noble of the Mystic Shrine, in addition to which he holds membership in the various leading organizations of his profession.

On August 8, 1886, Doctor Showalter was united in marriage with Miss Bertie May Coburn, who was born March 4, 1864, in Preston County, West Virginia, a daughter of Rev. I. B. and Isabel (Flaherty) Coburn. The following children were born to this union: Dr. Percy Coburn; Mary Pearl, the wife of Harman Post; Ulysses W., Jr., who enlisted in the United States Marines during the World war, and saw overseas service in Hayti for eighteen months; and William had, who was in the artillery branch of the service, but did not go overseas.

Percy Coburn Showalter, M. D., son of Ulysses W. Showalter, M. D., and one of the prominent younger physicians of Harrison County, has been engaged in general practice at Clarksburg for more than ten years, during which time he has made steady progress in his profession. He was born at Kasson, Barbour County, West Virginia, May 3, 1877, and received his early education in the public schools. In 1906 he graduated from the Clarksburg High School, following which he attended the Baltimore Medical College, and graduated with his degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1910. After spending one year as an interne in the Maryland General Hospital, he located at Clarksburg, where he has since been engaged in the general practice of medicine. He is a member of the Harrison County and the West Virginia Medical societies and the American Medical Association. He is a republican in politics and a Methodist in religious faith also holding membership in the Mosaic fraternity.

The year 1911 recorded the marriage of Dr. Percy Coburn Showalter and Miss Bertie McConnell.

ROSCOE JAMES NUTTER, M. D. It is scarcely possible in the modern days for a man to be a successful physician without being also a man of learning and of solid, scientific attainments. Often the youth who feels the inspiration that ultimately leads him into the medical profession, finds progress one of difficulty from lack of encouragement, opportunity or capital, and when all these drawbacks are overcome through personal effort, battles have been won that make firm the foundations of character. Of the physicians of Harrison County who have advanced through persistent effort and strict adherence to the highest ethics to their calling, one who has traveled far is Dr. Roscoe James Nutter, who has been engaged in practice at Clarksburg since 1919 and who is now the possessor of a large and representative clientele.

Doctor Nutter was born on a farm in Barbour County, West Virginia, August 26, 1886, and is a son of Enoch and Lih (Hudkins) Nutter, natives also of Barbour County, where they have always resided, the father being engaged in agricultural pursuits. Enoch Nutter was born in 1856 and his wife in 1859. The paternal grandparents of Doctor Nutter were Hiram and Hannah (Chrislip) Nutter, and they were natives of Barbour County, as were also the maternal grandparents, Richard Hudkins and his wife, who was Miss Jenkinson.

The fourth oldest in a family of eight children, three daughters and five sons, Roscoe James Nutter was reared on the home farm, where he had the usual experience that falls to the lot of farmers' sons, working at all the tasks of the home land and learning the value of industry and the virtue of hard work. In the meantime he attended the rural schools and later had the benefit of attendance for ten years at the West Virginia Wesleyan College, and then for three years taught in the country schools, the money earned in this manner assisting materially in defraying his expenses in gaining an education for the profession of medicine, which he had decided to adopt. When he ceased schooling he enrolled as a student at the Medical College of Virginia, at Richmond, where he was graduated in medicine in 1910 and received his degree of Doctor of Medicine. Immediately thereafter he located at New Milton, Doddridge County, West Virginia, where he practiced his profession with a measure of success until December, 1915, in that year joining the post-graduate class at the New York Polytechnic Hospital and Post-Graduate School, for a course in surgery. He remained there until July, 1917, when he located at Glenville, Gilmer County, and while there tendered his services, August 1, 1918, to the United States Army Medical Corps. He was accepted, commissioned a first lieutenant, and sent to Nitro, West Virginia, where he remained until January 26, 1919, then being given his honorable discharge. February 1, 1919, he located at Clarksburg, where he is steadily building up a good general practice, occupying offices at 26 Lowndes Building. Doctor Nutter is reached a high standing in professional circles and is known as one of Harrison County's reputable and entirely capable physicians and surgeons. He is on the visiting staff of St. Mary's Hospital, and is an active and interested member of the Harrison County, the West Virginia State and the Southern Medical societies, and the American Medical Association. Fraternally, he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, in both of which he has numerous friends.

In 1911 Doctor Nutter was united in marriage with Miss Vera de Vera Oneal, of Buckhannon, West Virginia, a native of Barbour County. The Doctor and Mrs. Nutter are the parents of two children: Paul James and Eva Lee.

WILLIAM SAYLOR WILKIN, the present prosecuting attorney of Brooke County, is one of the able and representative younger members of the bar in the City of Wellsburg, the county seat. He had previously served as assistant prosecuting attorney under Robert L. Ramsay, and in that connection the first case in which he appeared was the celebrated Galechek murder case, of which specific mention is made on other pages, in the personal sketch of Mr. Ramsay.

Mr. Wilkin was born in Hancock County, West Virginia, November 30, 1890, and is a son of Andrew F. Wilkin, former sheriff of Hancock County and still a resident of New Cumberland, the county seat. Andrew F. Wilkin was born in Hancock County in September, 1859, a son of James Wilkin, a native of West Middletown, Pennsylvania. James Wilkin became a prominent and successful teacher in the schools of Virginia, and gave effective pedagogic service in Hancock and other counties of what is now West Virginia. He was educated in Washington and Jefferson College and was but thirty-eight years of age at the time of his death. His grandfather, Andrew Wilkin, settled in Washington County, Pennsylvania, in 1773, upon immigration to America from Londonderry, Ireland. James Wilkin died in the present Hancock County, West Virginia. His wife, whose maiden name was Lillie Hobbs, was born in that county, where her father was an early settler. Her paternal grandfather was a patriot soldier in the War of the Revolution and was a resident of Pennsylvania at the time of his death. Mrs. Lillie (Hobbs) Wilkin attained to advanced age. The old Hobbs homestead farm at Pughtown, is now included in part in the corporate limits of New Cumberland, judicial center of Hancock County.

Andrew Frank Wilkin was reared and educated in Hancock County, and for years he was in service as captain of vessels plying the Ohio River. He twice served as sheriff of his native county, and he is now living retired at New Cumberland.

William S. Wilkin was graduated from the New Cumberland High School as a member of the class of 1908. In 1912 he received from Bethany College the degrees of Bachelor of Arts and Master of Arts, and was valedictorian of his class. In preparation for his chosen profession he entered the law department of Yale University, in which he was graduated in 1915 and received his degree of Bachelor of Laws. He was admitted to the West Virginia bar in 1914, while still a student at Yale. At the university he became affiliated with the Kappa Alpha fraternity, the Phi Alpha Delta fraternity and the Book and Gavel Club. He had the satisfaction of receiving at Yale two years of instruction under the direction of Prof. William H. Taft, former president of the United States.

In April, 1917, Mr. Wilkin engaged in the practice of his profession at Wellsburg, but on the 17th of the following September he entered the air service of the United States Army, shortly after the nation became involved in the World war. He was graduated in the aviation school at Cornell University, and was thereafter in active service at Dallas, Texas, and the aviation field at Rantoul, Illinois, at which latter place he remained until he received his honorable discharge, November 30, 1918. He then resumed his practice at Wellsburg, and shortly afterward was made assistant prosecuting attorney of the county. In November, 1920, he was elected prosecuting attorney, and he is giving a vigorous and resourceful administration, he having assumed the duties of this office January 1, 1921. As assistant prosecutor he was actively identified with the celebrated Calcheck murder case, in which the only death sentence ever rendered in Brooke County was made. Mr. Wilkin is a stalwart advocate of the principles of the republican party, as is also his father, is (1922) president of Bethany College Alumni Association and vice president of the Athletic Council of that institution, is affiliated with both the York and Scottish Rite bodies of the Masonic fraternity, and with the Wellsburg Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Knights of Pythias, besides which he is an active member of the local Kiwanis Club.

HIRAM DEWITT HUFFMAN, general manager of the Economy House & Material Company, one of the important business concerns of the City of Bluefield, Mercer County, was born on a farm near Harrisonburg, Virginia, on the 14th of January, 1891, and is a son of John S. and Margaret Ann (Carpenter) Huffman, the former of whom died in 1920, at the venerable age of eighty-two years, and the latter of whom resides at Weyers Cave, Virginia. John S. Huffman was one of the extensive farmers and substantial citizens of that part of Virginia in which his entire life was passed and which he represented as a gallant soldier in the Confederate command of Gen. J. E. B. Stewart in the period of the Civil war. The genealogy of the Huffman family traces back to sterling Holland Dutch origin, and the family in many generations held to the faith of the Dutch Reformed Church.

Hiram DeWitt Huffman is the youngest in a family of four children, his brother Otho C. being general superintendent of the W. E. Deegans Coal Interests of Huntington, West Virginia. The early education of Mr. Huffman included an academic course at Woodstock, Virginia, and a course in a business college at Staunton, that state. After leaving school he was for some time engaged in clerical work in the coal fields, and in connection with the coal-mining industry he finally became identified with the construction work of the Consolidated Coal Company at Fleming, Kentucky, where he remained two years. At Jackson, that state, he then assumed charge of the business of the Jackson Lumber & Supply Company, with which he continued his connection until the spring of 1920, when he took the position of assistant manager of the Minter Homes Corporation at Huntington, West Virginia, but within a short time he came to Bluefield, where he is doing an excellent promotive and constructive service as general manager of the Economy House & Material Company, which handles all kinds of building materials, has a department devoted to house construction and controls a large and substantial business. Mr. Huffman is an active member of the Bluefield Chamber of Commerce and the local Kiwanis Club and is a vigorous and enterprising young business man of sterling personal qualities. In the Masonic fraternity he has completed the circle of the York Rite and is a member of Jackson Chapter of Jackson, Kentucky, London Commandery of London, Kentucky, and Oleika Shrine, A. A. O. N. S., of Lexington, Kentucky. His first personal name was given in honor of one of his uncles, Hiram Huffman, and his second personal name was given in honor of Rev. DeWitt Talmadge, of whom his father was a great admirer.

In 1916 was recorded the marriage of Mr. Huffman and Miss Minnie Davis, daughter of Judge H. F. Davis, of Jackson, Kentucky, and the two children of this union are Francis M. and Helen Davis.

BENJAMIN H. McCULLOCH is one of the progressive young business men of his native city of Bluefield, Mercer County, where he is secretary, treasurer and manager of McCulloch's, Incorporated, of which his mother is the president and his sister Ruth the vice president. This company conducts one of the leading general mercantile establishments of this thriving little city.

Mr. McCulloch was born in a house at 19 Bland Street, just to the rear of the present building of the First National Bank of Bluefield, and the date of his nativity was August 25, 1894. He is a son of Benjamin J. and Georgia McCulloch. His father was born in Montgomery County, Virginia, September 21, 1861, and his death occurred December 6, 1919. Benjamin J. McCulloch was a son of Benjamin and Elizabeth (Bower) McCulloch, the latter having been the widow of Peter Bash at the time of her marriage to Benjamin McCulloch. Mrs. McCulloch had two sons by her first marriage and two also by the second. The latter two sons, Benjamin J. and John R., became associated with their half-brother, George M. McCulloch, in the general merchandise business at Hinton, Summers County, West Virginia, where also they established a cannery. The three brothers were among the first to realize the advantages and promising future of Bluefield, which was a mere village when, in 1888, they came to this place and opened a store at the corner of Bland Street and Princeton Avenue. Later Benjamin J. conducted a store in the 300 block on Bland Street, besides one at 910 Grant Street, these two stores having been consolidated in 1914 and constituting the large and well equipped establishment now conducted by his family under the corporate title of McCulloch's, Incorporated. Benjamin J. McCulloch was a business man of marked ability and prevision, was always ready to grasp opportunities and achieved substantial and worthy success, together with inviolable place in popular confidence and esteem. He became the owner of valuable real estate at Bluefield, and in many ways aided much in the development and upbuilding of the city. Benjamin McCulloch, father of Benjamin J., first married Elizabeth Ackers, and the only son of this union was George M., of whom mention has been made in an earlier paragraph. Benjamin McCulloch was born in Pennsylvania and upon removal to Virginia his father settled on a farm near Roanoke. It is interesting to note that the McCulloch family, originally from Dornoch, Scotland, was founded in America in the early Colonial days (1665), and that Robert H. McCulloch, an ancestor of the subject of this review, was living in Cumberland County, Pennsylvania, when he went forth as a patriot soldier in the war of the Revolution, for his valiant service in which connection he received from the Government a large grant of land in what is now Mercer and McDowell counties, West Virginia.

Benjamin J. McCulloch was an earnest member of the Bland Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and was superintendent of the first Methodist Sunday School organized at Bluefield. Of his four children two are deceased, William having died at the age of twenty-three years. The two surviving children, Benjamin H. and Ruth, are associated with their mother in McCulloch's, Incorporated, as already noted, and Ruth is a popular teacher in the public schools of Bluefield.

Benjamin H. McCulloch received the advantages of the public schools of Bluefield and continued his studies in the University of West Virginia, his intention having been to prepare himself for the legal profession, but as he had gained youthful experience in connection with his father's mercantile business he was led to identify himself actively with this line of enterprise, in which he is making a splendid record and adding to the prestige of the family name. He is a director of the Bluefield Chamber of Commerce, is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity and is a member of the Bland Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He entered the nation's service at the time of the World war and was in training at Camp Johnston, Jacksonville, Florida. He was in service in France.

May 24, 1918, recorded the marriage of Mr. McCulloch and Miss Emma Millet, daughter of Albert Millet, of Bluefield. Mrs. McCulloch is specially active in educational work and is now supervisor of the city schools of Bluefield, besides which she is prominent in the general social and cultural activities of her home city. She is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

ROBERT A. TABOR, who conducts at 85 Bland Street one of the leading retail grocery establishments in the City of Bluefield, Mercer County, was born in Tazewell County, Virginia, September 11, 1888, and is a son of Elgan and Octavia (Tiller) Tabor, who still reside on the old homestead farm in Tazewell County, the father being seventy-five and the mother sixty-eight years of age at the time of this writing, in 1921. Elgan Tabor was a member of the local Home Guards in Tazewell County during the later part of the Civil war. He has long been one of the representative exponents of farm industry in this county, and is a citizen who commands high place of popular esteem. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Church and his wife is a member of the Baptist Church. Of the ten children all are living except one, and of the number the subject of this sketch was the sixth in order of birth.

Robert A. Tabor was reared to the sturdy discipline of the farm and gained his early education in the public schools of his native county. At the age of seventeen years he entered the employ of the Pocahontas Fuel Company, for which he assisted in the building of the power house at Boiesvain, Virginia. Thereafter he was for a time associated with farm enterprise, and he then became employed again by the Pocahontas Fuel Company, at Blueback, Virginia, where he was identified with the erection of dwelling houses for employes of the company. He was thus engaged nine months and later was employed as a restaurant at Pocahontas, where still later he became associated with one of his brothers in opening a general store. Three years later he entered the employ of the Elliott-Frazier Company, with which he continued his connection four years, and with a son of Mr. Elliott, one of his employers, he came to Bluefield, West Virginia, where they have opened a grocery store. The business was conducted one year under the firm name of Tabor & Elliott, and finally Mr. Tabor purchased his partner's interest, since which time he has conducted the enterprise independently, with a large and appreciative patronage which marks the establishment as one of the most prosperous of its kind in the city. The success which Mr. Tabor has gained in business is the more pleasing to him by reason of the fact that when he initiated his independent business career his capital consisted only of an excellent reputation, with incidental good credit.

He is a member of the Bluefield Chamber of Commerce, and he and his wife hold membership in the Baptist Church. In 1908 Mr. Tabor wedded Miss Lailia F. Reynolds, daughter of George and Mahala Reynolds, of Tazewell County, Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Tabor have five children: Bert Harrison, Eula, Lonnie, Edwin and Harry.

THOMPSON G. O'NEIL established his residence in the city of Bluefield, Mercer County, on the 10th of February, 1914, and here he conducts on Bland Street an undertaking establishment with the best of modern equipment and service. He was born on the parental homestead farm in Owen County, Kentucky, August 2, 1879, and is a son of George W. and Susie P. O'Neil, the former of which was a native of Carroll County, Kentucky, and the latter of Owen County. Her father was a fine marksman and gained special local reputation as such. The original American representatives of the O'Neil family came from Cork, Ireland. George W. O'Neil has long been a successful farmer and tobacco broker in the old Blue Grass State, and he resides (1921) at Worthville, Carroll County, Kentucky, the age of sixty-five years, his wife having died October 1913, at the age of fifty-six years. George W. O'Neil is the owner of a large and valuable landed estate in Owen County, has served twenty-five years as a member of the Owen County Council of Worthville, and is one of the honored and influential citizens of his community. He is a democrat in politics and is an active member of the Methodist Church, with which the family has maintained affiliation for previous generations.

Thompson G. O'Neil, an only child, gained his early education under the direction of private instructors and attending the public schools. He early became deeply interested in the study of anatomy, and this interest has never waned, the while his studies have been carried to the point that gives him an authoritative knowledge of the subject, this knowledge being of special value to him in his service as a licensed embalmer. He took a higher course of study by attending Cincinnati University, and in 1899 he took a special course in the Cincinnati College of Embalming. Subsequently he did post-graduate work in the clinics of the celebrated Rush Medical College in the City of Chicago, besides attending the clinics of Cook County and the University of Chicago. Thereafter he held for eleven years the position of demonstrator for the Embalmers Supply Company, with headquarters in the City of Louisville, Kentucky. In this connection he lectured and gave demonstrations in many different states of the Union, and after severing his connection with the company mentioned he came to Bluefield, West Virginia, and established his present undertaking business, he having been the first funeral director in this part of the state to place in commission a motor hearse and motor ambulance. So accurate is his knowledge of anatomy that Mr. O'Neil is frequently called into court as an expert witness in this line. He is affiliated with the local Blue Lodge, Chapter and Commandery of the Masonic fraternity and with the temple of the Mystic Shrine in the City of Charleston. He served in 1921 and 1922 as deputy supreme dictator of the Loyal Order of Moose in West Virginia. He and his wife are active members of Grace Church, Methodist Episcopal, South, and he is a member of the Men's Club of this church.

On May 29, 1914, Mr. O'Neil wedded Miss Clara Hurst, of Harrodsville, Kentucky, and they have one daughter, Vivian. Mr. O'Neil has two daughters by a former marriage: Irene Beckham is the wife of Alfred C. Wilder, of Wilmore, Kentucky; and Mary Golden remains at the paternal home.

JOSEPH M. WALKER. During a residence of four decades in Wellsburg Joseph M. Walker has been identified with some of that city's most substantial business interests. Some years ago there came a tide in his affairs when he felt justified in retiring and enjoying leisure, but eventually the call of work became too loud for him to ignore it, and he is again carrying the burdens of business and financial leadership in that community.

His personal career links the present with several prior generations of this noted family in the Upper Panhandle of West Virginia. His American ancestor was Jacob Walker, who was born of Protestant parents near Londonderry, Ireland, in 1755, being the youngest of ten children. He learned the weaver's trade, but some trouble with his brothers over the sale of the linen which he wove caused him to run away from home and he sailed as a stowaway for America in 1773. While on the ocean the ship was overhauled by a British cruiser. That government was then engaged in impressing single men for military service, and only by a strategy of somewhat romantic nature did Jacob escape, through persuading a young lady aboard to swear that she was his wife. But for the kindly service of this young woman there would have been no history of a pioneer Walker family in Brooke County. Contrary to the course of romance, the young people did not marry when they reached shore. The captain of the vessel did not permit the stowaway to land at Baltimore until he had paid his passage, and Jacob contrived to get word to an uncle living in that city, who agreed to pay the fare in return for six months' work by the nephew. By driving a dray for his uncle he paid the debt and saved some money besides.

After a few months in Baltimore his self-reliant and venturesome spirit called him to the western side of the Alleghenies, and, afoot and alone, with a little money in his pocket, a gun on his shoulder and possessions tied in a handkerchief, he set out, traveling by way of Fort Pitt, and arrived in the Ohio Valley in April, 1774. His first stay was at the farm of Harmon Greathouse, whom he assisted in clearing about three acres where many years later the barns of the Tri-State Traction Company were built. He planted corn, raised the crop without horse or plow, and in the fall gathered the corn and stored it in a rail pen. During the summer he also bought of his employer 400 acres at 15 cents an acre. This constitutes the old Walker homestead in Brooke County, and has never been out of the family. Another labor of his first summer was the construction of a log cabin on his land. Then in the fall he returned to Baltimore and married Margaret Guthrie. She accompanied him to the wilderness home in the spring of 1775, riding a horse while he walked alongside. He had to break a path through the weeds which had grown up before the cabin door, and from the fatigue of the journey and the desolation of the situation thus presented she gave way and sat down in the house to cry. It was the temporary weakness of woman that afforded no indication of her true endurance and grit. She was a pioneer who did her part well in succeeding years, reared a family, and lived to see a settled civilization grow up about her. For seven summers they lived at old Fort Decker, which was located on the present Broad Street in Follansbee, and during the winters they stayed on the farm. For several years when he worked his crop he took a soldier to guard him while he plowed. He lived here while the War of the Revolution was waging on the other side of the mountains, and he took part in the local Indian warfare. He was at the battle of Battle Run, near Mingo, when Captain Buskirk was killed, and he helped bury young Decker, who was killed by the Indians on a farm in the neighborhood. In 1778 he built a better log house on his farm, and this structure has been a center of family associations and memories for almost a century and a half. Jacob Walker died May 6, 1845, while his wife passed away September 5, 1819. Their children were three daughters and one son.

The only son was John Walker, who was born in 1783. He married in 1808 Sarah Abrams, and they began their married life on part of the old homestead, but in the spring of 1825 moved over to Ohio. John Walker died September 18, 1871, and his wife, April 2, 1845. They were the parents of five sons and six daughters.

J. J. Walker, one of the sons of the third generation, was born on the Brooke County farm October 23, 1824, and died at the old homestead May 21, 1910, in his eighty-sixth year. He was reared from early infancy in Ohio, where on March 5, 1850, he married Miss Hannah R. McConnell. Three years later he came back to the Brooke County farm, and lived there the rest of his life. His wife died March 15, 1909, after they had celebrated their fifty-ninth wedding anniversary. J. J. Walker was a strong man mentally and physically, of rugged integrity, and in his work and intercourse with men he manifested those fine qualities which we like to associate with the pioneer type. He was a regular attendant of the United Presbyterian Church at Steubenville, and in politics was a Jeffersonian democrat and in his later years esteemed Bryan as his ideal political leader. Besides his children he was survived by seventeen grandchildren and seven great-grandchildren. His children were Joseph M., James A., William P., John W. and Mrs. Jane R. Carter.

Joseph M. Walker therefore represents the fourth generation of the family in Brooke County. He was born, however, while his parents were living in Jefferson County, Ohio, on March 4, 1851, and was about two years old when they returned to the old home on the Virginia side of the river. Until he was past thirty his activities were mainly concentrated on farming. On locating at Wellsburg in 1882 Mr. Walker became associated with his father-in-law in the hardware business under the firm name of W. C. Barclay & Company. This in 1895 became J. M. Walker & Company. Its large store building was completed in 1906, and in 1916 the business was incorporated as the J. M. Walker Company, since which time Mr. Walker has been active in the company only as a director. He organized in 1904 the Builders Supply Company of Follansbee, and was active in its management as president for ten years, retiring in 1914. He was also president of the local electric company and the Home Telephone Company, and has been an important source of the public enterprise that has brought prosperity and growth to his home community. He was one of the organizers of the Wellsburg Banking & Trust Company of Wellsburg, and after several years of vacation from business he resumed active connection with this company as teller and also director and member of the executive committee.

In the line of public service Mr. Walker was a member of the school board six years, on the water board two years, and also on the board of public works and the cemetery board. For thirty years he has been an elder in the Presbyterian Church.

In 1882 he married Miss Alice B. Barclay, daughter of William C. and Emily W. Barclay. Three children were born to their marriage: Emily W., deceased wife of Charles F. McGlumphy and at her death she left one daughter, Al Louise; Miss Hannah R., at home; and Joseph B., who died at the age of twenty-five.

WILLIAM G. FERRELL, county assessor of Mercer County, maintains his official headquarters in the court house at Princeton, but has been a resident of the City of Bluefield, this county, since 1897. He was born in Pulaski County, Virginia, on the old homestead farm of which now owns a part, and the date of his nativity was August 7, 1870. He is a son of William Ballard Preston Ferrell and Rebecca (Croy) Ferrell, the former a native of Montgomery County, Virginia, and the latter of Giles County that state. After their marriage the parents continued their residence in Giles County until 1869, when they moved to Bells Springs, Pulaski County, and settled the farm which continued to be their home during the remainder of their lives, the father having been eight years of age at the time of his death in 1912, the mother having passed away in 1907, at the age of seventy-two years. William B. P. Ferrell gave his entire active life to the basic industry of agriculture and was one of the successful farmers of the Old Dominion State besides which he took much pride in the raising of livestock of high grade. He was a man of sterling character and both he and his wife were devoted members of the Missionary Baptist Church, in the Sunday school work which he was specially active for many years. He voted for Abraham Lincoln for President of the United States and ever afterward continued his allegiance to the republican party. Of the eight children the subject of this sketch was the sixth in order of birth, and all but two of the number survive the honored parents.

William G. Ferrell gained his early education in the public schools at Bells Springs, and after leaving school he clerked ten months in a general store at Glen L., Virginia. Thereafter he was similarly employed in a store at Cripple Creek in his native county, and finally he turned to Bells Springs, where he remained until he came to Bluefield, West Virginia, which was then a mere village. At Bluefield he found employment in the mercantile establishment of E. S. Pedigo, but a few months later he took a position in the Globe Store, with which he was connected two years. He then formed a partnership with R. H. Miller, under the title of the Ferrell Mercantile Company, and they opened a well equipped dry goods and ladies furnishing store near the corner of Federal Street and Princeton Avenue at Bluefield. Under this title the business was successfully conducted from 1901 to 1919 and in 1916 Mr. Ferrell became deputy county assessor in which position he served until his election to the office of county assessor in 1920, when he received 86 per cent of all votes cast at Bluefield in the primary, the largest vote received by any republican candidate in the county his majority running above that here accorded to President Harding. He has been prominent in the local councils of the republican party, and at Bluefield he and his wife hold membership in the Bland Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

In 1899 Mr. Ferrell wedded Miss Maggie Jane Gollech who was born in Bland County, Virginia. They have three children.

HAMILTON. The first ancestors of this family were cultivators of the soil along the James River, west of the Blue Ridge Mountains in Virginia. (1) John M. Hamilton was a farmer and one of the early settlers on the Ohio River, about twelve miles back of which is the county seat of Jackson County, West Virginia.

(11) James M. Hamilton, son of John M. and Nancy (Howe) Hamilton, was born November 9, 1839. He mated on his Jackson County farm up to 1885, and in the year became a resident of Charleston, West Virginia, and so continued up to the time of his death, November 1916, at the age of seventy-seven, he being an old soldier of the late Civil war. He served throughout the war period of hostilities. He and his only brother, George W., enlisted in 1861 in Company E, Seventh Regiment of West Virginia Infantry. His brother, George W., died soon after the surrender, in 1865. Having charge of material trains under Col. William Oley, James M. Hamilton took part in the second Bull Run fight and in many other battles and was twice wounded and was held some time as a prisoner of war in the famous old Libby Prison. The rigors of his army service permanently injured his health. His affiliation with the Masonic fraternity gained to him a measure of consideration while he was held at Libby Prison. He was a republican and was deeply affiliated with the Grand Army of the Republic. His wife, who was Miss Malissa Rhodes, is a daughter of Alexander and Mahala Rhodes, of Rockbridge County, Virginia. She now maintains her home in the City of Charleston, West Virginia.

(III) William Wirt, son of James M. and Malissa (Rhodes) Hamilton, was born January 27, 1867, at Ripley, Jackson County, West Virginia. He was educated in the public schools of Jackson and Kanawha counties. He spent his youth on his father's farm, and entered business life, after the completion of his studies, as a farmer. This occupation he pursued, however, for only a brief period. At the age of twenty-two years he engaged in the grocery business in Charleston, West Virginia, in which he continued for two years. At the end of this time he sold out and associated himself with the wholesale grocery firm of The de Gruyter Fuller Company. He was with them for several years, and then came to Bramwell, West Virginia, in 1894, as the representative of The Cable Company, of Chicago, Illinois. This position he filled with satisfaction for six years. In 1900 he was appointed postmaster by President McKinley, on December 20, serving as such until the year 1905. He was re-appointed on January 10, by President Roosevelt, and again re-appointed by him on February 9, 1909. Mr. Hamilton discharged the duties of this office, in which he served so long and so faithfully, and has become one of the best known and most respected citizens of this section. On June 4, 1912, he was nominated in the primary by a large majority for the office of sheriff of Mercer County, his standing being exceptionally high in the republican party. Immediately after his nomination for sheriff he tendered his resignation as postmaster at Bramwell, and on September 5th was relieved and on November 5th was elected sheriff and took charge of this office January 1, 1913. He gave a vigorous administration of four years in the office of sheriff. His incumbency, involved his removal from Bramwell to Princeton, the county seat of Mercer County, West Virginia. Mr. Hamilton is also well known and greatly esteemed in Masonic circles, being a member of Ivanhoe Commandery No. 1, Knights Templar, in which he was elected eminent commander on June 8, 1912. He is also a member of Bramwell Lodge No. 45, and Chapter No. 15; also of the dependent Order of Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias and United Commercial Travelers. Mr. Hamilton is the eldest in a family of nine children, of whom five are living: John H. Hamilton, Mrs. Oscar Spencer, of Charleston, Mrs. John W. Cooke, of Huntington, and Miss Ersie Hamilton, of Weleh, West Virginia.

On October 13, 1889, Mr. Hamilton married Ella Fauber, native of Charleston, Kanawha County, West Virginia, daughter of the late William H. and Elizabeth Fauber, of Charleston, West Virginia, the former having been an old soldier of the United States Army. Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton have one daughter, Laura May, born in Charleston, March 10, 1891, and married June 5, 1912, to J. Claude Mabe, of Wytheville, Virginia. Mr. Mabe is a civil engineer in charge of a number of mines at Beckley, Raleigh County, West Virginia. They are the parents of three children, as follows: May Hamilton, born April 19, 1913; William Wirt, born July 18, 1916; and James Claude, Jr., born September 6, 1918.

SIMEON STROTHER BUZZERD is one of the influential citizens of his native Town of Berkeley Springs, Morgan County, where he was born July 23, 1869. His father, George D. Buzzerd, was born on a farm near Berkeley Springs, October 20, 1835, a son of Henry Buzzerd, who was born near Phoenixville, Pennsylvania, January 7, 1799, and who came to Virginia about 1830 and settled at Berkeley Springs, the present judicial center of Morgan County, West Virginia. Henry Buzzerd was a wheelwright by trade, and he established a wagon factory at Berkeley Springs, the wagons which he here manufactured, entirely by hand work, having found ready sale throughout this section. He continued his residence at Berkeley Springs until his death in 1881, at the age of eighty-two years. His political allegiance was given first to the whig and later to the republican party. Henry Buzzerd married Mary Grove, a representative of an old and honored Virginia family, and she was about eighty years of age at the time of her death, their children having been seven in number.

George D. Buzzerd was reared and educated in what is now Morgan County, and was a sturdy young man when the Civil war began. His loyalty to the Union was shown in his prompt enlistment, in 1861, as a member of Company D, Second Maryland Volunteer Infantry, and at the expiration of his ninety days' term of enlistment he re-enlisted, his active service in the Union ranks having continued until the close of the war. He was once captured, but his comrades soon effected his release. After the war he was variously employed at Berkeley Springs, where he continued his association with business affairs until his death, October 20, 1892. He married Miss Mary Elizabeth Tritipoe, who was born at Berkeley Springs, a daughter of Thomas Tritipoe, the family name of whose wife was Catlett. Mrs. Buzzerd passed the closing years of her life at Berkeley Springs.

Simeon S. Buzzerd gained his early education in the public schools of Berkeley Springs, and at the age of sixteen years he here entered upon an apprenticeship to the printer's trade in the office of the Morgan Mercury. In 1893 he became associated with Lewis J. Frey in establishing the Morgan Messenger, of which he became the sole owner about four years later and of which he has since continued the editor and publisher and which he has made an effective exponent of local interests and of the cause of the republican party. In 1907 Mr. Buzzerd was appointed postmaster of Berkeley Springs, and of this office he continued the incumbent until December 31, 1915. He is one of the leaders in progressive civic movements in his native county, and is serving in 1922 as a member of the City Council of Berkeley Springs. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and his wife is a communicant of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Mr. Buzzerd has served as junior and senior deacon of DeFord Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and is affiliated also with Lebanon Chapter No. 2, Royal Arch Masons; Good Intent Lodge No. 52, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; and Berkeley Lodge No. 4, Knights of Pythias.

April 26, 1893, recorded the marriage of Mr. Buzzerd and Miss Addie H. Hedding, who was born at Warfordsburg, Pennsylvania, a daughter of Noah and Prudence L. (Tabler) Hedding, the former of whom was born in Fulton County, Pennsylvania, and the latter near Martinsburg, Berkeley County, West Virginia. Noah Hedding was for many years a successful merchant at Paw Paw, Morgan County, and his death occurred at Berkeley Springs, June 16, 1911. Mr. and Mrs. Buzzerd have four children: Florence Louise, Lewis Hedding, Lillian Katherine, and James E. S.

COL. FORREST WASHINGTON BROWN has won distinguished vantage-place as one of the able and representative members of the bar of West Virginia, and has long controlled a large and important law business, with residence and professional headquarters at Charles Town, the historic judicial center of Jefferson County. He is a scion of one of the old and honored families of this section of the state and was born at Harewood, Jefferson County, on the 15th of October, 1855, a son of Thomas Augustus and Anne Steptoe Clemson (Washington) Brown, whose marriage was solemnized in St. Mark's Church, Protestant Episcopal, in the City of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, on the 17th of October, 1854, the nuptial ceremony having been performed by Rev. John B. Clemson, rector of the church and an uncle of the bride.

Thomas Augustus Brown was born at Charles Town, Jefferson County, December 20, 1822. His father, William Brown, was born in Westmoreland County, Virginia, a son of William Brown, Sr., whose wife, Margaret, was a daughter of Captain Templeman, of Whitehaven, England, a master mariner who commanded a vessel in the British merchant marine service. The first American representatives of this Brown family was Edwin or Edward Brown, who came from England and settled at Jamestown in Virginia in the early Colonial era of our national history. His father, William Brown, was a charter member of the Virginia Colony, and although it is not known that he ever came to this county, it is known that his son, above mentioned, did represent the family here. William Brown, Sr., great-grandfather of Colonel Brown of this review, had two sons, William and Thomas, and the latter served as an aide-de-camp on the staff of General Hungerford in the War of 1812. He later removed to Florida and became the second governor of that state, besides which he was a distinguished figure in the Masonic fraternity and an author of good repute.

In 1799 William Brown, grandfather of Col. Forrest W. Brown, removed from Alexandria, Virginia, to Charles Town, Jefferson County, where he became a leading business man and influential citizen, he having served several years as cashier of the historic old Bank of Charles Town. He died at this place in 1857. The maiden name of his second wife was Elizabeth Forrest, a daughter of Zachariah Forrest and supposedly a descendant of Thomas Forrest, who came to America with Captain John Smith, of historic fame.

Thomas A. Brown continued his residence in Jefferson County until 1857, when he removed with his family to Missouri and established his residence at Darkesville, Randolph County. He there served as postmaster and also became a representative farmer of the county. That section was one marked by much disturbance by contending factions in the period of the war between the States, and in 1864 he removed with his family to Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where he remained two years. He then returned to Jefferson County, West Virginia, and resumed his active association with farm industry, he having been one of the venerable and revered citizens of this county at the time of his death, May 20, 1909. His wife, who likewise died in this county, was a daughter of Dr. Samuel Walter Washington and Louisa (Clemson) Washington, and was a lineal descendant of Col. Samuel Washington, a brother of Gen. George Washington. Col. Samuel Washington was one of the pioneer settlers in what is now Jefferson County, West Virginia, and here he built the fine old mansion on his estate, known as "Harewood," a valuable property still retained in the possession of his descendants. It was at this stately old home that the marriage of President and Dolly Madison was solemnized.

Col. Forrest W. Brown received his early education in private schools in Missouri, Philadelphia and Charles Town, and in the last mentioned place he attended also the Charles Town Academy. Thereafter he read law in the office of White & Trapnell, and at the age of twenty-one years he was admitted to the bar of his native state. He has since been continuously engaged in the practice of his profession at Charles Town, and his law business extends into the various courts of the state, including the Supreme Court and the Federal courts. He is retained as counsel for a large number of important corporations, and he has long held high reputation as a resourceful trial lawyer and well fortified counsellor. On the democratic ticket Colonel Brown was first elected prosecuting attorney of Jefferson County in 1885, and by successive re-elections he continued the incumbent of this office sixteen consecutive years—a record with few precedents in West Virginia. During this period he had the record of never having a indictment drawn by him in any case quashed by his court. He has his military title through service as colonel of the staff of Governor William A. McCorkle. The Colonel is a broad-gauged, loyal and progressive citizen, has long been a leader in the local councils of the democratic party and he and his wife are communicants of Zion Church of the Protestant Episcopal parish of St. Andrew's. He is affiliated with Malta Lodge No. 80, A. F. and A. M. and is an influential member of the West Virginia Bar Association, of which he served as president in 1895-6.

On the 15th of June, 1885, was solemnized the marriage of Colonel Brown and Miss Emma Beverly Tucker, a daughter of Dr. David and Elizabeth (Dallas) Tucker and of distinguished ancestry on both the paternal and maternal sides. Colonel and Mrs. Brown have one son Forrest A., who is associated with his father in the practice of law. Forrest A. Brown wedded Miss Lillian G. Harrison, who was born at Martinsburg, this state, a daughter of Peyton and Lillian (Gorham) Harrison, of whom mention is made on other pages. The three children of this union are Forrest Harrison, Forrest Washington II, and Peyton Randolph.

ALEXANDER C. LAWRENCE has had his home at Charles Town for the past thirty years, but his interests and activities as an old operator connect him vitally with one of the biggest industries of the state. He is familiar figure in nearly all of the important oil fields. He is a man unimpaired by almost life long experience to work, both mental and physical, has earned his own way, and has commanded the respect of all good men by his earnestness as well as by his attainments.

Mr. Lawrence was born in Kanawha County, April 8, 1875. He comes of one of the very substantial families of this section of the state. The Lawrences in the different generations have been strong, sturdy, healthy, an outdoor race of people, long-lived, and seldom any serious illness has appeared to afflict individuals of the name. The first American branch of the Lawrence family settled in old Virginia about 1650. The grandfather of Alexander C. Lawrence, the late John Marshall Lawrence, was a pioneer settler in Kanawha County in the early forties locating at Fields Creek. He had a large farm or plantation, and though a Virginian and reared in the traditional Southern atmosphere he was an ardent Union man, strongly opposed to secession, and when the war came on advocated his convictions so vigorously that he influenced his four sons, James R., William, Ward M. and John W. Lawrence the latter then a youth of seventeen, to enter the Union Army, where they made their services effective for the flag of the Union until the close of hostilities. By inter marriage and otherwise the Lawrences are related to the Thompson and Townsend families, also of old Virginia stock and pioneers of Kanawha County. John W. Lawrence and his wife, America (Da Jernett) Lawrence, parents of Alexander C., still live in Charleston.

Alexander C. Lawrence was born near Malden in Kanawha County, not far from his grandfather's old place at Fields Creek. While he came of a good family, his people being substantially represented among the taxpayers of Kanawha County his independence and self reliance caused him early to do for himself. He acquired some good school advantages. The first work he did for his self support was at the age of nine as a furnace boy in the coal mines, later did farming, and a number of years ago was elected and served as circuit clerk of Kanawha County. For seven years he was a popular landlord conducting several of the leading hotels in Charleston including the Hotel Kanawha, which he and E. W. Staunton erected and opened April 11, 1904.

Since about 1914 Mr. Lawrence has engaged his energies and time in business as an oil operator and producer in the West Virginia fields. His success has been noteworthy in this industry, and his name stands in the front rank of prominent operators. His oil interests are mostly in Lincoln, Boone, Kanawha, Clay and Braxton counties. He is active manager of the Lawrence Oil & Gas Company, King Oil Company, Little Oil Company and the Oil & Gasoline Company. Successful in business, he is thoroughly public spirited in his relationship to all matters of progress in Charleston.

Mr. Lawrence married Miss Ida Mae Phoff, now deceased, and to this union was born a daughter, Marble Faun Lawrence. In 1913 Mr. Lawrence married Miss Nellie Martin.

Mr. Lawrence is a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Charleston, and is especially active in church religious work. He is superintendent of the Union Mission, of which a more extended account is given elsewhere in this work, and he is also one of the leaders of the Billy Sunday Men's Club of Charleston. In fraternal and social organizations he is a member of Kanawha Commandery, Knights Templar, a member of Charleston Lodge of Elks, and of the Kanawha County Club.

JOSEPH C. RISSLER, editor and publisher of the Farmers Advocate at Charles Town, judicial center of Jefferson County, was born and reared in this county, as was also his father, Samuel L. Rissler, the date of whose nativity is September 30, 1830. The latter's father, George L. Rissler, was born in Chester County, Pennsylvania, January 17, 1787, a son of Thomas Rissler, who settled near Winchester, Virginia, in 1794. Thomas Rissler there owned and operated a grist mill, and he passed the closing years of his life near Terre Haute, Indiana. George L. Rissler learned the miller's trade under the direction of his father, and later operated mills in Frederick and Jefferson counties, Virginia. In 1828 he purchased a farm near Kabletown, in the latter county, and here he continued his operations as an agriculturist, partially with slave labor, until the time of the Civil war, his death having here occurred October 6, 1865, and he thus having witnessed the creation of the new state of West Virginia. In 1817 George Rissler married Mary Roland, who was born April 14, 1789, of Welsh lineage, and whose death occurred October 14, 1848. The names of the children of this union are here recorded: John Gordon William, Mary Catherine, Thomas Gabriel, Rebecca E., George Lewis and Samuel L.

Samuel L. Rissler was reared on the old home farm in Jefferson County, and to the land which he inherited here he added by purchase and became one of the most substantial farmers of Charles Town District. When the Civil war came he was loyal to the state and institutions under the influence of which he had been reared, and as a soldier of the Confederacy he became a member of the command known as Betts Greys, in the Second Virginia Infantry. At the battle of Fredericksburg, December 13, 1862, he was wounded, and after recuperating he was transferred to the ambulance corps. In the fall of 1864 he was captured, and thereafter he was held a prisoner of war until the close of the great conflict between the states of the North and the South. He resumed his farming operations and did well his part in retrieving the prostrate industries of the South, he having been one of the honorable and honored citizens of Jefferson County at the time of his death, September 5, 1905. He married Sarah Johnston, who was born at Kabletown, this county, in August, 1832, a daughter of David Johnston, a native of Maryland, his father having been born in Ireland, of Scotch ancestry. The maiden name of the wife of David Johnston was Joanna McHenry. The death of Mrs. Rissler occurred April 2, 1920, she having become the mother of six children: Margaret (Mrs. S. Lee Phillips), Samuel L., William B., George David (deceased), Charles, Robert C., and M. (Mrs. Charles H. Phillips), Frances (deceased), Warren H. and Donna G.

Robert C. Rissler gained in the rural schools his preliminary education, which was supplemented by his attending Charles Town Academy and also by instruction by a private tutor. At the age of nineteen years he became a teacher in the Kabletown school, and later he taught at Pleasant Green, Missouri. After his return to his native county he was a popular teacher in the schools of Charles Town, and he continued his service in the pedagogic profession until 1899, when he became a member of the editorial staff of the Evening Press at York, Pennsylvania. He there remained two and one-half years, and in September, 1901, he purchased the plant and business of the Farmers Advocate, a weekly paper, at Charles Town, of which he has since continued the editor and publisher and which he has made an effective exponent of local interests and of the principles of the democratic party.

In 1903 Mr. Rissler married Miss Alice M. Kable, who was born in Macoupin County, Illinois, a daughter of Benjamin F. and Anna (Freeman) Kable, the former deceased and the latter still a resident of that county. Mr. Kable served as a Union soldier in the Civil war, in which he was a member of the Seventieth Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He was with Sherman in the Atlanta campaign and the subsequent march to the sea, and served also with the command of General Thomas in Tennessee, where he was wounded at the battle of Franklin. He continued in service until the close of the war, and thereafter refused to accept a pension from the Government. Mr. and Mrs. Rissler have four children, Howard F., Anna Katherine, Mary Johnston and Margaret.

COL. ROGER PRESTON CHEW, who was one of the honored and representative citizens of Charles Town, Jefferson County, at the time of his death, gave distinguished service as a soldier and officer of the Confederacy in the war between the states, and the same fine spirit of loyalty and high personal stewardship characterized all other phases of his life record.

Colonel Chew was born in Loudoun County, Virginia, April 9, 1843, a son of Roger Chew, who was born July 13, 1797, and who was a son of John Chew, born March 31, 1749. The most authentic data concerning the family is to the effect that its American founder was John Chew, who, with three servants, came from England and settled at Jamestown, Virginia, in the early part of the second decade of the seventeenth century, he having become a man of prominence and influence in that historic colony. John Chew, grandfather of the subject of this memoir, removed from Alexandria, Virginia, to Loudoun County, that state, where he became a prosperous farmer and where his death occurred May 22, 1838. The maiden name of his wife was Margaret Reed, and their children were fourteen in number. Their son Roger removed to Jefferson County, and here became a substantial exponent of farm industry, besides which he served as magistrate and as a member of the County Court. His death occurred in 1864. Roger Chew married Sarah West Aldridge, daughter of John and Harriet (West) Aldridge, of Loudoun County, and they reared six children: John Aldridge, eldest of the children, served under Colonel Mosely as a Confederate soldier in the war between the states; Roger P., of this memoir, was the second son; and the names of the other children were Robert, Aldridge, Harriet Virginia, and Mary Belle (wife of William O. Norris, mentioned individually on other pages of this volume).

Col. Roger P. Chew was afforded the advantages of Charles Town Academy and also those of the Virginia Military Institute at Lexington, where he completed his course of study in 1861, the discipline which he there received having proved of great benefit in his subsequent military career. He was forthwith appointed a drill master in preparing troops for the Confederate service, and was given the rank of lieutenant. In September, 1861, in association with William Rouse, he raised a company for active service and was chosen its captain. This company became a part of Turner Ashby's brigade, and thus continued until the death of Ashby, the commander, on the 6th of June, 1862. Thereafter it was attached to General Stuart's battalion of horse artillery. In 1864 Captain Chew succeeded Major H. C. Beckham as commander of the horse artillery, with the rank of major, and in the same year was effected a reorganization of the battalion, and he was assigned to the command of General Hampton, with which he served until the close of the war, his rank being that of lieutenant colonel. In 1888 Gen. Wade Hampton wrote as follows concerning Colonel Chew: "I always regarded him as the best commander of the horse artillery, though that gallant body of men had been under the command of able and efficient officers." In a letter written by General Jackson to General Lee, in February, 1863, appears the following estimate of Colonel Chew, who was then a captain: "He has seen comparatively much artillery service in the Valley and is a remarkably fine artillery officer, and I recommend that he be promoted and assigned."

After the close of the war Colonel Chew returned to the home farm in Jefferson County. In 1883 he was elected representative in the State Legislature, to which he was returned by re-election in 1885, 1887 and 1889. Later he engaged in the real estate business at Charles Town, in company with his brother-in-law, William O. Norris, and with this line of enterprise he continued his active connection until the close of his life.

At Blakeley, this state, was solemnized the marriage of Colonel Chew and Miss Louisa Fontaine Washington, daughter of John Augustin and Eleanor (Selden) Washington, of whom specific record is given in the Willis sketch on other pages of this work. Mrs. Chew survives her honored husband and continues her residence at Charles Town. Colonel and Mrs. Chew became the parents of six children: Christine Washington, Roger, John Augustin, Virginia, Wilson Selden and Margaret Preston.

BEN H. HINER was born near the Virginia state line March 12, 1867. He attended the public schools of his home county, but with many interruptions. He began teaching in the same when seventeen years of age, and by saving the money that he acquired in this way entered the University of Virginia at Charlottesville in October, 1890, where he took the law course under the instruction of the great teacher, John B. Minor, completing the course in June, 1892. He located at Franklin, and was nominated and elected prosecuting attorney of Pendleton County before he had tried a case, and was re-elected for a second term without opposition. At the end of his second term he entered upon the general practice of the law, in which, along with farming and stock raising, he has been engaged ever since.

He descended from John Hiner, the pioneer, who located in Pendleton County in the year 1775, through the lines of Harmon, Benjamin and Harmon. His grandmother, Mary Seybert, was a direct descendant of Capt. Jacob Seybert, who, with sixteen other occupants of Fort Seybert, near the post office of the same name, was massacred by the Indian Chief Killbuck and his band in the last Indian raid of any note made into the county.

Harmon Hiner married Louisa Harrison, a native of Surry County, Virginia, and a daughter of Thomas C. Harrison, of the old Virginia family of that name, who, with his family, moved to Buckhannon, now in West Virginia, and was on the first train to cross the bridge over the Potomac River at Harpers Ferry after the John Brown raid. To this union were born five children, all of whom are living, and of whom Ben. H. is the eldest. His father, Harmon Hiner, was born, reared, spent most of his life and died on the same farm in the southern part of the county. On the 8th day of May, 1861, he answered the call of the South through a summons to join his company, the Franklin Guards, at Franklin, which was to march across the Alleghenies to join General Porterfield at Grafton, and within a stone's throw of the same place he, forty-seven years later, answered the great summons and passed over the river, his wife having preceded him by two years.

On August 14, 1894, Ben H. Hiner married Miss Maude McClung, of Franklin, who was born November 12, 1870, and is the youngest of five children of David G. McClung, a merchant, banker and lawyer, and his wife, Sarah A., a daughter of Tyree Maupin, a distinguished leader and writer of the whig party in old Virginia. To this union were born two children, Ralph McClung and Helen Harmon. The latter is in her senior year in the Franklin High School. The former was educated at Randolph-Macon College and the University of West Virginia, and is now practicing law at Moorfield, West Virginia. He attained his majority on Christmas Day, 1917, while a student in the first year law class at the university. Within a month from that time he resigned from the university, volunteered in the service of the United States, was assigned to aviation service and sent to training camp, but the war ended before he got any practical training. He returned to the State University, from which he was graduated in the class of 1921.

Mr. Hiner has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, from boyhood, and an official in the same for thirty years. In politics he is a democrat, though classed as a conservative, always putting Americanism above partisanship, and as a result in the different campaigns in which he was his party's standard bearer he always ran ahead of the party vote. He has taken a more or less active part in politics merely for the love of it and the desire to advance those principles in which he believes; he has given freely of his time in organizing and discussing those tenets of his party that he deems for the country's good; has occupied various positions in the organization of the county, district and state; and in 1912 presided as permanent chairman over the State Convention in Huntington, which was the last nominating convention and probably one of the largest and most representative ones ever held in the state. He was three times a nominee of the party for Congress, in 1908 and 1918 for the Second District, and in 1912 from the state at large. In 1908 he reduced the majority of Judge Sturgiss more than 1,500 votes; in 1918 he went down with the tidal wave; in 1912 he did not seek the nomination, but it came to him under very flattering circumstances at a time when it looked like it was equivalent to election, but as the campaign advanced the supporters of both Taft and Roosevelt lined up behind the republican state ticket and it was all elected, though Mr. Wilson received more votes for President than either Taft or Roosevelt. In accepting this nomination he resigned the nomination for the House of Delegates from his home county; it was with reluctance because his father, grandfather and great-grandfather had all been members of the old Virginia Legislature and he was desirous of following in the same line.

During the war he gave practically all of his time its activities, and the different campaigns with which was connected made it necessary to neglect all of his private affairs. He was appointed by Governor Cornwell as chairman of the Council of Defense and a member of the Legal Advisory Board for his county. Of all the Liberty Loan and War Savings Stamps campaigns and philanthropic drives he was the chairman. Before the war not a single Government security was owned within the county and the majority of the people knew but little of such investments, nor had they been accustomed supporting the various causes the times made necessary but by systematic work and thorough organization the county's contributions were brought up to the quota each campaign and drive. Mr. Hiner has not identified himself with any fraternities or societies. He is a member and official of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

HARRY STUART IRONS. The record of achievement with Mr. Irons had made in his profession marks him as one of the representative members of the bar of Cabell County, where he is engaged in active general practice in the City of Huntington. He was born at Monitor, Monroe County, West Virginia, September 18, 1886, a son of William Young Irons and a grandson of John Irons, who was born in that county in the year 1813, when this section of the old mother state of Virginia was still on the frontier. John Irons passed his entire life in Monroe County, was a successful farmer and was a venerable and honored citizen of Wolfcreek, that county, at the time of his death, in 1900. His wife, who was Suzanna Young, likewise passed her entire life

Harry S. Brown.

Monroe County. Thomas Irons, the father of John Irons, was born near Dundee, Scotland, but in early life went to Northern Ireland to escape religious persecution, thence emigrated to America. He first settled in Pennsylvania, what is now Monroe County, West Virginia, where he whence he came to Virginia and became a pioneer settler and the remainder of his life.

William Young Irons was born in Monroe County on February 19, 1841, and died at Ronceverte, Greenbrier County, September 30, 1917. He was a successful exponent of farm industry and also prepared himself for the dental profession, as a representative of which he engaged in practice in Monroe County until 1904 when he removed to Elkins, in Randolph County, where he remained until 1912. He then removed to Ronceverte and continued in practice there until his death. He was a democrat, and for many years an elder in the Presbyterian Church, and was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity. As a soldier of the Confederacy in the Civil war Doctor Irons was a member of Captain Bryan's battery in the division commanded by Major Jubal A. Early, he having been in service four years and having taken part in many engagements, including a number of major battles. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Elizabeth Knapp, was born in Greenbrier County, March 21, 1849, and her death occurred on August 31, 1914. Their children the first born is Sue Elizabeth, wife of Frank W. Hutcheson, of Ronceverte; John William, who resides at Richmond, Virginia, is assistant sales manager for the Virginia-Carolina Rubber Company; Lacy C. is a pianist and resides at Elkins, West Virginia; Harry S., of his sketch, was the next in order of birth; Dr. Charles was now practicing dentistry in Shanghai, China, he having been in the World war as a member of the Dental Corps attached to the Czechoslovak forces that went to Omsk, Russia.

The public schools of his native county afforded Harry S. his early education. For one year thereafter he attended Alderson Academy in Greenbrier County, and in 1904 graduated from the high school at Elkins. He next attended Davis and Elkins College at Elkins for two years, and in 1911 he graduated from historic old Yale University, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He simultaneously pursued his studies in the law department of the university, in which he was graduated in 1912, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. His popularity as an undergraduate is shown by the fact that he is affiliated with the Beta Theta Pi College fraternity, the honorary academic society of Phi Beta Kappa, the honorary law society of Chi Tau Kappa, as well as with the Yale law societies of Phi Delta Phi and Chevy Court. In 1912 he received the prize of $50 for securing the highest mark in examinations of all of the three-year students in the law school of Yale, and from 1911 to graduation he served as registrar of the law school. On his return to West Virginia he was forthwith admitted to the bar of his native state, and he has since been engaged in successful general practice at Huntington, where he has a large and representative clientele. He is attorney for the Jackson Building & Loan Association, of Ravenswood, with offices at Huntington, and for a number of other corporate interests of note. He is identified with a number of coal and lumber interests in this section of the state. He is president of The Superior Lumber Company at Huntington; of the Right Fork Mining Company, operating mines at Ivaton, Lincoln County; and of the Coal Mountain Mining Company of Huntington, besides being a director in various other business corporations.

In politics Mr. Irons is a democrat, and he and his wife are members of the First Presbyterian Church in their home town, he being an elder in the same and also session clerk and superintendent of the Sunday school. His basic Masonic affiliation is with Huntington Lodge No. 53, A. F. and M. M., and in the Scottish Rite he has received the thirty-second degree in West Virginia Consistory No. 1 at Wheeling, while he is a member also of Beni-Kedem Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Charleston, and of Peramos Grotto at Huntington. He is a trustee of Davis and Elkins College, Secretary of the Cabell County Bar Association, a member of the West Virginia and American Bar associations, and is vice president of the Kiwanis Club at Huntington. In the World War period he was zealous in the furtherance of local patriotic movements and was a member of the Legal Advisory Board of Cabell County.

March 26, 1913, recorded the marriage of Mr. Irons and Miss Cecile Lambert, daughter of David D. and Katharine (Latham) Lambert, of New Haven, Connecticut, where Mr. Lambert is a public school principal. Mrs. Irons completed her education by attending Wheaton Seminary at Norton, Massachusetts. Mr. and Mrs. Irons have three children: Harry Stuart, Jr., born April 12, 1914; Lambert Paul, born June 19, 1915; and Katharine, born November 26, 1918.

JOHN A. FULTZ. Probably there is no profession that demands so much tact, judgment, patience, specialized knowledge and natural executive ability as that of the schoolmaster, and the man or woman who enters into this important field, selecting it as his calling, must be prepared to make many personal sacrifices, to endure many disappointments, often to spend himself for others without apparent gratitude in return, and to give the best years of his life without the emoluments that equal effort would surely bring in any other profession. It is a profession for which there are no weights and measures. The material with which it deals is rather the life stuff upon which impressions are eternal and affords the man who would serve the race an opportunity than which there are none greater. One of the men who has dedicated his life to the work in this spirit is John A. Fultz, county superintendent of schools of Pendleton County, who has been connected with public school work since 1903.

The birth of John A. Fultz occurred in Bethel District, Pendleton County, July 21, 1852, and he traces his ancestry back in this country to John Fultz, a Hessian soldier, who after his discharge from the British Army following the surrender at Yorktown decided to remain in the New World, and settled in Somerset County, Pennsylvania. It is stated that the majority of these Hessian soldiers who remained in America sent back home to Germany for their sweethearts, whom they married upon their arrival, and it is thought that probably John Fultz was one who did so. A son of John Fultz, Jacob Fultz, was born in Somerset County, Pennsylvania, but he left his native state for Rockbridge County, Virginia, being the first of his name to locate in the Old Dominion.

Joseph Fultz, son of Jacob Fultz, and grandfather of John A. Fultz, was born at Lexington, Rockbridge County, Virginia, in 1817, and about 1840 he came to Pendleton County, then still a part of Virginia. His original settlement was in the Sugar Grove community but he subsequently moved to the Brandywine locality, and there he resided during the remainder of his life. He was a hatter by trade, and also had mastered the trades of coopering and cabinet-making, and in addition to following all of these callings he was engaged in farming upon a small scale. Joseph Fultz married Catherine A. Keister, a daughter of John Keister, and they had the following children: Susanna, who never married, is living in the home of her brother Martin; Amos, who died at Brandywine, was a farmer; John A., who lived near Dale Enterprise, Virginia, and there died; Millie, who died unmarried; Jacob, who is engaged in farming in the vicinity of Brandywine; Martin, who is the father of Superintendent Fultz; and Elizabeth, who is unmarried and lives at Salem, Virginia.

Martin Fultz was born in Pendleton County, October 4, 1853, and is still engaged in farming near Brandywine. He is a man of substantial means, and stands deservedly high in the esteem of his neighbors. He married Mary Jane Bolton, who was born on the top of South Fork Mountain, June 30, 1862, a daughter of George Bolton, the descendant of early German immigrants who came to Pennsylvania or Maryland at a very early day, and there made a permanent settlement. George Bolton married into the Guthrie family, Irish people and pioneers of Virginia. When the South withdrew from the Union George Bolton gave it his support, enlisted in the Confederate Army, and served in it until the close of the war, escaping without having been either wounded or captured. Returning home, he resumed his peaceful activities and was a farmer until he died at the age of sixty years. For many years he and his wife maintained their home on the top of South Fork Mountain. The children born to Martin Fultz and his wife were as follows: John A., whose name heads this review; Fannie E., who was second in order of birth; Frank A., who is a farmer and carpenter of Brandywine, is married; Sallie P., who is the wife of William L. Guyer, of Columbus, Ohio; and Minnie O., who was formerly a public school teacher, is now living at home.

From childhood John A. Fultz was an ambitious pupil, and after he had attended the country schools of his native locality he took courses at Harrisonburg, Virginia, and in the Keyser Preparatory School, and the regular course in the Shepherdstown College State Normal School. For a number of years he was one of the most popular of the teachers in the rural districts, all of his work in this connection having been done in Pendleton County, with but one exception. During the summer months he also taught in different normal schools, and his experience has been a wide and varied one. Upon each of his schools he left the impress of his character. Possessed as he is with the highest educational ideas, his schools were brought into line with the best and a wholesome intellectual sentiment created. In the larger life of the community his influence has always been widely felt as an impulse toward progress and an enriched life. In July, 1919, Mr. Fultz entered upon a broader field of activity, at that time assuming the duties of the office of county superintendent of the school of Pendleton County, to which he had been elected in November of the preceding year, to succeed Supt. J. H. Cook.

Mr. Fultz has inaugurated some very wise reforms and introduced a number of measures which are certain to be of great benefit to the pupils and teachers. A strong effort has been made under his administration to place a dictionary in every school in the county, and to establish the nucleus of a library in each one, and this movement is nearing a successful conclusion. A man of unusual ability for stimulating others to a whole-souled effort, he has succeeded in having a 100-percent enrollment of his teachers in the State Educational Association. The organization of clubs of a literary character over the county has been urged and encouraged by Mr. Fultz, and these societies show much progress. The introduction of a program for the physical exercise of the pupils is another innovation of Mr. Fultz, and his teachers have been urged and instructed with reference to following this program. While these exercises are not inaugurated in all of the schools as yet, many have adopted the program, and Mr. Fultz expects the others will do so in the near future. He urges the teachers to take up the study of the higher branches so as to prepare themselves for work in the higher fields of education. Among other plans for the future at which he is earnestly working is that of a consolidation of the rural schools, which, if he can obtain the co-operation of the patron of the districts, will go a long way toward securing better facilities for training the youths of the rural districts. He is also planning a four-year high school at Franklin instead of the three-year one now in operation, and the establishment of a junior high school. Mr. Fultz is one of the educational enthusiasts of West Virginia, and is prominently identified with the different associations of the commonwealth, especially with the State Teachers' Association and the State County Superintendents' Association. His personal acquaintance with the county superintendents of the state extends to all but two.

Mr. Fultz is unmarried. During the late war he was one of the zealous workers in the county, was chairman of the Junior Red Cross for the county, and did everything within his power to assist the Government in carrying out its policies. His fraternal affiliations are limited to his membership with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He belongs to the Lutheran Church. Mr. Fultz is a deep student of the science of education, and, in addition, is a teacher by birth and temperament. He is also a maker of teachers, and those under him are fortunate in having his constructing and stimulating supervision. In fact, he possesses in full measure the supreme gift of the teacher, the perfect union of power and purpose to put light and joy and truth and beauty into other lives, and his prime interest is in character forming education, and because these many excellent qualifications the pupils of Pendleton County are making remarkable progress.

ISAAC NEWTON RUDDELE. Of the citizens of Pendleton County who have established excellent records in public and private life, one whose career has been an active and useful one is Isaac Newton Ruddle, high sheriff. Prior to concentrating his entire attention upon the duties of sheriff, he was for many years identified with farming and stockraising interests, in which he still retains large and important holdings, and before that, in his young years, was one of his locality's popular and efficient school teachers.

Sheriff Ruddle was born in Mill Run District, Pendleton County, November 12, 1857, and is a son of John N. and Mary Elizabeth (Eye) Ruddle. The original spelling of the family name was "Riddle," borne by the great-grandfather of Sheriff Ruddle, John Riddle, who immigrated from his English birthplace to America and with his young wife settled in Rockingham County, Virginia, where he assisted in the clearing and development of the region and rounded out his life in the pursuits of the soil. Among his children were: Isaac, the grandfather of Sheriff Ruddle; George and John, who remained in Rockingham County and there died; and two daughters, Polly and Deborah. Isaac Ruddle was born in Rockingham County, Virginia, where he engaged in farming for some years, but later came to Pendleton County, where he died. He married Deborah Nesbitt, and they became the parents of the following children: John, the father of Sheriff Ruddle; Joseph, who fought in the Confederate Army during the war between the states; Mary Jane, who never married; Sarah, who became the wife of David Hulva; Harriet, the youngest survivor of the family, living in Rockingham County, Virginia, married and aged eighty-four years; and Louisa, who never married.

John N. Riddle (or Ruddle) was born in Rockingham County, Virginia, and was a lad when brought by his parents to Pendleton County. When the war between the states came on he offered his services, and through mistake in his enlistment papers his name appeared as John N. Ruddle, and he was thereafter known by that name. He became a member of the Sixty-second Virginia Cavalry and was a non-commissioned officer of his company, his regiment forming a part of General Imboden's command. He took part in the engagement at Newmarket and the great battle of Gettysburg, in addition to numerous other fights, in one of which he was struck in the back by a spent bullet, which did not lead to serious consequences. He participated also in the final act of great struggle, but was not present at the surrender of General Lee at Appomattox. Following the close of the war John Ruddle went back to the farm and applied himself to agriculture during the years that followed and until his death. No public service of an official character appealed to him, and the part which he took in politics was only that of a private citizen and a democratic voter. He made no public announcement of belonging to any religious denomination, but was a believer and a Christian. He belonged to the Confederate Veterans. In Pendleton County Mr. Ruddle was united in marriage with Mary Elizabeth Eye, a daughter of Jacob and Sarah (Swadley) Eye, of German stock, farming people of Sugar Grove locality of Pendleton County. Mrs. Ruddle died in 1908, her husband surviving her until February 17, 1912. They were the parents of the following children: William Pendleton, who carries on operations on his parents' old farm in Pendleton County; Isaac Newton, this review; Sarah K., who married John Cook and resides at Maquoketa, Iowa; Alice, who is unmarried and lives with her brother, Isaac N.; Virginia H., who married John Moyers, now deceased, of Harrisonburg, Virginia.

Mary Emily, who married Jacob Cowger, of Mount Vernon, Virginia; and Maudie, who married Floyd Simons, of Harrisonburg, Virginia.

Tac Newton Ruddle was educated in the public schools of his home community and assisted his father and brothers in his home farm until he reached his twenty-first year. When he commenced a career of his own he engaged in teaching school, and for twenty-five years carried on educational work, in the meantime spending the summer months farming. When he abandoned the school room he gave his full attention to the raising of stock and farming, and through good management and industry he has acquired thousands of acres of land, about one-fourth of which is under cultivation and producing large annual crops. Mr. Ruddle is a firm believer in the efficacy of modern scientific farming and farm journals and periodicals dealing with improved methods of agriculture and stock raising are to be seen on the tables and shelves in his pleasant home.

Mr. Ruddle is also a firm believer in the value of education. He has been identified with the public school system of his district as a trustee and encouraging patron, and was a member of the County Text-Book Board when that arrangement prevailed. Likewise, he has served Mill Creek District as justice of the peace. He has always cooperated with other democrats in his community. He cast his first presidential vote in 1880, for General Hancock, and has voted his party ticket in every election since. In 1903 he first became a candidate for sheriff of Pendleton County, an office to which he was nominated and elected, and succeeded Sheriff Okey Mauzy. After serving one term he retired to his private affairs, but in 1920 again entered the race for the shrievalty against competition in the primary and secured the nomination. There was no opposition in the election which followed, and he entered office with the unanimous voice of the voters of him, succeeding Sheriff Keyser, who is a merchant farmer at Sugar Grove. The routine of the sheriff's office now holds Sheriff Ruddle's entire attention, the care of the prisoners, the attendance on the sessions of the Circuit Court, the collection of taxes and the distribution of the school funds being chief among the duties devolving upon him.

On April 10, 1886, Sheriff Ruddle married in Pendleton County Miss Emma Susan Dahmer, a daughter of Reuben Sarah (Hammer) Dahmer. Mr. Dahmer was a farmer, and both he and his wife were born in Pendleton County. He had the following children: Phoebe, the wife of Isaac Lough; Edward; Isaac; Emma Susan, now Mrs. Lulle, born in 1864; and Hendren and Hammer, twins. Mr. and Mrs. Ruddle there have been born the following children: Edward Claude; Whitney Hammer; Isaac Hor; Reta, the wife of Melvin Eye; Roy C.; Deaturton; John P.; Catherine; Dee; Ralph; and Anna. Roy C. and Whitney H. were both soldiers during the World war and both saw active service in France, taking part in the great Argonne drive and going into Germany in the Army of Occupation. Roy C. was a member of the Eighteenth Division, while Whitney H. was a member of the Thirty-second Division, both being infantrymen. The latter was wounded by a shell fragment and also suffered from a German gas attack, but returned home safely, and is now engaged in farming on the home place. He is unmarried. Roy C. Ruddle married Miss Leta Simons.

VERETT LEON HOGSETT. For a number of years Mr. Hogsett performed a very important service in behalf of education in the southern and southeastern counties of the state. While teaching he studied law, laid the foundation of his reputation in this profession while a school man, but eventually turned all his talents to the law, and recently published his law office in Huntington, where he is attorney for the Main Island Creek Coal Company and other enterprises.

He was born near Ripley, Jackson County, West Virginia, on a farm, March 31, 1879. His grandfather, Ashur Hogsett, was born in Augusta County, Virginia, in 1828, and as a young man he moved over the mountains into Greenbrier County, then Pocahontas County, and in 1861, to Jackson County, where during the rest of his life he was a farmer and millwright. He died there in 1891. His wife was Ellen Cowhorn, who was born in 1824, and died in 1880.

James Samuel Hogsett, father of the Huntington lawyer, was born in Greenbrier County, June 24, 1846, and spent his early life in a little community in Pocahontas County known as Little Levels. While there he attended Dunlap's Academy. The town is now known as Academy, being changed from Little Levels to a name suggested by the presence of this school. After his marriage in Jackson County he continued to live there as a successful farmer until 1902, when he removed to Meigs County, Ohio, and finally left his farm and retired to the City of Akron, where he died June 23, 1917. He was a republican, and he did much to keep up the interest in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in his community. James S. Hogsett married Alice Wolfe, who is living at Akron. She was born in Jackson County, West Virginia, in 1853. These parents had a large family of children. Pearl, the oldest, is the wife of Thomas S. Burch, a farmer at Sandvile, Jackson County. Everett Leon is the second in age. Willa, widow of Elias S. Rhodes, who was a school teacher, lived at Akron and has herself taught in public school and is now connected with the Department of Charities at Akron. Verna is the wife of Clinton Farley, of Akron. Otis C., an employee of the Mellon National Bank of Pittsburgh, had an interesting record as a World war soldier, spending fifteen months in France and Italy with the Three Hundred and Thirty-second Infantry, this regiment being sent to Italy with other American troops to give support to the Italians when the Austrian armies were overrunning the northern part of that country. He served as first sergeant and was private secretary to the colonel of the Headquarters Division. Theodore P., the seventh child, now a law student at Akron, is also a World war veteran and was in France fifteen months, being on the firing line at Saint Mihiel, the Argonne and in Belleau Wood and one other major sector. He was in four major engagements. He enlisted in the Engineer Corps of the Ohio State Guard. He was also mustered out a sergeant. Another son, James P., lives at Parkersburg. Marie, the youngest child, is a stenographer in the office of the Goodrich Tire and Rubber Company at Akron.

Everett Leon Hogsett had as the background of his early life and experience his father's farm, and his first advantages were given him in the rural schools of Jackson County. He also spent two years in Ohio Valley College at Ravenswood. For ten years he was a teacher in Jackson and McDowell counties. He interrupted this work as a teacher to carry on his law studies in West Virginia University, where he graduated with the class of 1910. Instead of taking up practice immediately, he resumed teaching in McDowell County, and for three years was principal of the Jaeger graded schools, and was then appointed and served one year as district superintendent for the Sandy River District of McDowell County.

In the meantime he had handled his first cases as a lawyer, and in 1914 he gave up school work to practice in McDowell County. In November of that year he removed to Logan County and formed a partnership with his brother-in-law, Edward H. Greene, and they continued their professional associations and work in Logan County until November, 1920. At that date Mr. Hogsett came to Huntington to look after his duties as attorney for the Main Island Creek Coal Company. He also handled the legal business in connection with the coal and oil interests in West Virginia and Kentucky of A. J. Dalton and John A. Kelly. His offices are in the Robson-Pritchard Building at Huntington.

Mr. Hogsett is a republican, a member of the First Baptist Church of Logan, is affiliated with Aracoma Lodge No. 99, F. and A. M., at Logan, Logan Chapter, R. A. M., Logan Chapter No. 60 of the Eastern Star, and is a member of the West Virginia Bar Association. Since coming to Huntington he has acquired an attractive home in one of the best residence sections of the city, at 332 Fifth Avenue.

On February 10, 1901, in Jackson County, Mr. Hogsett married Miss Cora Alice Greene, daughter of Scarlet F. and Minerva (Foglesong) Greene, farming people of Jackson County.

CARSON ALLEN WILLIS, M. D. A leading and prominent member of the medical fraternity of Harrison County is Carson Allen Willis, M. D., who has been engaged in practice at Clarksburg continuously since 1911, with the exception of the period during the World's war when he was enlisted in the United States Army Medical Corps. He has built up a large and representative practice at Clarksburg, and his standing in his profession is that of a thoroughly capable, reliable and reputable physician and surgeon.

Doctor Willis was born on a farm at Bridgeport, Harrison County, West Virginia, February 24, 1875, a son of Jesse H. and Olive A. (Gawthrop) Willis. The parents are now numbered among the oldest and most highly respected couples of Harrison County, where both were born, educated and reared and where they have always resided. The father was a pioneer breeder of thorough-bred race horses in West Virginia and followed the races with a "string" of horses for many years. His farm lay close by Bridgeport, and a part of it is now a portion of that city. His many years of active life were attended with success and now, having passed the four-score span of life by seven years, is living in comfortable retirement. When the Civil war came on during the sixties, Jesse H. Willis tendered his services to the Union army, but was rejected because it was thought that he had tubercular trouble, although this trouble was later diagnosed as asthma, from which he was a sufferer for years. During a part of the Civil war he served as a teamster. Mr. Willis never sought political honors, but in politics he has long been known as a stalwart republican. While he has never joined any church, his good and faithful wife has long been a member of the Baptist Church. They had and reared two sons: Walter Warren and Dr. Carson Allen.

Carson Allen Willis was reared on the farm and after graduating from the Bridgeport high school was for a part of two years a student in the West Virginia University, preparing himself to take up the study of medicine. He completed the prescribed course in the medical department of the University of Maryland, at Baltimore, and received his degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1904, following which for the next seven years he practiced his calling at Jennings, Tucker County, West Virginia. In 1911 he located at Clarksburg, where he soon built up a desirable general practice and gained the confidence and esteem of a large following.

Doctor Willis volunteered his services to the medical department of the United States Army, and in July, 1918, was commissioned a first lieutenant and sent to Camp Lee, where he served until February, 1919. He had been recommended for a commission as a captain, but the commission, like many others, was held up because of the signing of the armistice. Some time subsequent to his honorable discharge, he received letters from the War Department notifying him that he was listed with the rank of captain in the Medical Reserve Corps, his present rank. He is now serving as full-time medical officer of the Veterans' Bureau, with headquarters at Clarksburg. Doctor Willis is a member of the Harrison County Medical Society, the West Virginia Medical Society and the American Medical Association. In his fraternal relations he is a Knight Templar Mason and a Noble of the Mystic Shrine. His political belief is that of the republican party, but he has taken no active part in political matters. Reared a Baptist he has always remained true to that faith.

In 1904 Doctor Willis was united in marriage with Miss Hazel Sandusky, and they are the parents of two children: John and James.

KIRK KING has made a record of splendid achievement in the field of life insurance and is now West Virginia state agent for the Michigan Mutual Life Insurance Company, one of the old and substantial insurance corporations of the United States. Mr. King maintains his home and executive headquarters in the City of Clarksburg, Harrison County, and he is interested also in oil and gas production enterprise in West Virginia.

Mr. King was born at Slanesville, Hampshire County, West Virginia, July 20, 1878, and was two years old when his parents removed to Woodstock, Shenandoah County, Virginia, where he was reared to adult age and where he completed his studies in the public and high schools. His family removed in 1895 to Davis, Tucker County, where he joined them in the following year. At Davis his father was for several years proprietor of the West Virginia Hotel.

Mr. King is a son of Thomas E. and Martha Ann (Vanosdale) King, both deceased, the former of whom died at the age of sixty-seven years and the latter at the same age in January of 1922. Of the four children the subject of this review is the eldest, and the others, Sylvester, Mary and Pearl, are all married and have children. Three parents were born in what is now Hampshire County, West Virginia, where the respective families were established, the pioneer days and where numerous representatives each still reside.

Kirk King celebrated his arrival at his legal majority by taking unto himself a wife, in 1900, and for the ensuing five years he followed the vocation of painter and decorator two years having been given to his apprenticeship and remaining three years to independent contracting in that line. In 1905 he became a local agent at Davis for the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, and three months later he was promoted to the management of a sub-district with headquarters at Elkins. After continuing five years in the service of the Metropolitan Life he resigned his position to accept the state agency for the Reserve Loan Life Insurance Company of Indianapolis, Indiana. In April, 1918, he made another significant advance, in his appointment to his present position, that of West Virginia state agent for the Michigan Mutual Life Insurance Company of Detroit, for which he has since developed a large volume of business in West Virginia, the annual underwriting of the company in this state having now passed the $1,000,000 mark.

Aside from his splendid record in the insurance business Mr. King has become identified with oil and gas production, in which connection he is a director of the Latty & Gas Company, besides being one of the principals in the Weekly & King Company, drilling contractors, and he is associated also with other oil and gas producing corporations operating in the West Virginia fields. He is a stalwart republican, is a member of the Clarksburg Chamber of Commerce and the Cheat Mountain Club, is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and his wife holds membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The year 1900 recorded the marriage of Mr. King and Miss Myrtle Wilson, a daughter of T. E. Wilson, a representative merchant at Davis, this state. Mr. and Mrs. King have a fine family of nine children: Frederick Wilks, Constance, Kirk Kenneth, Theodore, Philip Sousa, Dorot Virginia, Donald, and Roger.

KENNETH NEIL SAPPINGTON, whose administration of the office of the chief of the police department of Clarksburg, Harrison County, is marked by distinctive loyalty and efficiency, was born at Charles Town, Jefferson County, West Virginia, on the 23d of January, 1888. He is a son of Joseph L. and Mary E. (Woody) Sappington and was but seven years of age when his father was killed in a railroad wreck. The widowed mother was left to care for the family of four sons and four daughters, and for the sake of her family she was a woman of great fortitude, courage and self-sacrifice were hers in the rearing of the children. This noble woman is still living and her reward for past struggles in receiving the utmost devotion on the part of her children. When the present chief of police of Clarksburg was a lad of ten years, his widowed mother removed to Weston and assumed a position as nurse in the insane asylum. Chief Sappington attended the public schools in a somewhat intermittent and haphazard way, and early began the battle of life for himself, and earnest desire to relieve his mother of responsibility. A young man he established his residence at Clarksburg, and here he was variously employed until 1909, when he was appointed a member of the police force. After serving five years as a patrolman he was retired from the police department and otherwise engaged for four years. In April, 1918, he was appointed chief of police, for a term of three years, and the estimate placed upon his administration was shown in his re-appointment in 1921, for a further term of two years. He has systematized and made specially effective the service of his department and his personal popularity in his home city is of unequivocal character. The Chief is a staunch democrat, is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Loyal Order of Moose, and he and his wife hold membership in the Baptist Church.

May 17, 1911, recorded the marriage of Mr. Sappington and Miss Lulu J. Lee, daughter of J. G. Lee of Garrett County, Maryland, and they have four children: Joseph Neil, Walter Carl, Ruth Maxine, and Kenneth Lee.

CHARLES D. RITTER for thirty-five years has had an active participation in the industrial and commercial affairs of Wheeling. He is head of the Ritter-Smith Motor Company, one of the chief organizations distributing motor cars in this territory.

Mr. Ritter was born at Wheeling, June 20, 1868. Ritter has a name of Pennsylvania Dutch ancestry. His grandfather was a Pennsylvanian, and soon after the discovery of gold in California set out for the Pacific Coast and was killed near Denver, Colorado. His widow subsequently died in Wheeling. Charles Ritter, father of Charles D. Ritter, was a native of Pennsylvania, and moved when a young man to Wheeling, where he married. For a number of years he was a steward on Ohio River steamboats. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity, and died at Wheeling in 1887. His wife was Miss Minnie Vaas, who was born in Germany in 1845, and died at Wheeling in 1914. He was the mother of four children, the oldest, Will, dying at the age of eight days. Charles D. is the second. Harry, a clothing merchant at Wheeling and Louis is a member of the Wheeling Axle Company.

Charles D. Ritter grew up at Wheeling, attended the public schools and Frazier's Business College, and at the age of sixteen entered the world of industry in the shops of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Company. For eight years he was a machinist in the railway shops, and for five years was similarly employed by the City and Elm Grove Railway Company. In 1897 he went with the Spears Lumber Company, and had a prominent part in that manufacturing concern for twenty-two consecutive years, eventually becoming superintendent of the plant.

In 1919 he bought the Eureka Motor Car Company, changing the name to the Eureka Garage and a year later to A. Smith, of Bellaire, Ohio, came with him as partner, organizing the Ritter-Smith Motor Company. This company has well equipped garage and offices at 1517 Eoff street, and besides operating a public garage they do an extensive business as distributors throughout this district of the Cole, Hupmobile and Maibohm cars.

Mr. Ritter is a republican in politics. For two years he was town recorder of his home village at Edgewood, was a part of Wheeling. He is a deacon in St. James Lutheran Church. September 20, 1893, at Wheeling, he married Miss Mary Elizabeth Bayha, daughter of Gottlieb D. Mary Elizabeth (Hayner) Bayha, both deceased. Her mother was a well-known Wheeling baker. Mr. and Mrs. Ritter had two children, Carl and Clara, but the latter died at the age of nineteen years. Carl married Marie Doepken, and they live in Bae Mar, Wheeling, where he is a baker. Mr. and Mrs. Carl Ritter have two children, Dorothy and Charles.

HARVEY F. GRIFFEY, superintendent of the West Virginia schools for the Deaf and the Blind at Remney, is an educator of high standing and came to his present responsibilities after several years of service as a superintendent of schools in West Virginia. Prior to that he was for many years engaged in educational work in his native state of Indiana.

Mr. Griffey was born in Marion County, near the City of Indianapolis, July 20, 1878. His father, Henry M. Griffey, was born in Wabash County, same state, in 1855, and has spent his life as a carpenter, painter and contractor, and is still in business at Fortville, Indiana. In Marion County he married Miss Ida L. Greesh. Her father, Levi P. Greesh, came from Reading, Pennsylvania. Harvey F. Griffey is the oldest in a family of fourteen children, twelve of whom are still living.

Superintendent Griffey spent his boyhood and youth in and around Indianapolis, attended high school at New Augusta, and in preparation for his profession attended the State Normal School at Terre Haute two terms. This was followed by three years of work in Butler College at Indianapolis. Later he pursued a scientific course and received his Bachelor's degree from the University of Indiana in 1910, and for additional work he was awarded the Master's degree in 1915, and since then has done graduate work in the University of Chicago.

However, his teaching experience began many years before he received his Master's degree. For a time he taught a country school in Marion County, and his first principalship was at Parker City, Indiana. He was superintendent of schools at Mount Comfort and at Geneva, Indiana, and during 1910-11 he held the chair of biology in the South Dakota State Normal School. From there he returned to his work at Geneva, Indiana, and in 1915 came to West Virginia as superintendent of schools at Hinton. His three years' work there included the period of the World war, and as a school man he had much to do with building up patriotic sentiment in the city and surrounding district. After leaving Hinton Mr. Griffey was for one year superintendent of schools at Kenova, and in 1920 he took the supervision of the Deaf and Blind Institution at Remney as the successor of F. L. Burdette.

Ever since coming to West Virginia Mr. Griffey has been active in county institute work, serving as an instructor in normal training in the counties of Pocahontas, Mercer, Greenbrier, Summers, Fayette, Raleigh, Boone, Mason and Hampshire. During 1909-10 he was located on the Indiana University farms. One feature of these farms were some large caves, and in these he did special research work upon the eyes of blind cray fish. His graduating thesis was on this subject, and it is now in process of publication. Another scientific thesis seen to be published is the result of his experience and study of the handwriting of 1,000 children, a study conducted with the purpose of determining which of the three styles of handwriting can be used most rapidly and with the best quality of penmanship.

Mr. Griffey's administration of the schools at Remney has proved him a man thoroughly qualified for the great responsibility of training the unfortunate children placed there. He has made some improvement in the technique of the school itself, introducing some new methods of instruction, and since he became superintendent some notable additions have also been made to the general equipment of the school, including a new dormitory for the blind girls, finished and occupied in 1923, and the remodeling of the old Potomac Academy building and its addition to the institution a group of buildings.

Mr. Griffey married at Mount Comfort, Indiana, February 6, 1909, Miss Bessie Dunn. Mrs. Griffey is an experienced educator and shares completely in her husband's ideals in this great vocation. She is a daughter of William H. and Martha (Wilson) Dunn, and is a graduate of the Mount Comfort High School, attended Indiana University and the South Dakota State Normal School at Springfield. She began teaching with her husband at Geneva, Indiana, and taught at Hinton and Kenova in West Virginia, and is now assistant superintendent of the West Virginia Schools for the Deaf and Blind. Mr. and Mrs. Griffey have one son, Harold F.

Mr. Griffey comes of a family of republican faith, but beyond voting has not concerned himself with partisan politics. He is a member of the college fraternity Pi Ma, is a past grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and has represented Hinton Lodge in the State Grand Lodge and is a member of the Junior Order United American Mechanics. Mrs. Griffey has held several offices in the Eastern Star Chapter. They are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and both take part in the Sunday school, Mr. Griffey being a teacher of the Men's Bible Class.

JOHN E. STEVENSON. Though he had worked himself up to the responsibilities of a superintendent in the Monessen plant of the American Sheet & Tin Plate Company, John E. Stevenson resigned, changed his destination as a business man, and as member of the firm Mitchell & Stevenson has developed a highly successful business as investment brokers.

Mr. Stevenson was born at West Newton in Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, October 9, 1832. His father, Thomas C. Stevenson, was born at West Newton in 1859. While there he entered the service of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, was transferred to Connellsville, Pennsylvania, and in 1890 came to Wheeling as freight agent for the Baltimore & Ohio. Three years later he resigned from the railroad, and for two years was sales manager of the Bloch Brothers Tobacco Company. He left that business to become superintendent for the American Sheet & Tin Plate Company at Wheeling, later was promoted to district manager and in 1905 became district manager at Pittsburgh. Thomas C. Stevenson in 1907 retired from business and has since lived at Wheeling. He is a Mason, a member of the First Presbyterian Church at Wheeling, and votes as an independent. He married Mary Elliott, who was born at Newark, Ohio, in 1855. John E. is the oldest of their three children. Mary Louise is the wife of Charles D. Towar, a salesman at Wheeling, and Elizabeth Plummer is the wife of Henry G. Stifel, a member of the manufacturing firm of J. L. Stifel & Sons at Wheeling.

John E. Stevenson acquired his early education in the public schools of Wheeling and in Linsly Institute. After a course in the Moise Commercial College at Wheeling in 1898 he became a traveling salesman for the Bloch Brothers Tobacco Company. He was on the road two years for this firm and then entered the local plant and offices of the American Sheet & Tin Plate Company as a clerk. His abilities gained him rapid promotion, and he was general superintendent when he resigned in 1907 to engage in business for himself. He organized the firm of Mitchell & Stevenson, investment brokers, in 1913. They have made many prominent connections with the financial interests and enjoy a high standing in the financial world. Their offices are at 57 Twelfth Street.

Mr. Stevenson is a director in the Marland Oil Company of Delaware, the Maryland Refining Company, and the Mack Manufacturing Company of Wheeling. He is a republican, is a trustee of the First Presbyterian Church, is a Knight Templar Mason with local affiliations in Monessen Lodge No. 638 at Monessen, Pennsylvania. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, Wheeling Country Club and Fort Henry Club. December 8, 1914, at Wheeling, he married Miss Laura Stifel, daughter of L. C. and Elizabeth (Stamm) Stifel. Her parents both died in Wheeling. Her father was for many years actively connected with J. F. Stifel & Sons, calico printers. Mrs. Stevenson is a graduate of the Penn College for Women. They have one daughter, Henryett, born October 25, 1917.

WILLIAM R. COOXY, president of the Cooley-Bentz Company, of Wheeling, whose retail furniture business represents one of the two largest enterprises of the kind in West Virginia, holds a place of much prominence in connection with the industrial and commercial life of the City of Wheeling. He was born at McMechen, Marshall County, this state, on the 1st of September, 1860, and is a son of Matthew and Nancy (McCombs) Cooley, the former of whom was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, in 1828, and the latter was born in what is now Marshall County, West Virginia, in 1830. The parents passed the closing years of their lives at Martins Ferry, Ohio, where the death of the mother occurred in 1895 and that of the father in 1901. Of the children the eldest was John, who became a farmer in Marshall County, West Virginia, and later a huckster at Martins Ferry, Ohio, where he died at the age of fifty-five years; Mary Rachel, who became the wife of William Minden, likewise died at Martins Ferry and Mr. Minden is now a farmer near Clarington, Ohio. William R., of this sketch, was the next in order of birth. Ella is the wife of Thomas Hasson, a farmer near Zora, Ohio; Everett is engaged in the shoe business at Zora, Ohio.

William R. Cooley was reared on the farm which his father owned and operated in Wetzel County, West Virginia, where he remained until he was twenty-five years of age, his educational advantages having been those of the local schools. After leaving the farm he was variously employed until 1887, when he came to Wheeling, where for the ensuing five years he was employed in the furniture store of John Arbenz, the following four years having found him similarly engaged with the Altmeyer Furniture Company. After the death of Mr. Altmeyer in 1897 Mr. Cooley and Herman Bentz purchased the business, which was then on a small order, and their vigor and good management played full part in the development of the enterprise to its present extensive and substantial proportions. The large and modern store building of the company is situated at the corner of Third-sixth Street, and the personnel of the official corps is as follows: President, William R. Cooley; vice president, Herman Bentz; secretary and general manager, Charles Kettler; manager of branch store at Benwood, Marshall County, Edward Cooley. In addition to full line of furniture the company also handles house furnishing, and has an undertaking department of the most modern equipment and service. Mr. Cooley is a director of the McConnell Box & Barrel Company, conducting one of the important manufacturing industries of Wheeling; is stockholder in the South Side Bank of Wheeling, the Community Loan Bank of this city, the Uneda Match Company, the Wheeling Milling & Grain Company, a brass manufactory at Fairmont and the North Wheeling Glass Works.

Mr. Cooley, a democrat in politics, served one term as member of the City Council of Wheeling, but is essentially a business man and has not cared to enter the arena of practical politics. He is a trustee of the Wesleyan Methodist Episcopal Church in his home city, and in the Masonic fraternity his basic affiliation is with Nelson Lodge No. 30, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, while in the Scottish Rite he has received the thirty-second degree in West Virginia Sovereign Consistory No. 1, besides being a member of Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling. He is the owner not only of his modern and beautiful home property, at 3740 Woods Street, but also of two other houses on that street and near his own residence.

In 1885 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Cooley and Miss Mary Sengenwalt, daughter of Frederick and Wilhelm (Kupfer) Sengenwalt, both now deceased. In conclusion is given brief record concerning the children of Mr. and Mrs. Cooley: Walter is a salesman in the store of Cooley-Bentz Company; Edward has the management of the branch store at Benwood and is individually mentioned in the sketch following; Wilbert, who is associated with the Bloch Brothers Tobacco Company of Wheeling, resides at McMechen, Marshall County; Bertha is the wife of Roy Black, and they reside at McMechen, Mr. Black being connected with the Cooley-Bentz branch store at Benwood. Archibald was graduated from the United States Military Academy at West Point in 1919, just prior to the signing of the armistice that brought the World war to a close and as a member of the United States Army he is now (1921) stationed at Camp Sherman, Ohio, with the rank of first lieutenant; Wilma is the wife of Mr. Elmer Burrall, who is a skilled machinist at the Uneda Match Factory in Wheeling; and Mary is a student in the Wheeling High School.

John Cooley, grandfather of the subject of this review was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, and died at Elm Grove, Ohio County, West Virginia, in 1875. He came to the United States as a youth of sixteen years, established his residence at Wheeling, West Virginia, and after his marriage he engaged in farming in Greene County, Pennsylvania.

nia, which vocation he later followed in Marshall and Hazel counties, West Virginia, in which latter county he established his residence in 1865. After retiring from the army he passed the remainder of his life at Elm Grove, Ohio County. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Carter, was born near West Alexander, Pennsylvania, and died at Elm Grove, West Virginia. Both were active members in the Presbyterian Church, and Mr. Cooley was a democrat in political allegiance.

EDWARD COOLEY is manager of the Benwood Branch of the Cooley-Bentz Company, one of the largest furniture stores in the Upper Ohio Valley. Mr. Cooley is a son of R. Cooley, president and one of the founders of this business. He is one of Wheeling's prominent young business men, and has manifested many admirable qualities as a public-spirited citizen, ever ready to enlist his time and influence in behalf of every worthy cause.

Edward Cooley acquired a public-school education at Wheeling, where he was born November 7, 1858, attended the Wheeling Business College, and had some experience in training in several positions. Beginning in 1905 he has for six years connected with the Art Tile China and Pottery Company, of Wheeling. He has been with the Cooley-Bentz Company since 1911, and on the first of August of that year was appointed manager of the Benwood branch. He is also a director of the company and a director of the Bank of Benwood. Mr. Cooley is a democrat, a member of the Wesleyan Methodist Church of Wheeling, Nelson Lodge No. 30, F. and A. M., Wheeling chapter No. 1, R. A. M., Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine, Wheeling Lodge No. 28, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and Evening Star Lodge No. 18, Knights of Pythias, at Benwood.

December 6, 1911, at Wheeling, he married Miss Myrtle Barnock, daughter of Walter and Matilda (Bellville) Barnock, residents of Wheeling. Her father is a carriage builder by trade. Mr. and Mrs. Cooley have one son, Edward William, born October 16, 1914. Mr. Cooley is a resident of Benwood.

Throughout the period of the World war he put patriotic duty first and business second, and in fact largely neglected his business in order to discharge his responsibilities as a leader in the various campaigns. He was president of the Benwood Chapter of the American Red Cross. He was treasurer for all the war funds collected at Benwood, was chairman of the five Liberty and Victory Loan drives. He of these drives exceeded the quota by 500 per cent. and Benwood never failed to surpass her quota in every drive. He was also chairman of the War Savings Stamps Committee of Benwood. During the influenza epidemic he was head of the Emergency Hospital at Benwood.

HENRY DICKINSON CAUSEY, M. D., has gained inviolable success as one of the able and successful representatives of his profession in Marion County, where he is established in practice at Fairmont, the county seat. He was born at Milford, Delaware, October 14, 1851, and is a son of Peter Foster and Jane (Dickinson) Causey. Peter F. Causey likewise was a native of Milford, where he was born in February, 1841. He was a son of Hon. Peter Foster Causey, and Anna (Richard) Causey, and that his father was one of the honored and influential citizens of Delaware needs no further voucher than the statement that he served as governor of that state from 1853 to 1866, his administration having covered the climactic period of the Civil war. For a number of years Peter F. Causey, Jr., brother of the doctor, served as United States federal internal-revenue inspector, and his death occurred in 1911, his wife having passed away in 1909. Mrs. Causey was born at Nashville, Tennessee, in May, 1841, a daughter of Henry and Francis (Hunter) Dickinson, natives respectively of Tennessee and North Carolina, the latter having been a daughter of General Hunter, a gallant officer in the patriot army in the War of the Revolution.

In 1899 Dr. Causey was graduated in the high school at Milford, Delaware, and for three years thereafter he was student in Wilmington Military Academy. When that school closed he found employment in his native city, and three years later he entered the medical department of the University of Maryland, in which he was graduated in 1911, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He served as a hospital interne for nine months thereafter, and then took effective post-graduate work at the great Rockefeller Institute and the New York Post-Graduate Medical College. Thereafter he was engaged in the active practice of his profession until the nation entered the World war, when he promptly subordinated all personal interests to enter service in the medical corps of the United States Army, his commission as captain having been received June 10, 1918. On the first of the following September he was assigned to duty at Camp Lee, Virginia, where he remained until November 10, when he was assigned to overseas service and sent to Newport News for embarkation. The signing of the historic armistice caused revocation of the sailing order, and on the 4th of February, 1919, the doctor was granted his honorable discharge. He then returned to New York for further post-graduate work, but in the same year he came to Fairmont, where he has since been engaged in successful practice. He is retained as mine surgeon for the Consolidation Coal Company, the Virginia & Pittsburgh Coal Company, the Arkwright Coal Company and the Hudson Coal Company. In his profession Doctor Causey specializes in traumatic surgery. He is a member of the Marion County and the West Virginia State Medical societies, American Medical Association and the Association of Baltimore & Ohio Railway Surgeons. He has received the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite of the Masonic fraternity, and is affiliated with the Mystic Shrine, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Maryland Lodge Knights of Pythias, and Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is a loyal and progressive member of the Fairmont Chamber of Commerce.

August 28, 1912, recorded the marriage of Doctor Causey to Miss Ethel Wyman Wyaetnan, who was born in Virginia, in 1883, a daughter of Charles and May (Carrow) Wyaetnan, natives respectively of Virginia and Maryland. Doctor and Mrs. Causey are earnest communicants of the Protestant Episcopal Church. They have one child, Virginia Tyler, born May 21, 1913.

EDMUND D. JUDY. The impression seems well founded that among the sturdy upbuilders of the region comprised by Grant County such accessories as ancestors or family traditions count for little as a community asset. There is something about the conformation of the country that makes an individual desire to rely upon himself, to develop his latent forces and to relegate to a respectful distance the deeds of his forefathers, which might overshadow or interfere with the workings of his own individual destiny. Nevertheless, no class of men are more appreciative of creditable forefathers or more ready to do honor to the qualities which brought them to the front in the times in which they lived. An instance at hand is Edmund D. Judy, of Petersburg, a man of wide experience and pronounced usefulness, an intelligent, wide-awake factor in the life of his community, and one of the most successful farmers and stock-raisers in Grant County.

Mr. Judy belongs to one of the ancient and honorable families of this section of West Virginia, the history of which as residents of what is now Pendleton County dates back several generations. He was born near Fort Seybert, Pendleton County, February 10, 1870, a son of Manassah Judy, who was a stockman and farmer on the South Fork of the South Branch of the Potomac River for some years, but later changed his residence to the country near Petersburg. There he secured possession by purchase of the Cunningham farm, a mile and one-half east of the town, where his death occurred. Manassah Judy was born March 24, 1821, in what was then Hardy County, Virginia, but a part of which is now Grant County, West Virginia. While his educational advantages were confined to the rudiments of the "three R's," he learned to read, write and cipher acceptably and his inherent business qualities, which could not have been learned from a book, were such that he was able to carry on his enterprises in an entirely successful way. While he raised a number of products on his farm, his chief business was that of a stockman, and in that field of endeavor he became well and favorably known. He died in 1886, when his community lost a good citizen and one who had always been a supporter of education, religion and good citizenship. He was a democrat in politics, but not an office seeker, although he was ever ready to accept and discharge any responsibility. Mr. Judy was united in marriage with Miss Sarah Ann Dyer, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Dyer. Mrs. Judy, who was born April 22, 1833, survived her husband a number of years, dying in 1910. She and her husband were the parents of the following children: Mary Virginia, the wife of Andrew Trumbo, of Bedford County, Virginia; William Andrew, of Petersburg, one of the successful farmers of Pendleton County for many years; Henry Seymour, of Petersburg; George Franklin, who died near Petersburg, in Grant County, leaving a family by his wife, who was formerly Mattie Sites; Josephine Margaret, who married John Koler and died at Monterey, Virginia; Rebecca Lee, who married Jared Hiner, of Doehill, Virginia; Edmund Dyer, of this review; and Manassah Parron, of Brunswick, Indiana.

Like his father, Edmund Dyer Judy had only a limited schooling, which was of a very common kind. In later years, however, he has made use of his powers of observation and these, with much reading, have given him an education of a practical nature. He never had a desire to leave the parental roof in his youth, accompanying his parents from Pendleton County to the vicinity of Petersburg when he was a youth of fifteen years, and here settling down to the business of assisting his father in the daily duties of the home place. Under the excellent teaching of the elder man he learned the stock business thoroughly, from every viewpoint and angle, from the bottom to the top. When he was ready to begin operations for himself, therefore, he was fully prepared to make the most of his efforts. His early independent ventures were conducted on the parental estate, and there he continued to make his home during all the time that he was active as a farmer. These operations he continued to personally supervise until the year 1913, at which time he built a home and moved to Petersburg, where he has since resided. However, he still owns his property in the country, where he is identified with the stock business, wintering, feeding and fattening heavy cattle, which he sells to shippers in the Baltimore market, and his light cattle he sells locally over a wide territory to local butchers for home consumption. His property comprises more than 2,000 acres, and may be called an all-purpose farm, with 200 acres under cultivation. He has installed the latest improvements, has erected modern buildings, conducts all his operations along modern lines, and in addition to being a stock raiser, grows all kinds of grain, conducts a dairy and operates all other departments of farm work. His reputation in business circles is an excellent one, and his word has been said to be fully as good as a bond. Mr. Judy has had no active part in community matters in a business way, his time for the most part being devoted to his personal affairs. However, he shows the interest maintained by every good citizen in the welfare of his community, and is a co-operator in worthy movements. He has never held nor aspired to office, and in political matters is inclined to act independently in local affairs, although nationally he supports the democratic ticket. His religious connection is with the Presbyterian Church and he has no fraternal affiliations. Physically Mr. Judy is a man weighing 225 pounds, being a trifle larger than the members of his family usually are.

Near Harrisonburg, Rockingham County, Virginia, May 15, 1900, Mr. Judy was united in marriage with Miss Willie M. Huffman, who was born in Rockingham County, a daughter of Elijah and Susan (Bowman) Huffman, and the ninth in a family of ten children. No children have come to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Judy. They lent their sincere aid in the World war movements, purchasing bonds and contributing to the Red Cross drives and other enterprises. Their home at Petersburg is one of the conspicuous residences of the county seat, containing eight rooms, generous in proportions and well-appointed in equipment, an ideal place for spending years of retirement by those who have labored hard and well.

GLENN J. MOOMAU. Among the energetic public officials of Pendleton County, one who has established an especially creditable record for efficient and conscientious performance of duty is Glenn J. Moomau, tax assessor. The incumbent of this office since 1916, he has evidenced a painstaking desire to discharge faithfully the responsibilities that have devolved upon him, and that his attention has been realized is evidenced by the esteem and confidence in which he is held by those who recognize and appreciate capability in public positions.

Mr. Moomau was born April 12, 1884, in Pendleton County, and is a son of Dr. Fred and Etta (Johnson) Moomau, and a representative of a family founded and settled here among the early pioneers of the region. His great-grandfather, Frederick Moomau, was of French stock and in his youth learned the trade of hatter, which followed for a number of years at Franklin, where his death occurred July 5, 1845. He married Catherine Johnson, and they became the parents of five sons and three daughters: John Bean, Mary J., Caroline H., Jacob George W., Catherine J., Samuel J. and Dr. James P.

John Bean Moomau, the grandfather of Glenn J., was born in Pendleton County, May 1, 1821, and died July 24, 1864. He was educated at the Virginia Military Institute, and at the beginning of the war between the states organized a company at Franklin which entered the Confederate service. Early in the struggle between the North and the South he was taken a prisoner, and while he was later released by exchange he never recovered from the disease contracted in the army, and died at Staunton, Virginia. He had been a lawyer by profession practicing at Franklin until he enlisted and gave his life for the Lost Cause. Mr. Moomau married Hannah Dice, a daughter of John Dice. The eight children born to Mr. and Mrs. Moomau were: Jacob Dice; Bean; Scott; John; Fred, the father of Glenn J.; Catherine, who married L. A. Orndorff, of Woodstock, Virginia; Bettie, who married Mr. Wisman, of South Carolina, and passed her life in the Palmetto State; and Mary, who married Milt Swink and died at Murat, Virginia.

Dr. Fred Moomau, the father of Glenn J., was born at Franklin, April 27, 1858, and spent practically his entire life at that place. His literary education came from the public schools, and after he had engaged in teaching school for several years he took up the study of medicine at the University of Maryland and the University of New York, from which latter institution he was graduated in 1881. He then entered upon the practice of his profession at Franklin, where he ministered to ailing humanity for many years with great success, became one of the most beloved physicians of his county, and died honored and respected, May 21, 1915. He was one of the church-builders at Franklin, and for many years was a member of the Board of Stewards of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In national matters he cast his ballot in favor of the candidates of the democratic party, but in local matters was inclined to be independent. Doctor Moomau married Miss Etta Johnson, who was born on a farm near Franklin, January 3, 1861, a daughter of Jacob F. and Clara B. (Maupin) Johnson. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson had nine children, all of whom reached maturity: James W., who was afflicted with blindness from birth, but gained an excellent education and taught the schools of Pendleton and adjoining counties for half a century; Howard H., who was also blind, and overcame his infirmity, being one of the founders of the Deaf and Blind Institution at Romney, West Virginia; in which he was a teacher for many years; Sue, who married Oscar Dyer, and after his death, Mr. Hobb, and is now a resident of Raton, New Mexico; Catherine, who is the wife of J. T. McMullen, and resides at Barstow, California; Charles, of Jamesport, Missouri; Dellus O., of Phoenix, Arizona; Etta, who became the wife of Doctor Moomat Patrick Henry, assistant district attorney of Los Angeles, California; and Arthur, of Ray, Arizona. To Doctor Ar

s. Moomau there were born the following children: Anna Johnson, of this review; and Miss Lynn, a resident of Franklin.

Glenn Johnson Moomau acquired his primary education in the graded and high schools of Franklin, following which he pursued a course at the Randolph-Macon Academy, Front Royal, Virginia, where he spent a year. He then entered West Virginia University, at Morgantown, where he took the agricultural course, and in 1906 graduated from that institution with the degree of Bachelor of Agriculture. When he left the university Mr. Moomau applied himself to scientific agriculture, and ten years continuously was identified with the work of farmers' institutes, lecturing and demonstrating, particularly in the field of animal husbandry. In the meantime he continued to carry on his own farming enterprise near Franklin, where the success of his experiments has testified unequivocally to the value of scientific training in farming. Mr. Moomau has always given his attention to whatever tended to improve his locality and lead it into the light, and before he became a candidate for his present office he was active in political party affairs merely as a good citizen. As a democrat he cast his maiden vote in behalf of the candidacy of Mr. Bryan in 1908, supported President Wilson in 1912 and 1916, and followed the fortunes of his party four years later. He was elected county treasurer in 1916, winning the nomination in the county primary against competition, and in the election had a publican competitor. In 1920 he encountered opposition in his own party in the primary, but won the election without a fight from the other side. Mr. Moomau was a member of the committee of the American Red Cross and a committeeman during all the war drives made in the county. He registered for active service, but his classification had not been made when the war closed. As a fraternalist he is a Master Mason and a Modern Woodman. He is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the work of which he has been active, and at the present time a member of the building committee directing the remodeling of the home church edifice.

MARTIN KENNY BOGGS. In seeking for individuals of vigorous and forceful character who have taken important and prominent part in the affairs of men, the biographer is not expected to deal only with the lives of valiant and martial heroes, for in the world of science and arts, the professions and politics, and commercial and industrial life of the present day are found men of action, capable of earnest, whose talents, enterprise and energy command the respect of their fellow men and whose lives are worthy examples and objects to be emulated. In this connection it is appropriate to review the career of Martin Kenny Boggs, one of the old-time merchants of Franklin, where he has resided since 1876, and a native of Pendleton County. Mr. Boggs was born in Union District, December 27, 1857, and is a son of John Boggs.

The paternal grandfather of Martin K. Boggs, John Boggs, the elder, was born in Ireland and there married Margaret Key. Not long after their union they immigrated to the United States and settled in Virginia, but later moved to what is now Pendleton County, West Virginia, settling on the North Fork of the Potomac River, where Mr. Boggs rounded out his career in agricultural pursuits. There were five children in the family of John and Margaret (Key) Boggs: Aaron; Joseph; John, the father of Martin K.; Catherine, who married Perry Lawrence and moved to Lewis County, West Virginia; and Abella, who married a Mr. Lewis.

John Boggs the younger, father of Martin K. Boggs, was born in Virginia, but spent the greater part of his life in Pendleton County, where he carried on agricultural pursuits on the banks of the Potomac River until his declining years, when he retired from active pursuits. He died at the age of eighty-four years, respected and esteemed by all who knew him. He served Pendleton County in the capacity of sheriff for one term and made a good official, energetic and conscientious, and his republican sentiments made him an adherent of that party. During the war between the states his sympathies were with the Union, and he acted as captain of the Home Guard recruited in his locality. He was a believer, but never joined any church, nor was Mrs. Boggs what was known as a churchwoman, although a real Christian who lived her faith in her daily life. She passed away when eighty-six years of age. They were the parents of the following children: Joseph, who spent much of his active life in Ohio, where he was married and where his death occurred; Isaac P., who spent his life in Pendleton County, where at various times he was clerk of the court and sheriff, and died at Franklin, leaving a family; Aaron, who was a miller on the North Fork of the Potomac River, where he died and left a family; Henrietta, who married John R. Dolly and resides in the North Fork locality of the county; William H., who is a farmer in the same locality; his twin, Martin K., of this review; and John A., who for some years followed the vocation of farming in the vicinity of his birthplace, but is now a resident of Shovel, Maryland.

Martin K. Boggs spent the first eighteen years of his life at his birthplace, and left the old home with an education obtained from attendance at the old country school. He is one of the men whose schooldays were passed for a time in a log cabin schoolhouse, where they sat on backless benches of wood, ciphered on a slate and did not dream of the conveniences that were to be provided for the later generations. After he came to Franklin he went to school for two terms, and then entered the circuit clerk's office under his brother, remaining in that capacity for a period of four years. On leaving the Court House temporarily Mr. Boggs became a gauger and collector for the United States Revenue Department, a position in which he spent four years during the administration of President James A. Garfield. With the termination of this service he established himself in a general merchandise business at Franklin, being a partner with W. B. Anderson in the firm of W. B. Anderson & Company. Two years later Mr. Andersen retired, and Mr. Boggs continued the business under his own name for ten years. He then sold an interest to a nephew, Byron Boggs, and the firm name was changed to M. K. Boggs Company, this continuing until a third partner was admitted, Wilbur Dolly, when the style was changed to Boggs & Dolly. Byron Boggs and Mr. Dolly retired from the business finally and were succeeded by another nephew, Gordon Boggs, and the old name of M. K. Boggs & Company was resumed. The Boggs establishment has always been a general merchandise store and is the second oldest mercantile house at Franklin. A complete line of up-to-date goods is carried, and a special study of the needs and wishes of the community has enabled the proprietor to cater to his patrons in a way that gains their appreciation and support. A man of the strictest integrity, his fair reputation and honorable dealing have made his name synonymous with honesty and probity, and his good business management, at the same time, has allowed him to make a success of his venture.

Mr. Boggs was one of the original stockholders of the Franklin Bank, and is now a member of its Board of Directors. He has participated to some extent in the official life of Franklin, having served two terms as recorder, has been commissioner of chancery of the Circuit Court since 1882, and at present is likewise commissioner of accounts of the County Court. In politics a republican, he cast his maiden presidential vote for James A. Garfield in 1880, and has missed but one national election since. Very little of his time has been spent in party conventions as a delegate. He is a Protestant in religious belief, but is not identified with any special denomination or church, nor is he a member of any fraternal organization. As a patriotic and loyal citizen during the World War Mr. Boggs bought liberally of bonds and stamps and gave freely of his means in support of the American Red Cross, Young Men's Christian Association and other auxiliary work.

In April, 1892, in Pendleton County, West Virginia, Mr. Boggs was united in marriage with Miss Kate Skidmore, daughter of James and Barbara (Beverage) Skidmore, and a granddaughter of James Skidmore, who was a saddle-maker during the greater part of his life. Joseph Skidmore passed his career as a farmer in Pendleton County, and he and his worthy wife were the parents of four children: Kate, who became Mrs. Boggs; J. Burton, a farmer near Franklin; James W., of that place; and Rebecca, who is unmarried. Mr. and Mrs. Boggs have one daughter, Sylvia, who after attending the public schools of Franklin had two terms in the Southern Seminary at Buena Vista, Virginia.

THADDEUS SOBIESKI CUNNINGHAM. Now living retired at Brandonville, Mr. Cunningham looks back over a career of more than half a century in Preston County, but had already achieved manhood and a record as a soldier of the Civil war before he came to this section of West Virginia.

He was born at Turkey Foot, Somerset County, Pennsylvania, October 16, 1842, and though he bears the name of a great Polish patriot he is of Irish ancestry. His great-grandfather was a soldier under General Washington in the Revolutionary war and lost his life at a log rolling in Somerset County, Pennsylvania. John Cunningham, grandfather of the Brandonville citizen, was born in Somerset County, Pennsylvania, and is buried on the hill close to the Methodist Church at Paddytown that county. He married Jane McClintock. Their children were James, Alexander, William, John, Robert and Eston, Jennie, who became the wife of Thomas Hanna, Mary who married Jacob Gower, Margaret always known as Peggy married Moses Justus, and Mrs. Martha Bays.

Robert Cunningham, father of Thaddeus S., was born in Somerset County, Pennsylvania, in 1804 and married Sarah Pinkerton, daughter of Matthew Pinkerton who married a Miss Reed. Robert Cunningham died in 1889, having survived his wife ten years. In politics he was first a know-nothing and then a republican, and both he and his wife were active Methodists. Their children were: Rachel who married Rev. Abraham Williams and lived in Fayette County; Nancy, wife of John Mason, still living in that county; Frank M. who was a Union soldier four years and died as the result of stepping on a rusty nail; James Lawrence, who was in the First Ohio Cavalry and died in the Rebel prison at Andersonville; Thaddeus S.; Clarissa who became the wife of Elijah Harbaugh and died in Fayette County; Matthew who spent his active career in the coal fields but was killed in a railway accident; Ross of Connellsville, Pennsylvania; Martha, who became the wife of Reuben Leonard, an old Federal soldier, and died in Fayette County; and Sarah who died while a girl in school.

Thaddeus S. Cunningham was born on a farm and in July, 1859, at the age of seventeen, the year of the great frost in Southern Pennsylvania, he accompanied his parents to Fayette County, and from that time until he entered the army he lived in Stewart Township. He finished his education in an Academy at Smithfield and also attended Normal School at Somerset, but this part of his education was a matter of taking himself for responsibilities after he had lost his arm in the war.

August 15, 1862, he enlisted in Company H of the One Hundred Forty-second Pennsylvania Infantry. This company rendezvoused a few days at Connellsville, went to Harrisburg, two weeks later was sent to Washington, where he helped build and guard a fort. Then the regiment moved out into the Valley of Virginia to take part in the great and bloody battle of Fredericksburg in December, 1862, where Thaddeus Cunningham fought bravely until shot in the shoulder. His arm was so shattered that amputation was necessary, this operation being performed on the battlefield the same evening. He was then sent to Lincoln Hospital at Washington, where in Ward No. 1 he remained until he recuperated and received his honorable discharge March 6, 1863.

Having sacrificed so much for his country Mr. Cunningham had to refit himself for the duties of Civil life, and after the Normal School training he began teaching in Fayette County and in the fall of 1869 he moved to the vicinity of Rockville in Pleasant District of Preston County. While there he taught in the public schools and also taught Bruceston Mills, Kingwood, and finally at Brandonville. Among the pupils he instructed in Preston County and who became men of note were Christian Hartmeyer, Alfr. Fletcher, and Dr. Thurman Martin.

Another pupil was Eliza J. Liston, a native of Fayette County, Pennsylvania. She and Mr. Cunningham were married December 22, 1867. Her parents were Everhart and Thankful (Thorpe) Liston, the former a native of Preston County and the latter of Fayette County, Pennsylvania. Everhart Liston was a Union soldier in Company K of the Two Hundred Twelfth Pennsylvania Heavy Artillery, an organization composed chiefly of old men and doing duty in guarding the fortifications around Washington. Mr. Liston died in 1868 at the age of sixty-six and his wife survived until 1901, passing away at the age of eighty-five. The Liston children were: Martha who became the wife of Newton Graham and died in Preston County; Mrs. Cunningham who was born December 3, 1849; John M., of Preston County; Huldah A., wife of Evan Bowermaster, of Kingwood; and George A., of Farmington, West Virginia.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham have grown up, established themselves comfortably and successfully in several communities, and there are a large number of their descendants who acknowledge Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham as grandparents. The oldest child, Kate, is the wife of Thurman M. King of Hopewell; their children are Edward E., Hazel Elliott, Scott and Lida. The second child, Sarah B., is the wife of J. W. Wheeler, of Hopewell and their family consists of Albert, Roy, Mary, Wayne Marshall, Theodore, Paul, Clara and Cora. The third daughter, Emma C., is the wife of Lawrence Conner of Pasadena, California, and they have three children, Ethel Clarence and Mania. Frank M., the oldest son, is a farmer near Hopewell Church; by his marriage to Jessie McNair he has two sons, Ward and Harold. Edward Cunningham lives at Uniontown, Pennsylvania, married Effie Yeast, and has two children, Darrell and Glenna. Albert Cunningham also a resident of Uniontown, married Luhr Bowermaster and their children are Mabel, Margaret, Mary and Thomas Emmett Cunningham of Charleston, West Virginia; marriage Caroline Lawrence and they have a daughter, Elizabeth and a son, James.

Mr. Cunningham has never failed to cast his ballot for republican nominees, and has never missed voting at a national election. In 1864 he cast a ballot for Abraham Lincoln. Mrs. Cunningham first had an opportunity of voting at a national election in 1920, and she picked the winner, Warren G. Harding. Mr. Cunningham is an honored member of Uniontown Post Grand Army of the Republic, being one of the few survivors of that Post.

Their lives have been in complete accord with Christian principles and they have been working members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Mr. Cunningham serving as trustee of the churches at Hopewell and Bruceston Mills. While never a man of wealth he has always bestowed some portion of his income upon the church, and no minister has gone from the congregation without his salary, a fact chiefly to be credited to Mr. Cunningham.

SAMUEL R. BENTLEY. On the solid basis of definite achievement Samuel R. Bentley has a national reputation in life insurance circles, having for twelve years enjoyed that enviable association among the elect known as the $200,000 men, and for two years a member of the Two Hundred of the Two Hundred Thousand Dollar Club.

Mr. Bentley has been an honored citizen of Clarksburg for over twenty years, and has been a special representative of the New York Life Insurance Company since 1904. He was born November 12, 1877, at Spencersburg, Pike County, Missouri. At that time his father was operating a woolen mill at Spencersburg. When Samuel R. Bentley was two years of age the family removed to Warsaw, Illinois. His parents are Joseph and Jane (Brown) Bentley, native of Yorkshire, England, his father born at Bradford and his mother at Leeds. They were married November 1, 1863. Joseph Bentley became a skilled artisan in the oleu mills of England. In September, 1870, he came to a United States, his wife and oldest son following in November. The family lived successively at Alton and Jacksonville, Illinois, then at Spencersburg, Missouri, and for many years at Warsaw, Illinois, where Joseph Bentley was in the woolen mill business. In 1899 he removed to Clarksburg, West Virginia, to manage the Lowndes Woolen Mills. He is now retired from active business and he and his wife still live in Clarksburg, he in his eightieth year and his wife in her seventy-eighth. They have been married over fifty-eight years. They have a long record of consistent membership in the Methodist Church. Their two sons are Albert William and Samuel R. The former is owner and editor of the Hamilton (Kansas) Grit.

Samuel R. Bentley was reared and educated at Warsaw, Illinois, attending high school there. He followed his parents to Clarksburg in 1899, and he has lived with his father and mother ever since, and for some years past has kept the home for them in their declining years. Samuel R. Bentley had more than the normal enthusiasm of youth for the stage. He had in fact some decided natural talent for the theatrical profession, and was early enlisted in the Thespian roles. Prior to coming to Clarksburg he had concluded two years of the theatrical profession, finally leaving the stage at Pittsburgh, and soon after coming to Clarksburg went to the road as a traveling salesman with the Ruhl-Kobler and Company, wholesale grocers. This house in January, 1904, was succeeded by the Consolidated Grocers Company and Mr. Bentley continued in their service for six months longer. He left and in June, 1904, began his duties as agent for the New York Life Insurance Company. For a number of years he has enjoyed a record among the most efficient of that company's business builders in the great middle department including Michigan, Indiana, Ohio, Kentucky, and West Virginia. During the two years 1919 and 1920 he ranked thirty-eighth among the producers of business, based on the volume of business written and paid for. Since the company had approximately 6,500 agents at the time, this standing is obviously very near the top. In 1920 Mr. Bentley was honored by gaining a vice presidency of the Two Hundred Thousand Dollar Club.

Throughout his residence at Clarksburg Mr. Bentley has been a leader in local dramatics and theatrical activities. Notably he is a member of the Masons and Elks, in 1906-07 was Exalted Ruler of the Clarksburg Lodge of Elks, and in 1917-18 was president of the Clarksburg Rotary Club and in 1921 was second vice president of the Clarksburg Chamber of Commerce. He is a republican, a member of the Clarksburg Country Club, a life member and on the Advisory Board of The Old Colony Club of New York, and a member of the United Commercial Travelers Association. During the World war he took an active part in all local matters incident thereto.

BENJAMIN M. CHAPLIN, of Morgantown, has been for years, and still is, an important factor in the development of the industries of that city, and holds a clear title as the pioneer coal operator in this section of West Virginia. His success in life has been won solely by himself, for since leaving his father's farm at the age of twenty years he has relied on his own resources, his natural ability, his sound business judgment, his enterprise, his industry and his honesty.

Mr. Chaplin was born on the family homestead in Clay District, Monongalia County, West Virginia, October 15, 1876, a son of the late Albert Gallatin and Mahala Alene (Strosnider) Chaplin. Albert G. Chaplin was born near Mount Morris, Greene County, Pennsylvania, April 20, 1832, and died at Morgantown in 1907. He was the son of William and Elizabeth Rumble (Lantz) Chaplin, and grandson of John Chaplin, a native of Maryland who settled at an early date in Greene County, Pennsylvania. In 1857 William Chaplin removed to Monongalia County, West Virginia, and three years later to Harrison County, this state, where he died on his farm in 1877. He was a blacksmith by trade, a vocation at which he worked in his early life, but in his later years took up farming.

Albert G. Chaplin learned wagon-making under his father and in 1857 took up carpentry and the trade of millwright. He followed these occupations until 1862, when he enlisted in Company I, Eighth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, for a period of four years, but after fourteen months of service was honorably discharged because of physical disability incurred in the line of duty. In 1870 he purchased a farm in Clay District, Monongalia County, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits, later entering mercantile lines, for which purpose he built a store on his farm. In 1902 he gave up business cares and removed to Morgantown. His wife, who was the daughter of Moses and Mary Strosnider, died at this place in 1911.

Benjamin M. Chaplin was reared on his father's farm and attended the district schools, acquiring only a common school education. In his younger days he considered his education adequate to his needs believing that with youth, industry and energy he was well equipped for the battle of life. Once out in the world, however, he realized his mistake, saw the advantages of a higher education (then out of his reach) and set about improving his mind by self study, and so determined was he in that direction that during the first few years of his married life he practically devoted his evenings and spare time to study and research. In 1896 he conducted a hotel and livery business at Jake's Run, in the oil district of Monongalia County, and so continued for two years, during which time he was also engaged in general oil work in that district. In 1898 Mr. Chaplin located at Morgantown and went to work in a planing mill, and while thus engaged studied architecture and designing of evenings. Later he began contracting and building on his own account, and built some of Morgantown's best residences. His next move was to engage in the lumber and planing mill business under the firm name of Chaplin & Worman, and later this enterprise was merged with the cabinet-making business of A. Rightmire, under the firm name of Chaplin, Worman & Rightmire, Inc. Selling his interest in this company in 1908, Mr. Chaplin returned to general contracting, and in 1913 formed an association with R. E. Kerr, at that time an engineer in the building of the Monongahela Railroad, and the firm of B. M. Chaplin & Company was organized for general contracting on a large scale, doing concrete, masonry, railroad and industrial and business building, which company was later incorporated under the old name and developed into a large concern.

Before the completion of the Morgantown & Wheeling Railway, which was organized as a trolley line, Mr. Chaplin saw the great possibilities of the coal fields of Scott's Run, lying along the route of the above railway, and accordingly organized the Scott's Run Coal Company, which was the first concern engaged in mining and developing that coal field, now one of the greatest fields in the country, where the output has reached nearly four hundred carloads daily. Soon after its opening that first mine was sold, but a second mine was opened and the Chaplin Collieries Company, Inc., was organized, taking over large and valuable coal lands in that district, which has been developed into one of the most modern coal companies in this section of the country, and of which company Mr. Chaplin is vice president and general manager. Mr. Chaplin is also interested in other coal corporations, being vice president of the Hess Coal Company, of which he was one of the organizers. He is also vice president of the Monongahela Supply Company, which handles mill and mining machinery and building supplies on a large scale, this being one of the important companies of this section; vice president of the H. C. Gillmore Company, railway and bridge contractors; and vice president of the VanVoorhis Contracting Company, which confines its business principally to that of highway building. He is also principal owner of the Riverside Lumber Company, organized in 1921, with yards and mill located on the Monongahela Railroad at Riverside, a suburb of Morgantown, handling building material of all kinds. This is the largest plant of this kind in the Monongahela Valley. He is likewise interested in the oil industry.

Mr. Chaplin is a member of the Knights of Pythias, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Rotary Club and the Chamber of Commerce, a charter member of the Morgantown Country Club and vice president and general manager of the Cheat Canyon Company, a country club organization. His religious affiliation is with the Presbyterian Church. In 1897 Mr. Chaplin married Miss Minnie Stroenider, of Blacksburg, Monongalia County, and to this union there have been born three children: Virginia, Allen and Eugene.

THOMAS GARRETT LE MASTERS is a native of West Virginia, spent his early life as an oil field worker, but for a dozen years has been in successful practice of the profession of Optometry at Clarksburg.

He was born in Monongalia County, June 28, 1870, son of William J. and Hester (McCord) Le Masters, both natives of Monongalia County and representatives of old and prominent families of that section. William Le Masters was a farmer and lived to the age of eighty-four, his wife dying at forty-three. They reared their ten children on a farm.

Thomas G. Le Masters while living on the farm attended the common schools, and completed his literary education in the Northern Illinois College at Dixon. He spent several years in the West, chiefly as an oil field worker. Subsequently with his savings he entered the Schuler School of Ophthalmology at Philadelphia, graduating in 1909. In that year he located at Clarksburg and has achieved gratifying success as an optometrist. He is a member of the West Virginia State Association of Optometrists. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Masonic Order, Elks, and a member of the Baptist Church. December 24, 1904, he married Miss Olea Robinson, daughter of Levi and Margaret Robinson of Tyler County. They have one daughter, Margaret.

SCOTLAND G. HIGHLAND, who has served as the efficient and popular general manager of the Clarksburg Water Board, in the progressive city that is the judicial center of the metropolis of Harrison County, was born on a farm near West Milford, this county, August 7, 1879, and is the son of John Edgar and Lucinda Earle (Patton) Highland. He gained his youthful education in the public schools at West Milford, and in later years he completed a course in the Iron City College at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, besides fortifying himself further by a commercial course in G. W. Michael's College at Logansport, Indiana, where he served as an assistant instructor. He later entered the West Virginia University at Morgantown.

In initiating his business career Mr. Highland clerked in a store at Cogar, Braxton County, and later he was for several years a salesman in the store of the W. M. Osburn Shoe Company, Clarksburg. He then succeeded his brother, Virgil L. Highland, as bookkeeper for R. T. Lowndes, a leading merchant and banker of Clarksburg. This position he resigned to accept his present responsible post with the Clarksburg Water Board, his retention of the office of general manager during the long intervening years standing as a significant voucher for his loyal and efficient service and also for the estimate placed upon his administration. Within his regime many problems have been solved in connection with the purification and development of the city's water supply, and practically the whole of the present water system has been installed within his incumbency, the while the annual income of the board has increased from $10,000 to $175,000.

Mr. Highland is the author of a well distributed publication entitled, "Standard Sanitary Plumbing Code," this being an able and valuable treatise and practical working manual for sanitary engineers and plumbers, besides which its general applicability touches the protection of property and preservation of public health. The publication deals with safe and proper methods of supplying water to buildings, a book of enduring value.

He served as chairman of the committee on "Plumbing and Control of Plumbers" of the American Water Works Association, and is a contributor to the technical press on water works subjects. He is a member of the American and New England Water Works associations, and the American Society for Municipal Improvements.

Mr. Highland owns a rare water works library and interested in many subjects. He is the author of the water board's "Fourth Annual Report" distributed among water works men throughout the country, and a book of rules and regulations which has been widely copied.

He is the author of the "Highland Genealogy," a complete family record. He is a republican, is a Master Mason and since the age of thirteen years he has been a member of the Methodist Protestant Church.

GUSTAV W. LEIVE, secretary of the Wheeling Wall Plaster Company, one of the important industrial concerns of West Virginia metropolis, was born at Aurora, Indiana, January 12, 1883. His paternal grandfather was born in Germany, in 1833, and was forty years of age when he came to the United States and established his home in the City of Cincinnati, Ohio, where his death occurred in 1908. His son, John Henry, father of him whose name initiates this paragraph, was born in Germany in 1855, was there reared to the age of thirteen years, and came to the United States in 1868. As a young man he removed from Cincinnati, Ohio, to Aurora, Indiana, where he and his older brother William, built up the leading jewelry business of the town and where he became an honored and influential citizen. He served four years as city clerk of Aurora, was a staunch republican, and was an earnest communicant of the Lutheran Church, as is also his widow, who now resides in the City of Columbus, Indiana, his death having occurred at Aurora in 1888. Mrs. Leive, whose maiden name was Anna Mueller, was born in Cincinnati, in 1858. Herth older of the two surviving children, is the wife of Ross J. Potts, who is in the service of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company and who resides at Columbus, Indiana.

Gustav W. Leive gained his preliminary education in the public schools of his native place, and in 1902 was graduated in the high school at Columbus, Indiana, as president of his class. In the same year he took a position in the office of the Columbus Handle & Tool Company, with which he continued his alliance five years. He then became secretary to the contracting firm of Caldwell & Drake of Columbus, Indiana, and Louisville, Kentucky, and in the interest of this representative firm he came to Wheeling, West Virginia, in 1912. Here he continued his service as secretary until 1914, when he accepted a similar office with the Wheeling Wall Plaster Company, of which position he has since continued the efficient and popular incumbent, the modern plant and offices of the company being situated at the corner of Twenty-seventh and Market streets, and the personnel of its official corps being as here noted: R. V. Marshall, president and treasurer; F. W. Mahan, vice president; and Gustav W. Leive, secretary. This company is the most important of its kind in Wheeling and handles all kinds of building materials in addition to its special product which gives title to the corporation.

Mr. Leive is a staunch republican, is an active member of the local Kiwanis Club and the Credit Men's Association and he and his wife are earnest communicants of St. James Lutheran Church, in which he is serving, in 1921, as superintendent of the Sunday School. The family home, a modern residence owned by Mr. Leive, is situated at 15 Miller Street in the beautiful Edgewood District of Wheeling.

In June, 1911, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Leive and Miss Mary Ethel Cooper, daughter of Cassius B. and Nora (Peet) Cooper, of Columbus, Indiana, where her father held the office of city attorney and is one of the representative members of the bar of that part of the Hoosier State, his wife being deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Leive have one daughter, Jean Helen, who was born May 10, 1914.

CLAUDE LLEWELLYN HOLLAND, M. D. The broad and representative scope of the professional business of Doctor Holland marks him as one of the leading physicians in the City of Fairmont, Marion County, where he limits his practice to the diagnosis and treatment of the diseases of children, a field of service in which he has gained high reputation.

Doctor Holland was born on a farm near Uffington, Clin

B. Stood

District, Monongalia County, this state, January 18, 1819, and is a son of the late Charles H. and Susan Louisa (Price) Holland, who were representative of old and honored families of that county, where the father was born on an old family homestead in Clinton District in the year 1814, his death having occurred in 1918. He was a son of Solomon Holland, who likewise was born on the old family homestead near Goshen Church, that county, a son of Rezin Holland, whose father, Capbell Holland, was the senior representative of the family in Monongalia County and who was a descendant of one of two brothers of the same name who came from Wales and settled in Virginia prior to the Revolution. Solomon Holland was a Union soldier in the Civil war, as a member of Company C, Fourth West Virginia Infantry, and his death resulted from injuries which he received while in the army. He married Julia C. Sampson, a native of Winchester, Virginia, and daughter of Oscar Sampson. After the death of her husband, the mother of Mrs. Solomon Holland removed with her family to Morgantown, and there the daughter, Julia (later became the wife of Solomon Holland. Mrs. Susan Louisa (Price) Holland was born at Ulfington, Monongalia County, in 1855, and her death occurred in 1920. She was daughter of John C. Price. Her brother, John C., is now chairman of the county court of Monongalia County, and another brother, Allen R., is a leading merchant at Morgantown, that county. In other personal sketches in this volume is given due genealogical record of the Price family.

Dr. Claude L. Holland was reared on the old home farm and gained his preliminary education in the district schools. He thereafter continued his studies in turn at the State Normal School at Fairmont and the University of West Virginia. Though he was not graduated in either of these institutions he has rounded out a specially liberal academic education, as he has continued a close student, especially in philosophy and psychology. In 1901 he graduated from the Maryland Medical College at Baltimore, and he has since been established in successful practice at Fairmont. During a part of each successive year since 1915 he has done special post-graduate work in the medical department of Harvard University, where he has confined his study to research to the diseases of children, a special phase of medicine to which he has been devoted exclusively since 1917, he having been the third physician in West Virginia to adopt this special branch of practice. At Cook Hospital in his home city the Doctor is chief of the department of children's diseases, of which he has been the head from the inception of the department. He is consulting physician to the children's department of State Hospital No. 3 at Fairmont, and is attending physician of the Salvation Army Nursery in this city. At the entrance of the nation to the World War Doctor Holland tendered his services to the Medical Corps of the United States Army, but he was rejected on account of certain physical infirmities. He used other means to express his patriotism, and was especially active in the furtherance of the local drives in support of the Government loans, Red Cross work, etc. Doctor Holland is a Fellow of the American Medical Association, member of the West Virginia State Medical Association, the Marion County Medical Society and the Southern Medical Association. He also has been made a member of the American Institute of Medicine of New York. He is affiliated with Fairmont Lodge No. 9, A. F. and A. M., and his wife holds membership in the First Baptist Church of Fairmont.

October 28, 1903, recorded the marriage of Doctor Holland and Miss Elsie Ames, who was born at Fairmont, a daughter of the late Justice Elias S. and Annis (Parker) Ames, of whom incidental mention is made on other pages. Personal sketches of their sons, Frank R. and Curtis Peter and Mrs. Holland have two children: Eugene Ames, born May 19, 1905, and Mary Edith, born June 20, 1911.

LEE S. GOOD. A business that has been growing from smaller to greater scope and has been rendering an increasing service as a dry goods store to Wheeling and a large surrounding territory for a period of nearly forty years is

L. S. Good & Company, the founder of which, Mr. Lee S. Good, is still active in the business, though many of his responsibilities have been assumed by his sons.

Lee S. Good was reared and educated in Germany and came to the United States in 1873, locating at Wheeling. Besides a common school education he had acquired a thorough training in the dry goods business in Germany, and at Wheeling until 1884. In that year he employed his modest capital to open a business of his own, and under his direction the establishment has grown and prospered until it is one of the larger wholesale and retail dry goods houses of the Ohio Valley. He continued it under his immediate responsibility for a number of years, until his sons Sam and Sidney were old enough to become associated with him, in 1910, and since then the institution has been L. S. Good & Company. Mr. Lee Good owns the modern store building at 1132-36 Main Street, where he has three floors for the use of the general department store, carrying an extensive stock of dry goods and women's wearing apparel.

Lee S. Good is also a director in the Half Dollar Savings Bank at Wheeling. He is a member of the Le Shem Shomaim Temple, Wheeling Lodge No. 28, B. P. O. E., and the Chamber of Commerce.

He married Fannie Hanauer, who was born at Morristown, Ohio, January 10, 1869. They are the parents of three children. The oldest, Bertha, is the wife of Jay Iglauer, who is secretary and treasurer of the Halle Brothers Company at Cleveland, Ohio. The youngest is Sidney Good, who married Miss Jeanette Berg, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and is partner in the business of his father.

Sam Good, the other son, was born at Wheeling September 10, 1894, was reared and educated in Wheeling, finishing his high school course there, and at the age of sixteen left school to go to work in his father's store. With broadening knowledge and experience he has become the active managing head of the business and has been a partner since 1916. He is a member of the Le Shem Shomaim Temple, Wheeling Lodge No. 5, F. and A. M., and Wheeling Lodge No. 28, B. P. O. E. In December, 1918, he was sent to Camp Hancock, Augusta, Georgia, received a commission as second lieutenant, and was mustered out in January, 1919.

In September, 1919, at Canton, Ohio, Mr. Sam Good married Miss Lucille Lowenstein, daughter of Sam and Lina (Sonneborn) Lowenstein, residents of Canton, where her father is a retired merchant and manufacturer. Mrs. Good finished her education in a Young Ladies Seminary at Baltimore. Sam Good and wife have one child, Lee S., second, born August 2, 1920.

JOHN HAZLETT, who is serving as sheriff of Marshall County and who has here held other offices of trust in his native county, gained a wide experience as a pioneer in the west, but could not be permanently weaned from his native state and county. He was born in the Sand Hill District of Marshall County, September 18, 1862, and is a son of Matthew and Caroline (Hagadorn) Hazlett. The father was born in Baden, Germany, and gained the rank of captain in the German army, in which he served twelve years. He was one of those who took part in the German revolution of 1848, against the Emperor Frederick Wilhelm, and when the revolution failed he was successful in making his escape to the United States, though two of his brothers were captured. His two younger brothers, John and Jacob, later joined him in America, he having been twenty-eight years old when he came to this country. These two brothers, who joined him at Wheeling, about 1856, became Union soldiers in the Civil war and both were killed in the Battle of Gettysburg. Matthew Hazlett settled at Wheeling about a year after his arrival in America and there worked as a stable boss for the United States Stage Company. About 1858 he removed to Marshall County and settled in Sand Hill District, and four years later he removed to a farm near Sherrard, this county, where he passed the remainder of his life. He was eighty-two years of age when he was killed by a playful horse which he was attempting to catch. His marriage was solemnized at Wheeling this state, his wife having been born in Hanover, Germany, and having come to the United States in company with two of her sisters. She later sent for her parents, who passed the closing years of their lives in her home, she herself having attained to the venerable age of eighty-eight years. Of the children the eldest is Louisa, wife of J. E. McCombs, of Sherrard, this county; John, of this sketch, was next in order of birth; Louis resides at Sherrard and Henry is a resident of Ohio county, this state; Mary is the wife of William A. Fisher, of Sherrard; and George W. likewise resides at Sherrard.

The public schools of Marshall County gave to John Hazlett his youthful education, and he was eighteen years old when, in 1876, he became a pioneer in the Black Hills. His western experiences involved association with frontier activities in Montana, Wyoming and Dakota Territory, and in Montana he heard the firing of guns at the time of the historic Custer massacre, he having been at the time engaged in prospecting on Sand Creek. His mining operations were hampered by his lack of capital to prove needed facilities, and after remaining in the West till 1880 he returned to his native county and became a farmer in Sand Hill District. He continued the active management of his farm until November, 1920, when he was elected sheriff of Marshall County, as candidate on the republican ticket. He had previously given effective service as county commissioner, 1914-17, and during the ensuing three years he was a member of the county board of equalization. Sheriff Hazlett retains ownership of his well improved farm and has here been a successful grower of fine sheep, cattle, hogs and horses.

At the age of twenty-six years Mr. Hazlett married Miss Hettie C. McCosh, daughter of Wiley McCosh, who was a prosperous farmer in Marshall County and who died when Mrs. Hazlett was an infant. Mr. and Mrs. Hazlett have two sons: William M. has active charge of the home farm, and James Benton is deputy sheriff under the administration of his father.

FRANCIS L. FERGUSON, circuit court clerk at Moundsville, judicial center of Marshall County, was born at Littleton, Wetzel County, West Virginia, March 5, 1888, and is a son of R. Lindsay Ferguson and Ellen (Dietz) Ferguson, the former of whom died in January, 1918, at the age of seventy-three years, he having been born and reared in Wetzel County, a son of Andrew and Susannah (Anderson) Ferguson. Andrew Ferguson was a representative of a West Virginia pioneer family that came to this state, as now constituted, from Pennsylvania, where the original representative of the name settled upon immigrating to this country from his native Ireland, after the close of the war of the Revolution. Mrs. Ellen (Dietz) Ferguson, who survives her husband, is of collateral kinship with the Munhall family, one of whose members was a member of "Marion's Wasps," a celebrated patriot command in the war of the Revolution. She is related also to the sterling old Knickerbocker family of Marshall, in the State of New York. Susannah (Anderson) Ferguson was a member of a family that was founded in America prior to the Revolution. Andrew Ferguson was an old-time river pilot, and continued his service on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, between Pittsburgh and New Orleans, until he had passed his seventieth birthday anniversary. R. Lindsay Ferguson was a Union soldier, in the Army of the Potomac, in the Civil war. He took part in the Battle of Gettysburg, and thereafter was detailed to special duty. After the close of the war he was identified with lumbering industry in Wetzel and Marshall counties, West Virginia, until the '80s, and in the meantime he served as mayor of his home town of Littleton, as justice of the peace and as a member of the Republican County Committee of Wetzel County.

Francis L. Littleton continued his studies in the public schools of Littleton until he had profited by the advantages of the high school, and thereafter he was employed in the oil fields and in stone quarries. At the age of seventeen years he found employment in a factory at Wheeling, and in that city he initiated his journalistic career as a reporter on the Wheeling Intelligencer, of which he later became city editor. Later he was city editor of the Wheeling News. He also gained newspaper experience as a special correspondent for several New York and Pittsburgh newspapers. In 1916 Mr. Ferguson engaged in press work for the Republican State Central Committee. In the autumn of that year he married Miss Alice L. Echols, who was reared at Moundsville, and who is a daughter of W. F. Echols, who served as deputy sheriff of Marshall County, as a member of the city police force of Moundsville, and as a member of the West Virginia Humane Society, his death having occurred at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, March 28, 1921.

After his marriage Mr. Ferguson established his home at Moundsville and became a member of the editorial staff of the Moundsville Journal. He made numerous attempts to enter military service in the World war but was repeatedly rejected, on account of physical disability. A clerk of the circuit court resigned in the fall of 1919, and on the 20th of October of that year Mr. Ferguson was appointed, by Judge J. B. Sommerville, to fill the vacancy in this office, of which he has since continued the efficient incumbent. The members of the bar of Marshall County gave him the strongest of support when he was recommended for this appointment, and in the regular election of November, 1920, he was elected to the office, on the republican ticket, with a larger vote than the party that usually polls in the county. He is a member of the Moundsville Chamber of Commerce, is affiliated with the Elks and the Knights of Pythias, and he and his wife are members of the Christian Church.

CURTIS T. ARNETT, M. D. Having practiced medicine in Harrison County nearly twenty years and at Clarksburg since 1905, and being widely known among his fraternity as a man of solid attainments and the highest professional standards, there was recognition of these facts when Doctor Arnett was honored by his fellow members in the Harrison County Medical Society in election to society president in 1921.

Doctor Arnett represents one of the oldest families of West Virginia. He, his father, his grandfather and great-grandfather were all born at Arnettville in Monongalia County. The founder of the family there was the great-grandfather James Arnett, who secured patent to tracts of land in that vicinity direct from the Government. While all the facts are not available it is probable that this pioneer West Virginian was the same James Arnett whose name appears in the records as a Revolutionary War soldier from Boston, Massachusetts. The line of descent from him is traced through his son, Andrew, his grandson, Simon, and his great-grandson Thomas Calvin Arnett, who became the father of Doctor Arnett.

Thomas Calvin Arnett was born August 28, 1834, and devoted his active life to farming and the trade of carpenter, was a soldier on the Confederate side while he had a brother in the Union army during the Civil war, and he died at Fairmont, West Virginia, November 3, 1905. His wife was Hannah Trippett, daughter of Toplift Trippett. She was born in Monongalia County, January 15, 1839, and died December 18, 1907. Her seven children were named Miss Catherine, Dennis S., Lydia Belle, Parris, Curtis T., Lillie B., and Lucy A.

Dr. Curtis T. Arnett was born March 14, 1870, and until he was nearly grown his environment was the home farm plus the advantages of the common schools. Doctor Arnett put in eight years as a public-school teacher. He began the study of medicine in the Hospital College of Medicine at Louisville, Kentucky, where he was graduated, M. D., in 1897. He began practice at Marshville in Harrison County, moved from there to Rivesville, Marion County, 1903, and since 1905 has had a busy professional career at Clarksburg. In the meantime he has been a constant student in medical science, has taken post-graduate courses in the New York Polyclinic and for a time was interne in a New York hospital, and more and more his abilities have been claimed for the special work of surgery in which domain he has demonstrated exceptional skill. Doctor Arnett is chief of staff and gynecologist of St. Mary's Hospital at Clarksburg and for over eight years has served as a member of the local United States Pension Exam-

J. P. Stowell

g Board. He is a member of the West Virginia State, American and Southern Medical associations. Doctor metts is a staunch democrat, is a Knight Templar, and has a widely extended business interests, chiefly in oil production.

January 1, 1900, he married Miss Lucy C. Morrison, daughter of Thomas and Matilda (Southern) Morrison, of Harrison County. To their marriage were born five children: Basil Raymond; Marie Bell, now deceased; Thomas orrison; Lucy Edna Virginia; and William Jennings orrison.

JOHN ELDON CORBIN, M. D., who is engaged in the practice of his profession in the City of Clarksburg, Harrison county, with offices in the Union Bank Building, is honoring his native county by his effective stewardship in his chosen vocation, even as he did as a member of the United States Army with the American Expeditionary Forces in France at the time of the World war. At the time of his writing, in the autumn of 1921, Doctor Corbin is serving as secretary of the Harrison County Medical Society. Doctor Corbin was born on his father's farm near Good Hope, this county, on the 21st of January, 1880, and is a son of Joseph Taylor Corbin and Sabra Ellen (McDonald) Corbin, both likewise natives of Harrison County, though Joseph T. Corbin was a child at the time when his father, Ernan Corbin, removed from this county to Jackson County, W. Va. Sabra E. Corbin was reared and educated in Harrison county, a daughter of James McDonald and a representative of one of the honored pioneer families of the county. Mrs. Corbin passed to the life eternal in 1921, at the age of twenty-two years, and her husband, at the age of twenty-two years, is now living retired at Clarksburg. Of the two children Dr. John E. is the elder, and the younger, Miss Pearl, remains with her father in the pleasant home at Clarksburg.

Doctor Corbin as a boy began to aid in the work of the home farm, and the rural schools of the locality afforded him his preliminary education. Thereafter he was for two years student in the State Normal School at Fairmont, this state, and for an equal period in the Peabody Institute at Nashville, Tennessee, from which latter institution he received the degree of Licentiate of Instruction. For two years thereafter he was a student in the medical department in the University of West Virginia and then became a student in the College of Physicians and Surgeons in the City of Baltimore, Maryland, from which he received his degree of Doctor of Medicine, in the year 1907, the same degree having been conferred upon him in that year by the University of West Virginia.

In 1908 Doctor Corbin engaged in the practice of his profession at Wolf Summit, Harrison County, and there he continued in successful general practice until 1917, when he abdicated all personal interests to the call of patriotism and volunteered for service in the World war. In July of that year he was commissioned first lieutenant and sent to Camp McClellan, Alabama. In May, 1918, he was ordered to service overseas, and in France he was in active service one year, as a member of the One Hundred and Thirteenth Infantry, Twenty-ninth Division. Though his professional ability would readily have gained him hospital work he preferred to serve in the field, and there he made an excellent record as a gallant soldier. Doctor Corbin returned to his native land May 27, 1919, and four days later received his honorable discharge, with the rank of captain. His continued interest in his old comrades and in patriotic activities is shown by his affiliation with the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars. In July, 1919, he opened an office in the City of Clarksburg, where he has since been engaged in active general practice, as one of the able and popular physicians and surgeons of his native county. The doctor has received the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite in the Masonic fraternity, holds membership also in the Mystic Shrine and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is affiliated with the Delta Tau Delta and Psi Chi college fraternities. In addition to being secretary of the Harrison County Medical Society he is actively identified also with the West Virginia State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party.

June 8, 1921, recorded the marriage of Doctor Corbin to Miss Vevia Elliott, of Parkersburg, this state, and they are popular in the social activities of their home city.

JACOB JAMES HOLLOWAY has many diverse and important responsibilities in the financial and industrial affairs of the Wheeling District. His interests cover a wide range of productive enterprises, including banking, baking, china, glass and steel. He began his career as a banker, and has been a factor in the Wheeling District over forty years.

Mr. Holloway was born across the Ohio River at Bridgeport, April 17, 1857, son of William Warfield and Martha (Pryor) Holloway. His father was also a substantial business man, interested in banking, railroading and manufacturing. The son had a liberal education as a preparation for his serious career. He received his B. A. degree in June, 1878, from Western Reserve College at Hudson, Ohio, now Western Reserve University at Cleveland. While in college he was a member of the Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternity.

After leaving college Mr. Holloway took up banking, and it has been his judgment and sound experience as a financier that has brought him numerous connections with outside industries. He is president of the Bridgeport National Bank of Bridgeport. He is also a director and a member of the executive committee of the Wheeling Steel Corporation, which is a consolidation of the Wheeling Steel and Iron Company, LaBelk Iron Works and Whitaker-Glessner Company. The wide extent of his other business associations are included by a list of some of the more important companies in which he is a director: Hazel-Atlas Glass Company, Superior Coal Company, Superior Tube Company, Wheeling Traction Company, Wheeling Bridge Company, Wheeling Sanitary Manufacturing Company, Windling Gulf Colliery Company and Superior-Peachmonts Coal Company.

Mr. Holloway is a director of the Wheeling Chamber of Commerce. During the World war he was president of the Red Cross Association, of the Pershing Limit Club and the War Chest Association. He is a republican a member of the Fort Henry Club and the Country Club of Wheeling, the Ohio Society of New York and the Delta Kappa Epsilon Association of New York. He is a member of the Episcopal Church.

November 14, 1883, at Wheeling, Mr. Holloway married Miss Mary P. DuBois, daughter of Joseph Dorsey and Ellen Zane (Armstrong) DuBois, of Wheeling. Mr. and Mrs. Holloway have three children: William Warfield, who married Margaret Glass; Joseph DuBois, who married Nancy Dewey Peterson; and Eleanor Martha, wife of Hannibal Forbes Simpson.

DOLLIVER H. HAMRICK, the efficient and popular city clerk of Clarksburg, judicial center of Harrison County, was born at Woodzell, Webster County, West Virginia, on the 19th of April, 1880. He is a son of B. Franklin and Martha J. (Hamrick) Hamrick, both likewise natives of Webster County, they having been of remote family kinship. The parents passed their entire lives in Webster County, where the father was a prosperous farmer and a highly respected citizen, he having been fifty-three years of age at the time of his death and his wife surviving him by only a short period, she likewise being fifty-three years of age at the time of her death. Both were earnest members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in politics the father was a staunch republican. Of the seven children the eldest is Rev. Ballard S. Hamrick, a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church; Anzina is the widow of Jesse Riggelman; Dolliver H., of this review, was the next in order of birth; Susan R. is the wife of P. D. Gregory; Miss L. Olive Hamrick is a popular teacher in the public schools of Clarksburg; Morgan T., who is better known as "Hick" Hamrick, is engaged in educational and athletic work; and Parker M., who is now a traveling salesman, served overseas in the United States Marine Corps in the late World war. The Hamrick family was founded in what is now West Virginia in the pioneer period of the history of this section. James and Rebecca (Doddridge) Hamrick, paternal grandparents of the subject of this sketch, were born in West Virginia as now constituted, as were also the maternal grandparents, Adam G. and Rebecca (Mollohan) Hamrick. The lineage of the Hamrick family traces back to staunch Scotch-Irish origin and the original representatives in America settled in Virginia in the colonial days.

Dolliver H. Hamrick supplemented the discipline of the public schools of his native county by three years of effective study in the West Virginia Wesleyan College, in which institution he thereafter served one year as an instructor in the business or commercial department. At the age of twenty years he initiated his service as a teacher in the public schools, and after three years of successful pedagogic work he became bookkeeper for a lumber company. Thereafter he devoted several years to service as hotel clerk and bookkeeper, and in this connection he held positions not only in West Virginia but also in other states, including Florida. He was a popular attache of the Gore Hotel at Clarksburg at the time of his election to the office of city clerk, in April, 1918, for a term of three years. At the expiration of this period he was appointed to the same office, for a term of two years, the city charter having been changed in the meanwhile and the office of city clerk having been made one of appointive order. Mr. Hamrick is a republican in political allegiance, is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

In 1906 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Hamrick to Miss Lela W. Conrad, daughter of Lee A. and Clara (Woodell) Conrad, of Webster County, the family having been residents of the State of Kansas at the time of the birth of Mrs. Hamrick. Mr. and Mrs. Hamrick have three children: Leland Franklin, William Dolliver, and Clara Jane.

LOUIS ARNOLD CARE has been continuously engaged in the practice of law at Clarksburg since 1908, with the exception of the period of his service in the United States Army at the time of the World war. He is one of the leading lawyers of the younger generation in Harrison County, and is a representative of old and honored families of what is now West Virginia, his ancestors on both paternal and maternal sides having settled in Virginia in the colonial period of American history.

Mr. Carr was born at Buffalo, Putnam County, this state, November 12, 1886, and is a son of Louis A. and Rose (Scott) Carr, both likewise natives of West Virginia. Louis A. Carr, Sr., a man of strong individuality and exceptional business ability, conducted a large general store at Buffalo, where he also owned and operated the Progress Mills, then the largest flour mills on the Kanawha River. There he became identified also in the steamboat packet navigation on the Kanawha and Ohio rivers. In 1888 he removed with his family to Charleston, capital of the state, for the purpose of expanding his business activities. There he engaged in the flour-mill business, under the title of the L. A. Carr Milling Company, which he developed into the largest concern of the kind in the state, besides which he became the sole owner of the Kanawha & Ohio Steamboat Packet Line, which operated six steamboats on the Kanawha and Ohio rivers. So assiduously did he apply himself to business that his health became greatly impaired and in 1898 he died, from a complication of diseases, when but forty-eight years of age. He was a man of thought and action, of sterling character and of large and worthy achievement.

Louis A. Carr, Jr., of this review, was eleven years of age at the time of his father's death, and his early education was obtained in the public schools of Charleston. In 1900 his mother contracted a second marriage and became a resident of Clarksburg. Here Louis A. continued his studies until he had profited by the advantages of the high school, and in the fall of 1903 he initiated a preparatory course in the University of West Virginia, at Morgantown. He later became a student in the law department of the University, and in the same was graduated in the spring of 1907, his reception of the degree of Bachelor of Laws having occurred when he was twenty years of age. During his university vacations Mr. Carr was identified with newspaper work at Clarksburg, and in this he continued one year, after leaving the university. He attained to his legal majority and was admitted to the bar in 1911, opened an office at Clarksburg and has here continued successful practice of law save for the period of his patriotic service in the World war period. In the autumn of 1919 Mr. Carr enlisted in the United States Army and was sent to the third officers' training school at Camp Sherman, Ohio, where he was graduated April 17, 1918, and made sergeant in the machine-gun company of the Three Hundred and Thirty-ninth Infantry. One month later, with the Eighty-third Division left for overseas service, Sergeant Carr was transferred to Camp Lee, Virginia, and on the 1st of June, 1918, he was commissioned second lieutenant and assigned to Company F of the Eleventh Battalion Infantry Replacement Troops, at Camp Lee. September 14, 1918, he was promoted first lieutenant and placed in command of Company F. He remained in the Camp 1 replacement service, sending out one company of replacement troops each month, and in the meanwhile was connected also with the law service, in which he defended many soldiers in court-martial, including a number of officers of high rank. In this service he gained high reputation as a great personality.

After retiring from military service, early in 1919, Mr. Carr resumed the practice of his profession at Clarksburg where his success has been unequivocal. In October, 1919, at the first state convention of the American Legion in West Virginia, at Charleston, he was elected department adjutant of the legion in this state, after a spirited angle contest. During his one year's incumbency of this office Mr. Carr was specially active and influential in the organization work of the order, the number of posts being increased to 120 and the membership of the Legion in this state being recruited to more than 10,000. At the second annual convention of the West Virginia Legion, in 1921, Mr. Carr was re-elected adjutant, without opposition. He continued the incumbent of this office until February, 1922, when, at the request of law clients, he resigned, in order to give his undivided attention to his law business.

While a student in the university Mr. Carr was active in all athletic sports of the student body, and he has been a generous contributor of athletic and sporting articles to the newspaper press. He became a member of the Kappa Alpha fraternity of the university, is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, is an active member of the Kiwanis Club at Clarksburg, which he has served as secretary, and he is loyal and progressive in his civic attitude. Prior to the late war Mr. Carr had been for several years a member of the West Virginia National Guard, in which he was commissioned a lieutenant, 1st Governor Glascock, in 1917. He is a staunch republican in his religious faith is that of the Presbyterian Church. During his first year in law practice Mr. Carr served as city assessor of Clarksburg, but since that time he has not permitted his name to be presented in connection with candidacy for public office. He is a bachelor and resides with his mother and his only sister, Lillian Ainsley, the wife of Dr. P. M. Pearey, of Clarksburg.

WICKLIFFE M. CONAWAY has been engaged in the practice of law in the City of Clarksburg, Harrison County, since 1902, has secure vantage-place as one of the able and representative members of the bar of his native county and prior to entering the legal profession he had made record of splendid achievement in that of pedagogy.

Mr. Conaway was born on a farm in Harrison County, West Virginia, December 26, 1866, and is a son of Dr. Joshua B. and Elizabeth (Amos) Conaway, the former of whom was born in Monongalia County but reared in Marion County, this state, and the latter of whom was born in Marion County, where her father, Peter Amos, was an early settler and a substantial and honored citizen. The Conaway family gave patriot soldiers to the Continental Line in the War of the Revolution. The original settlement was made in Maryland, whence removal was made to Virginia for to the war for independence. Dr. Joshua B. Conway graduated in the Eclectic Medical College in the City of Cincinnati, Ohio, and was for half a century engaged in the active practice of his profession in Harrison County, West Virginia, where for many years he resided in what is now the Town of Bristol. His name and memory are revered in the county in which he long lived and in which he labored earnestly and effectively in the alleviation of human suffering. He died at the age of seventy-six years and his widow is still living, at the venerable age of eighty-four years, in 1922. Mrs. Conway is a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which her husband likewise was a zealous adherent. They became the parents of five sons and two daughters, of whom Wickliffe M., of this review, was the third in order of birth.

After having profited by the advantages of the common schools Wickliffe M. Conway was for three years a student of the Ohio Wesleyan University, at Delaware, and he then entered Albion College, the great Methodist educational institution at Albion, Michigan, in which he was graduated in 1897 and from which he received the degree of Bachelor of Philosophy. For three years thereafter he was actively engaged in educational work, as superintendent of high schools in Michigan, and he then took up the study of law. In 1902 he was graduated in the law department of the University of West Virginia, and his reception of the degree of Bachelor of Laws was virtually coincident with his admission to the bar of his native state. He has since been actively and successfully engaged in the practice of law at Clarksburg, where his offices are in the Fifth Building. Here he has not only built up a large and representative law business but has served also as commissioner in chancery and as commissioner of school lands. He is a staunch advocate of the principles of the republican party, is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity and the Loyal Order of Moose.

In 1900 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Conway and Miss Edva Gerschow who is a native of Michigan, and they have two children: Norman B. and Ruth Louise.

CARL WEBSTER NEFF is a native of Maryland, but all his professional career covering fifteen years has been spent at Clarksburg, where his abilities have won him a most pleasing reputation as a lawyer.

Mr. Neff was born at Cumberland, Maryland, October 13, 1877, second of the four children of John F. and Maria (Wilson) Neff. His father was a native of Pennsylvania of German ancestry and before the Civil war located in Allegany County, Maryland. He was a man of thorough scholarship and devoted practically his entire life to the cause of education. He taught in the public schools and at the time of his death in 1918 at the age of eighty-three is the oldest teacher in Allegheny County. His wife was born in Maryland and died in 1919 at the age of seventy-one.

Carl W. Neff grew up at Cumberland and graduated on the high school of that city in 1896. Most of his subsequent education he paid for through his own earnings.

In 1898 he finished a course in the Allegheny County Academy and in 1901 graduated A. B. from Western Maryland College at Westminster. Because of his subsequent post-graduate studies his alma mater bestowed upon him the Master of Arts degree in 1905. Mr. Neff studied law in West Virginia University at Morgantown. He was admitted to the bar at Clarksburg, gained his first clients in that city, and since 1906 has been associated with Albert Lohm in the law firm of Neff & Lohm.

Mr. Neff is a democrat in politics, a member of the Lutheran Church and the Masonic fraternity, being a Knight Templar and Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner. In 1903 he married Miss Elsie Evans of Cumberland, Maryland. They have two children, Donna and Carl Webster, Jr.

HARVEY BENDER REPPETTO. Reppetto has been a prominent name in the industrial affairs of Wheeling for many years. The family established and built up one of the city's most distinctive lines of manufacture, stoves and ranges, and the corporation, the Wheeling Stove & Range Company, is still under charter, though the plant and business have been sold and are now part of the Wheeling Steel Corporation. The president of the Wheeling Stove & Range Company is Harvey Bender Reppetto, son of the founder. Mr. Reppetto is also proprietor of the Wheeling Metal Specialties Company, a business he established only a short time ago and to which he gives his chief time.

Mr. Reppetto was born in Wheeling, March 17, 1886. This is a family of French ancestry, and one branch was established in New Orleans many years ago. The grandfather of Harvey B. and Granville Reppetto, who was born near Cincinnati, but spent a great many years in Wheeling, where he was bookkeeper and clerk for steamboats. He was a very highly educated gentleman. He died at Wheeling about 1871. Granville C. Reppetto, father of Harvey, was born at Parkersburg, West Virginia, in 1854, his parents removing to Wheeling during the Civil war. He was reared and married in this city, worked for a time in the nail mills, was then in the hardware business, and in 1900 founded the Wheeling Stove & Range Company, and before his death saw it established as one of the largest stove industries of the country. He took his politics seriously as a republican, and was a Knight Templar Mason. Granville Reppetto died at Wheeling in 1915. He married Olive Bender, who was born at Pittsburgh in 1866 and died at Wheeling in 1908. They were the parents of four children: Bess Louise, wife of Walter H. McClure, one of the officials of the Hazel-Atlas Glass Company; Harvey Bender; Olive D., wife of Cecil B. Digby, an auditor at Cleveland; and Charles E., a municipal official at Atlantic City, New Jersey.

Harvey Bender Reppetto acquired a good education in the public schools and graduated in 1903 from Linsly Institute at Wheeling. He forthwith entered the stove business with his father, became traveling salesman for the Wheeling Stove & Range Company, and in 1913, when his father retired the management of the business was turned over to him. During succeeding years Mr. Reppetto kept the industry expanding and with an ever widening market for its products until 1920, when he sold the plant and business to the Wheeling Steel Corporation, but continued as manager of the stove department until resigning in June, 1921. At that date he established the Wheeling Metal Specialty Company, doing a jobbing business in stoves and refrigerators. The plant and offices are at the corner of Nineteenth and Jacob streets. Mr. Reppetto is also president of the Valley Star Stove Company.

Mr. Reppetto is an active member of the Chamber of Commerce, the Credit Men's Association of Wheeling, is a republican, belongs to the First United Presbyterian Church of Wheeling and is affiliated with Ohio Lodge No. 1, F. and A. M., Wheeling Chapter No. 1, R. A. M., Wheeling Commandery No. 1, K. T., Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and is a member of the Country Club and Fort Henry Club. He was a volunteer for the World war, was commissioned a second lieutenant, and was in readiness for duty but the armistice was signed before he was called to the colors. He also has a record of four years with the National Guard of West Virginia, in which he held the rank of captain.

In 1917, at Wheeling, Mr. Reppetto married Miss Helen Johnston, daughter of Edward O. and Clara (Thompson) Johnston, residents of Triadelphia District of Wheeling. Mr. and Mrs. Reppetto have two daughters: Catherine Ann, born May 8, 1918, and Bess Louise, born March 8, 1921.

GORDON BOGGS. In addition to whatever distinction might be his from his connection with one of the old and honored families of Pendleton County, Gordon Boggs is known to the people of Franklin as a business man of ability, a former public official who rendered the community excellent and faithful service and a citizen who has been an uninterrupted supporter of all movements which have promised to better community conditions and heighten community standards. At present he is a member of the mercantile firm of M. K. Boggs & Company and a man of more than passing influence in civic affairs.

Mr. Boggs was born November 6, 1876, the day that Rutherford B. Hayes was elected president of the United States. He was born in Union District, Pendleton County, West Virginia, on a part of the original homestead of his great-grandfather, who had settled there about the close of the eighteenth century, upon his arrival from Ireland, thus founding the family in what is now Pendleton County. Mr. Boggs is a son of Aaron Carr Boggs and a nephew of Martin K. Boggs, the latter of whom is mentioned extensively on other pages of this work. Aaron Carr Boggs was born in May, 1853, in Pendleton County, where he received his educational training in the public schools, but his boyhood was passed during the period of the war between the states, when educational advantages were not of the best and consequently his training in this direction suffered. He was a staunch republican in politics. He never made a formal declaration of church membership. He devoted his business abilities to the conduct of a mill, now known as then as Boggs' Mill, located on the North Fork, which is being operated by his son Frank M. He continued to be identified with that business until his death, which occurred in March, 1920. Mr. Boggs married Martha Susan Hedrick, of Pendleton County, a daughter of Solomon Hedrick. She was born in July, 1853, practically where she now resides and where she was reared. The children in the family were as follows: Maude, the wife of John Burton Skidmore, of Franklin; Gordon, of this notice; Wilbur, who is carrying on operations on the old home place for his mother; Arthur L., a resident of Mount Gilead, Ohio; Oscar, a mechanic, who is employed by a manufactory at Lima, Ohio; Warren, who is variously employed; Frank M., who is conducting Boggs' Mill, heretofore mentioned; Louis, a bachelor, residing on the old home place, which he helps to cultivate; Ona, who is a trained nurse at St. Luke's Hospital, Cleveland, Ohio; and Catherine, the baby, who remains with her mother.

Gordon Boggs passed the years of his minority on the place on which he was born, and as he grew up on the home farm the public schools of the community furnished him with his education. When he was about twenty years of age he adopted the vocation of educator, and for ten years followed that calling in the rural districts of Pendleton County, where he became known as an efficient and highly popular instructor. During this period he furthered his own education by attendance at the Shepherdstown Normal School in order that he would be better qualified for his work of school teaching and management, and his last work as an instructor was done at Franklin. When he abandoned teaching as a calling he turned his attention to merchandising as a clerk in the store of his uncle, M. K. Boggs, and continued in the same capacity from 1902 until 1912. In the latter year the office of county and circuit court clerk became vacant, and it was necessary to find a successor to I. E. Bolton, the former incumbent. For this unexpired term Mr. Boggs announced himself as a republican candidate, and in the election which followed defeated the democratic candidate in a democratic county. He was elected to succeed himself in 1914, and served the term of six years, retiring from the office with a splendid record in 1921. In the meantime, in 1917, Mr. Boggs had become a partner in the firm of M. K. Boggs & Company at Franklin, and with his retirement from public life he reassumed his duties in the store, with which he has continued to be identified to the present. This establishment enjoys an excellent trade all over the surrounding country, and much of its success is due to the energetic methods, known integrity and unflinching courtesy of M. K. Boggs. For a long time Gordon Boggs has been identified with community matters at Franklin. He it was who assisted in the inauguration of the Chautauqua movement here and stayed with it until it was an assured success. During the World war he was an untiring worker in behalf of the various movements, particularly the American Red Cross, and rode on horseback over a large part of Pendleton County, arousing interest and encouraging people to respond to the Government's request for assistance in the winning of the war. His own purse was opened wherever there was the need, and his family were one hundred percent Red Cross, as every member belonged to the organization. Mr. Boggs is a member of the Presbyterian Church, in which he succeeded his uncle, Isaac P. Boggs, as an elder in 1904, is a member of the building committee of the new church, and for the past five years has been active in Sunday school work, being the superintendent thereof. Mr. Boggs himself laid the foundation for the financial success which he has achieved, and every dollar that has come into his hands has been the result of honest effort.

On September 3, 1904, Mr. Boggs married at Franklin Miss Elsie Byrd, who was born near Franklin, a daughter of John W. and Phoebe (Meadows) Byrd. John W. Byrd was a son of James Byrd, who founded the family in Pendleton County, coming as a millwright from Peaks of Cerro, Virginia, and building what is known as Byrd's Mill, two miles north of Franklin. James Byrd married Mary Ann Hammer, and they had two sons, John W. and Clay D., and two daughters, Mary Catherine, who married Moan Trumbo, and Adelaide, who became the wife of George W. Davis. John W. Byrd and wife were the parents of three children: Elsie, who became the wife of Gordon Boggs; Don, of Franklin; and Ernest, of Bridgewater, Virginia. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Boggs: John Byrd, Elizabeth Gordon, Grace Hammer and Mary Ann.

SAMUEL ALEXANDER MCCOY. The proprietor and editor of a newspaper occupies a vantage ground which may raise or mar a reputation, build up or tear down a cause worthy of public approval or support. Not only the City of Moorefield but Hardy County at large has reason for congratulation that the Moorefield Examiner is in such safe, sagacious and thoroughly clean hands as those of Samuel Alexander McCoy. It is considered one of the best general newspapers for the family published in its part of Eastern West Virginia, as well as an outspoken fair-play exponent of the democratic party; in fact it is in all respects worthy of the care and sound judgment displayed in its columns, and reflects credit on its owner.

Mr. McCoy was born at Franklin, Pendleton County, West Virginia, December 25, 1880, a son of Pendleton Kate (McMechen) McCoy. He belongs to a family which has resided in Pendleton County for a number of generations, and his paternal grandfather was William McCoy, who was a member of the Virginia Constitutional Convention and who took a prominent part in the founding and development of Franklin after locating at that place. Pendleton McCoy was born during the '50s, at Franklin, where he received a common school education, and it was at the Moorefield Hoover School that he first met the young lady who later became his bride. Throughout his career he followed the vocations of farming and stockraising, and his reputation was always that of a man of integrity and sound business honor. He was not in public life but was one of the staunch democrats of his county, and his chief faith was that of the Presbyterian denomination. Mr. McCoy married Miss Kate McMechen, a daughter of Samuel A. and Elizabeth (Hutton) McMechen. Mr. McMechen lived at Moorefield all his life, and merchandising occupied his energies until his retirement from active affairs. He died at Moorefield when about eighty years of age. During the war between the states his sentiments were in favor of the Confederacy, and he secured a substitute for himself for the Southern cause. Of his children, two daughters grew to maturity: Kate, who became Mrs. Pendleton McCoy; Emma, who married Joseph I. Cunningham and resides at Moorefield; the Misses Carrie and Betsey of this place; and one who is deceased. Mrs. McCoy survives her husband, who passed away in 1889, and she is a resident of Moorefield. They had two sons: Samuel Alexander, of this review; and James Curtis, also of Moorefield, where he is associated with the Examiner and is proprietor of the moving picture establishment of the county.

Samuel Alexander McCoy passed the first years of his

at Franklin, where he secured his primary educational training and in his spare time had first insight into the newspaper business when rolling newspapers for distribution at the office of the South Branch Review. After coming to Moorefield he completed his public school training, and at the age of sixteen years went to work in a printing office, on the Hardy County News, owned by Captain Chipley, a founder, a lawyer and politician of Moorefield. He remained with this paper until 1900, when he supplemented his education by a course of one year at Hampden City College, Virginia, where he took a business course, and then went to Thomas, West Virginia, and accepted a position as clerk in the store of the Buxton-Landstreet Company. This work did not absorb him long, for during the Christmas holidays of 1901 he returned to Moorefield, and in January, 1902, bought out the interests of Captain Chipley in the newspaper, the name of which had been changed, in 1897, to the Examiner. Soon after coming to a possession of the paper Mr. McCoy changed its name to the Moorefield Examiner. Since then he has devoted almost his entire time to the publication of this sheet, which, while frankly a democratic organ, is a home and country paper for the dissemination of all local news and dispensation of local advertising. The Moorefield Examiner is a well-printed and well-edited paper, thoroughly up-to-date in all respects, and a modern job printing office conducted in connection. The paper is published weekly. Mr. McCoy has been identified with the democratic party for a number of years. He was chairman of the Hardy County Central Committee two terms, was a member of the Congressional Committee of the Second District, and was a main factor in bringing to Moorefield the congressional election which nominated Junior Brown for Congress. The first time the congressman was sent to that high office. He attended as a delegate the state conventions at Parkersburg and Wheeling, twice each, and his campaigning for a ticket is done through the columns of the Examiner. His political position has not appealed to Mr. McCoy. Particularly, he has served as councilman of Moorefield, and was its city recorder during the administration of Captain Chipley as mayor. His general interest in community affairs has extended especially to the public schools, giving a care and concern for their welfare, and he is witnessing the presence of a progressive public school system, aided over by efficient teachers and officials. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Masons and the Elks, and his religious faith is that of the Presbyterian Church. In addition to assisting various movements at home during the war through the columns of his paper, Mr. McCoy assisted in the draft and was ready to give his services whenever called upon by the Government to do so.

On June 18, 1902, Mr. McCoy married Miss Eunice Taylor, who was born at Cumberland, Maryland, a daughter of Warfield and Kate (Cunningham) Taylor. Mrs. McCoy was reared at Moorefield, where she attended the public schools, and subsequently was a student at Stephens Seminary, Charlestown, West Virginia. Her parents have four children: Mrs. Walter Williams; Mrs. McCoy; William, who was born October 16, 1880; William, a resident of Moorefield; and Warfield, of Richmond, Virginia. Mrs. McCoy was a member of the executive committee of the Cross of Hardy County throughout the World war, and acted many garments for the soldiers at the front and in training camps. She is an active member of the Presbyterian Church and of the missionary society of Moorefield. While she was not an active suffragette, she accepted a ballot when it came to her as a result of the Nineteenth Amendment, and has been able to make an intelligent use thereof. Mr. and Mrs. McCoy are the parents of four children, Katherine, a member of the graduating class of 1919 at the Moorefield High School, and who is now a student at Randolph-Macon Women's College, Lynchburg, Virginia.

ROBERT WALKER LOVE, M. D. For nearly twenty years he is in his profession as a physician and surgeon at Moorefield in Hardy County. Doctor Love had a wide range of professional experience and training before coming to West Virginia. He is a native of Scotland, was reared and partly educated in that country, completed his medical course in America, and for a time was a medical missionary in South America.

He was born in the City of Glasgow, Scotland, August 25, 1873. His father, Hugh Love, was born in Lanarkshire, near Johnson, where his people for generations had lived, being merchants and manufacturers mainly. It was a family of local distinction and noted for integrity of character. The mother of Doctor Love was Jemimah Walker, daughter of Robert Walker, who came from the Burns District of Ayrshire. Hugh Love died in 1921, at the age of eighty years, and his wife died in 1912, at the age of sixty-nine. They had two children: Miss Susan Young, of Glasgow; and Doctor Love, of West Virginia.

Robert Walker Love spent most of his childhood and youth in the Vale of Leven and Dumbartonshire, where his father was in business. He attended the primary and secondary schools corresponding to the American grade and high school, and began the study of medicine in Glasgow. He made his first trip to the United States from Glasgow on the S.S. Nebraska, landing at New York and at once entering the Baltimore Medical College at Baltimore. He graduated there in 1897, and then returned to Scotland for a year. Following that came his experience in South America as a medical missionary among the Indians in the Gran Chaco of Paraguay. His work took him into a district where white men rarely ventured. The Gran Chaco is a vast extent of prairie country on the Parana River, inhabited by many tribes of semi-hostile Indians, whose attitude toward the white man was friendly and safe when the white man observed the golden rule in his treatment of them. A white man who was well disposed and trusted the Indians would surrender his unloaded weapons to them before he retired for the night, thus giving the Indian assurance that the visitor had no hostile designs. Doctor Love spent two years in that country, and has many interesting recollections of his experience there. These Indians would inoculate themselves with the virus of a snake whose poison is weak so as to make themselves immune from the snake whose virus is deadly. In massaging, Doctor Love observed, their practice was to rub upward instead of down, and though the Indian could not give a scientific explanation of why he did so, it happened to be the proper way to give a massage.

After this experience in South America Doctor Love again returned to Scotland, and a few months later came again to the United States. For about a year he worked in the Maryland General Hospital, and in 1901 he came to West Virginia and for three years practiced at Pleasant Dale in Hampshire County. Then, in 1903, he established himself at Moorefield, and began his long and useful career as a medical man in this community. For a number of years he has been county health officer, has held the office of secretary and president of the County Medical Society, is a member of the State Medical Society and a Fellow of the American Medical Association. During the World war he did all he could to aid the allies in winning the war, and throughout the entire period of America's participation was a member of the local draft board. He is an elder in the Presbyterian Church of Moorefield and has represented his church in the Presbyterial meetings. In politics he is a democrat in all national issues, but on the whole favors the man rather than the party.

Miss Elizabeth Duncan was born at Huntley, Aberdeenshire, Scotland, daughter of John Duncan, a farmer of Edinglassie in Aberdeenshire. His daughter Elizabeth was educated in the grammar school of Keith and in boarding school, and on examination at Edinburgh University in England won honors in English. She taught school for several years, and was teacher of French and German in the schools of Melrose, the old home of Sir Walter Scott. In 1901 she came to America for the purpose of joining Doctor Love, her fiancé, and they were married in New York City in October of that year. Mrs. Love is an accomplished woman and has done much art work with the brush as a painter. She was chairman of the surgical dressing department of the Hardy County Chapter of the Red Cross. The children of Doctor and Mrs. Love are: Raymond Cecil, a graduate of the Moorefield High School and now a student in Hampden-Sidney College in Virginia; Ian (John) Alastair, a high school student in Moorefield; and Ronald Walker and Winifred. Doctor and Mrs. Love jointly exercised their art and good taste in the planning of their beautiful and generous home at Moorefield.

ANTHONY BENJAMIN HASLACKER has been active in the banking affairs of Moorefield for the past dozen years, being cashier of the Hardy County Bank. He entered this bank a year or so after it was organized in 1909. Its promoters were Robert A. Wilson, George T. Leatherman, William Ran Orndorff, Ed McNeill and A. A. Parks. The Hardy County Bank is capitalized at $50,000, has surplus and undivided profits of $6,000, and carries average deposits of $100,000. The president is Mr. Orndorff, Charles E. Vance is vice president, and the board of directors comprise Mr. Orndorff, Mr. Vance, Mr. Haslacker, Robert A. Wilson, P. S. Mathias, George W. Mathias, Jr., William M. Kessel and Hetzel S. Pownall.

Mr. Haslacker was born at Maysville, Grant County, West Virginia, June 27, 1879, son of John and Elizabeth (Hesse) Haslacker, both natives of Grant County and still living on their farm in the vicinity of Maysville. John Haslacker was born there, had a country school education and has spent his busy life with the industry of his farm and his stock. He has never been in politics as a candidate for office, is a republican voter and he and his wife are Baptists. Their children are: Anthony B.; Minnie, wife of Calvin Stonestreet, of Maysville; Edward, a farmer in Grant County; Ernest, with his parents on the homestead; Clellie, wife of Albert Umstot, of Reese's Mills of West Virginia; Randolph II., at home; and Larry B., of Scherr in Grant County.

Anthony B. Haslacker attended the common schools while on the farm, and for three years was a student of the Fairmont State Normal School. He left that institute because of lack of funds to continue the course, and for about five years his work was teaching in the Maysville locality. Subsequently he joined the Union Tanning Company's service as accountant and in other capacities, and the company successively transferred him to Cumberland, Paw Paw, Petersburg and, finally, to Davis.

Leaving this industry, Mr. Haslacker in 1911 joined the Hardy County Bank as assistant cashier, holding that post under cashier Robert A. Wilson, and in June, 1919, succeeded Mr. Wilson as cashier. As one of the active bankers of this community he took a prominent part during the World war in promoting the sale of all the Liberty Bond issues, and joined other patriotic organizations as well. Mr. Haslacker is affiliated with the Masonic Lodge, and during the greater part of the time since becoming a citizen of Moorefield he has held some public office involving service to the community without more than nominal remuneration. He is a former recorder of the town, has been president of the school board for one year, and usually cooperates with any movement for the general benefit of the community.

On April 17, 1907, Mr. Haslacker married Miss Marie A. Parks, of Petersburg. Her father, A. A. Parks, represented a pioneer family of Grant County, was in business there and at one time held the office of sheriff. Mrs. Haslacker was born on her father's farm in Grant County in October, 1886, and is the elder of two children. Her brother, John A. Parks, is active in several lines of business at Petersburg, the roller-mills, light plant, ice factory and the Potomac Valley Bank. Mr. and Mrs. Haslacker have two children, Ralph P. and Agnes R.

JOHN M. SHORT, deputy United States marshal at Wheeling under United States Marshal C. E. Smith of Fairmont, has a great record as a criminal expert and criminal officer, detective and secret service agent.

Mr. Short was born at Wheeling, June 11, 1853, son of Henry Short. His father was a native of Birmingham, England, but spent his long and active life at Wheeling as an iron worker and molder, for a number of years being an employee of A. J. Sweeney's foundry. He died at a good old age, and his wife died at the age of fifty-five. Both were active members of the old First Presbyterian Church at North Wheeling. Their family consisted of six sons and two daughters: Saline, a widow living in Ohio County; John M.; Rose, a widow, whose home is at Main Ferry; Alfred, who was killed in the mines early in life; and Robert J., a retired resident of Aetnaville, Ohio.

John M. Short was reared and educated in Wheeling, learned the molder's trade and followed it two years, then left his trade to become a patrolman. He was on duty at North Wheeling, and he was the first plain-clothesman appointed on the police force of Wheeling. In 1893 Governor MacCorkle appointed Mr. Short to represent the state at the Columbian Exposition in Chicago. He was soon made head of the night force of plain-clothesmen, who at times numbered 125 men. His record at Chicago attracted the attention of the officials of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway, and in 1893 for fourteen years he was captain of the Baltimore & Ohio police, having jurisdiction over all the lines of the system in West Virginia and portions of Ohio and Maryland. He held the highest positions of responsibility in the railroad detective service. It became his duty to apprehend and arrest men for every offense in the category of crime, including several murderers. Among his arduous duties was an assignment to break up the thieving and between Wheeling and Grafton, where other officers had failed. In a short time organized thieving ceased altogether, and he sent several offenders to the penitentiary. During the first year he was captain of the Baltimore & Ohio police force he apprehended eight-five per cent of all depredators, while forty per cent had long been considered a good record. Later he organized the Short Detective Agency, operating it for several years and taking a number of important cases. As a democrat he received his appointment as deputy United States marshal.

At the age of nineteen Mr. Short married Ella W. Higgins, of Wheeling. They have two children, Robert and Rosa, the latter Mrs. Arthur Chance of Wheeling. Mr. Short is affiliated with Baltimore Lodge No. 6, Knights of Pythias.

Mr. Short recounts many interesting experiences and stories of his associations with crime and criminals. Ten years ago Wheeling citizens were aroused to great indignation against the Gas Company officials. Many persons had their meters sealed, though gas bills were presented as usual. The gas office was in the rear of the McLure Hotel. One Sunday evening fire was discovered there, and Mr. Short, being on the ground, went to the door, pushed it open and fell on a pile of burning books saturated with kerosene while thousands of gas bills were exposed on a counterpane saturated with oil. The blaze was stamped out and the books saved and also several thousand dollars of currency in a slightly open safe. Arrests were made, but trial resulted in acquittals. Another case that attracted great attention in the newspapers for a time was a diamond theft that occurred in a Wheeling resort. Mr. Short traced the suspected girl to Pittsburgh, and after some days of rilling procured from her information that the stolen diamonds valued at $6,000, were pinned under the wardrobe of the police matron at Pittsburgh. Mr. Short secured the jewels much to the consternation of Pittsburgh's detectives.

During his services at the Chicago World's Fair a robbery occurred in the Mines and Mining Building, a watch, weighing 150 pounds, and a number of opals and amethysts being stolen from a case in the building. The chief of detectives detailed Mr. Short for an investigation. He discovered an underground conduit for electric wire opening by a hatchway in a niche covered by a fire sprinkling cart in the rear of the exhibit, and led to the outside. Mr. Short secured a confession from the man who operated the cart and from a man and woman who were charge of the exhibit.

For all his long experience in meeting and handling criminals Mr. Short is an optimist rather than a pessimist and it has been his aim to treat fairly and especially ward the reputation of those who have committed their first criminal offense, permitting them a chance to reform other than remaining permanently branded. He is an advocate of prison reform, and believes that half the prison inmates should not be there.

ARTHUR CUNNINGHAM, of Moorefield, has devoted a long and active life to constructive business, political and public affairs. He was born on a farm a mile north of Moorefield, December 13, 1856. His great-grandfather was James Cunningham. His grandfather was Jesse Cunningham, who spent his life in a community south of Moorefield, was a private citizen, a substantial farmer, and died before the Civil war. His first wife was Miss Elizabeth Hutton, and their only child was Benjamin Cunningham. His second wife was Martha Snodgrass, and the two daughters of that marriage were Mrs. Mortimer W. Gamble and Mrs. George P. Price, the latter the wife of a lawyer.

Benjamin Cunningham, father of Arthur Cunningham, as born in Hardy County in December, 1811, and he died on the farm where he was born. All his industrious life was given to the duties of the farm. He was a Southern sympathizer during the war between the states, but was never active in public affairs. In the last year of his life he joined the church. Benjamin Cunningham, who died in 1883, married Miss Eunice P. Fisher, daughter of George and Mary (Harness) Fisher and granddaughter of Adam Harness. Both the Fisher and Harness families were solid and substantial people of this locality, all of them farmers. Mrs. Eunice Cunningham was born in 1812, and reached the venerable age of ninety-two, passing away in 1904. She was the mother of eighteen children, ten of whom reached mature years: Jesse, George, Phoebe, James, Mary, Edwin, William, Kate, Arthur and Alice. Phoebe became the wife of Will Cunningham; Mary married Joseph V. Williams; Kate was Mrs. Warfield Taylor; and Alice married F. C. Felton. Three of the sons, Jesse, George and James, were Confederate soldiers, and all of them escaped serious injury and spent the rest of their active careers as farmers. Until he was married Arthur Cunningham lived on the farm with his parents. He finished his education in the Moorefield High School, but the education and training that are counted for most in his life were derived from experience after he left school. Until he was forty-six years of age his energies were solely devoted to the farm. When he rented his farm he entered the service of the McCormick Harvester Company, selling machinery. After two years he McCormick interests were part of the consolidation resulting in the International Harvester Company, and he continued with that corporation as salesman over the counties of Hampshire, Hardy, Mineral, Grant, Pendleton and a portion of Randolph until he had given ten years to the company. Then, in 1912, he returned to the farm, and though he lives in Moorefield he owns and supervises his farm three miles south of the county seat. Mr. Cunningham was one of the original promoters of the Branch Mountain Orchard Company. He is president of the corporation. This company has 130 acres on Nicholas Mountain, now in bearing fruit trees, 4,000 of them being apple trees.

While his business interests have been important, Mr. Cunningham is best known over Hardy County and surrounding counties for his public leadership. For the past twelve years he has been chairman of the democratic party of Hardy County, and has repeatedly attended state conventions and likewise has been a delegate to many of the district conventions. During the past four years he has been president of the Hardy County Court. Mr. Cunningham has used the full extent of his influence and his official power to give the county a modern good roads system. The building of hard surface roads has been the chief concern to the board and to the general public. Eleven miles of such road have been finished, including the construction of six small concrete bridges. The County court also provided a machine shop for the repair work of the county, with a force of mechanics sufficient to keep up the machinery and equipment. After the roads were taken over by the state the shop and equipment passed under the same control.

During the period of the World war Mr. Cunningham regarded no other duty paramount to any service he could render in keeping up Hardy County's quota of war activities. He was not a dollar a year man, giving his service without even that nominal consideration, and he feels that nothing he ever did has repaid him better than his patriotic efforts at that time. He went over the county time and again participating in the various drives and campaigns for funds and the building up of patriotic morale. He assisted in the Red Cross and Y. M. C. A. campaign, and was chairman of the Victory Loan drive after the signing of the armistice. Mr. Cunningham is affiliated with the Masonic Order and United Commercial Travelers and is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

In Hardy County, November 10, 1880, he married Miss Eliza Williams, daughter of George D. and Margaret (Seymour) Williams. Her parents were natives of Hardy County and spent their lives as farmers. Her father was a graduate of the University of Virginia and a teacher, and always a leader in the educational work of the county. The seven children in the Williams family were: Felix, Mrs. Cunningham, Edward, Miss Rose, George, Walter and Robert.

Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham have three children. Alice is the wife of Prof. Earl Hyde, superintendent of the Presbyterian Orphanage at Barium Springs, North Carolina, and they have three children, Margaret, Arthur and Earl. Annie Cunningham married J. D. Chipley, of Moorefield. Thomas, the only son, is a farmer and in the lumber business at Moorefield, and married Frances Bowen.

ROBERT A. WILSON is a native of Moorefield, has spent an unusually active life of more than three score and ten years in that vicinity, has performed a great deal of official service and at the same time has been active in business as a banker and merchant and is the present mayor of Moorefield.

He was born March 21, 1847. His grandparents were Stacy M. and Elizabeth Wilson, who moved from old Virginia to Hardy County, where Stacy Wilson, a tailor by trade, spent the rest of his years and died during the '50s. His children were: David L., John Wesley, Aaron H., Stacy M., Amos (who died in young manhood), and Victoria, the latter the wife of William H. Violett. Wesley, Aaron and Stacy were Confederate soldiers, Aaron holding a commission as colonel. David L. Wilson, father of Robert A., was born in Fauquier County, Virginia, and was a child when brought to Hardy County, where he grew up, learned the tailor's trade, acquired a practical education, and was active both in business and in public affairs. He is a Methodist. David L. Wilson married Mary Catherine Friddle, a daughter of Henry Friddle, and survived her some years. Their children were: Robert Asbury; Miss Etta, deceased; David L., Jr., of Moorefield; James Hunter, who died in childhood; Miss Bettie, deceased; Arthur V., a farmer in Hardy County; and Turner Ashby, deceased.

Robert A. Wilson was attending school when the Civil war broke out, and had that struggle lasted a few weeks longer he would have been enrolled as a Southern soldier, following the example of his older brothers. He attended country school and school in Moorefield, did some farming while the war was going on, and had a knowledge of that occupation on reaching manhood. About the time he attained his majority his father was appointed sheriff of Hardy County, and the son became his deputy. Mr. Wilson served altogether sixteen years as deputy sheriff, under his father and two other sheriffs, each of whom died in office, leaving Mr. Wilson to succeed to their duties. About the expiration of his last term as deputy he was elected circuit clerk and county clerk, and entered these offices as successors of Charles Lobb. Mr. Lobb had been clerk for half a century, and Mr. Wilson finally defeated him as candidate. Although he received the majority of the votes and was declared elected, he had to overcome considerable opposition from the old clerks before he was able to take office. He finally entered upon his official duties as a result of a decision of Judge Armstrong, then circuit judge. He served the six year term, became a candidate for reelection, and altogether held that office for twelve years.

After this long and faithful service to the county Mr. Wilson engaged in the mercantile business at Moorefield under the name of R. A. Wilson, and when he retired his son Robert Cleland succeeded him and still continues under the old firm name of R. A. Wilson. After his business career as a merchant Mr. Wilson was for ten years cashier of the Hardy County Bank, leaving that position in June, 1920. Although he had served the public long and well and felt that he had done his whole duty, the citizens of Moorefield urged him to become a candidate for mayor, and he was elected in April, 1922. In that office he has demonstrated to the public that law and order can be enforced and a peaceable and orderly community maintained. He selected his own force to administer the ordinances of the city, and violators of the law have learned to appreciate the strength as well as the reasonableness of the new administration.

Mr. Wilson comes of a democratic family, and his father was a democrat when there were only three of that political faith in Moorefield. However, R. A. Wilson has performed his public service under both political regimes. In former years he was a delegate to local and state conventions, the last state convention he attended having been held at Huntington about twenty-five years ago. Mr. Wilson is still a director and stockholder in the Hardy County Bank, and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

At Winchester, Virginia, in April, 1872, just half a century ago, he married Miss Gelia M. Belt, a native of Hampshire County, daughter of James Belt, who was a harness maker and spent his last years at Winchester, Virginia. Mrs. Wilson has a sister, Mrs. Cecelia House, and a brother, Frank, still living. Her sister Sallie, who is deceased, married James A. Clinedinst, of Washington, D. C. Another sister is Louisa Ramey, of Washington, D. C. Of the three children born to Mr. and Mrs. Wilson the youngest died in infancy. Miss Bessie S. lives at Moorefield, and Robert Cleland is the merchant there. By his marriage to Pauline Williams he has a son, Robert Cleland, Jr.

J. SHIRLEY ROSS, an ex-service man, widely known in Charleston social and business circles, is a former city official and for a number of years has employed his energies and capital in the development of land and real estate in and around the capital.

He was born at Charleston, August 31, 1883, son of John Tyler and Hannah (Creel) Ross. His father was born in Patrick County, Virginia, in 1841. He and five brothers became Confederate soldiers, and he played a valorous part in that war from beginning to end. Soon afterward he came to West Virginia, locating at Charleston, and from that time until his death in 1896 his principal business was as a brick manufacturer. As a manufacturer of brick he also did considerable work as a contractor, and he had the distinction of laying the first brick paving in the city. This was a handsome brick pavement on Summers Street, completed during the year 1873. His public spirit led him constantly into all movements for the general advancement and welfare of Charleston.

J. Shirley Ross is still living at the old home on Court Street where he was born and adjoining which property was his father's brick yard in early years. After completing his public school education he was associated with his father in brick manufacture for a time. Mr. Ross in 1907 was elected city recorder and police judge of Charleston, and by subsequent elections served four terms, his service being from 1907 to 1915. Since leaving office his work has been chiefly in the land and real estate business, and primarily in the opening and development of residential subdivisions. He has sold six or more large additions in Charleston and vicinity, including the Rosedale Addition to South Charleston.

During the period of the World war Mr. Ross was a lieutenant in the Motor Transport Corps, stationed at Jacksonville, Florida. He is a democrat in politics, a member of the Kanawha Country Club, active in the Charleston Real Estate Board, and is affiliated with a number of fraternal and social organizations, including the Elks, Knights of Pythias and Odd Fellows.

WILLIAM BURDETTE MATHEWS, clerk of the Supreme Court of Appeals, has been a member of the bar thirty years, though his time for the most part has been devoted to official duties and the demands of extensive business interests.

Mr. Mathews was born in Marshall County, West Virginia, August 27, 1866, son of Christopher C. and Esth (Scott) Mathews. He acquired a public school education from 1882 to 1889 was a teacher. In 1889 he graduated Master of Arts from Waynesburg College in Pennsylvania, and pursued his law studies in George Washington University, where he graduated LL. B. in 1891 and LL. M. in 1892. During 1880-90 he was examiner of public school teachers in Marshall County, and from 1890 to 1895 was connected with the Eleventh United States Census, attending law school while thus employed at Washington.

Mr. Mathews was secretary to the speaker of the House of Delegates in 1897, and from 1898 to 1901 was clerk of the office of the state auditor. He served as assistant attorney general of the state in 1902, and for a number of years past has been clerk of the Supreme Court of Appeals.

Among other business interests Mr. Mathews is director of the Virginian Joint Stock Land Bank of Charleston, several building and loan companies, and the Fairview Land and Development Company. During the World war he was state director of the Four Minute Men under the committee of public information. He was one of the organizers, a charter member and a past president of the Charleston Rotary Club, and is a director of the Charleston Public Library, a trustee of the West Virginia Wesleyan College, a member of the American Historical Association, American Bar Association, International Longfellow Society and has been active in republican politics, being presidential elector in 1900. He is a Knight Templar, a thirty-second degree Mason and a Shriner, a life member of the EL and belongs to the Edgewood Country, Old Colony and Rotary Clubs of Charleston, West Virginia Society at Washington, and the Allegheny and Cheat Mountain Clubs.

Mr. Mathews is one of the most prominent laymen of the Methodist Church in the state. He was a member of the General Conference of the church in 1900 and 1902 and in 1911 was a delegate to the Fourth Ecumenical Methodist Conference. He is a trustee of the First Methodist Church at Charleston and represents that church on the Board of Directors of the Union Mission, of which he was one of the organizers.

It is appropriate to devote a special paragraph to the Union Mission, the largest and most successful institution of its kind in the country. It was founded in 1910, and carried on through the cooperation of all the Evangelical Protestant churches of Charleston, each church being represented by two members on the Board of Directors of the Mission. The buildings and property now owned and used by the Union Mission for its various activities have a value of at least a quarter of a million dollars. The main buildings at Lovell and Clendenin streets include the new dormitory for orphan children completed in 1922. There are several departments of the Mission work. The general gospel work is carried on every day in the year, with gospel meetings every night. In the main building there are sleeping quarters for men and a dining room where meals are served at a minimum of cost. There is a staff of nurses for the children as well as for the assistance of the Missions' staff of physicians and surgeons, the medical department and the dispensary giving free medical treatment where the patients cannot afford to pay. Boys' work is an important feature, and this and the children's work generally is augmented by a fresh air camp on Venao Branch, Kanawha City, where 20,000 have been treated in buildings and grounds, including a dormitory, auditorium and livestock. The Mission has over 800 acres of land at this place known as Abney Park, the gift of the estate of the late F. W. Abney.

On October 25, 1900, Mr. Mathews married Miss Elizabeth Blundon, of Charleston, daughter of the late Rev. War B. Blundon, a Methodist minister who served with rank of major in the Civil war. Mr. and Mrs. Mathews have two children: Sarah Esther, a graduate of National Seminary at Washington; and Elizabeth Blundon, a teacher in the Charleston High School.

JOHN KOBLEGARD. In every prosperous city a few names stand out as conspicuous representatives of that honor and integrity which are the foundation stones of commercial enterprise. Such a name in Clarksburg is that of John Koblegard, now retired after nearly half a century of constructive work as a wholesale merchant.

He was born at Abenade, Sleswig, Denmark, September 1846, son of Niels and Mary (Hanson) Koblegard. His early education in Denmark has since been generously supplemented by the great school of a wide experience in the world.

At the age of nineteen, he and five other young men from the same community came to this country in 1865, just at the close of the American Civil war. In the following year his brother, the late Jacob Koblegard, also came to the United States. John Koblegard for the first two years lived at Urbana, Ohio, and for another two years at Springfield, Ohio, and in the spring of 1869 he and the late (A. L. Ruhl) came to Clarksburg. These young men entered the produce business, and from that time forward they were closely associated in their business affairs, also neighbors and close friends, until the death of Mr. Ruhl on December 18, 1921. After two years at Clarksburg they moved to Chicago in 1871 and were in the produce business at that city until 1876, going into business there about the time of the great fire. Incidentally it should be noted that this firm were the first shippers of eggs across the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific Coast.

On their return to Clarksburg they again acquired their produce business, and in 1880 they entered the wholesale grocery business under the firm name of Ruhl, Koblegard and Company. It was an important and successful firm for about twenty years, and is still well remembered by many grocery men who obtained their early training in the house. After selling out their interests in the wholesale grocery trade, Mr. Koblegard and Mr. Ruhl founded the Koblegard Dry Goods Company and the Williams Hardware Company as permanent wholesale concerns at Clarksburg.

A number of years ago the West Fork Glass Company was organized, most of the stockholders being Clarksburg men. After a period of operation the company failed to meet the expectation of its founders, and Mr. Koblegard was induced to take charge of the business. Under his management it grew and thrived, and was put on a solid financial basis. Mr. Koblegard continued in control until about two years ago, when he and others sold their interests. Since then Mr. Koblegard has retired. His business career has been more than successful, since his individual success has also involved the success and prosperity of others and the community at large. It is safe to say that no citizen of Clarksburg is more highly respected than John Koblegard. He has been one of the founders of the city's modern business and institutional affairs. His public spirit has been a constant quantity in the community, and it has been manifested again and again, though normally he is strictly a man of business. Political honors have never been sought by him, and he has freely exercised his independence in voting, though in national affairs he is a republican. He was reared a Lutheran, but the absence of a church of that denomination at Clarksburg became associated with the Presbyterian membership many years ago, and has been very active in the cause. He has long been a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

Mr. Koblegard married in 1873, at Clarksburg, Miss Lillian L. Patton, daughter of James Patton, a Scotchman, who had the distinction of being one of a number of men who opened one of the first coal mines at Clarksburg. Mr. and Mrs. Koblegard had six children: Lillie, Clara, Robert (deceased), Jessie, Jean and John.

JOHN L. CHAFIN, of Williamson, is giving loyal and effective service as tax commissioner of Mingo County, and is one of the popular young officials of his native county. He was born at Ragland, this county, on Pigeon Creek, January 22, 1894, and is the son of John Lewis Chafin and Mahulda (Varney) Chafin, who still reside on their homestead farm at Ragland. The original representatives of the Chafin family came to what is now Mingo County from the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia and settled near Rockhouse. The Varney family was founded in Mingo (then a part of Logan) County more than eighty years ago. John L. Chafin, Sr., was born May 3, 1848, and thus was a mere boy at the inception of the Civil war, before the close of which, however, he enlisted and did effective scouting service for the Confederacy. After the war he was a member of the Ku Klux Klan, in which both he and one of his brothers gave loyal service. He was a boy at the time the family home was established in what is now Mingo County, and he has been active as a farmer, as a buyer and shipper of live stock and as a merchant. He has been influential in local politics, has served as school trustee, and in 1916 was elected tax commissioner of the county, in which office he was succeeded by his son John L., Jr., the present incumbent. Mrs. Mahulda (Varney) Chafin was born June 14, 1852, and has passed her entire life in what is now Mingo County. Of their twelve children eleven are living, the subject of this sketch having been the tenth in order of birth, and his brother B. S. being his deputy in the office of tax collector.

After leaving the high school at Rockhouse John L. Chafin, Jr., completed a course in the Kentucky State Normal School at Louisa. He began teaching in the rural schools when eighteen years of age, and his final position was as principal of the East End graded school at Williamson in 1914. After his retirement from this position he was employed 3½ years in the Williamson post office, which he left to enter the nation's service in the World war. He enlisted April 15, 1918, and at Richmond, Virginia, received training for the radio service, in which he became proficient and was assigned to duty as an instructor, with headquarters at Richmond. He continued in this service seventeen months and received his discharge in August, 1919. Upon his return home he was appointed deputy sheriff of Mingo County, and in this position he served until he assumed the office of county tax commissioner, as the successor of his father, his election, in November, 1920, having been compassed by the gratifying majority of 1,005 votes, only one other candidate on the democratic ticket in the county having equalled this record in the election.

Mr. Chafin was elected commander of the local post of the American Legion, but his holding of political office prevented him from assuming this position. He is a member not only of the Legion but also of the Private Soldiers and Sailors Association. He is affiliated with the Blue Lodge of the Masonic fraternity at Williamson, as is he also with the local Chapter and Commandery; in the Consistory of the Scottish Rite at Wheeling he has received the thirty-second degree, his Rose Croix membership being at Huntington, and he is a member of Beni-Kedem Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Charleston. He holds membership also in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Loyal Order of Moose, and is a communicant of the Presbyterian Church. His wife is a communicant of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

December 27, 1920, recorded the marriage of Mr. Chafin and Miss Florence Carter, daughter of Capt. Ross Carter, of Chatham, Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Chafin have a winsome little daughter, Ann Carter Chafin, born October 13, 1921.

GUSTAV B. WILTSHIRE, of Martinsburg, has had a busy career of over forty years, much of which was spent as a traveling salesman. Latterly his time has been taken up by permanent business interests in the Eastern Panhandle of West Virginia, where he is an extensive farmer and horticulturist.

Mr. Wiltshire was born near Leestown in Jefferson County, West Virginia, July 3, 1861. His father, Deacon George D. Wiltshire, was born in the same locality in December, 1816. The grandfather, Bennet Wiltshire, was born August 22, 1787, son of Benjamin and Elizabeth Wiltshire. Of the earlier ancestry the traditional account is that three Wiltshire brothers came from England and settled in Virginia. One of them later going west his descendants being now represented in the Middle West, and two remained in Virginia. Bennet Wiltshire was a farmer, and owner of slaves, and some of these slaves were inherited by his son Deacon George, who, however, never bought or sold one, and one of his families of negroes was so attached to him that they remained on the place after the war. During the war Jefferson County was invaded by both armies. George D. Wiltshire hid his valuables, and a trusted slave and himself were the only persons that knew the hiding place. George D. Wiltshire was a devoted member of the Baptist Church and served as deacon many years. His wife was Elizabeth Hearst Moore, who was born in Jefferson County in 1818. Her father, John Moore, was an extensive farmer and slave owner. Elizabeth H. Wiltshire died May 4, 1897, at the age of seventy-nine. She reared eight children, named Anna Moore, Charles Bennet, James G., Bettie M., Jane Lamplin, Lucy L., Minnie L. and Gustav B. The son Charles, who was born in 1841, entered the Confederate Army at the breaking out of the war and served until the close. Three days before the final surrender he was wounded, and he died three days after the surrender. The son James, who was born in 1843, also entered the Confederate Army, in 1862, serving under General Mosely. After the war he graduated in medicine from the University of Maryland, and for forty-five years practiced in Baltimore, where he died in October, 1920.

Gustav B. Wiltshire grew up on the home place, was educated under private tutors, graduated from Shepherd College in 1877, and spent two years in Doctor Atkinson's preparatory school at Baltimore. With this preparation he entered upon his career as a commercial traveler, and during the next twenty-two years his duties took him over fully two thirds of the United States. In the meantime he had established his permanent home at Martinsburg, and he also bought and still owns one of his father's farms in Jefferson County. A part of this is devoted to an orchard, and he is also one of the leading fruit growers of Berkeley County. His farms are conducted by tenants, but he closely supervises the work in the orchards. He has planted extensively on a part of the Flick farm, 3 1/4 miles from Martinsburg.

On June 6, 1901, Mr. Wiltshire married Miss Lorena Flick, who was born at Moorefield, Hardy County, West Virginia, only daughter of William H. H. and Lucretia (Clark) Flick, of a prominent family there. Mr. and Mrs. Wiltshire have three children, Harrison Flick, Elizabeth Moore and Gus B. The first is preparing for Princeton University at Mercersburg, while Elizabeth is in the Martinsburg High School and is finishing the grammar school course. All the family are active members of the First Baptist Church, of which Mr. Wiltshire is a deacon and trustee. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and Fruit Exchange, and for four years he served as a member of the City Council, running ahead of the ticket at each election. In May, 1920, he was elected mayor, but in August of the same year resigned the office. He did much to arouse cooperation and interest in this section in all the war causes and drives. Mrs. Wiltshire is a graduate of Wilson College, and is chairman of her class for raising the endowment fund. At Martinsburg she is a leader in social and intellectual affairs, being regent of the recently organized Shenandoah Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, is vice president of the Wednesday Afternoon Music Club, a director of the woman's work of the Berkeley Red Cross, a member of the Travel Club and the Women's Missionary Society, and a teacher in the Baptist Sunday School.

W. H. H. FLICK. An Ohioan by birth and a West Virginian by adoption, W. H. H. Flick became one of the most prominent men in the newer commonwealth. He was a very able and successful lawyer, but ever more widely known for the breadth of his statesmanship and the services he rendered to his section and the state at large in advancing political and material prosperity.

W. H. H. Flick, who for many years was a resident, Martinsburg, was of distinguished New England ancestry. Many of his forebears were prominent in the early history of the Colonies, and later many fought in the Revolution to establish American independence. His maternal grandparents moved from Connecticut to Northern Ohio and settled in what was then called the Connecticut Reserve. His paternal grandparents came from Pennsylvania and afterward moved farther west.

W. H. H. Flick was born near Cleveland, Ohio, February 24, 1851. In July, 1861, though a mere boy in size at age, he enlisted in the Forty-first Regiment of Ohio Volunteers. Letters which he wrote home during his service have recently come to life, and are interesting portrayals of war and war time conditions. In the great battle of Shiloh he was dangerously wounded in the left shoulder. He remained unconscious on the battlefield, but recovered sufficiently to find his way to a gunboat. After being able to leave the hospital he was sent home, and though partially disabled performed recruiting service until the close of the war.

He studied law, and after graduating at the old Cleveland Law School came to West Virginia and located at Moorefield. In 1867 he moved to Franklin, Pendleton County. His recognized qualifications as a public leader were soon acknowledged after he made his residence in West Virginia. He was elected to the Legislature in 1868 and again in 1870. In the Legislature he distinguished himself by a broad and tolerant attitude toward the issue of the war. He was author of the Flick Amendment, which restored the right of franchise to ex-Confederate soldiers and abolished test oaths and other civil limitations. Mr. Flick was prosecuting attorney of Pendleton County in 1869, of Grant County in 1872, and again of Pendleton County in 1873.

Leaving Franklin in 1874, he located at Martinsburg and for many years was one of the leaders in that community, though in reality a man of state-wide influence. In 1880 he was elected prosecuting attorney, but resigned in 1882 to accept appointment as United States district attorney for West Virginia under President Arthur. In 1876 he was republican candidate for judge of the Supreme Court of Appeals for West Virginia. In 1880 and again in 1888 he was republican candidate for Congress in the Second District against William L. Wilson. This was an interesting contest. Mr. Wilson was very strong, and was normally accustomed to flattering majorities, but in one of the campaigns Mr. Flick lacked only eleven votes of victory. The attempt to lead republican forces to victory at that time was a forlorn hope, not only in the district but in the state, both of which were safely within the democratic ranks. Mr. Flick whenever a candidate for an office led his ticket.

Prior to his last candidacy for Congress in 1888 he suffered a severe stroke of paralysis, from which he never entirely recovered and which greatly interfered with his political and professional activities and which hastened his death in 1904.

Mr. Flick was a leader in fraternal affairs and was honored with the highest state offices in the Grand Arm of the Republic, and in the Masonic Lodge, Chapter and Commandery filled offices with his usual ability, fervent and zeal. Judge Flick, as he was always known, was a man of unflinching loyalty to truth, principle and right, was conscientious and generous to a fault, and no West Virginian possessed greater popularity. In legal arguments of debate he was almost invincible.

He married Lucretia Clark, of Cuyahoga County, Ohio. She died in 1910. Their only child is Lorena, wife of Mr. G. B. Wiltshire of Martinsburg.

W. PIERRE MORISON, who is a member of the prominent Morison family of the Shenandoah and Potomac valleys, is one of the best known citizens of Shenandoah Junction, being during nearly all the years of his active life he is in the railroad service of the Norfolk and Western.

Mr. Morison was born in Charlestown District of Jefferson County, son of William M. Morison, who was born near Edington in Berkeley County, a grandson of Daniel Morison, a native of the same county, and great-grandson of William Morison. William Morison was a native of Scotland, and was one of three brothers who sought their fortunes in America. His brother Daniel settled in North Carolina, and another brother settled near the Maryland-Pennsylvania line. William Morison was for many years a resident of Berkeley County. He married Mary (Buckles) Tipple, whose father owned large tracts of land in and around Shepherdstown. William Morison and wife are both buried at Shepherdstown. Their son, Daniel Morison, was a large land owner, and his home plantation was situated at the junction of Opequon Creek and the Potomac river. Before the war he used many slaves to do the work in the fields. After the buildings and the plantation were burned he moved to Martinsburg, and lived the rest of his life there. His wife was Jane Porterfield, of the well known family of that name in Berkeley County. She survived her husband and reared six children, named George Porterfield; Mary, who married Dr. Tom Quigley; William M.; Martha Page, who married Augustin Kramer; Eliza, who married Charles Yancey; and Daniel.

William M. Morison with limited opportunities acquired good education, and after leaving the farm he clerked at a general store at Martinsburg, and then went West in search of adventure and experience. For a time he was at St. Joseph, Missouri, then a frontier town, and from there went into the territory of Nebraska, which was filled with Indians, deer, antelope and buffalo. At the outbreak of the war between the states he returned home and became a Confederate soldier in the First Virginia Cavalry, attached to the Stonewall Brigade. After about a year he was appointed purchasing agent of the Confederate Government, with headquarters at Richmond, and subsequently was assistant ticket agent for the Richmond and Annapolis Railroad at Richmond. Soon after the close of the war he returned to Martinsburg, and was appointed assistant secretary to the manager of the Cumberland Valley Railroad Company and subsequently became agent for that line at Shenandoah Junction. He finally resigned and retired until his death on July 23, 1899, at the age of sixty-five.

William M. Morison married his cousin, Emily Frances Morison, who was a daughter of William and Mary (Pinder) Morison and a granddaughter of William and Mary (Buckles) Morison. Her father was owner of a large plantation near the Potomac River in Jefferson County, and at the time of the war about sixty of his slaves were freed. He and his wife continued to live on the farm. They reared a family of twelve children, named William A., Ann Virginia, Mary Abigail, Martha Elizabeth, Lucia Jane, Henry Clay, Emily Frances, Daniel Taylor, George Theodore, Ellen Hunter, Hannah Page and Janette Washington. Mrs. Emily Frances Morison died in 1911. Her two children were W. Pierre and Winona.

W. Pierre Morison was educated in the public schools of Shenandoah Junction, and at the age of nineteen began learning telegraphy in the office of the B. & O. at Duffield, West Virginia, and later went with the Shenandoah Valley Railroad Company. His service was continuous with the railroad until February 1, 1921, when he retired. The Shenandoah Valley Railroad Company is now part of the Norfolk and Western system. He was the representative of this company at Shenandoah Junction. Mr. Morison, who is unmarried, was reared in and is an active member of the Presbyterian Church.

MORTIMER W. GAMBLE has been a practicing attorney at Moorefield nearly forty years. He is the present prosecuting attorney of Hardy County. He represents a family that has been identified with this section of West Virginia for ninety years or more, and it has been a family with many traditions of public service as well as military records and achievement in lines of business and the professions.

His great-grandfather, Joseph Gamble, was a native of Ireland, and on coming to the new world located for a time in Philadelphia. He then moved to Virginia, making his home at Winchester. He was an elder in the old Kent Street Presbyterian Church there. Among his large family of children were ten sons, two of whom located in St. Louis when it was a mere village and both were lawyers. One of them, Hamilton R. Gamble, achieved distinction as a member of the Supreme Court of Missouri.

James Carr Gamble, grandfather of the Moorefield lawyer, was a pioneer in Hardy County, locating there in 1831. Immediately upon his arrival he was appointed county clerk by the governor of Virginia, and filled that office as long as he lived. He died in 1860, when about sixty years of age. He was born at Winchester. His wife was Elizabeth Williams, whose father, Edward Williams, preceded James C. Gamble as county clerk of Hardy County. The children of these grandparents were: Mortimer Williams, father of the Moorefield lawyer of the same name; J. Samuel, Joseph N., James Carr, Hamilton McSparran and Henry R.; Eliza, who married George Van Meter; Mary, who died as the wife of Dr. Foster Pratt; Ann, who married Judge J. W. F. Allen; and Sallie, whose husband was Harry Duncan, of Michigan. Among the sons Joseph, Henry, Doctor Hamilton, James Carr and Mortimer Williams were Confederate soldiers. J. Samuel was a teacher and was principal of the college in Norfolk, Virginia, when he died, before the war.

Mortimer Williams Gamble was born about 1820, spent the early part of his life as deputy county clerk under his father, and was clerking in the first bank organized at Moorefield when the war broke out. He soon entered the army. He was a first lieutenant of the Hardy Blues, a noted military organization at Moorefield prior to the war, and when this company was mustered into the Confederate Army it went West and was captured at the battle of Rich Mountain. Mortimer Williams Gamble was past the age of forty when he entered the army, and after being taken prisoner he was paroled and sent home and never rejoined service. He was a farmer and spent the rest of his years in that occupation. He died at Moorefield in February, 1872, of typhoid pneumonia, at the age of fifty-two. His wife was Elizabeth Cunningham, daughter of James and Martha (Snodgrass) Cunningham, the former at one time a member of the Virginia Legislature. He served as a soldier in the War of 1812, was a farmer and represented an old family of Hardy County. Mrs. Elizabeth Gamble died in August, 1912, at the advanced age of ninety-one, having retained her mental powers until her death. Her children were: Jesse C., who died at the age of three years; Laura W., now living at Lexington, Kentucky, widow of Welton Cunningham; Miss Catherine Price, who lives with her maiden sister Alice in Moorefield, Alice being next to the youngest of the children; Bettie W., of Moorefield, widow of B. W. Chrisman; J. Samuel, who in early life was a merchant in Moorefield and later a farmer, and married Woody Inskeep; and Mortimer W., Jr.

Mortimer W. Gamble, the lawyer, was born June 25, 1862, and was about ten years of age when his father died. He attended public school at Moorefield, had two years in the private school of Henry L. Hoover, probably one of the finest teachers in this section and also widely known as a fisherman. He finally attended the private school of Professor Hodge, and taught several terms while reading law with George E. Price. He spent two years in the office of Mr. Price, and was admitted to the bar under the old system of three judges, the names on his license being Judge Armstrong, Judge Boyd and Judge Falkner.

At the age of twenty-two he took up his career as a lawyer, and his first case in court at Moorefield was the defense of a man charged with assault, the whipping of a little girl under his care and custody. He practiced as a partner of his old preceptor, Mr. Price, in the firm of Price and Gamble, until Mr. Price removed to Charleston, and since then he has handled an individual practice involving all classes of cases from the simplest of civil suits to the defense and prosecution of men charged with murder. His public service has been almost entirely within the line of his profession. He served as a member of the House of Delegates representing the delegate district composed of Hardy and Grant counties during the session of 1893. He was elected prosecuting attorney of Hardy County in 1908, giving one term of capable service. In 1920 he was again elected to this office. During the World war, he was chairman of the selective service board, and performed a large part of the duty of filling out the questionnaires for the young men of the county, practically giving up his private business to take care of this phase of war work.

On April 14, 1897, in Washington, D. C., Mr. Gamble married Miss Catherine B. Hackney, who was born in Frederick County, Virginia, April 27, 1863, but was reared and educated in Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Gamble have two sons. Robert M., who was educated in the public schools of Moorefield, took the pharmacy course in the Richmond Medical College, also studied in the University of Pittsburgh and then in West Virginia University, as a volunteer for the World war service, becoming a member of the Seventy-fourth Regiment of Artillery and was in training from June to September, 1918, at Fort Monroe and then went to France. He reached Brest about October 8, and went with his command to the border of Switzerland and was in service there until the armistice. His was among the very first organizations to be returned to the United States, arriving in New York December 23, 1918. The younger son of Mr. and Mrs. Gamble, Mortimer W., Jr., is a graduate of the Moorefield High School, had military training at Marian, Alabama, and is now attending West Virginia University, preparing for the law.

The only society in which Mr. Gamble is enrolled as a member is the Presbyterian Church, of which he is an elder. During the war Mrs. Gamble took an active part in promoting the success of the Red Cross and other auxiliary organizations. The Gamble home is one of the most commodious and attractive in Moorefield, situated on a large tract of well landscaped ground in the old town.

THOMAS CUMMINGS. When Thomas Cummings, one of the substantial business men of Keyser, now profitably engaged in merchandising, was brought to West Virginia nearly sixty-seven years ago the state presented a very different appearance from what it does today. He is one of the last of those who passed through the state's great lumber-manufacturing activity, and has seen the virgin forests of white pine, poplar, spruce and cherry fall under the woodman's axe until these lands have been denuded of one of the great sources of natural wealth. He was born in England, October 8, 1855, a son of Maurice and Catherine (Condry) Cummings.

Maurice Cummings and his wife were married in Ireland. She was born in Ireland, of Irish parents, but moved to England in her girlhood. In 1857 Maurice Cummings brought his family to the United States, and made his first home at Clarksburg, West Virginia, from whence he moved to Rockford, Harrison County. Still later he went to Lewis County, West Virginia, and there he died in 1884, when eighty-four years old. His wife had died many years before, passing away January 15, 1869. Their children were as follows: James, who spent his life in Lewis County, was a mason and farmer, and during the war of the '60s served in the Union Army as a teamster. He died at Weston, and is buried near his old home at Belle Mill in Lewis County, West Virginia. Martin died in Phoenix, Arizona, and is buried close to Belle Mills in Lewis County, West Virginia. George, who also spent his life on a farm in Lewis County, died and is buried in the vicinity of his former home. Frank, who was also a farmer, lived on the lines of Lewis and Braxton counties, died and is buried at Clarksburg. Thomas was the youngest born.

But a small boy when his parents settled on Elk Creek, Rockford, Thomas Cummings was reared in that locality and the vicinity at the headwaters of the Little Kanawha River in Lewis County. His surroundings were those of farm life, and his educational advantages those of the country schools. Leaving home before he reached his majority Thomas Cummings began to be self-supporting by working on the completion of the terminal of the Western Maryland Railroad. He remained on this job for thirty days, and then went with the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad and helped to lay the track through Mountain Lake Park and Oakland Maryland. In 1873 he left railroad work for the lumber woods as a laborer, and with an axe and saw as his tool came to know all phases of lumbering from that of a common laborer to serving as superintendent of a large force of men. Beginning as an employee of the Lochiel Lumber Company at Bloomington, Maryland, he was in the service of many concerns, including the Saint Lawrence Boom & Manufacturing Company in Pocahontas County, West Virginia, Rumbarger Lumber Company at Dobbin, Grant County, West Virginia, Backwater Lumber Company at Davis, West Virginia, the Beaver Creek Lumber Company at Davis, Welch Brothers and the Otter Creek Boom & Lumber Company, both at Hambleton, West Virginia. Mr. Cummings then went with Whitmer, Lane & Company at Horton, West Virginia, leaving them to return to the Rumbarger Company at Dobbin. Following that he returned to Elkins and abandoned the mill business for that of contracting, in connection with which he furnished logs to the saw-mill owned by the Burger Lumber Company. When this contract was completed Mr. Cummings helped to organize the Coketon Lumber Company of Coketon, West Virginia, and when he terminated his connection with it went with the West Virginia Pulp & Paper Company a superintendent of the four-foot department of the plant. In 1908 he retired from the lumber industry to engage in merchandising, and has been interested in this line of business at Cass, Durbin and Keyser, coming to the county seat of Mineral County in the fall of 1920 and here opening his general store at the corner of Second and Main streets. On June 12, 1921, he opened his new place of business which he had erected, and here he is engaged in supplying the needs of a large trade.

In August, 1886, Thomas Cummings was first married, wedding Ida Hickman at Greenbank, West Virginia. She died at Horton, West Virginia. On January 4, 1904, Mr. Cummings was married second to Mrs. Rebecca (Stahl) Colcamp at Davis, West Virginia. She was born at Baffimore, Maryland, but was reared in Preston County, West Virginia. Her first husband was John Colcamp, now deceased. By his first marriage Mr. Cummings had the following children: Lodo Ethel, who lives at Cumberland and has rendered a valuable service caring for crippled soldiers; and Edna Mary, who lives at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Cummings have no children, but by her first marriage she had three children, namely: William F. Colcamp, who lives at Mountain Lake Park, Maryland; Cora, who is the wife of J. E. Rembold, of Keyser, West Virginia; and Lula May, who is the wife of C. C. Watts of Durbin, West Virginia.

Mr. Cummings is not a politician, but he has taken an intelligent interest in public matters. He first voted as a democrat, but during the first administration of Grover Cleveland became converted to republicanism, and has since been a strong tariff man and a protectionist. For several years he was a member of the City Council of Durbin, West Virginia, and was its mayor during one term, but these have been the only offices he has held. Mr. Cummings is a most remarkable man. For many years he was engaged in one of the most strenuous of occupations, and now, although nearing "three score years and ten," is carrying on a large business enterprise with the vigor of one half his age. He has never lost his grasp on events nor his keen judgment of men, and his advice is sought and followed by many of his fellow citizens.

RICHARD WILLIAM THRUSH. The Circuit Court clerk, Richard William Thrush, is one of the men of Mineral County who have made a success of everything they have undertaken, and his connection with an enterprise leads others to feel that it is worth consideration, for his good judgment and astuteness are well recognized. Mr. Thrush ings to one of the old-established families of the country, was born near Headsville, Mineral County, May 1, 1884, son of Vause R. Thrush, also a native of Headsville, whose birth occurred in January, 1848. His father was a hard Thrush. He married Fannie Rogers, and they became the parents of nine children. One of their sons, Richard, served in the war of the '60s, being killed at the battle of Cedar Creek, but Vause R. was too young to participate in the conflict. Three of his cousins were soldiers, one of whom was killed at Winchester, and the other two died in Confederate prison at Andersonville. Vause R. Thrush has always been a farmer, and has operated in the Headsville community. His only participation in politics has been that of a voter, and he casts his ballot for republican candidates.

Vause R. Thrush was married to Martha Taylor, who was born on Cabin Run, Mineral County, September 17, 1863, and died April 27, 1918. She was a daughter of John William and Sarah Ann (Cunningham) Taylor, and a granddaughter of Daniel Taylor, who came into that part of Virginia which is now Mineral County, West Virginia, at the close of the American Revolution, being given land and grant as a reward for his war service. He served as enlistments, and while he was known as "Captain" Taylor, the official records credit him with the rank of lieutenant. Mr. and Mrs. Vause R. Thrush became the parents of the following children: Richard William, whose name heads this review; and Sarah Margaret and Albert Vause, both of whom are living at Headsville.

Until he left home Richard William Thrush lived on a farm. After attending the country schools he became a student of the Keyser Preparatory School, now the Potomac State School, and completed his courses and later was a student at West Virginia University. During 1909 and 1910 he was with the Terra Alta schools, and then for the following year served as principal of the South Park School at Morgantown. While at the latter school he was elected county superintendent of schools in his home county, to succeed George S. Arnold, and took charge of the office in July, 1911.

As head of the Mineral County schools Mr. Thrush at once began to plan for better buildings and more efficient teachers, and he inaugurated club work for boys and girls. The first exhibit of this work was made at Keyser and attracted very favorable comment. The annual school rally was launched at his insistence, this custom has spread to other counties, and is continued here and is recognized as one of the factors most likely to interest the public generally in the schools. While serving as county superintendent Mr. Thrush was secretary for two years of the State Educational Association. His work as superintendent was interrupted by his army service, for he retired from it to go to the Young Men's Christian Association, and was stationed at Camp Sevier, South Carolina. He entered the service as educational secretary, but was soon placed in charge of the entertainment work, and remained at camp until after the armistice was signed, being there almost three years, as demobilization was almost completed before he left in June, 1919. Upon his return to civilian life he resumed for the summer his connection with Chautauque work, in which he had been engaged during his summer vacation for some years.

On October 1, 1919, Mr. Thrush was appointed Circuit Court clerk to succeed Joseph V. Bell, one of the well-known citizens and pioneer clerks of Mineral County, and was elected to the office on the republican ticket for a period of six years in 1920. His political training from his youth up was in republican doctrines, and he cast his first presidential vote for William Howard Taft in 1908. Mr. Thrush was named to succeed himself without opposition at the primaries, and was without a democratic competitor at the general election in 1920.

Mr. Thrush was made a Mason in Keyser by Davis Lodge No. 51 in 1911, and he is now senior warden of his lodge. He is also a member of the Chapter and Commandery of the Order of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, at Wheeling, West Virginia. For some years he has belonged to the Knights of Pythias. A member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Mr. Thrush has always taken an active part in the work of the local congregation and is now a member of its board of stewards. He has rendered other public service as secretary of the Upper Potomac Fair Association during the past two years, which organization was organized and has been sustained as a stimulus to education and agriculture and the mechanical arts. He is still chairman of the Mineral County Chapter of the Red Cross, and is secretary of the Keyser Rotary Club. It would not be easy to overestimate the influence of a man like Mr. Thrush upon his community. His scholarly attainments and widely-diffused knowledge, his high sense of civic responsibility and his efficiency all are directed toward raising the moral standard and furthering the intellectual development of his home city and county, and his efforts are receiving the appreciation they deserve. Mr. Thrush is not married.

FAIRFAX STUART LANDSTREET, JR. Among the successful coal operators of the younger generation whose activities are being carried on in Mingo County, one who has met with prosperity in the Pigeon Creek District is Fairfax Stuart Landstreet, Jr., of the Landstreet-Downey Coal Company, whose property is located about one and one-half miles above Burch Post Office. He is of Virginia and Dutch descent, and was born June 5, 1895, at Davis, West Virginia, his parents being F. S. and May (Davis) Landstreet.

F. S. Landstreet was born in Virginia and was a coal operator with the Davis interests, among the big mine owners of West Virginia. Mr. Landstreet is now located at New York City, where he is president of the Belgian-American Coke Oven Corporation of New York, a by-product company. Formerly Mr. Landstreet was vice president of the Consolidation Coal Company for a number of years. The education of Fairfax Stuart Landstreet, Jr., was acquired in the graded schools of New York City, a high school at Pottstown, Pennsylvania, and at Yale, from which latter institution he was graduated with the class of 1917, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Arts. On May 15, 1917, he enlisted in the regular United States Army and received the rank of second lieutenant. He went to Fort Meyer, Washington, D. C., where he remained three months, being assigned to the Twelfth Field Artillery, with which he went overseas from Hoboken in January, 1918. Landing at Liverpool, he spent about a week in England and then crossed the English Channel to La Havre, France, whence he went to the Valdehou, France, Training Camp. On March 18 he was sent to a quiet sector on the Verdun front, where he spent six weeks, his regiment then "hiking" across France in time to support the United States Marines in the famous engagement of Belleau Woods. Mr. Landstreet, still with the Regular Twelfth U. S. Artillery, then moved to Soissons, where on July 18 he took part in the engagement, and on August 20 was ordered to the United States as an instructor, arriving on September 5 of that year. Going to Camp Meade, Maryland, he was commissioned a captain in the Thirty-first Artillery, and continued to hold that rank until the close of the war, resigning his commission December 5, 1918. In February, 1919, Mr. Landstreet came to West Virginia and went to work for the Island Creek Coal Company, in May, 1920, transferred his services to the Mallory Coal Company of Logan Field, and in December, 1921, came to the Pigeon Creek District and began the work of opening up the properties of the Landstreet-Downey Coal Company. These properties are owned by the Davis interests, and are being operated in splendid style by Mr. Landstreet and his cousin, George Faber Downey. Mr. Landstreet is a member of the Episcopal Church, and as a fraternalist holds membership in the Zeta Psi College fraternity. While he takes a good citizen's interest in local affairs, he has been too busily engaged with his business operations to enter politics as an active figure. He is widely popular, both with his associates and the men in his employ. He married March 29, 1921, Eleanor A. Hoover, daughter of William D. Hoover, of Washington, D. C., the president of National Savings & Trust Company.

GEORGE FABER DOWNEY, JR., junior member of the Landstreet-Downey Coal Company of Burch, West Virginia, is essentially one of the younger men of action of the Pigeon Creek District, who have taken advantage of the opportunities for advancement to be found in this community by men of action and vim. He was born November 14, 1896, in New York City, and comes of Irish stock, his mother's people being all from West Virginia and his father's family being of Maryland and Pennsylvania origin. His paternal grandfather was a major in the United States Army. Gen. George F. Downey, the father of George Faber Downey, Jr., was born at an army post in Arizona during the Indian wars period on the western plains, and on arriving at man's estate he enlisted as a soldier. He took part in the Spanish-American war, was in Cuba during the period of pacification and readjustment, later had added experience in the Philippine Islands, and was through all the World War in France as one of the generals in charge of the Quartermaster's Department, being at present in that department at Washington, D. C.

George Faber Downey, Jr., attended school at Washington, D. C., and was a high school student at the High Hill School, Pottstown, Pennsylvania. Finally he entered Yale, in which institution of advanced learning he was a member of the graduating class of 1918, but left college to join the Twelfth United States Regular Artillery as second lieutenant, with which he established an excellent record. He was a first lieutenant at Belleau Woods, and in August, 1918, was commissioned captain and returned to the United States as an instructor, a capacity in which he acted at Camp Meade until the close of the war. He resigned his commission in December, 1918, and secured employment with the Guarantee Trust Company of New York City as a runner. Later he was in the foreign exchange department of the same company, but after eight months left his position and came to Holden, West Virginia, where he was with the Island Creek Coal Company for about two and one-quarter years. At that time he joined Mr. Landstreet and came to the Pigeon Creek District, where he began the work of opening up the properties of the Landstreet-Downey Coal Company.

Like his partner, Mr. Downey is a young man of much energy and perseverance. He belongs to the Zeta Psi college fraternity and is a member of the Episcopal Church. He married, June 1, 1922, Katherine Van Ingen, daughter of Mrs. Edward Van Ingen of New York City.

MANASSEH DASHER. The South Branch Valley National Bank of Moorefield, which Manasseh Dasher has served faithfully for a quarter of a century and of which he is cashier, is one of the oldest and most substantial banking houses in this section of the state.

It was founded in 1883 by J. William Gilkeson, A. M. Inskeep, A. Sommerville and George Mathias. The first president of the bank was A. Sommerville, and his successors were Garrett Cunningham, A. M. Inskeep, Jesse Fisher, Joseph D. Heiskell and Mr. M. S. Henkel is now president. The bank has had only two cashiers in the forty years of its existence, the first being J. William Gilkeson, and his successor is Mr. Dasher. The board of directors at present are M. S. Henkel, C. B. Welton, G. W. McCauley, George W. Miley, George W. Fisher, George T. Williams and P. W. Inskeep. The bank's original capital was $55,000, it is now $100,000, the surplus and undivided profits are $39,000, and the average deposits are $400,000. The prosperity of the bank and its able management is evidenced by the fact that it has paid its stockholders dividends of eight and ten per cent annually since it found- ing.

Mr. Dasher, the cashier, has spent all his life in Hardy County. He was born September 6, 1876, at Dasher's Mill, a locality now known as Milam. The Dashers were German pioneers of Pennsylvania, and it was his great-grandfather who came from Pennsylvania to Western Virginia. His grandfather, Noah Dasher, was born in the Milam locality of Hardy County, spent his life on the farm, acquired valuable land holdings, and died in 1906, when almost four score years of age. He was active in politics only to the extent of casting a democratic vote. He married Martha Dasher, who died in 1896, and their children were: Iss V. S.; Carrie A., who married George S. Cowger; Keren, who married Manasseh Cowger; Mary E. L., who became Mrs. James M. Davis; and N. George, who married Mim A. Simon and is still farming the old homestead.

Isaac V. S. Dasher, father of the Moorefield bank spent his life on a farm and died at Milam in April, 1881 at the age of forty-eight. He married Hannah M. Cowg who is now the widow of George W. Trumbo. Her parents were Jesse and Polly A. (Keister) Cowger. Jesse Cowg owned a large farm at Fort Seybert in Pendleton County and had several sons in the Confederate Army. The children of Isaac V. S. Dasher were: Martha A. L., who first husband was P. R. Dasher, and who is now the wife of James W. Dove, of Peru, Hardy County; Manasseh the next in age; Virgie D. is the wife of M. C. Dasher, Peru, Hardy County; Jesse V. lives at Oakland, California and Gleason R. is a resident of Fort Seybert, West Virginia.

Manasseh Dasher spent the first seventeen years of his life on his grandfather's farm at Milam, and his early training gave him a practical knowledge of the agricultural vocation. He attended the country schools, taught for five years in his home district, left that occupation to become bookkeeper in a store in Pendleton County, and from there came to Moorefield to work in the store of J. W. Gilkeson & Company, but left that service to become, in 1896, bookkeeper and clerk in the South Branch Valley National Bank. Since then his service has been continuous with this institution, and as the official in closest contact with the bank clientele he has shared in the credit for the prosperity of the bank. In 1910 he was made assistant cashier and in 1915 was promoted to cashier, to succeed J. William Gilkeson.

Mr. Dasher helped promote one of the commercial changes of this locality. In the line of public service he was a member of the Moorefield Council several years, an recorder, and is now continuing a number of years' service as a member of the board of education. He is a democrat but has seldom found time to participate in partisan politics. Mr. Dasher is a steward of the Moorefield Methodist Church, has also been a trustee and superintendent of the Sunday school and has represented the church in several annual conferences. He is affiliated with the Mason Lodge. During the war he used his utmost influence as banker to promote the sale of Government securities, at still continues as one of the county executive committee and treasurer of the Red Cross Chapter.

At Moorefield, June 19, 1899, Mr. Dasher married Miss Daisy L. Rogers, daughter of John H. and Hannah L. (Thompson) Rogers. Her father was born on Cabin Run in Mineral County, West Virginia, spent part of his life as a farmer, later became a merchant and finally a traveling salesman, and is now living at Moorefield. The Rogers children were: Wardneigh T., of Bird City, Kansas; Eva, wife of R. L. Kneel of Moorefield; Clara, wife of Brans Snyder, of Wardensville, West Virginia; Florence G., who married C. E. Bonney, of Moorefield; William T., who was a coal miner, and died as a result of an accident at E. Garden; Mrs. Dasher; and Miss Jemimah L., of Moorefield.

Mrs. Dasher was born June 19, 1877, and she died at Cumberland June 1, 1918, after she and Mr. Dasher had been married nearly nineteen years. The following children survive her: William C., a student in West Virginia University; Omar Lee, student in a music school at Dayton, Virginia; while the younger children are Margaret I. Ruby L., Mary E., Dalton D., Wayne Gilkeson and Charles Edward.

KARL BYRON KYLE entered upon the work of his profession as a lawyer with every advantage that good birth, rearing and scholastic training could bestow. He has a ready made a favorable reputation for himself in his native city of Clarksburg, where he is a junior member of the well known law firm of Carter & Sheets.

He was born in Clarksburg, May 29, 1897, son of Aquil T. and Mollie (Boyles) Kyle. His parents represented the and honored names of Harrison County. His father was born and reared in the county, for many years was engaged in farming and still owns a farm, but for the past many years has been a letter carrier with the Clarksburg postoffice. He and his good wife reared eight children. Earl B. Kyle graduated from the Clarksburg High School and then entered West Virginia University at Morgantown, taking one year of academic work and completed his four years' course in law and received his degree in 1920. He was then admitted to the bar and residing at Clarksburg became associated with the well known law firm of Carter & Sheets. He is a member of the Harrison County and State Bar associations, in politics is a Republican, and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Kyle was active in college fraternities at the university and has reached the eighteenth degree in Scottish Rite Masonry.

LENN F. WILLIAMS. One of the best known citizens of Clarksburg, West Virginia, and one who, in many ways, has justified the high regard in which he is held, is Capt. Lenn F. Williams, able lawyer, overseas veteran officer of the World War, member of the American Legion, and police judge presiding at Clarksburg.

Captain Williams is a native of West Virginia, and was born at Bristol, Harrison County, June 2, 1892. He is a son of Thompson H. and Ollie E. (Conaway) Williams, both of whom were born in Ten Mile District, Harrison County, and now reside at Clarksburg, in which city Mr. Williams is interested in the real estate business. Captain Williams has one sister, Merle, who is the wife of Andrew Johnston, Jr., of Weston, West Virginia. His paternal grandparents, William J. and Elizabeth (Riley) Williams, of Harrison County, but his maternal grandparents, Joshua B. and Elizabeth (Amos) Conaway, were born in Marion County, West Virginia.

When he was ten years old, the parents of Captain Williams came to Clarksburg and he attended the public schools, in 1909 being graduated creditably from the high school, following which he had a year of training and tuition at the notable hoary old institution dear to the memory of thousands of young men in their day, St. John's College, at Annapolis, Maryland. He then spent three years in the study of the law at the West Virginia University at Morgantown, receiving his degree of LL. B. in 1913. In the same year he was admitted to the bar, one of its youngest members in Harrison County, and immediately entered into practice at Clarksburg and soon won a recognized place at the bar.

For some years before the great calamity of war cast its shadow over his beloved country, Mr. Williams had been a member of the West Virginia National Guard, and was captain of his company in the First Regiment when, on April 31, 1917, he entered the service of the United States. He was sent first to the camp of the Thirty-eighth Division, Hattiesburg, Mississippi, retaining his rank, and on June 1918, accompanied this division overseas, it being utilized as a replacement troop in the Fourth Regulars. He was made captain of Company C, Twelfth Machine-gun Battalion, and served as such during the furious battle of St. Mihiel and the never to be forgotten struggle in Argonne Forest. Following the signing of the armistice with the enemy, he was detailed to serve in the army of occupation in Germany until he received his welcome order home, where he was honorably discharged, with the rank of captain, on August 16, 1919. Faithful in the performance of every military duty, Captain Williams did his share in earning the world's tribute to the splendid courage and noble qualities of the flower of American youth. Upon his return to Clarksburg, he quietly resumed the practice of his profession and since then has been associated with the well known law firm of Carter & Sheets. On May 1, 1921, he was appointed police judge at Clarksburg, an appointment giving general satisfaction, for it is known that Judge Williams has not only intelligent opinions on all matters that can be brought within his jurisdiction, but that no other than a rigid sense of justice can influence him in enforcing them.

In 1913 Mr. Williams was married to Miss Elizabeth

Heiskell, a daughter of N. C. Heiskell, of Morgantown, West Virginia, and they have one son, Neill Thompson Williams.

In political affiliation, Captain Williams is a sturdy supporter of the democratic party, reared in this faith as also in the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is a member of the Harrison County Bar Association, of which he is treasurer, and belongs also to the West Virginia State Bar Association. He is a Thirty-second Degree Mason and a Shriner, a member of the Knights of Pythias and is affiliated with other organizations that pleasantly connect him with social community life.

ORVILLE L. McDONALD. To come into a field already crowded with competitors, a professional man must possess unusual qualities to be able to reach a foremost place in their ranks and in a comparatively short space of time, and this is just what Orville L. McDonald has done since coming to Clarksburg, where he is recognized as an able attorney and is a member of the well known law firm of Strother & McDonald, general practitioners, with offices in the Union National Bank Building.

Mr. McDonald was born on a farm in Harrison County, West Virginia, December 7, 1885, and is a son of Mordecai Smith and Emma Virginia (Roe) McDonald, and a grandson of James McDonald. For generations back the name McDonald has been known and respected in Harrison County, to which its earliest American members came from Scotland. Mordecai Smith McDonald followed an agricultural life and died on his farm in Harrison County at the age of sixty-six years. He married Emma Virginia Roe, who was born in Taylor County, West Virginia, and still survives, and as was her husband, is a faithful member of the Baptist Church. They had two sons: Orville L. and Carl Smith.

Orville L. McDonald attended the public schools of Harrison County, graduating from the Bridgeport High School in 1907. He later entered the preparatory school at Keyeser, now the Potomac State School, where he completed the academic and scientific courses, and later entered West Virginia University. Following this he entered Washington and Lee University, where he completed a full course in law and was graduated with his degree of LL. B. in 1912. In the same year he was admitted to the bar and immediately entered into practice at Clarksburg in association with Ray L. Strother. They are practicing under the firm style of Strother & McDonald. During his nine years at the bar, Mr. McDonald has given a good account of himself and has been professionally and successfully connected with some of the most important litigation coming before the Harrison County courts within this period.

Mr. McDonald was married in 1916, to Miss Nellie W. Reese, who was born in Taylor County, West Virginia, and they have one son, Robert Orville McDonald. Mr. McDonald was reared by a Christian mother in the faith of the Baptist Church and has never wavered from his early teaching, and largely dispenses his charities through this worthy medium. In his political attitude he is a democrat, a loyal party man but no seeker for public office. He belongs to the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is a Knight Templar Mason and a Shriner. He is interested in all that pertains to the welfare of Clarksburg and both professionally and personally is held in high esteem in this city.

BIAGIO MERENDINO. Deservedly prominent among the representative citizens of Clarksburg, is Biagio Merendino, a leading member of the Harrison County bar, and Spanish Consul for West Virginia, as well as Royal Consular Agent of Italy, for this state. For sixteen years Mr. Merendino has been a citizen of the United States, but he is a native of Italy, a country that has long been associated with America in the bonds of friendly affection.

Biagio Merendino was born at Corleone, Italy, May 5, 1877, the second of three sons born to Vincent and Frances (Colletti) Merendino. His older brother, Anthony, is an architect residing at Mount Vernon, New York, and his younger brother, Joseph, is a practicing physician in New York City.

The late Vincent Merendino, in the boyhood of his son Biagio, was an extensive grower of oranges and lemons, owning vast plantations in Italy and doing an extensive exporting business. He was a man of wealth and influence second to none in his province and had every reason to believe that his loyalty and good intentions were understood by those in authority. But political changes came about in Italy as elsewhere, and Mr. Merendino found himself ruined in business and despoiled of his honestly earned wealth, and these unhappy conditions made it easier for him to seek a home with his family in another country, and in 1898 they came to the United States. During the latter part of his life he resided at Mount Vernon, New York, and there his death occurred in 1917, at the age of seventy-two years. His widow survives and resides at Clarksburg, West Virginia.

Biagio Merendino enjoyed both educational and social advantages in his youth in his native land. He had private tutors in boyhood and under their instruction was prepared for his seminary course at Montecore, following which he entered upon the study of medicine at Palermo, but when his family came to the United States he accompanied them, and shortly afterward was graduated at the New York Institute of Pharmacy, and then entered into the business world as a drug clerk, not having given up at that time, however, his hope of becoming a physician. Some time later Mr. Merendino became adjuster of claims, in New York City, for the Union Casualty Company, a business connection that involved many legal issues and led to his taking up the study of law, in which he became so interested that he finally put aside his medical hopes and decided to prepare himself for the practice of law, discovering latent talents in this direction. He completed his law course in Cumberland University, at Lebanon, Tennessee, in 1912 receiving his degree of LL. B.

Mr. Merendino returned then to New York City, where he occupied himself for a time in clerical work in an abstract department and other minor law business, it not being very easy then, as now, to secure a firm footing without capital and influence. Such being the case he worked too hard, even to the point of a breakdown in his health, but he was preserved from that calamity by one of those fortunate incidental occurrences that have changed many a man's whole career.

In the course of his legal efforts, Mr. Merendino had become chief counselor for the Richland Improvement Company which had interests to be financed at Clarksburg, West Virginia, and in 1913, mainly as a matter of relaxation, he consented to accompany the company's representative to Clarksburg to look the field over. It was just at this time that an Italian was being held in that city on a charge of murder, and on account of his nationality, Mr. Merendino was employed to defend the unfortunate man. To this accidental incident the good people of Clarksburg owe the locating here of one of their ablest lawyers and most highly esteemed citizens. From the first he has enjoyed a large practice and for several years past has been associated with W. Frank Stout, under the firm name of Merendino & Stout.

In 1904 Mr. Merendino was married to Miss Cira Bivona, a native of Italy, and they have five children. Mr. Merendino is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Politically he is a republican and fraternally an Elk. Since 1916 he has filled his consular offices with thorough efficiency.

HOMER STROSNIDER. That what is worth doing at all is worth doing well may be one of the old but timely axioms that occur to Homer Strosnider, as he quietly and successfully performs his manifold duties as a prominent lawyer, public official and trustworthy private citizen of Clarksburg, in which city his thorough efficiency and public usefulness have long been recognized.

Mr. Strosnider was born at Waynesburg, in Greene County, Pennsylvania, January 28, 1875, and is a son of Rezin and Sarah (Lemley) Strosnider, both of whom were born in Pennsylvania, the father being of German and the mother of English ancestry. When Mr. Strosnider was three years old his parents removed from Pennsylvania to West Virginia, settling first in Ritchie County but moving later into Doddridge County. There he spent his boyhood, attending the public schools at Center Point and assisting his father until he was ready to enter the State Normal School at Fairmont. Subsequently he entered the University of West Virginia at Morgantown. He then took a two-year course in law in university, when he took his diploma without a degree, a step to continue his law studies in Yale University.

Very often in life a chance incident changes its course, and this change in Mr. Strosnider's plans for the future, came about through his coming to Clarksburg about this time, to make a short visit. It was while here that Hon. Millard Snider became interested in him and offered to take him to his law office, at Clarksburg, Mr. Strosnider eagerly accepting this unlooked for professional opportunity. He was admitted to the bar in 1907 and for two years was associated with Mr. Snider, since which time he has carried on an individual general practice. He was admitted to practice before the United States Supreme Court December 7, 1910. He has made an honorable record and is a member of the Harrison County as well as the West Virginia State I. O. O. F. associations.

In 1900 Mr. Strosnider was married to Miss Della K. who was born in Doddridge County, West Virginia, and they have two daughters and one son: Mabel, Luther and M. Jorie Jean.

In political life Mr. Strosnider is a democrat and quite active in the councils of his party, his sound judgment and thorough understanding of the complex public problems of the day rendering his advice of the utmost importance. For three years Mr. Strosnider has been city solicitor of Clarksburg and as city law officer has performed his duties in a manner that has brought forth the highest praise.

ISADORE COHEN, who is one of the representative young business men of the City of Bluefield, where he conducts well equipped jewelry establishment, was born in Russia May 11, 1884, and is a son of Rabbi S. A. and Mel (Katz) Cohen. The father was graduated in a leading Jewish theological school, and was in charge of a Jewish congregation in Russia until 1905, when, at the age of seventy-one years, he came to the United States, some of his children having previously established their homes in this country—located respectively in Washington, D. C., Baltimore, Maryland, the State of Georgia and in Bluefield, West Virginia.

Reared in a home of intellectual and cultural influence Isadore Cohen attended school in the City of Riga, Russia, and at the age of twenty years he graduated from the University of Kiev. In 1905 he came with his venerated father to America and established his residence at Bluefield, West Virginia, where he entered a private school for the purpose of learning the English language, which he could not speak at that time. So effectively did he study that he now speaks the language with fluency and with no foreign accent, besides being able to read and write with the high standard of efficiency that his previous liberal education has made possible. While at the University of Kiev he studied dentistry, but he has never entered the practice of the same. After attending private school at Bluefield Mr. Cohen here engaged in the cigar business in 1907, with one stand in the Altamont Hotel, and later another at the Matz Hotel, his original capitalistic investment having been $300. In 1912 he opened his jewelry store, and he has built up a most prosperous enterprise based alike on his personal popularity and the efficient service rendered to an appreciative trade. From 1916 to 1921 Mr. Cohen was a member of the Board of Directors of the Bluefield Chamber of Commerce. He is one of the loyal, liberal and public-spirited citizens of the Mercer County metropolis. During the World War period he was a member of the local organization of the National Council of Defense, a member of the fuel administration of Mercer County and the Jewish Welfare Board, and chairman of the local committee of the American Jewish Relief Commission, the committee of this body having raised at Bluefield the sum of $25,000 for relief work in Europe. Mr. Cohen is on the Executive Board of the Boys Club of Bluefield, West Virginia, and through the efforts of Rabbi S. H. Mable, a clergyman of the Baptist Church, at those of Mr. Cohen was established the first public play and at Bluefield. Mr. Cohen is deeply appreciative of African institutions and advantages, and his loyalty is expressed in service in behalf of communal welfare. He is a charter member of the Rotary Club in his home city, is affiliated with Bluefield Lodge No. 85, F. and A. M., Blue Lodge of Perfection No. 8, West Virginia Consistory (Wheeling, No. 1, and Beni-Kedem Temple, A. A. O. U. S., of Charleston, West Virginia). He and his wife are ardent members of the Jewish congregation at Bluefield, and are popular in social circles of the community.

In 1910 Mr. Cohen wedded Miss Flora Charlotte Greenblatt, daughter of Solomon Greenspan, and the two children of this union are Helen and Emanuel B.

FRED LAWRENCE SHINN. Public preferment does not come to a man undeserved, and a city like Clarksburg, West Virginia, with its continuous important municipal problems, has been exceedingly alert as to the qualifications of a personal standing of those who have been chosen for the responsibilities of public office. A very important part in the handling of city affairs is that played by the city attorney, and in Fred Lawrence Shinn, Clarksburg has a competent, discriminating lawyer and a citizen of high character.

Mr. Shinn was born on a farm in Harrison County, West Virginia, May 23, 1881, a member of one of the oldest and well-known families in this section of the state. His parents were Joseph M. and Ella (Short) Shinn, his grandfather was Abel Shinn and his great-grandfather was Benjamin Shinn. In the main it was an agricultural family, and during the latter half of his life, Joseph M. Shinn followed agricultural pursuits, although earlier he engaged in real estate and insurance business. His death occurred in 1898, at the age of fifty-two years, his widow surviving till 1919, passing away when sixty-four years old.

An only child, Fred L. Shinn lived on the farm until he was sixteen years old, in the meanwhile having completed the public-school course. He then spent some time as a student in the State Normal School at Fairmont, and later in the preparatory school department of the West Virginia University at Morgantown, in which institution he completed his course in law in 1906. Although he was admitted to the bar in the same year, he did not begin the practice of law until 1908, since which time he has advanced steadily in his profession, through merit winning leading position as a lawyer and the respect and confidence of his professional brethren. In the above interval, Mr. Shinn devoted himself to newspaper work, for 1½ years being connected with the Clarksburg Daily News, and during that time gave evidence of versatile talent that, if cultivated, make him known in journalism as well as in the law.

In 1913 Mr. Shinn was married to Miss Ruth Hyde, a daughter of the late Hon. H. C. Hyde of Kingwood, West Virginia, who was a prominent attorney and author of the Digest, of West Virginia Supreme Court Reports. They maintain their hospitable home at Clarksburg. Mr. Shinn is a member of the Presbyterian Church. In political life Mr. Shinn is a democrat and an influential member of his party in Harrison County, for some years serving as secretary and at times as chairman of the Harrison County democratic executive committee. In 1921 he was appointed city attorney of Clarksburg, and since then has devoted a large part of his time to the law business of the city. He is a member of the order of Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, being past chancellor commander of Clarksburg lodge No. 39, of which lodge he has been a trustee for several years. Mr. Shinn's offices are in the Union Bank building, Clarksburg.

W. FRANK STOUT. An old family name in Harrison County, West Virginia, honorably mentioned in its annals, and through generations back to the present day justifying the esteem in which it has been so long held, that of Stout and a representative member of this old family is found in W. Frank Stout, of Clarksburg.

W. Frank Stout was born on his father's farm near Bridgeport, Harrison County, West Virginia, May 1, 1867, and is a son of Lemuel E. and Eleanor J. (Harter) Stout, and a grandson of Benjamin and Lovey (Reynolds) Stout. The grandfather was born in Harrison County, Virginia, January 25, 1783, in the very shadow of Revolutionary war days. He developed into a man of local importance and served as high sheriff of Harrison County. His wife, Lovey Reynolds, was born July 10, 1796, and they had the following children: John R., Harriet, Thomas Payne, Kitty Jane, James P., Rheuhanna, Edward, Lemuel E., Benjamin B., Lovey Ann, Porter, Caroline and Charles.

Lemuel E. Stout was born in Harrison County, Virginia, February 17, 1829, and died in October, 1915. During his younger years he engaged in business at Bridgeport as a blacksmith, and during a part of the war between the states, served in the Union army as an expert at this trade. He was honorably discharged and in 1866 retired to his farm in the vicinity of Bridgeport, and devoted himself to agricultural pursuits until within fifteen years of his death. He was an advocate of temperance all his life and after the organization of the prohibition party, was ardent in its support. He belonged to the Masons and the Odd Fellows, and both he and his wife were faithful members and liberal supporters of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the church edifice at Bridgeport being known for years as the Lemuel E. Stout Memorial Chapel. He married Eleanor J. Harter, who was born in Harrison County, November 16, 1832, and died May 27, 1890, and they became the parents of the following children: Charles Alonzo, Benjamin Filmore, George Harter, Elsworth K., Ella Myrtle, W. Frank and Lillian Estella, all of whom survived to maturity except Elsworth K., who died in infancy.

W. Frank Stout was reared on the home farm, attended the public schools of Bridgeport and the John Lowe High School. He spent three years as an educator in his native county, teaching both before and after graduation from the State Normal School at Fairmont, class of 1891. In 1893 he entered the West Virginia University at Morgantown, where he was a student for four years, receiving in 1897 his degree of Bachelor of Arts in Lege, was admitted to the bar in June of that year. He located at Clarksburg in 1897, where he has practiced his profession.

While at the university Mr. Stout had the distinction of being chosen the first representative from the Young Men's Christian Association of the West Virginia University to attend the World's Students' Conference of the Young Men's Christian Association, conducted by Dwight L. Moody, at Northfield, Massachusetts.

In 1900 Mr. Stout was appointed referee in bankruptcy, by Hon. John J. Jackson, United States District Court judge, was twice reappointed by the same judge, and three times by his successor on the bench, Hon. Alston G. Dayton. Hon. C. A. Woods reappointed him during the vacancy of the judgeship. Mr. Stout tendered his resignation but was retained by Judge Baker until July 13, 1921. Mr. Stout had served twenty-one years in this important office, his district in the beginning including Harrison County only, but later being enlarged until at the close of his long period of service, he had jurisdiction over five counties. Mr. Stout is a director in the Clarksburg Trust Company, and treasurer and general manager of the Stout & Alexander Real Estate Company.

On October 25, 1900, Mr. Stout was married to Mrs. Adah Vasear (Alexander) David, who is a daughter of John I. and Ingaby Alexander, of Clarksburg, the former of whom was prominent in politics and served as assessor and also as sheriff of Harrison County. Mr. and Mrs. Stout have had two children: Alexander, who was born November 27, 1902; and Eleanor, who was born January 31, 1908, and died in December of the same year. Mr. Stout and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and he is a member of the official board of the First Church at Clarksburg.

In political life Mr. Stout has always been identified with the republican party, conscientiously advocating its principles, and in many campaigns doing yeoman work for his party as a public speaker. Social by nature, he belongs to various clubs and for many years has had membership in such representative fraternal organizations as the Masons, the Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Elks. In 1912-13 he was grand chancellor of the West Virginia Grand Lodge of Knights of Pythias; was supreme representative at the Portland, Oregon, convention in 1916; at Detroit in 1918, and at Minneapolis in 1920. While at the West Virginia University he was a member of the Kappa Alpha fraternity, and his son, Alexander Stout, now in the university, bears the distinction of being the first son of a member of the fraternity to be initiated into its mysteries.

EDMUND F. GARRETT. The bar at Clarksburg is very generally recognized as one of the ablest in West Virginia, made up as it is of men of education, experience and culture, and of this rather notable body none stand higher in public esteem than Edmund F. Garrett, an honorable, trustworthy attorney and leading citizen. His versatility of talent has made him conspicuous in two professions, the church and the law, and in this connection it may be a matter to be thought over whether, in the broad conception of human rights, needs and responsibility, there lies concealed a wide difference of teaching and exposition between the two.

Edmund F. Garrett was born in Doddridge County, not far from Salem, West Virginia, March 7, 1872, a son of Elisha D. and Mary (Smith) Garrett, natives of Doddridge and Harrison counties respectively. The paternal grandfather, Addison P. Garrett, was born in Harrison County and was a son of Jesse Garrett, a native of Virginia who established the family in what is now West Virginia. His father, William Garrett, was a native of New Jersey and a Revolutionary soldier. The progenitor of the Garrett family in America was of Irish lineage. The parents of Mr. Garrett now live retired near Salem, West Virginia, and some of their family of eight children live in the same neighborhood. They are faithful members of the Baptist Church.

Edmund F. Garrett was educated in the public schools, Salem College, Broadus Institute and Richmond College and the University of Chicago. In 1902 he completed a course in theology at Crozier Theological Seminary, Chester, Pennsylvania, following which, for 4½ years he was pastor of the First Baptist Church at Bordentown, New Jersey, and from the fall of 1906 to March, 1909, was pastor of the First Baptist Church at New Brunswick, New Jersey.

Mr. Garrett returned then to West Virginia, and instead of accepting another exhausting pastorate, took up the study of law for one year at the University of West Virginia and pursued it so diligently that in June, 1910, he was admitted to the bar and since then has been in active practice at Clarksburg. His success in his profession, which has exceeded the ordinary, has been due to his well poised judgment and natural ability, together with his absolute dependability and sense of fairness. In political sentiment he is a democrat, as is his father, but he has never consented to accept a political office. As a private citizen, however, he exerts much influence in civic affairs in regard to furthering the general welfare, and during the World war was active in all patriotic movements and served as chairman of the Harrison County draft board. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity.

Mr. Garrett was married September 9, 1896, to Miss Fannie D. Late, who is a daughter of Dr. William M. Late, of Bridgeport, West Virginia, and they have two children: Harold M. and Ella Late Garrett.

HAROLD M. GARRETT was born at Bridgeport, West Virginia, September 27, 1897, and is liberally educated. From the West Virginia University he received his A. B. degree in 1918, and in June of that year volunteered for service in the World war. After acceptance by the Government he was sent for military training to Fortress Monroe, and was honorably discharged on December 6, 1918, with the rank of sergeant major. In June, 1920, he secured his LL. B. degree from the university, in July was admitted to the bar and is now associated with his father in the practice of law. He is a member of the American Legion.

THOMAS L. DUNN is president of the Dunn Woole Company and one of Martinsburg's most substantial citizens. It seldom happens that the life story of an individual exhibits more of the obstacles in the path of success than that of Mr. Dunn. The development of his own business character through experience and the tenacity of his purpose made him a lesson of inspiration.

Mr. Dunn was born in Frederick County, Virginia, and his father, James H. Dunn, in the same locality. His father was a custom shoemaker during his active life and died at the age of seventy. He married Margaret Newcomb, who was born in the southern part of Frederick County, and died at the age of fifty-six.

Thomas L. Dunn was one of eight children, grew up in a home of very simple comforts, and had only the advantages of winter terms of school in the country. His program of help and work began at the age of nine, and from then until he was fifteen he worked for board and clothes on a farm. He then began and served a three years apprenticeship at the trade of picking, carding, spinning and weaving in a small mill in Frederick County. After spending three years there he accepted a position in the carding and spinning department of the Morga Mill on Red Bud Creek near Winchester, Virginia. A year and a half later he became foreman of the carding and spinning department in the Brucetown Mill, eight miles north of Winchester. After two years he accepted a position with his first employer, who at this time was general manager of the Red Bud Mill, with the promise that after one year he was to have the contract to do all the picking, carding and spinning at a price per pound to be agreed upon, furnishing his own help. In pursuance of the contract he procured the help necessary, and when two years later the proprietor died he remained with the lease of the mill for three years longer. The firm then leased a larger mill in Fredericksburg, and Mr. Dunn took charge of its carding and spinning department.

After two years there Mr. Dunn and Meredith Tyle leased a small mill at Buckland in Fauquier County, West Virginia. In the absence of capital to conduct the operations they arranged with C. A. Wyatt & Company of New York to furnish the raw material and take all the manufactured goods at a fixed price per yard. Under this arrangement the mill was operated successfully for nine months, until the water power ceased and a steam power had to be introduced to use up the raw material. Later Mr. Dunn leased the Brucetown Mill, and with capital furnished by the Wyatt Company additional machinery was installed. It was to be known as the Brucetown Woolen Company, T. L. Dunn, manager. At that time Mr. Wyatt took a partner in the milling business, Mr. W. H. Crawford. They offered Mr. Dunn an interest in the business, but he did not have the required capital and had not yet learned the art of borrowing. Therefore, he arranged for a fixed salary and a percentage of the profits. After two years of successful operation T. L. Wyatt & Company failed in their New York business, and the Brucetown Mill was drawn into litigation. With the aid of one of Virginia's ablest lawyers, Major Conrad, later attorney general of the state, Mr. Dunn had the attachment dissolved, but later, by an order of the court a bill of review was granted, which necessitated a receiver to be appointed, and Mr. Dunn was employed to run the mill and use up all the raw material. After three months Mr. Crawford again leased the mill and made arrangements with Mr. Dunn to operate it. Then followed another two years of successful operation. That mill no longer having the capacity equal to the demand, a search for additional facilities brought Mr. Dunn to Martinsburg, where with the assistance of a few citizens the old skating rink at the corner of South Raleigh and Skat Streets was acquired, steam power installed, and it was equipped with four looms. The Brucetown Mill was also continued for two years. The Martinsburg plant was increased until it had eleven looms, two spinning machines, two sets of cards and was employing forty people.

This stage in his career came to an end in 1894. The

made by him was no longer salable on account of introduction of a new line known as the Reading line. Mr. Dunn in this emergency consulted Mr. Crawford but the latter had been unfortunate in some of his business ventures and had mortgaged the mill and exhausted his credit. Mr. Crawford, therefore, applied to the Building & Loan Association and secured promise of a loan for making the necessary changes in machinery and equipment to produce the hairline fabric. A few days later the Building & Loan Association notified Mr. Crawford that they had reconsidered their proposition. Mr. Dunn then went before them and said that Mr. Crawford would surely fail unless the loan was made, and by talking he convinced the board of the merits of the proposed new industry. One of the successful and conservative business men on the board, Mr. J. W. Bishop, asserted that Martinsburg could not afford to lose the industry and expressed his entire confidence in Mr. Dunn's ability. As a result the loan was made, the needed machinery put in and the new fabric found a ready sale on the market. Mr. Dunn and a half later Mr. Crawford, on coming to Martinsburg, had the satisfaction of burning the mortgage papers on the plant. A new building was erected, new machinery installed, and the plant was soon operating forty looms, employing seventy-five persons on the pay-roll.

In the meantime Mr. Dunn's reputation as an expert in the technical processes of weaving had spread abroad, and he had been approached by some business men of Cincinnati, Ohio, to secure his cooperation in a plant to be erected for that city. This proposition he laid before Mr. Crawford frankly, and the latter gave him a verbal promise to incorporate the business and give Mr. Dunn a satisfactory share of the stock. For this reason Mr. Dunn elected to remain in Martinsburg. About two years later another addition was made to the plant, and the business was incorporated by Mr. Crawford with five members. Mr. Dunn then expected to realize on promises made, and he suffered a considerable shock when he was offered only one share in the new company. It was evident that Mr. Crawford meant that Mr. Dunn should retain the nominal honor of vice president and continue as chief superintendent. Mr. Dunn, therefore, concluded to leave some plants of his own and succeeded in interesting Mr. Graichen, of Providence, Rhode Island, the overseer of the weaving department of the Crawford Mill. Mr. Graichen had much experience in the manufacture of cotton goods, composed of one-third worsted yarn and two-thirds wool yarn, a fabric for which there was then a great demand. They decided to incorporate their new business with a $15,000 capital, Mr. Dunn and Mr. Graichen each taking a third of the stock, and another third to be offered to Mr. Crawford. Mr. Dunn went out among his friends and secured guarantees for $10,000, to take care of his share and Mr. Graichen's shares. The arrangement was made, a building erected and machinery installed, and the business was soon prospering so as to necessitate a doubling of the capacity. Mr. Graichen resigned from Crawford Mill to give all his time to the new establishment, but Mr. Dunn acted only as an advisor in the early days. In the meantime the Crawford Mill had ceased to produce five looms and a pay-roll of 300 people. At that time some men at Winchester secured the association of Mr. Dunn and Mr. Crawford in establishing a new mill there, Mr. Dunn being made general manager and a stockholder in the Virginia Woolen Mill of Winchester for the first five years. This establishment had to get set backs and reverses in the first few years, but eventually became very prosperous and is now one of the largest mills in that part of the country.

At the time the demand for the hairline fabric had waned, the earnings of the Crawford and the Martinsburg Worsted and Cashmere Mills were materially reduced. The new fabric gaining popularity with the public was known as the "Reading" fabric. It necessitated the making of warp and weft yarns and required double the carding and spinning capacity of the older processes. To make the necessary change involved the need of new capital, and Mr. Crawford was then in financial embarrassment that did not permit him to come to the help of his associates. Therefore, it was two years before the changes could be made to bring the plant up to full capacity, bonds having been issued. About that time Mr. Crawford, without consulting Mr. Dunn, employed another superintendent of the worsted and cashmere plant. Mr. Dunn refused to consent to this, and before a meeting of the stockholders, including those from Winchester, he explained the situation and gave assurance of what he could do if allowed to make the line of goods then going into process of manufacture. The men from Winchester had known Mr. Dunn from youth and had perfect confidence in his tireless energy and ability. The goods turned out by Mr. Dunn were sold so readily by New York agents that the profit was much larger than he had promised the stockholders. However, the new superintendent appointed by Mr. Crawford began exceeding his authority, and to avoid a conflict of authority Mr. Dunn resigned his position with the Crawford Woolen Company, after which he confined his activities to the Worsted & Cashmere Mill, under Mr. H. H. Emmert, receiver of said mills. The product turned out by the new superintendent met no market in New York, and as a result the Crawford mills went into the hands of a receiver, and all raw material was worked up and put on the market at a loss. Afterward the Martinsburg Worsted & Cashmere Company plant was sold at auction by the receiver, Mr. H. H. Emmert, to Congressman George M. Bowers, and later purchased by Mr. Dunn, whose only capital consisted of twenty shares in the Virginia Woolen Company of Winchester. Discouragement has never been a feature of Mr. Dunn's career. The difficulties he had had to contend with and his ability were thoroughly appreciated by Martinsburg business men, and after a number of conferences he succeeded in getting forty men as guarantors of a new capital of $35,000, about $12,000 of which were needed to build an addition to the building in order to install sufficient carding and spinning machinery to balance the plant. In the meantime a new line of samples had been put on the market, about the time the mill was completed. Business was dull, yet the new product sold fairly well. Then, in August, 1914, the World War started, and not long afterward Mr. Dunn was fortunate in securing from the French Government an order for a large stock of hospital blankets, so that his mill was put in operation night and day and continued to manufacture blankets and uniform cloth for the French Government for some time. Suddenly, however, he was notified to stop operations, as the French Government had refused to take more goods, which left a stock of 96,000 yards on the wharf in New York City, on which Dunn Woolen Company had drawn $1.00 per yard through W. H. Duval & Company, the New York agents who had secured the contract for Dunn Woolen Company.

At this time Mr. Dunn was beginning to feel that he could pay off his indebtedness, but the 96,000 yards referred to above had to be charged back on the W. H. Duval & Company's books as returned goods, and interest charges on the $96,000 started at once. The mill remained idle for about one month, when Mr. W. H. Duval secured a contract from the Italian Government and permitted the Dunn Woolen Company to run out all the French blue the company had in process, shipping the same to New York, on which he advanced $1.00 per yard. This enabled Dunn Company to start on the Italian order. Mr. Duval expected to get a satisfactory settlement with the French Government every week, but was held up about one year, before any settlement was made.

In the meantime the Italian business ceased and a civilian line had to be gotten out, which was put on the market and the mill output sold in a few days, which necessitated the purchase of additional stock for the above lines. The mill has continued to the present time, notwithstanding it has been passing through the re-adjustment period, and now (May 1, 1922) is running fully 100 per cent. During all this time it cannot be imagined what mental strain Mr. Dunn passed through, and but for the assistance and comfort he obtained through faith in Divine Providence he could not have withstood the strain.

At the age of twenty-two Mr. Dunn married Charlotte Adelia Bowden, a native of Frederick County, Virginia. Eight children have been born to their marriage, named William N., Walter, Ada, Blanche, Prince, Frank, Gladys and Garland. The family are members of the Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and Mr. Dunn is active in the Martinsburg Chamber of Commerce.

HARRY B. KIGHT. A fact which is becoming generally recognized is that great corporations are made popular, or otherwise, by the service rendered by their employees, and upon their character and willingness to cater to the demands of the public rests the successful business life of the corporation employing them. Especially is this true with reference to the railroads of the country, which are, perhaps, more dependent upon the personality of their employees than any other concern, and the more level-headed and progressive of the officials are giving this matter serious attention and striving to retain the services of those men who have proven their value in this connection. One of the men whose loyal service and pleasing manner have won the appreciation of the traveling public over the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad at Keyser is Harry B. Kight, ticket clerk of his road at this point, and one of the most valued of the road's trusted employees.

Harry B. Kight is a native son of Maryland, for he was born at Westernport, that state, June 5, 1887, but was brought to Mineral County the following year by his father, Ezra Kight. He is a grandson of Henry Kight, who established the Kight family on New Creek, up from Keyser, where he purchased a farm and became one of the active agriculturists of Mineral County. An earnest Christian, he united with the Southern branch of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and continued faithful to his creed the remainder of his life. He and his wife became the parents of the following children: Mrs. Gauer, of Oakland, Maryland; Ezra, who became the father of Harry B. Kight; Laura, who married Henry Likens, of Bayard, West Virginia; Jack, who lives at Davis, West Virginia; Jennie, who is the wife of C. W. Burk, of Cincinnati, Ohio; Margaret, who married Gaver Bosley, of Davis, West Virginia; Bailey, who lives at Cumberland, Maryland; and Mrs. J. L. Hunter, now deceased, formerly lived at Davis, West Virginia.

Ezra Kight was born in Allegany County, Maryland, November 6, 1852, and was reared on his father's farm nine miles from Keyser, on New Creek. He received a common-school education, and further improved himself by reading, so that he was always able to take any position offered him. Upon leaving the farm he became a clerk for T. C. Dye, a general merchant of New Creek, with whom he remained for a time, going then into the employ of the New Creek Tannery, another local enterprise. His ambitions, however, led him to railroad work, and he commenced his service with the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad at the very bottom, as a common laborer in the shops at Piedmont. As he was willing to work and learn, it was not long, however, before he was made a brakeman and, later, a conductor, and he was in the freight service when he passed away, February 11, 1905. One of nature's noblemen, this conscientious railroad worker always sought to do his full duty to his Maker and his fellow citizens, and was an earnest and consistent Christian. For many years he was an honored member of Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and all who knew him regarded him highly and esteemed him for his many virtues and loveable nature. He voted the democratic ticket, and his only fraternal relations were those he maintained as a member of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen.

Ezra Kight married Carrie Patton, a daughter of Basil Patton. Mrs. Kight was born in Ritchie County, West Virginia, May 24, 1860, and died April 20, 1920. They had the following children born to them: Harley, who lives at Keyser; Elliott, who is Mrs. M. Lamb, of Covington, Virginia; Harry Basil, whose name heads this review; Frank, who belongs to the aviation corps, U. S. A., is stationed at Kelley Field Number 2, near Fort Worth, Texas; and

Growing up at Keyser, Harry B. Kight attended the public schools, but was not graduated from the high-school course, as he left the schoolroom to enter the railroad service December 11, 1903, as a messenger for the master mechanic's office. Later he became a caller for the road, still later went into the train service as a brakeman, spent four years in this work. At the expiration of this period he was transferred to the station at Keyser, ticket clerk and baggagemaster, and was finally promoted to be day ticket agent, October 15, 1915, and is still filling this position. During the summer season he is the road agent at Deer Park Hotel, Deer Park, Maryland, where he remains during the tourist season, then returning to Keyser for the fall and winter months.

Outside of his regular work Mr. Kight has entered enthusiastically into the spirit of Pythianism, having passed through all of the chairs of Olive Branch Lodge No. 25, Keyser, and has taken the Grand Lodge degree, which was conferred on him at Piedmont, West Virginia, October 1, 1921. He is known in Pythian circles over a wide field. In connection with his lodge work he is now serving as secretary of the Third Branch team of his home lodge. His religious home is in the Keyser Presbyterian Church, in which he is an earnest member, and he is now serving as secretary of the board of deacons.

Mr. Kight is a man of original ideas, and has put to use the service of his company. His unique method of advertising his road has attracted much attention from tourists, and has called forth expressions of commendation from the general passenger agent of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad and from others of its officials who have the interests of the passenger service close to their hearts. Wherever and in whatever capacity Mr. Kight has served he has popularized his employer and contributed that which is necessary for the well being of his road. His Baltimore, Ohio advertisement in the window of Doctor Gruesendorf's drug store at Keyser was so original and evoked so many favorable comments that the same idea was used for a similar window decoration at Baltimore, Maryland, where it was similarly admired. Mr. Kight is the Keyser correspondent of the Baltimore & Ohio Magazine, an employee magazine published by the railroad company at Baltimore for the benefit of its employees. In a recent issue this periodical one of the writers says in part as follows:

"Harry B. Kight, the Keyser correspondent of the magazine, acted as summer agent of the Deer Park Hotel in 1915, and proved to be one of the very best agents the hotel ever had. I met him every Saturday and Sunday during the heated term and observed his work."

On June 29, 1916, Mr. Kight married at Cumberland, Maryland, Miss Elizabeth Glover, a daughter of Den Glover, a railroad conductor of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, who lost his life in front of the Keyser station, and was one of the oldest men in the service. Mrs. Glover belongs to the Connell family. The birth of Mrs. Kight took place at Hutton, Maryland, June 11, 1895. She was graduated from the Keyser High School in May, 1916, and married the next month. She is interested with her husband in church work, and is a member of the various church auxiliary organizations. Mr. and Mrs. Kight have one son, Harry Donald, who was born November 20, 1917. This bright little fellow already displays many of his father's characteristics, and is a prime favorite among his family connections and friends. So popular has Mr. Kight become with the traveling public that one of his customers remarked of him:

"The fact that Harry Kight's friendly face is at the ticket window in the Keyser station of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and that his cheerful and earnest voice greets the patrons of the road, is one of the best investments the company has ever made."

CHESTER CUSH CHAMBERS, the efficient and popular city attorney of Logan, judicial center of Logan County, was born at Pecks Mills, this county, December 11, 1890, son of Leroy and Martha (Chambers) Chambers, both of this state, where they still reside on their extensive homestead farm near Pecks Mill. The father of Mr. Chambers was born in Virginia, where the family, of English lineage, was founded in the Colonial days, and became one of the distinguished and eloquent clergymen of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as a minister of the gospel he labored long and earnestly and gained high reputation for his consecrated zeal and devotion.

After receiving the discipline of the public schools of Logan County, Mr. C. Chambers was for three years a student in Ball College at Huntington, this state. In 1915 he graduated in the law department of historic old Washington College, University, Virginia, and after thus receiving his degree of Bachelor of Laws he engaged in the practice of law at Logan, where his success marks him as one of the representative younger members of the bar of Logan County. He served one term as county recorder, and in the year 1922 finds him giving an effective administration in the office of city attorney of Logan.

On the 6th of March, 1918, Mr. Chambers entered the United States military service in connection with the World war. He served one year at Camp Greencastle, Georgia, and for ten months thereafter he was stationed at Fort Bayard, New Mexico. He won commission as second lieutenant, was assigned to the sanitary corps, and at Fort Bayard he was made adjutant of the United States General Hospital, commanding officer of the hospital force of 600 men, and chairman of the hospital funds and fire marshal of the Post. His preferences denote the high estimate placed upon him and also the efficiency of his service. He received honorable discharge in August, 1919, and then resumed practice of his profession at Logan. He is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

March, 1918, Mr. Chambers was united in marriage with Miss Ida Robinette, of Logan County, she being a daughter of Preston and Ella (Gore) Robinette, the former of Kentucky and the latter of the present Logan County, West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Chambers are popular figures in the representative social activities of their community.

MILLARD F. SNIDER. A successful lawyer and representative citizen of Clarksburg, Harrison County, is found in Millard F. Snider, one of the leaders of the Clarksburg bar, has been in active practice in this city for nearly a century. He was born on a farm in Doddridge County, Virginia, now West Virginia, September 24, and traces his family on the paternal side back to his grandfather, John Snider, who came from Fauquier County, Virginia, in the pioneer days, and settled in Harrison County, where he died at about ninety-eight years of age. His grandfather, Jacob Snider, was born in Harrison County, in 1804, and died in Doddridge County at the age of seventy-eight years; his father, John Snider, was born in Harrison County, September 27, 1832.

His maternal ancestors, Mr. Snider's grandfather, George Apsy, came from England to Loudoun County, Virginia, when a young man and married Mary L. Swan, at locality, to whom were born four daughters, among them was Virginia Ellen Apsy, the mother of Mr. Snider. He was born July 30, 1837. His grandfather Apsy died in 1839, when the children were all small, and his mother, with her four daughters, later moved to Doddridge County, where his father and mother were married in 1854. To this union were born thirteen children, five of whom reached maturity, and there are now (1922) twenty-five children, thirty-eight grandchildren, and twenty-five great grandchildren of their descendants.

Millard F. Snider was the fourth child in this family. His father and mother spent most of their lives on the farm, on Brushy Fork of Meat House Fork, in New District, to which they moved when Millard was five years old. They were members of the United Brethren Church, and lived earnest, conscientious, Christian lives. In 1901 they retired from the farm and spent their declining years in quiet enjoyment at Salem, Harrison County, where his father died, Sunday, April 21, 1912, and his mother, Sunday, March 12, 1922.

The family were all industrious and during his boyhood Millard Fillmore did his share of the hard work that was necessary in clearing away the forests and successfully operating a farm in that locality. Very early in life he determined to have an education, and by diligent study in the public schools, which were only three and four-month terms at that time, he was able to commence teaching school when he was twenty years old, and spent most of the next six years in the schoolroom, alternating as student and teacher. After attending several terms at the State Normal School, at Fairmont, he entered the State University, where he graduated from the law department in 1887 with the degree of LL. B. Mr. Snider located at West Union, Doddridge County, in the fall of 1887, and immediately engaged in the practice of the law, where he continued until 1898, when he sought a wider field and chose Clarksburg as the best suited for his professional work. He has been amply rewarded.

Miss Elizabeth Stuart, daughter of the late Judge Chapman J. Stuart, of West Union, became his wife in 1892. They have one daughter, Virginia Ann, who graduated at Goucher College, and is now the wife of J. Ransel Romine, of Clarksburg. They all live on East Main Street, belong to the First Methodist Episcopal Church, and he is contented and happy.

CHARLES BELL WYLIE, M. D. Morgantown is justly notable for the skill, learning and high character of the individuals who compose its medical fraternity, and the profession here numbers among its members those whose scientific attainments are beyond the ordinary. Among those well known for their accomplishments along special lines is Dr. Charles Bell Wylie, whose career is typical of modern advancement, and whose reputation is based upon his achievements as a specialist in diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat.

Doctor Wylie was born in Hancock County, West Virginia, October 8, 1863, a son of Andrew J. and Elizabeth C. (Atkinson) Wylie. His father was also a native of Hancock County, and was a son of David Wylie, of Scotch birth, an early settler of Hancock County, where he was the first man elected to the office of sheriff after the county was created. When he entered upon his career Andrew J. Wylie chose the vocation of farming, and this he followed for a number of years, but later in life owned and operated a machine shop at New Cumberland, West Virginia, where both he and his wife died.

The boyhood days of Doctor Wylie were spent on the home farm and at New Cumberland, where he received his early education. As a youth he learned the machinist's trade, at which he worked for several years, and while not otherwise employed in the shop devoted his every spare minute to the study of medicine. Later he worked at his trade in the summer months and attended the medical department of the Western University of Pennsylvania in the winter seasons, and eventually entered Hering Medical College, Chicago, from which he was graduated in 1903, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He did not cease being a student with the securing of his diploma, for later he took post-graduate work at the Chicago Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat College, the Chicago Post-Graduate College, the Manhattan Eye and Ear Hospital, New York City, the Philadelphia Polyclinic, and the Wills Eye Hospital, Philadelphia.

Doctor Wylie entered general practice at Chattanooga, Tennessee, in 1903, and two years later began specializing, limiting his practice to treatment of the diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat. On June 1, 1913, he located at Morgantown, where he has since continued in practice as a specialist in treating the organs above named. In his practice he has shown his familiarity not only with old methods but with the new that are constantly being discovered, and his service has ever been discharged with a conscientious sense of professional obligation, always remembering that he belongs to a body set apart, one that more than any other is helpful to humanity. Doctor Wylie is a member of the Monongalia County Medical Society, the West Virginia State Medical Society, the American Medical Association, the American Academy of Ophthalmology and Oto-Laryngology and the International Congress of Ophthalmology. He is a past president and past secretary of the county society. As a fraternalist he belongs to Keystone Lodge No. 35, K. P., of Chattanooga, Tennessee, of which he is a past commander, and also holds membership in the Morgantown Rotary Club. The personal impression given by Doctor Wylie is quieting and satisfying, inspiring confidence and commanding respect.

Doctor Wylie married Miss Cora Hopkins, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, who died leaving a son and a daughter: Adda May, who married Norbert Kramer, of Pittsburgh, where they reside; and Charles Raymer, now of St. Louis, Missouri, who married Clara Kester, formerly of Urbana, Missouri. The present Mrs. Wylie was formerly Miss Madie Elizabeth Allison, of Chattanooga, Tennessee.

RAYMOND EARL KERR. The profession of civil engineering attracts to it only men of wide vision and serious and constructive mind, and what it has achieved in America alone, even within the lifetime of a middle-aged man of today, is stupendous to calculate. The pioneering civil engineer is one of the greatest of aids to civilization and world-wide commerce. West Virginia, with her noble mountains to be crossed and her beautiful streams to be bridged, has produced able men in this profession, and one who has become far more than locally prominent is Raymond Earl Kerr, who has been concerned in many important construction projects at Morgantown and elsewhere.

Mr. Kerr was born at Parkersburg, West Virginia, February 12, 1884, and is a son of Charles Hugh and Lillie (Atkinson) Kerr, a grandson of Samuel Kerr, who was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, and was a son of Charles Kerr, who removed from Pennsylvania to Ohio in 1792.

Charles Hugh Kerr was born in 1849, at Newport, Ohio, and died in 1911, at Parkersburg, West Virginia, having located in that city in 1883. He was one of the early oil men in the West Virginia oil territory and became widely known. He married Miss Lillie Atkinson, who still survives and resides at Parkersburg. She was born at Cameron, Ohio, a daughter of Isaac Atkinson, a prominent business man for many years at Marietta, Ohio, and largely interested in the oil industry even before the war between the states.

Raymond E. Kerr attended the public schools of Parkersburg, and later attended West Virginia University, where he took a course in civil engineering. He has practically devoted himself to this profession ever since, and during the greater part of his professional and business life has made his home at Morgantown. Mr. Kerr's professional work was in association with the Little Kanawha Syndicate at Parkersburg. When the syndicate built the Buckhannon & Northern Railroad, now the Monongahela, Mr. Kerr was secured as assistant chief engineer, and the contract was most satisfactorily completed. He later became identified with the Morgantown & Wheeling Railroad. This railway line, like many others within the past few years, met with business difficulties and since 1918 Mr. Kerr has been receiver of this property. Aside from his profession he is interested in a number of important business enterprises at Morgantown. He is vice president and treasurer of the B. M. Chaplin Company, contractors and builders, which he organized in 1914. In 1913 he was one of the organizers of the Monongahela Supply Company of Morgantown, and is present secretary of this concern. In addition he is unofficially identified with a number of coal corporations and holds a large amount of valuable property in the West Virginia coal fields. He has a wide acquaintance and is held in high regard as a keen, able business man and thoroughly competent in his profession. He is a member of the American Society of Civil Engineers.

In 1910 Mr. Kerr married Miss Frances Tucker, a daughter of Robert C. and Mary Frances (Smith) Tatro of Parkersburg, West Virginia, and they have one daughter, Alice, who was born March 21, 1921. Mrs. Kerr is a member of the Episcopal Church. The political field has not attracted Mr. Kerr, but his good citizenship is unimpeachable, and he is a valued member of the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce. He belongs to the Rotary Club, Morgantown Lodge No. 411, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and still maintains membership interest in his college fraternity, the Delta Tau Delta.

WILLIAM E. ARNETT. A resident of Morgantown for more than three decades and prominently identified with the business and financial interests of the city for an equal period, William E. Arnett, a cashier of the Second National Bank, is accounted one of the builders of Morgantown's prosperity, a man whose ripened judgment and sterling traits of character have benefited every enterprise to which he has been connected.

Mr. Arnett is in the sixth generation of his family in Monongalia County, where his ancestor, James Arnett, settled soon after the close of the Revolutionary war. He has five sons of this pioneer, Andrew, the eldest, the father of William E., was born in New Jersey in 1800 and died in Monongalia County in 1820. He married Elizabeth Leggett, and their son, James, great-grandfather of William E., was the first postmaster of Arnett's Monongalia County, which postoffice was named in his honor. His son, Eleazar Arnett, was the grandfather of William E. and his son, John B., who married Talia Billingsby, was the father of William E.

William E. Arnett was born at Madsville, Monongalia County, August 3, 1866, and received his education through attendance at the public schools. He commenced his independent career as a clerk in a general store at the age of nineteen years, but in 1889 turned his attention to banking when he entered the Second National Bank of Morgantown in the capacity of teller. In 1901 he was elected cashier of that institution, and for twenty years has continued to discharge capably the duties of that post. Primarily a banker and known as a careful, capable conservator of the interests of the depositors of the institution with which he is connected, Mr. Arnett also has been identified with numerous other interests, and at present is connected with a number of business and financial concerns which have benefited materially through his ability, experience and good judgment. He likewise has been active in civic, social and public affairs. For a number of years he acted in the capacity of city recorder, an office in which he rendered people of Morgantown sterling services. He is a member of the Official Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church and has been a liberal supporter of religion and movement making for a higher order of morality. In fact, any enterprise that promises to be effective, constructive and progressive will find a supporter in Mr. Arnett. As a fraternalist he holds membership in the Masons, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias.

In 1888 Mr. Arnett married Miss Della Echart, who in 1900, leaving two children: Grace, who married Charles T. Herd; and Roy. Mr. Arnett married Iva E. Lovett, and four children were born to this union: Mildred E., William E., Mary Louise and James L.

AARON J. GARLOW. The splendid success which has attended the fortunes of the Second National Bank of Morgantown attests the sagacity, foresight and financial ability of its president, Aaron J. Garlow, whose watchful care and fidelity have contributed to its upbuilding and perpetuation. The life of the banker is less conspicuous before the world than that of a member of a learned profession, or of one who mingles in public affairs, but is none the less an arduous labor, through engrossment, and requiring a high order or organizing talent, watchfulness of the trends of affairs, and financial skill. The wrecks of financial bubbles which started on their voyages with favoring winds and brilliant prospects, scattered all along the reefs of the border business waters, prove how uncertain and capricious ness in banking life. The strictest fidelity, the utmost carefulness, good judgment and experience are often underlying to counteract the effects of contraction in monetary affairs, the casualties of bad crops and unprofitable business, as well as a multitude of other influences which render conditions unstable. For more than a quarter of a century president of this institution Mr. Garlow has guided its policies into the safe port of prosperity, and its soundness and stability redound immeasurably to his credit and establish firmly his personal reputation as an able banker.

Mr. Garlow was a native of West Virginia and is descended from one of the pioneer families of Monongalia County. He was born on the old Garlow homestead in Cass District, Monongalia County, November 4, 1858, and is a son of the late John Garlow. His paternal great-grandfather was Stephen Garlow, who settled on land secured from the United States Government in Cass Township in 1772.
 Stephen Garlow's son, Andrew Garlow, the grandfather of Aaron J., was born in New Jersey, and was a youth when he accompanied his parents to Monongalia County.
 After his marriage he settled on his farm on Crooked Run in Cass District, and there rounded out a long and honorable career in the pursuits of agriculture. John Garlow, son of Andrew and father of Aaron J. Garlow, was born in Cass District in 1812, and received a public school education. In making his choice of a career he followed the footsteps of his father and adopted farming and stock-raising. A man of industry and good judgment, as well as of inherent ability, he developed large interests in the way of landed possessions and was not only a prosperous tenant farmer, but was also a leader in the business of raising in horses, cattle and sheep of his own raising. As his possessions increased he utilized his business ability and judgment in dealing in real estate, and in this direction greatly increased the value of his estate, which was a large one at his death. Mr. Garlow was a man of the highest integrity, who bore an excellent reputation in his community, not alone in business matters, but because of his public-spirited citizenship. He married Miss Susan Ross, the daughter of Enoch Ross, an early settler of Monongalia County.

Aaron J. Garlow acquired his education in the public schools of Cass District, and, being reared to agricultural pursuits, was engaged therein for a number of years. Like his father and grandfather, he was successful in his operations both as a farmer and a raiser of livestock, but his business and financial ability eventually led him to the city, he moving to Morgantown in 1900. Prior to this time, indeed, he had become a member of the Board of Directors of the Second National Bank of Morgantown, and in the following year was elected president of that institution, a position in which he has remained to the present time. He has had numerous other interests, having been identified with a number of leading industries, all of which have resulted through his connection with them. He is president of the Morgantown Ice Company, of the Union Tracing Company and of the Monongalia Building and Loan Association. He is treasurer of the Rosedale Coal Company of Morgantown, which in 1921 was mining and shipping a train of thirty-two cars daily. He was for many years treasurer of the Morgantown Hardware Company, and succeeded by his son, Homer G. Garlow, in that position. Mr. Garlow is a member of the American Bankers Association. He has always shown a public-spirited interest in civic affairs, and has lent his influence, time and means in the forwarding of movements which have promised aid in the development and progress of his city. With his family he belongs to the First Presbyterian Church of Morgantown.

In 1884, in Monongalia County, Mr. Garlow was united in marriage with Miss Rebecca Carothers, the daughter of Wm. W. Carothers, an agriculturist of this county, and to the union there have been born two children: Sadie, who is the wife of Dr. Harry G. Crow, a practicing physician of North Bend, Indiana; and Homer Gay, treasurer of the Morgantown Hardware Company and operator of the rental farm.

SPENCER S. WADE, M. D. With thirty-seven years of continuous practice at Morgantown to his credit, Doctor Wade is one of the best known of Monongalia County's many excellent physicians. He has enjoyed some of the substantial honors as well as the heavier responsibilities of his profession, and his life has given increased dignity to a name that has been worthily identified with Monongalia County for four generations.

His father, the late Alexander L. Wade, was a pioneer in education, not only in his home state but in the nation.
 Alexander L. Wade was a son of George and Anna Wade.
 George Wade was born in Monongalia County, but soon after his marriage removed to Indiana. He returned to Monongalia County in 1839, and died there in 1846. His wife, Anna, was a native of Washington County, Virginia.
 Alexander L. Wade was born in Rush County, Indiana, February 1, 1832, and was seven years of age when his parents removed to Monongalia County. He was only sixteen when he began teaching. He left the schoolroom when he was elected clerk of the Monongalia Court in 1861, and at that time removed his residence to Morgantown. In 1871 he was elected clerk of the county board of supervisors. Following this service he resumed teaching, and for four years was principal of the Morgantown graded schools and also assistant county superintendent. Later he was elected county superintendent of schools of Monongalia County, and by re-election served until 1879. The conspicuous service he rendered in education was in raising the standards and in giving new vitality and method to country schools. In many states it has been only within comparatively recent years that his plan has been adopted of graduating students from country and district schools.
 The late Alexander L. Wade undertook the organization of graduating classes in the country schools of his county as early as 1874. The first such classes were graduated and given diplomas in the spring of 1876. It was something decidedly new in methods of common and grade schools throughout the country, and naturally attracted widespread attention. Alexander Wade was given credit for this work by General Eaton, then commissioner of the National Bureau of Education at Washington in his report of 1878.
 In 1879 Mr. Wade began writing his book entitled "A Graduate System for Country Schools," which he completed in 1881. In 1880, at his own request, he was appointed principal of the Morgantown colored schools. His object in seeking the appointment was a desire not only to prove the value of his own methods, but to demonstrate the capabilities of the colored race in receiving educational training. His experience was gratifyingly successful on both scores. In February, 1884, before the National Association of School Superintendents at Washington, Mr. Wade discussed "Supervision in the Country Schools," his paper being published by the National Bureau of Education.
 From 1881 to 1884, inclusive, he served as a lecturer and institute instructor.

He was licensed as a local preacher by the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1860, was constituted a deacon in 1866 and ordained an elder in 1874. As a delegate he represented the West Virginia Lay Electoral Conference in the General Conference of that church held in Philadelphia, and served several years as agent and distributor for the American Bible Society. He was a member of the West Virginia Temperance Executive Committee. For several years he represented the school book interests of the Lippincott Publishing Company of Philadelphia and later the D. C. Heath Company of Boston. Among other honors he was elected, in June, 1880, to membership in the American Institute of Civics at Boston, and later was chosen one of its counsellors.

Alexander L. Wade died at Richmond, Virginia, in 1904, full of years and rich in honors and the respect and veneration of his fellow men. In 1854 he married Hettie Sanders, daughter of John and Elizabeth Sanders, of Monongalia County. She survived him until 1909.

Their son, Spencer S. Wade, was born in Clinton District, Monongalia County, July 29, 1857, and throughout practically his entire life has been a resident of Morgantown. He acquired an early education in the public schools, through private instruction at home, and graduated in 1879 from the University of West Virginia. At that time he entered the office of the Brock brothers, Dr. Hugh Workman and Luther S. Brock, under whom he read medicine. In 1882 he entered the Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia, graduating M. D. with the class of 1884. Following the death of Dr. Hugh Workman Brock he became a partner of his brother, Dr. Luther S. Brock, and the firm of Brock & Wade, physicians and surgeons, is still in existence, one of the oldest medical firms in the state.

Doctor Wade took special work in New York during 1889, post-graduate studies in the University of the City of New York, special instruction in diseases of nose and throat in the out-patient department of Bellevue Hospital, and in the Eye and Ear Infirmary. This custom of keeping in touch with leaders of the profession and new methods has been kept up, and he has taken similar courses at Springfield, Massachusetts, New Orleans, Louisiana, and has been a frequent visitor to hospitals in Pittsburgh, Baltimore and Philadelphia. For upwards of forty years Doctor Wade has given his enthusiasm, energy and best devotion to the profession that is one of the noblest callings of men. He is a member of the Monongalia County, West Virginia State and American Medical Associations, the American Public Health Association, and has a number of social and civic connections.

In 1897 Doctor Wade married Miss Rose Chorpering, daughter of John Chorpering, of Clarksburg, West Virginia. Six children were born to their union: Georgia, Frank (deceased), John, Rebecca, Elizabeth and Jean. The tradition of a liberal education is inherent in the Wade family, and these children are being given all the advantages that will fit them well for the positions and stations in life to which they may be called.

DELL ROY RICHARDS, cashier and director of the Bank of Morgantown, has been identified with the banking and business interests of the City of Morgantown for the last twenty years, and during that time has worked his way up from the position of street car conductor and bank messenger to the cashiership of one of the strongest banking institutions of the city, winning, likewise, a place among the leading citizens of the community. He is of Welsh-Scotch stock, and was born on the old Richards home farm in Belmont County, Ohio, March 7, 1881, a son of William and Catherine (Compher) Richards, and a grandson of William Richards.

William Richards, the father of Dell R., was born in Belmont County, Ohio, where as a young man he adopted the vocation of agriculturist. This he followed in Belmont County until he removed to New Cumberland, Hancock County, West Virginia, and in that community rounded out an honorable, useful and successful career. He was a man of integrity and good citizenship, and won and held a number of warm friends and admirers. Mrs. Richards, who is a resident of Long Beach, California, was also born in Belmont County, Ohio, and is a daughter of the late John Compher.

Dell Roy Richards spent his boyhood days upon the home farm in Belmont County, Ohio, and at New Cumberland, Hancock County, West Virginia, to which community the family moved when he was eight years of age. He attended the public school at New Cumberland, and in 1898 graduated from high school, following which, in 1900, he entered the University of West Virginia, and spent two and one-half years at that institution. While a student there, in order to assist in paying for his education, he worked as a conductor on the street railway and likewise served as cashier of the Union Utility Company, operators of the street-car lines. In 1904 Mr. Richards began his regular banking experience as a messenger in the Bank of the Monongahela Valley at Morgantown, and during the next seven years worked his way up from that position to that of teller of the institution. He resigned this post in December, 1910, to accept that of cashier of the Bank of Morgantown, an institution then four years old and with resources amounting to $300,000, which, since Mr. Richards became cashier, have increased to the sum of $1,700,000. While bank has been his intimate and leading interest, he has been concerned officially and otherwise with additional honor enterprises, and for some time has been president of the Central Automobile Corporation, which maintains plant at Morgantown, Clarksburg, Fairmont and Mannington, West Virginia. He is a member and elder of the First Presbyterian Church of Morgantown, and as a fraternal holds membership in Lodge No. 4, A. F. & A. M., and the Kappa Alpha college fraternity.

Mr. Richards married Miss Elizabeth B. Davis, daughter of the late Marcellus Davis, of Morgantown, who was widely known in business and financial circles of the city.

LEWIS H. WEIMER was born and reared on the farm where he now lives in the Eggon community of Preston County. As a youth he had an ambition to become an undertaker, and achieved that profession after many difficulties and sacrifices, and is now one of the leading funeral directors of Preston County, conducting a business in that country locality, and a still larger at Bayard.

Mr. Weimer was born April 11, 1877. His grandfather, George Weimer, was of German ancestry, a resident of Pennsylvania and Maryland, and spent his last years in Maryland in Garrett County of the latter state. He married Barbara Klingaman, also of German stock. She survived him, and their children were: Samuel, who died near Salbury, Pennsylvania; Jacob, who died on his farm in Garrett County, West Virginia; Mrs. Mary Neff of Ohio; Jesse, who was a farmer in Garrett County; John, whose record follows; Sarah, who died in Garrett County, wife of Henry McCroby; Joseph, who was a Union soldier in the Civil war and spent his life near Oakland, Maryland; Benjamin, who was accidentally killed in Garrett County; Silas, who was a Garrett County farmer, once a member of the Maryland Legislature, and for several years teacher.

John Weimer was born in Somerset County, Pennsylvania, November 22, 1832. He had a limited education, devoted his entire active career to his farm. He removed with his family to Maryland, and after spending a short time near Sang Run in Garrett County came into Preston County, where he married Magdalena Fike, daughter of Peter Fike and sister of Rev. Aaron Fike, a Brethren minister whose life record is published elsewhere. John Weimer and wife had the following children: Frank M., of Fredericksburg, Virginia; Joanna, who died in Garrett County, Maryland, wife of I. O. Thompson; Rachel, wife of D. J. Judy, of Eggon; Ed of Morgantown; Jennimah, Ephraim Lida and Christiana, all of whom died unmarried; and a Lewis Henry. John Weimer died October 21, 1921, when in his eighty-ninth year, after a residence on the old farm for more than half a century and in Preston County sixteen years.

Lewis Henry Weimer attended the common schools, and was a helpful factor on the home farm until passed his majority. On leaving the farm he took a correspondence course in undertaking, and was licensed to practice in that State of West Virginia. He had qualified for his chosen profession after many difficulties, and even then he was not equipped for business, having no capital. He secured practical experience while in the service of Mr. A. R. Fike of Eggon, and he borrowed the capital to buy out his employer in 1906. He paid interest on borrowed money until his business profits replaced the loans and created his own capital. He moved from his cabin home, built from the public highway to the vicinity of Maple Run, and there eventually erected a generous home and equipped himself with facilities for his business. Later he established the branch at Bayard, which now does a larger business than the original establishment and, as it is in a railroad town, it seems likely that Mr. Weimer will in time concentrate his efforts there. He is now head of an extensive business, affording a great contrast to the situation when he started, without capital and with a family and home to which to provide. He has a complete equipment of automobile and horse drawn hearse and his business at Eggon is half a mile south of the village. Mr. Weimer is a member of the West Virginia Funeral Directors Association and the National Funeral Directors Association.

He gave his first national ballot to Major McKinley in 1900, and has acted in the interest of that party steadily, serving many years as a committeeman for Union District. For years he was president of the Union District Board of Education, and in 1918 was elected county commissioner as successor to Allen Forman. The chief business before the part of which he was a member was school consolidation, for school purposes, and routine business. Mr. Weiner affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, and is a prominent member of the Lutheran Church, having been its congreational secretary of the joint council for several years, and now chairman of the joint council.

In his home community December 24, 1899, he married as Lucinda Liller, who was born within two miles of Union, June 2, 1880, daughter of James and Catherine (Fike) Liller. Her mother was a daughter of David Fike, brother of Rev. Aaron Fike, above mentioned. Mrs. Weiner's parents were natives of Preston County and until their lives as farmers here. Of their fourteen children, thirteen grew up: Mary, whose first husband was George Winters and she is now the wife of Joseph Rembolt, of Eglon; David of Garrett County, Maryland; Jennie, who has been three times married and is living in Garrett County; Henry, of Garrett County; Ella, wife of George Wotring, of Bayard; Louvina, who died as Mrs. Thomas Aaron; Aaron, a farmer in Garrett County; Ida, who died at Union, West Virginia, wife of Jacob Nester; Lizzie, Mrs. E. Hurshman, of Philadelphia; Mrs. Weiner; Leola, who married Thomas Root of Preston County; Ressa, wife of Arthur Sell, of Union Bridge, Maryland; and Myrtle, who died when a young girl. Mr. and Mrs. Weiner have two children, Cleo and John Arnold, the latter attending the common public school. Cleo completed a liberal education and is now the wife of Early F. Roth, of Bayard.

PAGE ROBERT McCURM is the leading merchant of Aurora, and has the distinction of being the oldest merchant from a standpoint of continuous experience in Preston County. His active connection with merchandising at Aurora is a matter of more than half a century, but at intervals he has so rendered a valuable service in public affairs.

Mr. McCrum was born at Aurora July 19, 1852. His father, Summers McCrum, was born in Randolph County, is state, in 1826, and was nine years of age when he was left fatherless. He lived with his step-father until he came to Preston County, and on going to Aurora he took charge of the Curtis Store and was not yet of age when he became a responsible factor in the business of Curtis & Son. Of long afterward, in 1845, he established a business of his own on the site now occupied by the Lantz Hotel. From that time until 1871 he was active in the business life of the village. Besides general merchandising he was so a farmer and one of the most extensive sheep growers, owning flocks which he let out on the shares and which were herded over portions of two or three counties. In the sheep business represented the larger part of his capital and enterprise. Summers McCrum was not in politics to any extent. He began as a democrat, but through the issues of the war became a republican. In 1860 the one vote was cast for Abraham Lincoln in Aurora precinct. The voter, Adam Giessman, an old German citizen, was threatened with mob violence for thus expressing himself. Summers McCrum at that time was a Douglas democrat, but immediately after secession he became a republican. He was a leader in church work as a Methodist, and the present Methodist Church at Aurora was constructed the result of efforts in which he took a prominent part. A Tyler County Summers McCrum married Eliza H. Hicklin, a native of that county and daughter of Dr. Samuel Nicklin. She died in 1881, while Summers McCrum survived until 1905. Their children were: Page R.; Lloyd, who was a merchant at Gorman and then at Hendricks and died at Gorman, leaving a son, A. Bliss; Alvin A. Aurora September 9, 1858, and now associated in business with his brother Page at Aurora; and Lillie, Mrs. Charles Trotter, of Washington, D. C.

Page R. McCrum attended some of the early sessions of the first free schools established at Aurora. At the age of seventeen he entered the University of West Virginia at Morgantown, completing his sophomore year there. His father desiring to retire from merchandising, Page returned to Aurora in 1871, and though not yet twenty years of age took active charge of the business. With his accession the firm became McCrum & Son, later when Alvin became a partner, the title was S. McCrum & Sons, but for a number of years past the firm name has been P. R. and A. A. McCrum. This is the business in which Mr. McCrum has found his time and talents absorbed for half a century. He is a director in the First National Bank of Terra Alta, West Virginia, of which he was also the second president.

He began voting as a republican and was one of the first young men in this community to announce his convictions for that party. His first presidential vote went to General Grant in 1872. The first official service he rendered was assistant to Clerk Henry Startzman, of Kingwood, for several months. His first elective office was as a member of the house of delegates. He was elected in 1878, serving under Speaker Moffett and re-elected in 1880 under Speaker Wilson. The house in both terms was democratic, and a republican member had little opportunity for constructive work. One matter of importance before the House during his first term was the increase of jurisdiction of magistrates. Mr. McCrum voted for the party choice for United States Senator when he knew in advance there was no chance to elect him.

Subsequently Mr. McCrum was for several terms a member of the County Court. The business before the board was largely routine, since road building had not become an important issue involving a great expenditure based on bond issues. Only a bridge was built now and then, and perhaps the most important duty of Mr. McCrum was handling the yearly financial settlements with the sheriff. Mr. McCrum served a number of times as member of the Union District Board of Education, and was also its secretary. While he was a member of the board the addition to the Aurora schoolhouse was built.

In Rock Island County, Illinois, November 16, 1887, Mr. McCrum married Miss Lucy B. Brown, going out to that state to claim his bride, who, however, is a native of Beverly, Randolph County, West Virginia, and member of an old family of this state. She was born at Beverly August 10, 1853, daughter of Bernard L. and Mary E. (Dailey) Brown, the latter being a daughter of Hugh and Edith (Butcher) Dailey. Bernard L. Brown was for about twenty years clerk of the Circuit Court of Randolph County prior to the Civil war. He died in 1869, and his widow removed with the family to Cordova, Illinois, where Mrs. McCrum finished her education in high school. She was one of a large family of children, of whom Edith, Edwin, Clarence, Oscar and Alice are deceased, and the others, still surviving, are Mrs. Addie F. Earl, of Fort Worth, Texas; Mrs. S. N. Bosworth, of Beverly, West Virginia; Charles B., of Clinton, Iowa; and Mrs. Roberta Williamson, of Pomona, California. Mr. and Mrs. McCrum have two surviving sons, Summers Dailey McCrum and Harold B., the former born October 3, 1888, and the latter, December 8, 1891. Summers D. married Elinor Brown, daughter of John H. and Eugenia (Bishop) Brown, of Kingwood, and their two children are Robert Brown and Summers Dailey, Jr. They all live at Aurora. Harold Bernard McCrum graduated in law from the University of West Virginia in 1914, and is one of the popular attorneys of Preston County. He was elected and served in 1921 as a member of the House of Delegates, and in that session was on the committees of prohibition and temperance; counties, districts and municipal corporations and roads.

CLEM E. PETERS has shown fine initiative and constructive powers in his executive administration as secretary and treasurer of the Conservative Life Insurance Company of Wheeling, West Virginia, an admirable institution of which specific record is given in following review.

Mr. Peters was born and reared in the State of Ohio where he received excellent educational advantages, and he has been a resident of Wheeling, West Virginia, for a quarter of a century. Here he was for some time employed as clerk in a drug store, later was here engaged independently in the drug business, and it was in his sleeping apartment over his drug store that the insurance company of which he is now secretary and treasurer virtually had its inception, in 1906, while it has been in large measure due to his resourceful energies and progressive and careful policies that the company has forged to the front as one of most substantial, well ordered and beneficent functions—a home institution of which West Virginia may well be proud. Of the determined spirit that animated Mr. Peters and his associates in their efforts to build up this worthy enterprise results speak for themselves, but the casual observer can have slight comprehension of the heavy responsibilities assumed, the great obstacles surmounted, and the discouragements set aside in the stupendous evolution of a solid and noble institution of broad scope and ever widening influence. The review of the inception and growth of this insurance corporation, as given in following pages in this publication, should be read in connection with this sketch of the progressive and representative citizen who has played so important a part in the upbuilding of the company and business.

THE CONSERVATIVE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY. With full measure of consistency may this publication offer brief review of the Conservative Life Insurance Company of Wheeling, West Virginia, for the institution is one that is gaining high rank and unequivocal success, and has proved a source of just pride, as well as value, to the city and state in which it figures as a "home corporation."

This company was organized and incorporated, under the laws of West Virginia, in the year 1906, with an authorized capital of $500,000. When its first policy was issued, in April, 1907, the assets of the company were about $14,000. Of all that has since been achieved an idea is conveyed by the brief notation that at the close of the year 1920 the assets of the company aggregated $1,575,344.56, an increase of nearly $400,000 over the preceding year. From an appreciative article that appeared in the publication entitled "Money and Commerce," are taken the following pertinent quotations. After noting the annual statement of the company for the year 1920 the article continues as follows: "Thus it will be seen that from a very meager beginning it has progressed and advanced each year until it now stands among the leading financial institutions in the country. It has always been the aim and policy of the management to build up the institution on a solid and safe foundation, and to that end great care has been exercised in the selection of insurance risks, investment of the funds, and the systematic conducting of its affairs in such a way as to give to the public every attractive and up-to-the-minute form of policy, together with the creation of a permanent agency organization, which now numbers approximately two hundred fifty men and women, representing it in the states of West Virginia, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Alabama, Mississippi, Georgia and Florida. With the constant opening of new state, with the agency force increasing in numbers, and with the volume of business constantly expanding, and naturally the resources of this institution cannot help but swell in proportion, and its future growth and stability can be measured only on the basis of the amazing financial growth of some of the institutions of this kind in the East. Since its organization the company has paid out over $600,000 in death claims, and has withstood not only the great World war but also the greatest epidemic the world has ever known, Spanish influenza. This alone increased the expected mortality by over one-half, yet each and every claim was paid the same day that proofs of death were filed and approved at the home office. This alone demonstrates to the public at large the financial strength of the company, and is positive evidence and proof of the soundness and stability as well as of the just and equitable treatment received by the policy-holders and their beneficiaries."

The home offices of the Conservative Life Insurance Company are established in a fine building that bears the company's name and that is owned by the company. This an enlarged and remodeled structure, the base of which was the old post office or Federal Building at Wheeling, and with the purchase more recently of adjoining property, which was situated the Colonial Theater the company now owns a block 132 feet square—one of the most valuable properties in the city.

In conclusion may be given extracts from a New York financial periodical, the New York Commercial, whose representative found fully justified the "claim that Wheeling has one of the most successful and best managed life insurance companies in cities of this class in America. The article further states that the ultimate test of a company's financial solidity is the relation of liabilities to assets, and that, gauged by this test, some of the small insurance companies hold the commanding position, "and this is true of the Conservative Life of Wheeling." In commenting on the specially liberal policies marking the conduct of the business and the company's adoption of "multiform" insurance, the article continues thus: "The contract has been the means of the company writing much more business in its home state as any other company operating in the State of West Virginia, and the contract has proved so popular that it is now being copied by some of the older and larger companies. The wonderful success and progress of this enterprising concern is due to the competent staff of officers and agents. Clem E. Peters, the efficient secretary and treasurer of the company, who is recognized as one of the leading insurance men of the district, has perhaps been more of a factor in bringing the company through to its present high standing than any other individual connected therewith, because it has been through his untiring efforts that the company has attained its present high rank in financial circles.

Of the secretary and treasurer of the company most specific mention is made in preceding biography.

WALTER ELMO CHORPENNING. The Chorpenning family, while not one of the oldest in Preston County, have for seventy years occupied one of the most historic homes on homesteads of the county.

This farm is still referred to occasionally as the old Forman place. The historic log mansion was built there by Isaac Forman in 1794. The apple orchard planted about the same time continued to bear fruit for 100 years. One of the sturdy trees produced regularly fifty bushels annually throughout its mature lifetime. The first newspaper published in Preston County was issued from the old log house on this farm, its publishers and proprietors being Frank Alter and Joseph Miller. The newspaper was called into existence during the memorable presidential campaign of 1840 and was named "The Mt. Pleasant Democrat" or the "Preston County Democrat." The paper's name belied its politics and confused or misled those who did not know its political tendencies, since it was a strong whig organ.

In 1850 this farm was acquired by Jonathan Chorpenning, and it has remained in the Chorpenning name ever since, the present owner being Millard Fillmore Chorpenning. Jonathan Chorpenning was a son of Judge Henry Chorpenning, of Somerset County, Pennsylvania. Judge Chorpenning married Mary Shoaf. Jonathan Chorpenning had a large family of fourteen children. Among these are named Jonathan, Malinda, Franklin, Mrs. Clarissa Brown Elizabeth, who married Cyrus Shader, Henrietta, who became the wife of William B. Marks, Hannah, Harrison Simon Michael and Millard Fillmore.

Jonathan Chorpenning spent his life at the old homestead. His son Millard Fillmore Chorpenning was born the year after the family came to Preston County and like his father before him, he acquired a liberal education and used it to the advantage of agriculture and his community. February 2, 1885, he married Nancy J. Waddell. Their children were Alonzo J., Charles W., Walter Elmo, Lloyd S., Homer O., Henry Ward, Creed McKinley and Lucy A.

Walter Elmo Chorpenning was born at Brandonville

1888, moved to the old Homestead in 1895 and grew up there in a home where education was prized for its value in the training of good citizens. After finishing his education he took up electrical work, and is in the electrical business at Connellsville, Pennsylvania, where he has had a home since 1906. He married Miss Janet Stone.

ALLEN FORMAN. The activities and service by which he has become so well known and esteemed in the Amboy community of Preston County have been extended over the early half a century Allen Forman has lived there. He has passed the age of three score and ten, but is still attending to his interests as a farmer and lumberman.

Mr. Forman, who is widely known over Preston County on account of his long service on the County Court, was born near Brandonville May 30, 1845. His grandfather, Samuel Forman, came to Preston County, Pennsylvania, and settled in the woods at Brandonville, transforming his labors an unproductive tract into a fruitful farm. He was a member of the Quaker Church and was probably buried in the Quaker Cemetery at Brandonville. By his marriage to Miss Willett he had the following children: Jesse, Ellis, James, Abner, Richard, Hannah, who married John Spurgeon, Anna, who married Alexander Harvey, and Deborah, who married James Harvey, brother of Alexander. It was perhaps due to their Quaker connections that none of these sons became soldiers in the Civil war.

Richard Forman, father of Allen Forman, was born in Brandonville community and though reared a Quaker united with the Methodist denomination after his marriage. He had only the advantages of the country schools, and his active years were spent in farming. He died in 1902, at the age of seventy-three. He was a democrat, though he voted for Abraham Lincoln in 1860. About 1875 he moved to the Amboy locality, and is buried at Gravel Church, near there. His wife, Nancy Fike, was a daughter of Jacob Fike, and she reached the age of eighty-one. Their children were: Allen; Elma, who married John Henry J. Boatman and died in California; James, of Terra Alta; Lewis J., a lawyer at Petersburg, West Virginia; and Lloyd, proprietor of the Forman Surgical Hospital at Buckhannon.

Allen Forman attended the common schools, the Brandonville Academy, and his labors were given to the home farm until after his marriage. In 1875 he located on the farm he now owns and occupies at Amboy. He arrived there with $500 which his father had paid him in wages, and he used this capital in making his first payment on the land, and finished paying for his farm on the installment plan. Fifty acres have been cleared, and since he took possession a similar area has been made ready for crops. On this farm he has grown both grain and stock, and for the past thirty years has also supplemented his business as a manufacturer of lumber on a small scale. He and his sons now operate their mill in partnership, and their product made from local timber supply is largely sold by the local trade, though to some extent shipments have been made outside the county.

Mr. Forman became a member of the County Court as successor of Julius Scheer, representing Union District. Among other colleagues during his long service there were John Jenkins and A. Staley Shaw. He served four straight terms of two years each, and then, after an intermission, as again elected, and had ten years of service to his credit when he retired. The principal work during his term was building roads and bridges, and providing for the poor, but the county had not entered upon the program of permanent highway construction until the last term he was on the board. Mr. Forman cast his first presidential ballot for General Grant in 1888, and has been signed with that party ever since. In former years he was frequently a delegate to county, senatorial and congressional conventions. He has served as a trustee of the Aurora Methodist Church. Mr. Forman has practically all his business interests concentrated on his farm and in his lumber mill, but is also one of the stockholders and a director of the First National Bank of Terra Alta. In Preston County May 30, 1873, he married Miss Carrie Forquer. She was born at Brandonville January 22, 1848, daughter of Samuel and Isabel (McGrew) Forquer. Her mother was a daughter of Colonel James McGrew, representing one of the pioneer families of this section of the state. The original McGrew came from New Jersey to Cumberland, Maryland, in pioneer times. Samuel Forquer and wife had four children: Leroy, who served as a Union soldier and is now living in Pennsylvania; Mattie, who married Harry Smith and lives at Morgantown; Mrs. Forman; and Dayton M., a farmer near Brandonville.

Of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Forman the oldest is Alletta, of Terra Alta, widow of John C. Mayer; Charles H., the oldest son, is associated with his father in the lumber industry at Amboy; Arthur Dayton, a farmer near Amboy, married Myrtle Mason, and their children are Eleanor, Erma and Nancy; Miss Mary is still at home with her parents. The two youngest children were Harry Allen and Nancy, twins. The son died on his graduation day, at the age of twenty-one. Nancy is the deceased wife of E. R. Jones, of Oakland, Maryland.

HON. LEWIS J. FORMAN. Recognized generally as one of the leading attorneys of Grant County, Lewis J. Forman, of Petersburg, is also a descendant of the old and prominent family of Formans which settled in Preston County more than a century and a half ago. He was born on the old family farm near Bruceton Mills, January 7, 1855, and is a son of Richard and Nancy (Fike) Forman, and a brother of Allen Forman, of Preston County, a sketch of whose career precedes this.

Lewis J. Forman lived in the vicinity of Brandonville during the first seventeen years of his life, and in 1872 accompanied his parents to Amboy, near Aurora, where he came to man's estate. He attended the country schools until he was eighteen years of age, at which time he commenced teaching school in Preston County, although he had endeavored to enter this profession one year sooner in Maryland, but the authorities there had refused to examine him for a license to teach because of his youth. He continued teaching school in Preston, Doddridge and Wirt counties, West Virginia, for six years, following which he entered Professor Holbrook's National Normal University, from which he was duly graduated after four years in both the scientific and business or commercial courses. He resumed teaching at that time, first being principal of schools at Fairmont and subsequently at Beavertown, Ohio, and then returned to West Virginia and settled permanently at Petersburg.

Upon assuming his residence at the county seat of Grant County Mr. Forman began the study of law with the firm of Dyer & Pugh. Such phenomenally rapid advancement did he make that he was admitted to the bar of West Virginia eight months later. During this period he went into the country, near town, and taught a short term of school, and in addition to this labor served for a while as a deputy in the county clerk's office, which would make it appear that his time was fully occupied. After his admission to the bar Mr. Forman began the practice of his profession at Petersburg, where he tried his first case in the court. His admission to practice occurred in October, 1883, and in the following year he was elected prosecuting attorney of the county, an office to which he was re-elected for four consecutive terms, serving sixteen years therein. In this office he succeeded the Hon. F. M. Reynolds, who later occupied the bench of this judicial district. In this time Mr. Forman also acted as principal of the Petersburg school for more than two terms, and was also associated as a partner in the law with Judge F. M. Reynolds until the latter was elevated to the bench. He retired from the office of prosecuting attorney in 1900, and since then has applied himself to his private practice, which has advanced greatly in size and importance.

In the matter of politics Mr. Forman grew up in a home where republicanism was strong, and cast his maiden presidential vote for Rutherford B. Hayes. He has cast eleven ballots for presidents, never having missed a national election since casting his initial vote. His convention work as a delegate shows him to have been present at nearly all of the republican state conventions for thirty years. He was formerly a member of the Republican State Committee, and helped engineer the first primary election as a member of the executive committee appointed for that purpose. He was likewise a member of the Congressional Committee for many years, during the incumbency of Judge Dayton in Congress, and was a delegate to the National Republican Committee convention of 1900, assisting in the nomination of President McKinley.

Mr. Forman's first election to office was when he was made prosecuting attorney. He made the race as the republican candidate for state senator in 1900, but political conditions were against him and he was defeated, but by only eighty-one votes. Two years later he was again a candidate, in a new senatorial district, and this time won by 3,500 votes. He represented the Fifteenth Senatorial District for eight years, going into the Senate under the presidency of Hon. Clark May, and when his term expired he was re-elected to succeed himself. During this last term he was a member of the judiciary committee of the body, and held this post all through his service save for the last year, when he was elected president of the Senate. He was instrumental as a legislator this term in securing the passage of a bill establishing the bureau of archives and history, and in addition to introducing and putting through the bill placing county officers on salary, joined in the tax reform legislation which resulted in the passage of the bill which governs today. He has since been a candidate for Congress before the primaries, but lost the nomination.

Senator Forman as a citizen and business man of Petersburg served the town as its mayor five years, and during his administration the municipality was cleared of indebtedness. He was one of the organizers of the Grant County Bank, at which time he was elected president, and is still its chief executive. As a churchman he began his church life as a boy of thirteen years. His parents were Methodists, and he has been a factor in the work of that denomination in each community in which he has resided. He was elected superintendent of the Sunday School of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Petersburg at the time he joined the congregation, and has served the school since 1902. He has the record of fourteen years of attendance upon the school without missing a Sunday, and the school records show others who have an equally remarkable record of attendance. He has been a member of the State Sunday School Executive Committee and is especially interested and concerned with Sunday School work. He is one of the Board of Stewards of the church, and has occasionally attended annual church conferences of the district.

On August 23, 1886, at Petersburg, Senator Forman married Miss Virginia Baker, a daughter of Eli and Frances (Shobe) Baker. Mr. Baker was of an old family of West Virginia and was a hatter by trade and an agriculturist by occupation. Mrs. Baker was a native of Grant County, and Mrs. Forman is one of eight children to reach maturity. She was educated in the common schools, and had an experience of one year as a teacher. She is an active member of the Presbyterian Church, and gave her support to the movement to promote the auxiliary work of the World war. Senator and Mrs. Forman have had no children to grow up. A little girl, Esther Whisler, came into their home by adoption and grew up and was educated as their own child. She passed through the schools of Petersburg, graduated from Randolph Macon Institute at Danville, Virginia, and then took a year's work at Wesleyan College, Buckhannon, coming to womanhood with every preparation for a useful and happy life. She married Bryan F. Mitchell, of Danville, Virginia, and their home is at Petersburg, where Mr. Mitchell is reading law under the preceptorship of Senator Forman.

LACQ LOY YOUNG, sheriff of Harrison County, is a brother to the secretary of state of West Virginia, and both have been men of power in county politics and local affairs for a great many years.

Sheriff Young was born on a farm in Barbour County, West Virginia, December 7, 1869, son of David Sylvester and Sarah Ann (Pickens) Young. His father, a native of Old Virginia, was a child when his parents, William Y. and Hettie (Griffith) Young, moved to Harrison County, West Virginia, where they lived out their lives. He was Scotch Presbyterian. William W. Young became a farmer, also learned the blacksmith's trade, and was one of the pioneers of that occupation in Harrison County. The mother of Sheriff Young was born in West Virginia, daughter of John and Hannah (Corder) Pickens, who came from Old Virginia. She died at the age of fifty-five, leaving four children: Laco L.; Addie V., deceased; Edna L., wife of A. G. Whitesell, of Weston; and Houston G., who is now in his second term as secretary of state of West Virginia and is still a resident of Harrison County. The father of these children is still living on the old homestead not far from where the grandfather settled in Harrison County. David S. Young was a teamster in the United Army during the Civil war.

Laco L. Young grew up on the homestead in Harrison County, made good use of his advantages in the rural schools, and finally attended the Holbrook Normal School at Lebanon, Ohio, now the National Normal University. When only sixteen he was given his first school to teach and for six years he played an effective part in the educational program of his community. His chief occupation throughout his career, however, has been farming, and is one of the men who have achieved something more than ordinary success in agriculture. From the farm interests have taken on a broadening scope and he is interested in the wholesale meat business at Clarksburg.

Mr. Young for a number of years has been active interested in the success of the republican party in Harrison County, but not until 1920 did he come forward as an active candidate for himself. In that year he won the republican nomination for sheriff, and at the November election received the largest vote given to any man on a county ticket. Sheriff Young is a Methodist and a member of the Knights of Pythias.

In 1891 he married Miss Byrdie Stout, daughter of M. and Mrs. Abner S. Stout, of Harrison County. To the marriage were born ten children: Their son Clayton Y. Young is now deputy sheriff under his father, is an ex-service man, and for thirteen months was overseas with the Third Army Division. He is an active member of the American Legion Post of Clarksburg.

CARL H. EBERTS has been actively associated with the Bank of Warwood from the time of its inception, and now its efficient and popular cashier. Special interest attaches to his association with business interests at Warwood, a village that is now a part of the City of Wheeling by reason of the fact the old family homestead farm was partially included in the site of the town at the time it was founded. He was born on the site of Warwood, the present title of which was given when around the plant the Warwood Tool Company, established at this point, village began to develop, the same later being made an integral part of Wheeling. Here Mr. Eberts was born December 18, 1888, a son of George S. and Mary (Weiske) Eberts, the latter of whom likewise was born in the Warwood locality, her father, Herman Weiske, having he died when she was a child.

George S. Eberts was a child when his parents, Jacob and Caroline Eberts, established their home on a farm a part of which is now included in Warwood, and on the old homestead the parents passed the remainder of the lives, the farm eventually passing into the possession of George S., who later became prominent in securing the right of way for the street railway through this section and who finally sold the farm to the Loveland Investment Company, in which he became a director. In this connection he aided in the platting of his former farm (seventy-two acres) into town lots, and he became one of the vital and progressive men of the new town. He was one of the organizers and incorporators of the Bank of Warwood in 1911, and continued a director of the same until his death, July 20, 1921. Mr. Eberts was a stockholder in the Wheeling Wall Plaster Company and had active management ent of its manufacturing plant at Warwood. In 1918 he became manager of the Glenova Coal Company, with which continued thus connected until his death. Under his direction the mines of the company were opened, and the enterprise has been one of importance in connection with industrial advancement of Warwood. The Glenova Coal Company has sixty acres of coal land, and the output of the mines is sold to local factories and homes. The property and business are controlled by the family of Mr. Eberts. Mr. Eberts served twenty-five years as a member of the School Board of his district, which comprised all of the Richland District and included Warwood, where he established the district high school. He was a staunch democrat, and was an earnest communicant of the Lutheran Church, as is also his widow. The family own also mining enterprises conducted under the title of the Tesapeake Coal Company, at Bellaire, Ohio, and the Valley Grove Coal Company, likewise at Bellaire, of which Carl H., of this sketch, is vice-president and treasurer. T. H. Johnson, of Bellaire, being the president. Three children survive the honored father, and of the number Carl H. is the eldest; George J. is secretary of the John S. Naylor Company of Wheeling; and Harry W. is secretary of the Tesapeake Coal Company at Bellaire, Ohio.

Carl H. Eberts gained his early education in the public schools, and in his eighteenth year he took a minor position in the Quarter Savings Bank at Wheeling, in which he served two months without compensation and in which he eventually won promotion to the position of teller. In 1911 he became the active promoter of the Bank of Warwood, which was incorporated with a capital of $25,000, the stock being held by citizens of the immediate community. The bank opened its doors May 1, 1911, and Mr. Eberts has been its cashier from the beginning, the while careful and progressive executive policies and his personal popularity have insured greatly to the success of the enterprise. The present bank building, of modern architecture and equipment, was completed and occupied in January, 1914, a two-story brick structure, with the banking offices, and with a second room that is used for mercantile purposes. W. E. Helfenbine, the first president of the bank, was succeeded in 1913 by the present incumbent, F. Kenamond, and J. H. McDonald is the vice president. The bank has a safe-deposit department and is an institution that plays a large part in the general business life of the community. It now has surplus and undivided profits of $25,000, it has paid regular six per cent dividends, and its deposits average about $500,000.

Mr. Eberts takes vital interest in all that concerns the welfare of his home community, and he and his wife are zealous and influential communicants of the Lutheran Church at Warwood, he being chairman of its Board of Trustees and vice president of its council. He was a delegate to the Synodical Conference of the church at Fairmont, in 1921, and in the preceding year was a delegate to the United Lutheran Conference held in the City of Washington, D. C. He has completed the circle of both Ark and Scottish Rite Masonry, in the latter of which he has received the thirty-second degree, besides being affiliated with the Mystic Shrine and the Order of the Eastern Star, of which latter his wife likewise is a member. His wife's maiden name was Emma Johnson, the daughter of T. H. Johnson, Bellaire, Ohio, who has been actively engaged in coal operations for more than forty years. Mr. and Mrs. Eberts have one son, Herman Carl.

CLARENCE BURDETTE SPERRY. The firm of Sperry & Sperry, lawyers, has for many years enjoyed an enviable reputation in the Harrison County bar, a county that has seen some of the most distinctive abilities to the professional affairs of the state. The members of this firm are Melvin G. and Clarence Burdette Sperry, brothers, natives of West Virginia.

Their father was the late Rev. Ezra Cortland Sperry, who was born in Cortland, New York, in 1827. The duties of his life were divided between his duties as a Baptist minister and as a farmer. He removed to Harrison County in 1851, and died January 9, 1908. His wife was Mary M. Patton, who was born and reared in Harrison County. They became the parents of a large family, those growing to maturity being Edgar A., Mary C., Alexander L., Leonora, Rulina, Melvin G., Ezra C., Clarence B., Ernest V., Earl M., Ida L. and Percy C.

Clarence Burdette Sperry was born on his father's farm in Doddridge County, West Virginia, October 10, 1869. The country was his environment during his youth, and he finished a public school education and for three terms taught school. He spent two years in the law school of the University of West Virginia at Morgantown, was admitted to the bar, and in 1900 became associated with his brother Melvin G. Sperry in the firm of Sperry & Sperry at Clarksburg. Mr. Sperry has also been interested in gas and other industrial development in his section of the state.

He is a democrat in politics, is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Elks and is a member of the Baptist Church. At Clarksburg April 16, 1908, he married Margaret O. McKinley, who was born in Harrison County in 1885, daughter of William P. McKinley. Her father was a Union soldier in the Civil war and a native of Harrison County. Mr. and Mrs. Sperry have one daughter, Margaret Eleanor, born March 3, 1909.

JAMES EDWARD LAW. The educated, reputable lawyer is invariably ranked with the worth-while citizens of a community, and this is true at Clarksburg, West Virginia, as in other cities. An able representative of this profession here is James Edward Law, formerly prosecuting attorney, who belongs by birth and parentage to Harrison County.

James E. Law was born near Salem, Harrison County, West Virginia, April 27, 1872, a son of Jesse Daugherty and Nancy (Hooper) Law, and a grandson of William Law and Nicholas Hooper, the paternal grandfather being a native of Ireland, of Scotch-Irish lineage, and the latter of Harrison County. Jesse Daugherty Law served as a soldier in the Union Army during the war between the states, and afterward followed the peaceful life of a farmer and stockman. His death occurred when sixty-eight years of age, his widow surviving to be seventy-two years of age. They reared a family of two daughters and five sons. Mr. and Mrs. Law were highly esteemed in their neighborhood and were faithful members of the Methodist Protestant Church.

James E. Law had educational privileges in the public schools, then became a student in Salem College and later matriculated in the West Virginia University, where he took both a classical and law course and was graduated in 1899 and admitted to the bar in the same year. He located immediately at Clarksburg, where he opened a law office and was elected prosecuting attorney of Harrison County, serving as such from 1901, to 1904, inclusive. In 1918 he formed a law partnership with Anthony F. McCue, under the firm name of Law and McCue.

He helped to organize the Farmers Bank at Clarksburg in 1904, and has since been one of its directors. He has been equally useful in other public capacities, and served as county superintendent of schools from 1895 to 1899, with the greatest efficiency. He had taught school in his younger years, and thus had a personal understanding of the educational problems facing teachers and boards of education.

In 1901 Mr. Law was united in marriage with Miss Edna Husted, who was born and reared in Harrison County. They have two children, a son and daughter, James Edward and Carolyn Waldo. Mr. Law and his family belong to the Methodist Episcopal Church. Like all broad-minded, intelligent men, Mr. Law takes a deep interest in public affairs and to some extent in the local political field. As was his father, he is a sturdy supporter of the principles of the republican party. Fraternally he is an Odd Fellow, and on many occasions, as a foremost citizen, is called on to serve, officially or otherwise, on boards and committees concerned with the public welfare.

JAMES NOAH HESS has had an active part in the banking interests of Clarksburg for the past twenty years, being assistant cashier of the Empire National Bank, one of the leading banks not only of that city but of the State of West Virginia. He is a member of one of the very oldest families in this section of West Virginia, his ancestors having been obliged to protect their homes in this wilderness against the Indians.

The original ancestor of this branch of the Hess family was Balsar Hess (sometimes spelled Balthaser) a Hollander, who came over on the ship Neptune from Rotterdam in 1751, landing at Philadelphia September 24, 1751, and afterward settled in Winchester District of old Virginia, and from there came to Scotts Mill Run, Monongalia County, West Virginia, and everything here was a typically frontier character. For the greater part the Hesses have been farmers, have been members of the Methodist Church, and in politics for the last two or three generations, republicans. The children of Balsar Hess, the original settler, were James, who moved to Indiana, Charles who settled at the mouth of Deats Creek, near the Village of Granville, Monongalia County, West Virginia, and Jeremiah Hess, who was born in Winchester District of Virginia, November 20, 1779, and died near Teversvaugh, Marion County, April 20, 1855. He married Elizabeth Henry, daughter of Aaron Henry, who about 1785 moved from Winchester District, Virginia, settled on Scotts Mill Run, Monongalia County, Virginia, now West Virginia. He was a native of old Virginia and a member of the same family that produced the famous orator of the Revolution, Patrick Henry. Jeremiah Hess had ten children, Abraham, born January 21, 1804, Charles, January 3, 1807, Rebecca, June 29, 1808, Henry, June 28, 1809, Peter, Jeremiah, May 22, 1812, Elizabeth, March 16, 1814, Catherine, November 4, 1815, Mahale, June 21, 1817, and Eleanor, September 2, 1822.

The next generation of this family was represented by Peter Hess, who was born in Marion County, West Virginia, September 26, 1810, and lived for many years near Teversvaugh on Harter Hill in that county, where he died January 4, 1891. He married Orpha Sandy, daughter of William and Rhoda (Shinn) Sandy, who was born in the same county April 3, 1816, and died March 19, 1882. Their children were named: John W., born November 7, 1833, died at Harter Hill October 13, 1889. Mahlon S., born August 16, 1835, died at Harter Hill February 15, 1856, Mary E., born August 3, 1837, died at Oakland, Maryland, August 25, 1911. Robert Nelson, born October 17, 1839, was killed at the battle of Fisher's Hill, Shenandoah Valley, Virginia, September 22, 1864. Jeremiah William, born August 17, 1841, died at Wyatt, West Virginia, March 25, 1910. George W., born September 24, 1843, died at Centerville, Tyler County, West Virginia, July 10, 1880. David L., born July 13, 1845, died at Harter Hill May 9, 1854. Lavina Jane, born January 28, 1847, is now living at Corbin, Sumner County, Kansas. Peter L., born January 28, 1850, died at Harter Hill March 27, 1896. Richard Marion, born December 13, 1852, died at Corbin, Kansas, August 25, 1919. Sarah S., born March 16, 1857, died at Oakland, Maryland, August 10, 1912. Abraham Milroy, born October 2, 1862, is now living at Shinnston, West Virginia.

Of these children Jeremiah William was the father of the Clarksburg banker. He was born at Harter Hill in Marion County, August 17, 1841, and died on his farm at Wyatt, Harrison County, March 25, 1910. He married Mary M. Sturm, daughter of Jesse and Matilda (Davis) Sturm who was born in Harrison County, May 26, 1840, and died December 21, 1908. She was a granddaughter of Jacob Sturm, Sr., who as a boy enlisted under the banner of the Revolutionary patriots and followed the fortunes of the illustrious Washington in our country's struggle for independence. He was with the father of our country amid the hardships and stern realities of the long, cruel war, and was with him at Yorktown when he received the sword of the conquered Cornwallis.

Their four children were: William Wallace, born May 2, 1867, Iva Eliza, born June 12, 1869, James Noah, born September 9, 1871, and Daisy Dean, born March 6, 1873. The children of William Wallace are Raymond Cline, Mr. M., Geneva I. and Mildred. Daisy Dean (Hess) Barge only child, Irene, married William H. Edwards.

Jeremiah W. Hess was a very strong character and notable citizen of Harrison County in his day. Through the period of the Civil war he served in the Union Army first as a private of Company E, Third West Virginia Infantry; Company E, Third West Virginia Mount Infantry and Company C in the Sixth West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, on March 25, 1865, was promoted commissary sergeant of his company. His brother, Robt. Nelson Hess, was a lieutenant in the Union Army, and was killed in the battle of Fisher's Hill September 22, 1864. He was in Company H of the Fourteenth West Virginia Infantry. Jeremiah W. Hess was a staunch republican politician, and for two terms represented his county in the West Virginia legislature, during 1894-96 and 1896-98, for a number of years held the office of justice of the peace. He was also president of the Board of Education of the magisterial district. He and his wife were both Methodists.

James Noah Hess, who was born at Wyatt, Harrison County, on a farm, September 9, 1871, spent his early life on that farm and in the meanwhile acquired a common school education, also attending Spring Normal School. For six years he taught in the rural districts of the county. Subsequently he completed a course in the West Virginia Business College at Clarksburg, and then for one year was a bookkeeper for the Waverly Stone Company, Waverly, Ohio, this being the only period of his life when he was not a resident of Harrison County. In March 1897, he moved to Clarksburg, where he has since resided. For six years Mr. Hess was deputy county clerk of Harrison County. When the Empire National Bank of Clarksburg began business, November 30, 1903, Mr. Hess was bookkeeper. He is now an assistant cashier. He has been continuously associated with the institution since its organization. He is also a stockholder in the Union National bank at Clarksburg. He is secretary of the board of education, Clarksburg School District, which position has held for the past twelve years.

He is a staunch republican, and for fifteen years has been a member of the Harrison County Republican Executive Committee. For two years he was a member of the Clarksburg City Council. He is a member of the First Methodist Episcopal Church. He is Past Eminent Commander of Clarksburg Commandery No. 13; Knight Templar, was for twelve years secretary of his Blue Lodge and at present is treasurer of Hermon Lodge No. 6, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. He is a Thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and a Shriner, a member of the Clarksburg Country Club, secretary-treasurer of the West Virginia Fair Association and a director of the Clarksburg Building and Loan Association.

November 19, 1895, Mr. Hess married Miss Lenna Leach Hess, a daughter of Jeremiah F. and Minerva Jane (Cunningham) Hess, of Marion County. The children born to their marriage are: Victor Howell, born July 26, 1896, Ethel Lenore, born October 19, 1898, Bernard Leo, born December 19, 1901, Edith Evelyn, born September 17, 1903, James Noah, Jr., born October 8, 1908, Helen born February 20, 1912, died June 18, 1913, and Lenna Jean born November 13, 1916.

The oldest son, Victor Howell Hess, volunteered service in the World war with the First West Virginia National Guard, Machine Gun Company, on June 11, 1917, at the age of twenty years, at Fairmont, Marion County, West Virginia. He left Camp Cornwell on September 19, 1917, for Camp Shelby at Hattiesburg, Mississippi; was transferred from First West Virginia National Guard Machine Gun Company, to Company D, One Hundred and Thirty-seventh Machine Gun Battalion of the Regular Army; was promoted from private to the position of assistant to supply sergeant, with rank as corporal, on November 6, 1917; was transferred to Company D, One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Machine Gun Battalion, and about May 1, 1918, was ordered to Camp Hancock, August

W. H. Harkness

Virginia. June 13, 1918, he was promoted to sergeant of Training Camp No. 13, Main Training Depot, Machine Gun, Training Center, and was made instructor in machine gunnery, infantry drill, liaison signalling, gas and flame warfare, physical training and bayonet drill.

Lieutenant Hess entered the Officers Training School at Camp Hancock, was commissioned a second lieutenant of Infantry, U. S. Reserve Corps, on December 10, 1918, and was honorably discharged December 11, 1918, having been in the service exactly eighteen months.

JOHN MATTHEW GAY FAIRFAX. The community of Reedsville has in the person of John Matthew Gay Fairfax not only a splendid example of sturdy citizenship but also the representative of one of the most distinguished families of Old Virginia and Maryland. He is a grandson of Colonel John Fairfax, who at one time was manager of the estate of General Washington, and whose duties brought him to the Washington lands west of the Alleghenies and eventually he settled here permanently, the story being more fully told in the record of another of his descendants.

John M. Gay Fairfax was born at the Fairfax farm, now at Arthurdale farm, a son of the late George Washington Fairfax, who died near Reedsville October 25, 1885, at the age of seventy-three. The wife of George W. Fairfax was Margaret S. Gay. Her father was Robert Gay and her mother was a Stewart, accounting for that name in her christian name. Margaret S. Gay was born in County Donegal, Ireland, in 1819, and came to the United States with her parents at the age of twelve, in 1831. She died February 13, 1859. Her three children to grow up were Emma M. G., Emma R., who married D. C. Watson and lived in Reedsville; and Anna C., now Mrs. John Shields, Mendocino County, California.

John M. Gay Fairfax was born July 10, 1847, and his early youth was spent at his birthplace. He finished his primary education in E. K. Lozier's Commercial College in Baltimore, and was a bookkeeper in that city until that occupation proved too confining for his health. He then returned home, and subsequently became a teacher in the Reedsville schools, teaching his first term near home. He taught in a school in Taylor County and the remainder of his early years of educational work was passed in Preston County. He then spent a summer in the employ of the Keystone Bridge Company at Pittsburgh, the next year dug for a Uniontown coal company in Westmoreland County, near Scottsdale, and subsequently was employed as an engineer by the Overholt Distilling Company. He then went to Louisville, Kentucky, and for eight months was with his uncle, William Gay, in his last illness. About that time he chose a profession, entering the Philadelphia Dental College, and continued his studies until he was qualified to practice. He was a dentist at Gladesville and his home community, and was active in the profession and in the introduction of the marvelous modern dental instruments and apparatus and nearly all his work was hand work and of a quality that seldom failed.

Eventually Mr. Fairfax resumed farming, at first on the site of his father near Reedsville, and he then bought David C. Miles farm and later the Heidelberg farm, where his activities have continued since. Grain growing and stock raising have been his chief productive efforts, although now almost seventy-five he is still alert, vigorous and closely attentive to all the details of farm management. He possesses a rugged constitution, and still enjoys life for its own sake and for the opportunities of full toil and effort it affords.

Mr. Fairfax for many years was active in county politics. He was a democrat, and he himself cast his first presidential ballot for Governor Seymour of New York. He was hostile to the proposed fusion nomination of Horace Mayfield for president, knowing the abolition record of that candidate and realizing that his acceptance of the nomination was a confession of an overwhelming ambition for the presidency. He did not vote in the general election of that year, but since then has consistently aided every candidate of his party and has been a delegate to various conventions, both local and state. In 1896 he supported Bryan and the free silver issue, and he continued lending his influence as well as his vote to campaigns until advancing age caused him to give up all political activity except voting. He is a Presbyterian, and joined Valley Lodge No. 97 of the Odd Fellows at Reedsville in March, 1889, and is a past grand representative and has attended many meetings of the Grand Lodge.

Mr. Fairfax a number of years ago became associated with the late B. M. Despard in the coal business. They optioned and sold 5,000 acres of coal in Preston County, and he still owns a similar number of acres in Taylor County. He is a charter member of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Reedsville, was one of the most active in promoting that institution and is still on its Board of Directors.

At Cumberland, Maryland, March 17, 1876, Mr. Fairfax married Miss Sadie Reed, daughter of Peter and Mary J. (Gilbert) Reed, of Franklin County, Pennsylvania. She was born in that county October 28, 1856. Two sons were born to Mr. and Mrs. Fairfax. George W. was killed in a runaway when thrown from his cart at the age of sixteen. The surviving representative of the family and the chief lieutenant of his father on the farm is Ralph Bernard Fairfax, who was born September 23, 1881, and has spent all his active life on the home farm. He served as democratic committeeman for Valley District. August 29, 1902, he married Miss Nellie M. Dent of Morgantown. They have an interesting family of four young children, Margaret G., William Dent, Mary Virginia and Francis Gaylord.

HAROLD R. MARKELL is the president of the Packard Motor Company of Wheeling. He was born in Cornwall, Ontario, Canada, by the beautiful St. Lawrence River, on June 21, 1887. Mr. Markell completed his schooling at Morrisburg Collegiate Institute and started his business career with the Metropolitan Bank of Canada. He later went to the far West and for six years managed several different branches of the Northern Crown Bank in the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan. During the latter period of his sojourn in Saskatchewan he gained his initial experience in the selling of automobiles, and in 1914 became associated with the Packard Motor Company at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. In July, 1915, his company decided to open a branch at Wheeling, West Virginia, and he was chosen as manager of the new branch. Packard's business at Wheeling has enjoyed a steady expansion until in the spring of 1922 Mr. Markell formed a new $100,000 corporation, of which he is now president and Mr. George Row is secretary and treasurer. The new Packard Company is, at the time of going to press, erecting at Pleasant Valley, Wheeling, an automobile sales and service station which will be second to none in the Ohio Valley. The building is to have a frontage of 135 feet and a depth of 200 feet. It will require an average working force of about twenty-five employees.

In 1917 Mr. Markell married Elizabeth Cassell Stamm, daughter of Frank H. Stamm and granddaughter of Peter Cassell, and so is closely related to two of Wheeling's oldest and most influential families. Mr. and Mrs. Markell have two children, Betty Jane and Virginia.

During the past several years Mr. Markell has taken a considerable interest in club life and is now a member of the Fort Henry and Country Clubs, is a Scottish Rite Mason, a Kiwanian and a director of the Motors Trading Corporation.

WILLIAM T. JONES, of Omar, Logan County, is general manager of large and important coal-mining properties in this district and, though he is still a young man, he has had exceptional wide and varied experience in connection with the coal-producing industry.

Mr. Jones was born in the City of Washington, D. C., on the 14th of May, 1889, and is a son of Richard and Josephine (McAuliffe) Jones, the former a native of the State of Maryland and the latter of the District of Columbia, the father having become a successful and representative wholesale grocery merchant in the national capital.

William T. Jones is indebted to the parochial and public schools of his native city for his early education, which was supplemented by his attending Mount St. Joseph College in the City of Baltimore, Maryland. After leaving this institution he entered the employ of the Union Mining Company at Mount Savage, Maryland, where, as a mining engineer, he assisted in track construction, besides serving as assistant mine boss. He continued three years in the employ of this company and thereafter was for a time assistant foreman with the Davis Colliery Company. He next became assistant to A. J. King, who was in the consulting engineering business in Charleston, West Virginia, for 3½ years. He then came to Omar, Logan County, in the capacity of mine inspector and engineer for the Main Island Creek Coal Company. His efficiency led to his advancement to the post of superintendent, and in 1919 he was made general manager of all of the company's properties and productive activities in this district, where he is now manager of the Proctor Coal Company, the Five Block Coal Company, the Superior Eagle Coal Company, the Middle Fork Mining Company, the Omar Coal Company and the Madison Coal Company, in all thirty-one mines, besides which he is vice president of the Chafin, Jones & Heatherman Coal Company of Peach Creek, this county, an operating corporation which made its first shipment of coal (eight cars) on the 1st of March, 1922. Don Chafin is president of this company, and Dr. K. J. Heatherman, secretary, treasurer and general manager. Fidelity as well as ability and effective service have brought about the advancement of Mr. Jones, and he has made and is making a splendid record as one of the world's productive workers. He and his wife are communicants of the Catholic Church, and he is affiliated with the Knights of Columbus and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

At Charleston, in the year 1917, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Jones and Miss Rose Crump, daughter of James and Mary Crump, both natives of West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Jones have two daughters: Josephine and Mary Jane.

KENNA J. HEATHERMAN, M. D., is engaged in the successful practice of his profession at Omar, Logan County, where he is official physician and surgeon for the Main Island Creek Coal Company and the Middle Fork Coal Company, besides which he is secretary, treasurer and manager of the Chafin-Jones-Heatherman Coal Company, a new operating corporation which made its first shipment of coal from its mine at Peach Creek, Logan County in March, 1922.

Doctor Heatherman was born at Bramwell, Mercer County, West Virginia, on the 8th of December, 1889, and is a son of William T. and Harriet Ann (Gilmore) Heatherman, the former of whom was born in West Virginia and the latter in Ireland, the father being now superintendent of mines at Powhatan, near Bramwell, in which former place he and his wife maintain their home. The Heatherman family ancestry is of Scotch-Irish origin.

Doctor Heatherman acquired in the schools at Powhatan, McDowell County, his early education, and in 1908 he graduated in a preparatory school in the City of Baltimore, Maryland. He then entered the medical department of the University of Louisville, Kentucky, and in this institution he was graduated in 1912, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He engaged in practice at Glenalm, Mingo County, West Virginia, as mine physician for the War Eagle Coal Company, and there he remained until January, 1918, when he removed to Omar to assume mine practice for the various mines controlled by the Main Island Creek Coal Company. He has proved personally and professionally equal to the responsibilities placed upon him in connection with a large and important mine practice, which includes many surgical cases, and he utilizes the hospital facilities at Huntington, Hatfield and other points. The Doctor was anxious to enter the Medical Corps of the United States Army in connection with the world war, but field production was a matter of major importance during that climatic period and he was held to his executive professional duties at the mines, where the government considered his services of equal value. He is a member of the Logan County Medical Society, the West Virginia State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. The Doctor is affiliated with the Pi Mu medical college fraternity.

At Louisville, Kentucky, in 1912, Doctor Heatherman married Miss Pearl May Arbuckle, daughter of J. M. Jane Arbuckle, the Arbuckle family having been one of prominence in Indiana. Mrs. Heatherman's death occurred at Omar, and she is survived by two children, Kenna Jr., and Harriet Jane.

JAMES O. HILL, M. D., has been engaged in the successful practice of his profession at Logan, county seat of Logan County, since 1912, and has specialized in obstetrics and the diseases of children. He was born on his father's farm in Putnam County, this state, May 1881, and is a son of George F. and Nancy S. (Bail) Hill, the former of whom was born in what is now West Virginia and the latter in Virginia. She was nine years of age when her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Bailey, came to West Virginia, about 1867, and established their home in Putnam County, where they passed the remainder of their lives. Tradition in the Hill family is to the effect that three brothers of the name came to this country from their native Ireland and first made their way to Pennsylvania, whence they continued their journey by boat to the Ohio River to what is now Point Pleasant, West Virginia. Two of the brothers continued their way and subsequently settled in the eastern part of Virginia, the one who remained in what is now West Virginia having been the ancestor of the subject of this review. The father of Doctor Hill served many years as a member of the School board of his district, was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and both he and his wife became specially earnest and active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Doctor Hill acquired his earlier education in the public schools of Putnam and Jackson counties, later continued his studies in Marras & Harvey College, at Barboursville and in 1912 was graduated from the medical department of the University of Louisville, Kentucky, in the meanwhile having there gained valuable experience by serving a year as a hospital interne. In the year in which he thus received his degree of Doctor of Medicine he established his home at Logan, and here he has developed a large and representative practice of general order, with special attention given to obstetrics and diseases of children, which department of practice he has gained high reputation. In 1915 and 1917 the Doctor did effective advance work in the Post-Graduate Medical College in the City of New York. In the World War period he served as a member of the Medical Examining Board that had charge of examination of recruited soldiers in Logan County, and was active and influential in furthering the success of the local drives in support of the Government war loans, Red Cross, etc. He is actively identified with the Logan County Medical Society and the West Virginia State Medical Society, has received the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite of the Masonic fraternity, besides being a member of the Mystic Shrine, and he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

The year 1914 recorded at Logan the marriage of Doctor Hill and Miss Lena Ferrell, daughter of Anthony and Elizabeth (Mullins) Ferrell, both natives of West Virginia and both still residents of Logan County. Doctor and Mrs. Hill have two daughters: Elizabeth Ann and Nan Susan.

JOSEPH LACONIA MCCLUNG. A representative of prominent old Greenbrier County family, Joseph Lacombe McClung is a graduate Doctor of Dental Surgery from Baltimore, and for a number of years has been successfully established in his professional work at Huntington.

Doctor McClung was born at Rupert, Greenbrier County, October 26, 1877. The McClung family is of Scotch-Irish estry, and there were seven brothers of the name who came to Virginia in Colonial times. The grandfather of Doctor McClung was Hinton McClung, a native of old Virginia and an early settler in Greenbrier County, where he was a farmer. He married Miss Jones, also born in old Virginia, who died in Greenbrier County. Their son, Wilson McClung, father of Doctor McClung, was born in Greenbrier County in 1838, was reared and married there, owned and operated an extensive farm. After 1894 he farmed in Putnam County, and after he retired from the farm in 1917 he lived in Huntington until his death on February 1, 1919. He was a democrat, has served four years in the Civil war as a Confederate soldier, was a very active member of the Baptist Church and was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity. Madison McClung married Martha Martin, who was born in Greenbrier County in 1845, and died at Hurricane, Putnam County in 1903. Her father, John Mack Martin, was born in old Virginia in 1813, was a circuit rider of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and carried on his work in many of the mountain communities of Western Virginia, where he was widely known and greatly beloved. He died at Hurricane in 1900. His wife and the mother of Martha Martin was a Miss Lane, a native of old Virginia, who died in Greenbrier County. Madison McClung and wife had thirteen children, five of whom died in childhood, and a brief record of the others is given: Nora, wife of Leonard Shawver, a farmer at Clarksburg, Fayette County, West Virginia; Clonnie V., who was connected with the International Harvester Company and died at Hurricane at the age of forty-five; Mintie, wife of William F. Wilson, building contractor of Louisa, Kentucky; Laura, who died at Hurricane at the age of twenty-four; Samuel Tilden, a physician, who died in Colorado, aged twenty-six; Richard, for a number of years a civil service employee of the Government, living at Huntington; Joseph L.; Albert, a foreman for the Norfolk and Western Railway at Portsmouth, Ohio; Mrs. Dena Leighton, at Huntington, widow of a railroad contractor; Maude, who died at Huntington at the age of twenty-seven, wife of J. H. Irwin, now a locomotive engineer, living at Russell, Kentucky; and Mrs. Mona Slack, wife of a railroad engineer living at Handley, West Virginia. Joseph Laconia McClung acquired his early education in the rural schools of Greenbrier and Putnam counties. He grew up on his father's farm and at the age of twenty-one began teaching, and for two years taught in Putnam County and two years in Fayette County. After leaving the work of the school room he entered the University of Maryland at Baltimore for his dental course, and graduated in 1905 with the degree D. D. S. Doctor McClung practiced six years at Olive Hill, Kentucky, and four years at Mount Sterling, Kentucky, and since 1914 has been one of the permanent dentists of Huntington. He is a member of the National Dental Association, is a stockholder and has been vice president of the Mid West Oil Company and has other interests in oil and coal companies. He is a democrat, a member of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church and assistant secretary of the Sunday School, is associated with Mount Sterling Lodge, A. F. and A. M., Kentucky. Among other real estate in Huntington is his home, located in a restricted residential section, at Ninth Avenue. On October 11, 1905, near Hurricane, old Virginia, Doctor McClung married Miss Stella Smith, daughter of John P. and Sarah (Martin) Smith, residents of Mt. Albans, West Virginia. Her father is a farmer. Doctor and Mrs. McClung have one child, Daryl Smith, born August 24, 1906.

JOHN DIECKMANN. At Park View, on the National Road, about five miles from the center of the City of Wheeling, within the corporate limits of the city, Mr. Dieckmann is successfully established in business as a florist. He has maintained his headquarters since 1909, his floral business having been founded in the City of Wheeling in 1904. At Park View Mr. Dieckmann purchased fifty-five acres of pasture land, and here he has developed one of the largest and most modern flower-propagating plants in the state. In his greenhouses he now has 1000 square feet under glass. In the supplying of the finest of cut flowers and decorative plants for both lawns and homes he has built up a large and successful business, and he is a recognized authority in floriculture. He came to Wheeling in 1901, and from the position of employee with a company in the floral business he became a stockholder in the company and finally became sole owner of the business, he having had a capital of only $500 when he initiated his business career in the city. He now has secure standing as the largest and most successful flower-grower in the state, and the development of the splendid business has been the result of his technical ability, close application and progressive policies.

Mr. Dieckmann was born near Hamburg, Germany, in 1870, and was there reared and educated. There he gained an experience of more than ten years in the nursery and floriculture business, and in 1895 he came to the United States and found employment at Wadsworth, Ohio, at $1.50 a day. Later he was placed in charge of a leading floral business at Cleveland, Ohio, and he conducted an independent business at Akron, that state, for two years, saving the little reserve capital of $500 with which he initiated his business career at Wheeling, West Virginia. He supplies the local florists in Wheeling and other cities of the state, and makes shipments also to Steubenville and other places in Ohio. In the activities of the business he retains an average of twenty-one employees. His attractive residence is on the grounds of his fine floral plant, and in the basement of the house his business offices are maintained. He is a director in the bank at Fulton, and is an elder in St. Mark's Lutheran Church at Elm Grove.

At Wadsworth, Ohio, Mr. Dieckmann married Miss Lucy Pfeiffer, who was born in that town, of German parentage. They have three sons: Ernest John, a high-school graduate, is, in 1921, a student of floriculture at Cornell University, Ithaca, New York; William Pfeiffer is a student in the Capital University at Columbus, Ohio; and Herbert is a member of the class of 1922 in Triadelphia District High School of Wheeling.

JOHN C. LINTHICUM, now serving his third term as mayor of Romney, has been a resident of that city for over twenty years, for a long time was in the service of the state government at the Institution for the Deaf and Blind, and his active career throughout has been strongly tinged with the public service.

He was born at Moorefield, West Virginia, September 17, 1869. His grandfather, Joel Linthicum, was a shoe maker of Hampshire County, and died in Romney about 1878. He married a Miss Davis, and their children were: William, who died in Illinois; Elijah, who spent his active life at Decatur, Illinois; James, a retired shoemaker living near Richmond, Virginia; Joseph M.; Benjamin, who died at Romney; Mollie, who married Frank Maloney and died in Hampshire County; Margaret, wife of Joseph M. Poling and a resident of Romney.

Joseph M. Linthicum, father of Romney's mayor, was born in Hampshire County, September 10, 1843. As a youth he learned the trade of shoemaker and leather tanning, and worked at one or the other of these occupations throughout his active life. He is now living retired at Keyser. During the war between the states he was member of a Virginia regiment in the Confederate Army, and took part in several of the campaigns of the Army of Northern Virginia. He was never wounded or captured, and served throughout as a private. Joseph M. Linthicum married Elizabeth Hyder, daughter of Thompson Hyder.

John C. Linthicum spent his early life at Moorefield, attended the Moorefield Academy, and at the age of sixteen left school and learned the trade of harness maker with his father. As a journeyman he followed this trade both in and out of his home state, and in 1901 came to Romney and took charge of the shoe and harness department of the West Virginia Schools for the Deaf and Blind. That was his work for fifteen years, and for eight years of the time he was also chief engineer of the schools. Since leaving the state service in 1916 Mr. Linthicum has conducted an insurance and coal business at Romney.

In 1921 he was put in charge as foreman of construction for the girls' dormitory of the West Virginia Schools for the Deaf and Blind, and in that capacity he supervised the construction of the new building, beginning in March, 1921, until it was completed on July 1, 1922, at a cost of $110,000, the contract being carried through several thousand dollars under the appropriation made for the work.

Mr. Linthicum was for several terms a member of the City Council and was chairman of the water committee. He had the responsible directions of the work of constructing the water system of Romney, completed in 1912. He served seven years as city treasurer, and was elected to the office of mayor in 1920, 1921, and 1922, succeeding Joseph A. Kelley in that office.

Mr. Linthicum is an active republican, casting his first vote for Benjamin Harrison in 1892. His first elective office was as recorder of Romney, to which he was chosen in 1908. Since 1916 he has been a member of the Grand Lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen and is grand guide of the Grand Lodge.

At Westersport, Maryland, October 30, 1892, John Carson Linthicum married Miss Kate M. Bowen, who was born at Springfield, West Virginia, and represents two old and well-known families of Hampshire County. She is a daughter of Dr. C. G. and Mary C. (Parsons) Bowen, her mother being a daughter of David Parsons. Mrs. Linthicum was the third in a family of seven children, was born May 9, 1865, and her brothers and sisters were: John, Mary, Anna, Charles, William and Susan. Mary is Mrs. Joseph Greenfield, of Cumberland, Maryland; Anna is unmarried; and Susan is the wife of P. T. Lacey, of Cumberland, Maryland. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Linthicum were born two children, one dying in infancy. The daughter, Mary Elizabeth, was educated in the Potomac Academy, which was recently remodeled as a part of the school for the blind, and she is now employed in the Romney Post Office.

CHARLES W. BLAIR has been active in insurance circles at Huntington and West Virginia for nearly thirty years. He is senior member of the firm of Blair & Buffington, handling what is perhaps the largest business in fire insurance in the city.

Mr. Blair is an Ohio man by birth, born at South Webster, Scioto County, March 14, 1867. His father, Joseph W. Blair, was born in Adams County of the same state in 1832, and as a young man removed to Scioto County, where he married and where for many years he conducted a mercantile store at Webster. He was a republican, served several terms as township treasurer, and was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Joseph W. Blair, who died at Webster, Ohio, in 1887, married Harriet Cole, who was born in Scioto County in 1836 and died at Wellston, Ohio, in 1918.

Charles W. Blair was educated in the public schools of Webster, and after he was eighteen he taught three years in Scioto County, Ohio. He then removed to Portsmouth, where for two years he was deputy county clerk, and left that office to engage in the insurance business. He remained at Portsmouth until 1893, and in August of that year located at Huntington, where he has been a busy member of insurance circles ever since. For a number of years he was an independent adjuster of fire losses. Mr. Blair covered the West Virginia field as special agent for one of the leading English companies for several years, and his activities in both field work and local work has established his position as one of the leading fire insurance men of the state. Some years ago he formed a partnership with P. C. Buffington, under the name Blair & Buffington. They handle general insurance, and represent some of the leading English and American companies. The offices of the firm are in the First National Bank Building. Mr. Blair is also secretary and treasurer of the Ophir Oil Company, operating in the Eastern Kentucky field. In politics he is a republican, is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and fraternally is affiliated with Huntington Lodge No. 53, A. F. and A. M., West Virginia Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite at Wheeling, Benikem Temple of the Mystic Shrine of Charleston, and is a member of Huntington Lodge No. 313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and the Gnyadotte Club of Huntington. He is a member also of the Allegheny and Cha Mountain clubs of his state and is an enthusiastic sportsman. His chief sport is fishing, and besides slipping away from business whenever opportunity presents itself and trying his luck in the West Virginia streams each year when summer vacation time comes he goes on an annual camping and fishing trip to the Yellowstone Park points in Wyoming, up in the mountains, where the stream runs clear and cold and where the elusive Rainbow Cutthroat Trout are to be found.

Mr. Blair married at Huntington in 1900 Miss Lida Thackston, daughter of Benjamin H. and Eugenia (Miller) Thackston. Mrs. Blair's father was one of the early professors of Marshall College, and died in Huntington, 1918, at the age of eighty-five years. Her mother is still living, residing with her daughter in Huntington.

JENKIN J. GILMORE, after completing a very liberal education, returned to West Virginia and entered the coal industry, and is one of the well known mine superintendents in Logan County. His headquarters are at Barnabas, the Omar branch of the Chesapeake & Ohio, about two miles from Logan.

Mr. Gilmore was born January 1, 1888, at Bramwell, Mercer County, West Virginia. He is of Scotch and Irish ancestry, and a son of Milton and Alice (Becker) Gilmore. His parents were both born in Virginia. His father, who died in 1907, was a member of a Virginia regiment in the Civil war, and for many years was associated with the mining interests of the firm of Freeman & Jones at Bramwell.

Jenkin J. Gilmore acquired a common and high school education at Bramwell, finishing his high school course in 1903. For three years he pursued advanced training at Mount St. Joseph School at Baltimore, Maryland, and in 1905 graduated in a bookkeeping and general business course at Eastman's Business College of Poughkeepsie, New York. On returning to West Virginia he was given work that constituted a general training in the mining industry under Colonel Tierney in the Pocahontas coal field. At the end of three years he had been advanced to mine boss and foreman for the Pocahontas Consolidated at Choke, where he remained two years. In 1915 he came to Logan Field for the Main Island Creek Coal Company, where his first work was building a supply house. He then made mine boss or foreman, and since 1919 has been mine superintendent for the Main Island Creek Coal Company at Barnabas. During the war he made every effort to get into service, but was ruled out, since his work in coal fields was more essential to the winning of the war.

In 1917, at Catlettsburg, Kentucky, he married Miss E. Easley, daughter of Frederick and Lou (Hatcher) Easley, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Gilmore have one son, Frederick. Mr. Gilmore is a Catholic, while his wife is a Presbyterian. He is affiliated with the Knights of Columbus.

JOHN F. MAY, M. D. All the years of his active life Doctor May has been identified with some work that has vital part in the welfare of his community. He was a teacher for many years, later took up and studied medicine, and after practicing some years in his native state of Kentucky moved to West Virginia, and has been one of the leading mine physicians of Logan County. His present location is at Rossmore in that county, on the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad branch from Logan to Omar.

He was born in Johnson County, Kentucky, September 1869. His family established themselves in the Big Sandy Valley in Eastern Kentucky more than a century ago. His great-grandfather left old Virginia in 1810, and while coming down the Big Sandy found at the mouth of Mine Creek what seemed to him to be an ideal place for a home with abundance of game to supply him with food. He set up his claim there, and lived in that locality until his death. The grandfather of Doctor May was prominent in politics and a power in that community. He died in 1855. Doctor

Owen S. M. Kinney

John A. May is a son of Thomas Green and Martha (Rice) May, both natives of Kentucky. His father was a farmer and a black man, was a deacon in the Baptist Church and a member of the Masonic Order. He had a brother in the Civil War.

John F. May attended common schools in Johnson County, then the Baptist Seminary, known as the Enterprise High School, and soon afterward began his work as a school teacher, a vocation he followed for seventeen years. While teaching he pursued normal courses, and finally, in 1902, took up the study of medicine in the University of Kentucky at Louisville, where he graduated M. D. in 1905. During the following five years Doctor May practiced in Floyd County, Kentucky, at Princess Post Office. Since then his professional work has been in Logan County, West Virginia. For eight years he practiced at Ethel and in the City of Logan, and for two years was associated with Doctor Farley at Holden. Since December, 1921, he has been located at Rossmore as physician for the Logan Mining Company and the Switzer Coal Company.

In 1891, at Flat Gap, Kentucky, Doctor May married Miss Charlotte Seagraves, daughter of E. G. and Sarah (Ray) Seagraves, her father a native of Kentucky and her mother of Tennessee. E. G. Seagraves for twenty years was a school teacher and was also a farmer and merchant. Doctor and Mrs. May have one child, Grace May, now Mrs. Ector Adkins. She and her two children, Frank and Charles, reside with Doctor May. Doctor May is a Baptist, a Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner and a republican.

JOHN O. S. MCKINNEY. In the course of a busy lifetime, as measured by over threescore and ten, O. S. McKinney has become widely known over West Virginia, though he has never had a home in any other community than Fairmont. The most important work associated with his name has been as editor and publisher of the Times, of which as a holder of public opinion he was unwavering in his loyalty to this city and state and ranked with the most prominent writers of his day and at one time refused a lucrative offer to become editorially associated with a national paper in the capital city of our National Government. He is a leader of the democratic party in West Virginia and has long been recognized as one of the most influential members of the party and one who did not seek personal aggrandizement or honor so much for himself as for the success of the party and honor to his native state.

Mr. McKinney was born near Fairmont in Marion County in 1849, son of John S. and Matilda (Sullivan) McKinney, the former a native of Monongalia County and the latter of Harrison County, West Virginia. O. S. McKinney acquired a common school education, and almost the first employment he had in the line of a salaried position or preparation for a life career was in a printing office. Printing and publishing has bulked large in his personal business experience. For several years Mr. McKinney edited the records and reports of the West Virginia Court of Appeals. He then became part owner and editor of the Fairmont Index, and in company with Col. C. L. Smith he established the Fairmont Times and was its editor for twenty years. Mr. McKinney has been a director of the National Bank of Fairmont since its organization. This is one of the three largest financial institutions of West Virginia.

In 1899 Mr. McKinney served in the State Legislature, in which session it has been said some of the most brilliant and intellectual men in the state composed that body, of which he was elected Speaker of the House and during which session much important legislation was enacted, bringing glory and honor to himself and his constituents. It is said even to this day that he was the leader and speaker of the finest, and most intellectually brilliant body of men ever gathered in the House. As a democrat he was chairman of the State Central Committee in 1904, and in the same year was a delegate at large to the National Convention in St. Louis. He was a strict delegate to the National Convention in 1916.

In 1874 he married Annabell Ayers, who died in 1921, after they had been married forty-seven years. Her children are Nola, Margaret E., Odell P. and Mrs. Mary L. Weaver of Morgantown.

Mr. McKinney is identified with all branches of Masonry, being a member of Fairmont Lodge, No. 9, A. F. and A. M., is a Knight Templar and Scottish Rite Mason, and is treasurer of the Board of Trustees of the Grand Lodge, which has in charge the erection of the Masonic Home. He served as grand master of the Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows in 1882, and is a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. Mr. McKinney is a member of the Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, being eligible to that society through his grandfather Patrick Sullivan, who was a soldier under General Morgan in the war of independence. Always interested in educational affairs, Mr. McKinney served a number of years as a member of the Board of Education at Fairmont, and has also been local regent of the State Normal School.

One who has known him intimately for over a quarter of a century has said of him: There have been very few if any men in Fairmont who have taken a greater civic pride in the city than the Hon. O. S. McKinney, and many times has served its interests to his own detriment from a financial viewpoint. He has played his part honorably and well in making Fairmont one of the finest cities in Northern West Virginia—and in his case the biographer can agree with the Greek philosopher who said "A prophet is not without honor save in his own Country," for Mr. McKinney is well honorably known throughout his native state, as well as adjoining states. Although at this time he has retired from active business affairs, he is still called upon to assist in the upbuilding of the state and its institutions, and takes a leading and prominent part in the state's welfare, financially and morally.

GEORGE LEWIS DAVIS. There is probably no phase of the coal mining industry that has not become a part of the practical experience of George Lewis Davis, who though a young man has been working in and around coal mines since boyhood. Mr. Davis is one of the coal mining officials of Logan County, being superintendent of mines at Mico and the Omar branch of the Chesapeake & Ohio.

Mr. Davis was born at Redwood in Franklin County, Virginia, January 2, 1857. His ancestors were substantial Virginia planters. His grandfather Davis was a Confederate soldier at the time of the Civil war. His grandfather Pardue was one of the most influential men in his section of Virginia in his day, active as a man of affairs and also as leader in politics. The parents of George L. Davis were John P. and Elizabeth (Pardue) Davis, natives of Virginia. His father was a farmer and stone mason and builder, and he put up many buildings all over Franklin County. During the war between the states he was with a Virginia regiment, but was captured and was held a prisoner at Point Lookout, Maryland, for eight months. After the war he resumed farming and his business as a building contractor.

George Lewis Davis attended common school at Redwood, and his education from books as well as from practical experience has never ceased. He attended night school, and for a period of ten years kept up his studies with the International Correspondence School of Scranton, from which he received diplomas in geology, chemistry, coal mining and in a general business course.

He started work in a coal mine at the age of eighteen, his first employment being on track work. Rapidly accumulated knowledge and efficiency has promoted him from this humble stage to his present responsibilities as a superintendent. For six years he was with the Pocahontas Coal Company at Pocahontas, Virginia. He was then with the Pittsburgh Coal Company, two years at Marano, Pennsylvania, and then eight years as mine foreman at Holden, West Virginia. Since then he has been superintendent at Mico for Mines Nos. 1, 2 and 3 of the Main Island Creek Coal Company.

At Dingus, West Virginia, Mr. Davis married Miss Genoa Moore, daughter of Eldy and Nora (Roberts) Moore, natives of Kentucky. They have four children: Okie and Oney, twins, Lulu and Haskil. The family are members of the Christian Church, and Mr. Davis is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias.

JESSE HARWOOD TAYLOR first became interested in the coal industry in Eastern Ohio, but for several years past has been located in Logan County, as mine superintendent at Chauncey, on the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, near Omar Post Office.

He was born November 10, 1877, at Hendysburg in Belmont County, Ohio, son of A. S. and Catherine (Ralston) Taylor. His mother was thirteen years of age when her parents came from Ireland to the United States. A. S. Taylor was of a Pennsylvania family, with an ancestry composed of English, Irish, Scotch and Welsh stocks. A. S. Taylor was very prominent in public affairs in Belmont County, serving many years as recorder and as a merchant at the time of his death. He was all through the Civil war, though never wounded or captured, as a soldier in Company M of the Ninth Ohio Regiment.

Jesse Harwood Taylor acquired a common school education in Belmont County, finished a course at the St. Clairsville High School in 1899, and for seven years was deputy county recorder under his father. He was also deputy sheriff of the county for four years. For a time he was in the plant of the United States Steel Company at Bridgeport, Ohio, and for six years was connected with the Maher-Pursglove Coal Company in Belmont County. This company sent him to Chauncey, West Virginia, and when their interests in this section were sold to the Middle Fork Mining Company, owned by Dalton and Kelly, Mr. Taylor remained with the new management as superintendent of mines in the Chauncey District.

In 1899, at Uniontown, Ohio, Mr. Taylor married Sarah M. Buffington, daughter of Robert and Bell C. (Cain) Buffington, her father a native of Ohio, while her mother was born in West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor have two children, Elizabeth and Harwood. The latter is attending school at Barboursville, Virginia. Elizabeth is the wife of Henry Agee, who is a mine foreman at Mico in Logan County. The three children of Mr. and Mrs. Agee, grandchildren of Mr. and Mrs. Taylor, are H. T. Agee, Elizabeth Hollingsworth Agee and Robert Buffington Agee. Mr. Taylor is a Presbyterian, and is a thirty-second Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner and a member of the Elks.

HENRY A. LUCAS is a building contractor who has been established at Bluefield for the past seven years, and here and elsewhere has been associated with a large and important volume of building construction. He is a thorough master in his line and is a business executive capable of working out plans and assembling all the facilities for their prompt and thorough execution.

Mr. Lucas was born in Floyd County, Virginia, October 24, 1890, son of Aquila Q. and Allie (Iddings) Lucas. His father was a farmer, and by thrift and industry gained a fair competence for himself and family. He was superintendent of his Sunday school and a very active member of the Methodist Church and was a Virginian republican. He has reached the age of fifty-five and his wife is fifty years of age. Their family consisted of three sons and three daughters, four of whom still live in old Virginia. One daughter, Mrs. K. E. Barham, lives at Kimball, West Virginia.

Henry A. Lucas attended school at Terrys Fork in his native county and acquired his advanced training at Roanoke. He took a course in architecture with the International Correspondence School, and spent one year in the architect's office of H. M. Miller at Roanoke. He then established a business of his own at Kimball, West Virginia, and was soon engaged in contracting as well as in the architectural business. In 1914 he moved his business headquarters to Bluefield.

The important construction work he has done would comprise a long and interesting list. It includes the Hill Motor Company Garage at Welch, Via Realty Company Apartments at Welch, Hill & Swope Department Store at Welch, Steam Laundry at Welch, residences of A. C. Hufford, J.

H. Crockett; store building for the King Coal Company at Kimball, residence of the general manager of that company at Kimball, the A. P. World Store, two store buildings for L. H. Miller, hotel for L. C. Lucas, First National Bank Building of Kimball; department store for Harry Totz Northfork and the Toney Department Store at Northfork hotel at Mullins; Hemphill-Caples High School and color high school at Kimball; Junior High School at Eckman school at Herndon in Wyoming County, Virginia; school building for the Wright Drug Company and many others.

On September 24, 1914, Mr. Lucas married Mabel Sisson, daughter of T. S. Sisson, of Otey, Montgomery County, Virginia. They have three children, Beatrice H. A., Jr., and James H. The family are members of Methodist Church. Mr. Lucas is affiliated with the Masc Order, Bluefield Lodge No. 85, Wheeling Consistory No. and the York and Shrine, also with the Elks and Knights of Pythias, is a member of the Chamber of Commerce does his voting as a republican and while living at Kimball held the office of recorder.

WILLIAM A. BODELL. A number of business concerns have been developed at Bluefield that have a service distribution of facilities radiating out over a wide territory. Among them is the heating and plumbing establishment, William A. Bodell, a business service that now extends at least three states. Mr. Bodell learned heating and plumbing engineering when a young man, and for many years has been in business on his own account. He is prominent connected in business circles at Bluefield, where he is a president of the Acme Motor Company and is associated with the Cole Realty Company.

He was born at Newmarket, Shenandoah County, Virginia, December 9, 1874, son of George M. and Ella (Cline) Bodell. His father was a Confederate soldier and was captured and spent six months in a northern prison. He was a coach painter by trade, afterward became a carriage manufacturer at Newmarket, and in 1888 removed to Charleston, West Virginia. He was an active member of the Methodist Church. He died at the home of his son, Princeton, Mercer County, in 1918, at the age of seven years. His first wife died in 1881, at the age of thirty. She was the mother of three children: John and Charles both deceased, and William A. The second wife of George M. Bodell was Miss Mitta Figgart, who is now living at Roanoke, Virginia. Her four children are: Russell B., the heating and plumbing business at Princeton, Mercer County, West Virginia; Thomas, in a similar business at Springfield, Ohio; Nellie, wife of Phil Spicer; and Al, wife of Bailey Wicks, superintendent of schools at New Market.

William A. Bodell acquired his early advantages in the schools of New Market and Staunton, Virginia. He began his apprenticeship in a printing establishment at Charleston, West Virginia, at the age of fifteen. For six years worked for others, and then started filling contracts himself. For a short time he had J. A. Graham as partner. He then continued the business alone, and became associated with the West Virginia Heating and Plumbing Company. This corporation had plants in various localities, and in 1901 Mr. Bodell was sent to Bluefield to take the management of the Bluefield branch. In 1910 he bought the business, and has since continued it as proprietor. He has handled some of the largest contracts for the installation of heating and plumbing facilities and around Bluefield, and his business also extends over a large number of West Virginia counties and portions of Virginia and North Carolina.

Mr. Bodell is affiliated with the Lodge, Royal Arch Chapter and Knight Templar Commandery of the Masc at Bluefield, the Shrine at Charleston, is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and Rotary Club, and is a democrat. He is much interested in Sunday school work. He is Methodist, while Mrs. Bodell is a Presbyterian. He married Miss Amy Miller in 1897. Her father was James W. Miller, of Hinton, West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Bodell have one daughter, Ruth.

Yours truly
O. L. Starnord

SCAR LEE STANARD is one of the fortunate men of his President of the O. L. Stanard Dry Goods Company, Huntington wholesale house, and head of a large number of retail stores, his business success has been on a substantial plane for a number of years. But his good fortune is solely on the score of commercial achievement, has the kindly attitude of a man of affairs and an unselfish interest and leadership in objects and movements outside the scope of his driving business power. Moreover, he has the heritage of old Virginia families of the best social and historical prominence. While the reader will be gratified with a brief account of his individual life, it will also be appropriate to add, consistent with the permitted, some notes on his ancestry and some of the charming personalities in both the direct and collateral lines of this family.

Stanard was born at Enon in Nicholas County, Virginia, February 13, 1878. He acquired a good education through attending public schools and the Summer Normal School, and began his career as a school teacher in the winter of 1897-98. In the following spring he went to work in the store of his uncle, J. D. Carden, in Clay, West Virginia, and the next step in his rapid ascent of the commercial ladder was as traveling salesman of the wholesale dry goods house of Abney-Barnes Company of Charleston. He began with that firm in 1900, and after a short experience was ranked as one of the first individual contributors to the annual volume of business of the firm. He became a stockholder in the company and also went into partnership with individuals establishing a string of retail stores that would add to the permanent value of the wholesale house. For several years he was secretary-treasurer of the Abney-Barnes company.

In the latter part of 1913 Mr. Stanard moved to Huntington. He established here the Croft-Stanard Company, in which he is still a director and stockholder. Several years later he founded the O. L. Stanard Dry Goods Company as a wholesale dry goods and merchant house, and in four years that business grew from a volume of $100,000 to more than $1,500,000, and it now does an annual business of over $1,500,000. Mr. Stanard is president of this company, and he is financially interested in this president of some thirty odd retail stores located in West Virginia, Kentucky and Ohio, with an annual business in excess of four and one-half million dollars. He is also a director and the first vice president of the Bank & Trust Company.

An interested associate and a sharer in his business and his career has been Mrs. Stanard. Her maiden name was Mary Marjorie Odgen, daughter of Hon. Howard Odgen, of Fairmont. Mr. and Mrs. Stanard were married June 18, 1912. Their children are Ella Jean and Riley Josephine Stanard.

Mr. Stanard has served as director of the Huntington Board of Commerce, is a member of the Rotary Club, Parkwright Club of New York, the Country Club at Huntington, and is a Royal Arch Knights Templar and a second degree Scottish Rite Mason. He is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church. His business affairs have engrossed his attention to the exclusion of politics, but he was elected by his party as delegate to the National Democratic Convention in San Francisco, June, 1920. Mr. Stanard is still a comparatively young man, has won success with many years of activity still in promise, and has been exceedingly generous in his association with younger men and has helped a number to get a real start. One of the early principles of his life's conduct, fully adhered to, was the habit of systematic giving, and he practiced it when his income was modest and has kept it up on a proportional scale in the years of his success.

Mr. Stanard represents the eighth generation of this family, beginning with his first American ancestor. Long before the family came to America it was well known in Norfolk and other sections of England. The earlier form of spelling was Stannard. Many members of the English family were the followers of such skilled trades as weaving, painting and gilding, and the artistic parents came to fine flower in such notable artists as Joseph Stanard (1796-1830), Alfred Stanard (1806-1889) and others.

The first settler of the family in Virginia was William Stanard, who was a prominent citizen of Middlesex County during the latter part of the seventeenth century. About 1677 he married Eltonhead Conway, widow of Henry Thacker and daughter of Edwin Conway, of Lancaster County, representing a family of high rank. She was the niece of the wives of three Council members, and also of the wife of Governor Sir Henry Chicheley. William Stanard was a vestryman of Christ Church Parish. He and his wife, Eltonhead, had three children. The youngest of them, named William, was born February 16, 1682, and died in 1732. For seventeen years prior to his death he was clerk of Middlesex County, and, like his father, was a vestryman in Christ Church parish. His first wife was Anne Hazlewood, who left him a daughter, Ann. In 1717 he married Elizabeth Beverly, daughter of Capt. Harry Beverly and maternal granddaughter of Maj. Gen. Robert Smith. Her paternal grandfather, Robert Beverly, came to the colonies in the seventeenth century. The Beverly family was one of much prominence in that section of Virginia. The only son of William and Elizabeth Stanard was named Beverly, and that name became increasingly popular in this family. The Stanard family was well to do, and the home was comfortably furnished, statements that are attested by some of the inventories of household property found in the wills of that generation.

Beverly Stanard, representing the third generation, inherited most of his mother's property. He was twenty-six years of age when he died. He had already served as justice and sheriff of Middlesex County, and in 1750 he moved to Spotsylvania County. His residence at Roxbury in that county was one of the first built, and is still standing. His estate of about 16,000 acres passed out of the possession of his descendants about twenty years ago. The wife of Beverly Stanard was Elizabeth Chew, daughter of Larkin Chew. Beverly Stanard died in 1765, and his tombstone still stands at Roxbury. Of his two sons and one daughter the older son was named William, and he was the direct ancestor of the Huntington business man. William and his brother Larkin were soldiers in the war of the Revolution, William with the rank of captain. Both brothers became prominent in local politics, William serving as sheriff of Spotsylvania County in 1782-84. The name Roxbury was changed to Stanardsville in his honor, and is now the county seat of Greene County. Both William and Larkin Stanard had sons named Beverly, and the two cousins married daughters of Judge William Fleming. These marriages connected the Stanards with some of the most distinguished Colonial families of Virginia. The Flemings were lineal descendants from Sir John Fleming, first Earl of Wigton, Scotland. A great-grandson of Sir John was Col. John Fleming, who married Mary Bolling, great-granddaughter of John Rolfe and the famous Indian maiden Pocahontas. The Stanard-Fleming branch of the family has produced many conspicuous members, including the great Virginia jurist, Judge Robert Stanard, who married the Virginia beauty, Jane Craig, who was the inspiration for some of Edgar Allan Poe's poems. Judge Robert Stanard had one of the most beautiful homes in the old City of Richmond.

However, the direct line of descent to O. L. Stanard from William Stanard of Stanardsville is not through the son Beverly, but through the son William, Jr. This William married Elizabeth Branch, of Powhatan County. He was the fourth Stanard in direct succession to take a bride of the name Elizabeth. This couple were the parents of seven children, all of whom reached mature years and married, their alliances being made with such notable families as Taliaferro, Hume, Taylor, Woolfolk, Eddins and LeBarow.

The third child in this generation was Lawrence Stanard, grandfather of the Huntington merchant. Lawrence Stanard was born at Stanardsville, Spotsylvania County, Virginia, and was the first of his line to move out of the old state. In 1830 he settled at Enon, Nicholas County, West Virginia, where he developed extensive agricultural interests. He married Mary E. Taylor, of Charleston, South Carolina. Lawrence Stanard died at Enon in 1890, and his wife, in the same place in 1907.

Their oldest son was William Taylor Stanard, who followed in his father's footsteps, became the owner of a farm at Enon, and was prominent in the agricultural circles of that section of West Virginia.

William Taylor Stanard, father of O. L. Stanard, married Mary Ella Carden, and thus became allied with another family of distinction. She was of Virginian and English ancestry, and her father, David R. Carden, was a farmer of Buckingham County, Virginia, but died at Enon in West Virginia in 1864. The Carden family is an old English name, represented primarily in Cheshire County and also in County Kent, and after about 1650 in County Tipperary, Ireland. The Irish family of Cardens have been of the landed gentry of that country for over two centuries, and a number of their distinctions rest upon services as soldiers, diplomats and other high public positions.

O. C. JENKINS is one of the veterans in the service of the Norfolk & Western Railroad Company. He went to work for the A. M. & O. Railroad in his native city of Appomattox, Virginia. He has been in the service for over forty years, and since 1888 has been on duty at Bluefield, one of the pioneers of that town, and through his office as agent representative for the railroad and through his private enterprise he has done much to stimulate the development of the city.

Mr. Jenkins was born at Appomattox, Virginia, son of William A. and Mary Frances (Tweedy) Jenkins. His father was a native of Appomattox and his mother of Campbell County, Virginia. William A. Jenkins owned a large farm in Appomattox County. He was wounded while performing duty for the Confederate government.

O. C. Jenkins grew up at Appomattox, acquired his education there, and his first experience in railroadng was as office boy for R. F. Burke with the old A. M. & O. Railroad, now a part of the Norfolk & Western system. While performing his routine of duties he learned telegraphy and made himself familiar with all the duties of station agent. His first important promotion was to office relief man on the road from Lynchburg to Norfolk, and he also did station work along the line from Lynchburg to Bristol. He was station agent and operator at New River when the road was extended from New River to Pocahontas, Virginia. When this branch was completed the president of the railroad made a visit to the mines, and on his special train carried out a car of the first Pocahontas coal mined. This car was presented to the mayor of Norfolk, Col. William Lamb, and Mr. Jenkins handled the message of presentation. Later Mr. Jenkins was transferred to Narrows as station agent and operator, and then to Graham, where he was located when the road was extended to Norton, Virginia.

In 1888 he came to Bluefield as freight agent for the Norfolk & Western, and has had a continuous service here for over thirty years, so that his name is practically synonymous with all the service represented by the Norfolk & Western Railroad. He has been a loyal and faithful employe of the railroad corporation, and at the same time has been sensible to his obligations of trust to the community.

Many years ago Mr. Jenkins and the ticket agent, Mr. L. A. Dunn, became associated in a business way. The firm of Jenkins & Dunn established a coal business, which has since been incorporated as the Standard Fuel and Supply Company, of which Mr. Jenkins is president. He and associates first opened their Twin Branch Mining Company in McDowell County, West Virginia. They also opened the Orinoco mines on Pond Creek in Pike County, Kentucky, selling their property, and then opened the Fall Branch Coal Company in Mingo County, West Virginia, and have been interested in coal and other developments.

Mr. Jenkins has served as a member of the city council.

He is a past master of Bluefield Lodge No. 85, F. ar M., and is a democrat in politics. He is active in Bluefield Chamber of Commerce and is a member of Country Club. In religious affiliation he is a Baptist, Mrs. Jenkins is a Presbyterian.

Mrs. Jenkins before her marriage was Lucy D. R. daughter of Capt. Isaac M. Rucker, of Campbell County, Virginia. They have one son, O. Rucker Jenkins, in the coal business. Their daughter, Lucy Gladys, is wife of Charles W. Scott, of Bluefield, and their granddaughter is Miss Mary V. Jenkins.

ALTON L. SMITH. Long experience in the practical tails has made Alton L. Smith a thoroughly expert electrical engineer. For the past ten years he has been expert manager of the West Virginia Armature Company of Bluefield, of which he is vice president and general manager. This is one of the more important industries of Bluefield, and the company was organized September 1, 1911, with W. A. Bishop, president, Mr. Smith, vice president, and W. A. Bailey, secretary and treasurer. The company started with a very small shop, but there has been a steady and satisfactory growth of the business and its service and output now cover a large territory around Bluefield. The company first rented a small place on the north side of the railroad tracks from the Supply Company, but the business is now housed in a new plant, with every facility of modern equipment located on Bluefield Avenue and Pine Street.

Alton L. Smith was born in Monroe County, West Virginia, at Lillydale, December 24, 1881, son of James P. and Harriet Houston (Vass) Smith. James P. Smith was a carpenter, contractor and builder, and for a number of years lived at Hinton, West Virginia, where he died in 1900, at the age of fifty-one. The mother and two daughters now live at Sulphur Springs, Virginia.

Alton L. Smith, being the only son, had to assume responsibilities as a boy and at the age of sixteen became the principal support of the family. His two sisters are now teachers. He acquired his early education in Monroe County and at Hinton, and at the age of fifteen went to work in the marble establishment at Hinton owned by R. E. Moel. He was there two years, and then found work in the line where his talents have been chiefly expressed. For two years he was night engineer at Hinton for the Light & Power Company, and then took charge of the lighting system of the Dungen Hotel at Thurman. He was next employed as electrician by the Nutall Coal & Coke Company at Nutall, West Virginia, and two months later joined the Pocahontas Fuel Company as electrician at Switchback. He was in charge at Switchback for two years, and on leaving that corporation moved to Bluefield and assisted in organizing the West Virginia Armature Company.

In 1910 Mr. Smith married Lulu Crow, daughter of P. C. Crow, of Switchback. They have five children, Harry, Helen, Jack and Nancy Jane. Mr. and Mrs. Smith are members of the Methodist Church. In politics he is for the man rather than for the party, and is deeply interested in civic affairs, always taking a progressive attitude.

HARRY LAMBRIGHT SNYDER. During a period of twenty years Harry Lambright Snyder has been editor and publisher of the Shepherdstown Register, and in this capacity has also been an active factor in the promulgation and development of movements which have played a conspicuous part in the progress and advancement of his native town. Aside from journalism his interests have centered principally in the causes of religion and education, but worthy movements of whatever character have had his support and the benefit of his influence.

Mr. Snyder was born at Shepherdstown, Jefferson County, West Virginia, October 11, 1861, a son of John Snyder, who was born at Saarbrücken, Bavaria, Germany, February 19, 1823, a grandson of Theobald Snyder, of the same place, and a great-grandson of Jacob Snyder, also a native of Saarbrücken. Jacob Snyder remained in his native

J. E. Dickinson

1827, in which year he immigrated to the United States, and in the following year settled at Shepherdstown, where he followed his trade as a weaver and lived to the advanced age of ninety years. He was buried in the Reformed Church graveyard. His son, Theobald, who participated in one of the early and unsuccessful rebellions in Germany, fled to the United States and spent the remainder of his life at Shepherdstown. He married Louise Klein, also a native of Saarbrücken, and their children were: John, Peter, Jacob and George.

John Snyder was seven years of age when brought by his parents to the United States, and as a youth he learned the trade of tailor, which he followed until the outbreak of the Civil war. He volunteered for service in the Confederate Army, and was accepted and assigned for duty to Company B, Second Regiment, Virginia Volunteer Infantry, with which he served faithfully and valiantly until he was wounded at the battle of the Wilderness, dying on Alexandria June 1, 1864. Mr. Snyder married, June 1, 1845, at Frederick, Maryland, Rachel Lambright, who was born at Frederick, Maryland, August 11, 1823, daughter of George Lambright, and a granddaughter of Michael Regina (Sponseller) Lambright. Mrs. Snyder, who has also deceased, reared the following children: Ella, Mel Louise, Mary Virginia, Annie Hammond, George Rose, John William and Harry Lambright.

Harry Lambright Snyder received his education in the public schools of Shepherdstown and at Shepherd College, where as a youth served an apprenticeship to the printer's trade in the office of the Shepherdstown Register. From 1847 to 1852 he was employed in the United States Government printing office at Washington, D. C., and then returned to Shepherdstown and became proprietor, publisher and editor of the Shepherdstown Register, of which he has had complete control for a period of forty years. This well-edited, well-presented and influential publication, with a large circulation at Shepherdstown and the surrounding contiguous thereto, and is thoroughly reliable in all respects. Mr. Snyder is known as a newspaper man of more than passing ability and has a wide acquaintance in the journalistic circles of West Virginia and Maryland. He has served two terms, or eight years, as a member of the Board of Regents of the normal schools of West Virginia, and has also been a member of the Board of Directors of the Hospital for the Insane at Spencer. Finally he is affiliated with Mount Nebo Lodge, No. 91, A. O. U. W., and A. M. Mr. Snyder has frequently been a delegate to the State of the Virginia Synod and the United Lutheran Church of America since its formation, and took an active part in the organization thereof.

On April 29, 1884, at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, Mr. Snyder married Miss Ida Laura Baldwin, who was born at Philadelphia, May 29, 1858, and died July 28, 1907. Her father, William Lindsay Baldwin, served as chief commissioner of highways in Philadelphia, and married Melinda Titus. To Mr. and Mrs. Snyder there were born five children: Louise Anna, who received her preparatory education at Shepherd College, graduated from Goucher College in 1908 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, married Lawrence Moore Lynch, of Chattanooga, Tennessee, and has two children, Ida Baldwin and Isabelle; William Baldwin, who graduated from Shepherd College in 1909, completed this by attendance at Washington and Lee University, later became manager and local editor of the Shepherdstown Register, is a member of the A. E. F., and served fourteen months in France in the air service. He married Martha Jean White, by whom he has one daughter, Jean; Rose Eleanor, who graduated from Shepherd College in 1911, married Charles Franklin Lyne and has one daughter, Rose Mary; Rachel, who graduated from Shepherd College in 1911, now makes her home with her father; and Harry Lambright, Jr., a student of West Virginia University, where he is editor of the college yearbook and also takes an active part in varsity athletics.

CAPT. WILLIAM THOMAS LOVINS is a lawyer. He has a record of service as an American officer during the Civil war.

Captain Lovins was born on a mountain farm in the south part of Wayne County, August 27, 1837, son of James H. and Josephine Lovins, the former a native of Russell County, Virginia, and now seventy-three years of age, and the latter a native of Franklin County, Virginia, age sixty-three years. James H. Lovins moved to Wayne County about 1850, for several years lived in Lawrence County, Kentucky, and early in the Civil war joined the Union Army in the Forty-fifth Kentucky Mounted Infantry. Later he was transferred to the Fifty-third Infantry. He participated in the battles of Perryville, Cynthiana and in other battles in the south and west. After the war he enlisted and served three years in the regular army, being on duty at several western military posts, and on his return to West Virginia he married and settled down in Wayne County. He and his wife for the past twenty years have had their home in Kenova. He is a republican in politics.

William Thomas Lovins, second of four children, acquired his early education in the public schools of Wayne County, and attended the Ceredo High School. On account of lack of funds he had to leave the public schools. His first regular employment was as a call boy for the Norfolk and Western Railroad, and subsequently was a machinist's helper, yard clerk, laborer and brakeman. In the intervals of this employment on the railroad, he carried a volume of classic literature in his pocket and improved his leisure hours. With the money earned at railroading he entered, in 1912, Washington and Lee University. He graduated June 17, 1914. A short time after graduation he was in California, but then returned to Kenova, beginning the practice of law.

On May 12, 1917, he left his law practice to join the First Officers' Training Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana. He was commissioned second lieutenant August 15, 1917. He received his honorable discharge as captain December 22, 1918, at Camp Sherman, Ohio. Since leaving the army Captain Lovins has resumed his law practice at Kenova. He is unmarried.

Captain Lovins is a past master of the Masonic Lodge at Kenova, a member of the Wayne Royal Arch Chapter, Wheeling Consistory and Charleston Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is also an Elk and is a member of the American Legion, Post No. 16.

PENN EYSTER DICKINSON. There are several reasons why Penn Eyster Dickinson, proprietor of the well-known retail furniture establishment of Dickinson Brothers at Huntington, has succeeded in life—energy, system and practical knowledge all having contributed to this gratifying result. The range of his activities is now extensive, but from the beginning of his career Mr. Dickinson has sought to work steadily and well for ultimate accomplishments, and has never been content to labor merely for the present.

Mr. Dickinson was born at Louisa, Louisa County, Virginia, December 25, 1879, and is a son of Eugene and Kate (Sanders) Dickinson, and a member of a family which originated in England and was transplanted to America during Colonial times, when the first immigrant of the name settled in Virginia. Thaddeus C. Dickinson, the grandfather of Penn E. Dickinson, was born in 1826 in Louisa County, and spent his entire life there as an extensive planter. He was a slaveholder up to the time of the war between the states, in which struggle he served as a soldier of the Confederacy. He died at Louisa in 1904. His wife, who also spent her entire life in her native Louisa County, was a Miss Fox prior to her marriage.

Eugene Dickinson was born in 1855 in Louisa County, and there passed his entire career. In young manhood he became a merchant, but later turned his attention to planting and for many years was an extensive raiser of tobacco. He died in 1909. Mr. Dickinson was a democrat in politics and at one time served as assessor of Louisa County. With his family he belonged to the Baptist Church. He married Miss Kate Sanders, a native of Fluvanna County, Virginia, who survives him and resides on the old homestead in Louisa County, at the age of sixty-three years. They were the parents of the following children:

Penn Eyster, of this record; Aubrey, a locomotive engineer for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, residing at Covington, Kentucky; Roy C., a bookkeeper of Richmond, Virginia, who died aged twenty-two years at the old home in Louisa County; Eugenia, the wife of John S. Moore, who is engaged in the real estate business at Richmond; Ryland, an extensive farmer of Louisa County; Albert, connected with the Hutchinson Lumber Company at Oraville, California, where he makes his home, and also in partnership with his brother in the firm of Dickinson Brothers; Maurice, assistant manager in the chemical department of a large extract concern of Richmond, and a veteran of the World war, who spent one year on the firing line in France in the hospital and ambulance service; Fritz, connected with the firm of Dickinson Brothers at Huntington; Fred, twin of Fritz, a general merchant of Louisa; Kathleen, a teacher in the public schools, who is unmarried and makes her home with her mother in Louisa County; and Bessie May, also unmarried, a teacher in the public school at Ashland, Virginia.

Penn Eyster Dickinson was educated in the public schools of the rural districts of Louisa County, Virginia, and was reared on his father's plantation until nineteen years of age. In 1898 he located at New Martinsville, Virginia, with the Boxley Construction Company, building the West Virginia Short Line, and after four months of this kind of work came, in September of the same year, to Huntington and entered the service of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company, with which line he learned the trade of machinist, a vocation which he followed for eight years. Mr. Dickinson then recognized his opportunity and embarked in the retail furniture business, with which he has been identified to the present time. In 1915 he organized the firm of Dickinson Brothers in partnership with his brother Albert H. Dickinson, and this enterprise, under the full control and management of Penn E. Dickinson, has been developed into one of the leading retail furniture interests in the State of West Virginia, a large, modern and well-arranged stock being carried at all times at the company's place of business, 611-13 Fourth Avenue. A man of marked business capacity, Mr. Dickinson's years of orderly and abundant work have resulted in acquired success and the sane enjoyment of it, and he has at the same time maintained his interest in securing and preserving the welfare of his community. He has given a strict attention to his business, conducting it in a thoughtful and intelligent manner that could not help but bring about satisfactory results. Mr. Dickinson keeps himself thoroughly posted on public events and matters of general interest, and is highly esteemed as a forceful, substantial man and excellent citizen. In politics he is a democrat, and his religious connections is with the Christian Church, in which he is an elder. He owns a modern home at No. 611 Sixth Avenue, a modern dwelling in a desirable residence district.

In 1904, at Huntington, Mr. Dickinson was united in marriage with Miss Beulah Hagan, daughter of Joseph and Barbara (Topp) Hagan, both of whom are now deceased, Mr. Hagan having been formerly engaged in the plumbing business at Huntington. Mrs. Dickinson is a graduate of Marshall College. She and her husband have no children.

WILLIAM L. SUTTON. Eight miles west of Morgantown in the Scotts Run community of Cass District is the home of William L. Sutton, located a mile north of Cassville. Mr. Sutton has lived in that community nearly all his life, has been successfully engaged in agriculture, and has taken a public spirited part in matters affecting the welfare and progress of the locality, in particular standing for good roads, good livestock, and better conditions generally.

He was born December 18, 1858, on a farm adjoining the one where he now lives, son of Thomas and Barbara (Barrickman) Sutton, both natives of that locality. His father was born in the same house April 11, 1836, and died in November, 1920, having spent his life usefully as a farmer. His main farm was on Cole Hill. He secured the old home of his father and in turn has passed it on to the third generation, its present owner being William Sutton.

The grandfather of William L. Sutton was Asa Sutton, who was born on the same Run, son of Joseph Sutton, came from Old Virginia and acquired a tract of land known as the original Sutton farm, where he lived where he was buried. After coming to Monongalia County Joseph Sutton married a member of the prominent Smith family. Asa Sutton was born here in 1809, and died 1894, at the age of eighty-five. He was laid to rest on farm now owned by his grandson William L. Asa Sutton married Abigail Milburn, of Greene County, Pennsylvania. Their sons were Thomas, Louis and John. Louis removed to Missouri and later to Kansas, where he died in old John removed to Ohio and is still living. It was Asa's intention that his old farm should go to his son, John, he so willed it, but later he changed his mind and willed it direct to his grandson, William L., who had cared him a number of years and worked the farm.

William L. Sutton for two years conducted a store at Cassville, and at the death of his grandfather took possession of the farm, buying out the interests of Asa's wife. The farm comprises 100 acres and its substantial building improvements are the result of the present owner's enterprise. The farm is very valuable because of its deposit of coal, there being four veins underneath the surface. The older Sutton homestead a short distance up the Run is also underlaid with coal, and has four producing wells, running five or six barrels per day. William Sutton's sons are interested in this oil production. There is also a gas well operated under lease. Mr. Sutton is a director in the Morgantown & Wheeling Railroad, which has offered opportunity to open the coal mines along Scotts Run. He is a director in the Commercial Bank of Morgantown. Much effective work has been done by him in community affairs, including four years of service as justice of the peace, thirty years as a notary public, and he is a charter member of Cassville Lodge, Knights of the Masque, and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

At the age of thirty-three Mr. Sutton married F. Reay. Their four living children are: Asa, who married Alta Riley; Franklin, who married Mary Smith; Lillie, wife of Cole Brewer, living on the Sutton farm; and David. Franklin was in service during the war, but reached France only a few days before the signing of the armistice.

GRAY FAMILY. While the following paragraph concerns the main two characters, John Gray and his son, John William Gray, there is much incidental material reflecting the history of the family throughout their American residence and much valuable history of the life and times of the environment in which they have lived. Berkeley County for more than a century has owed much to this family. The Grays have been justly described as quiet, thrifty, industrious people, prepared for service when the emergency came, but seeking no profit or honor in public affairs, devoted to home, family and community.

John Gray was born in South Scotland March 6, 1811, son of John Gray of Chryston and his wife, Jean Ward, of Braden Hall, Fife, Scotland. The parents belonged to the old, untitled gentry of Scotland. Their seven children, all of whom eventually came to America, were David, John, Margaret, Christian, William, James and Jean.

After the fatal battle of Culloden, Scotland was devastated by the English. Fire and sword, fines, imprisonment and death filled the cup of fury for the unhappy Scots and the Grays shared the fortunes of their compatriots. Notwithstanding these reverses, or perhaps because of necessity created by them, in 1760 John Gray, then at the age of fourteen, was a student at St. Andrew's College, University of Edinburgh. Latin and Greek text books belonging to this date, inscribed by his own hand, are still in the possession of his descendants. Scotch students of that period from stark necessity rather than from inclination applied themselves strenuously eighteen or twenty hours out of every twenty-four, when their future depended on their efforts, and the habits of close application and the tiring industry learned in youth clung to John Gray.

through a long and eventful life. All told, he acquired several languages, several of them long after he left college. He was an enthusiastic student of political economy, and wrote a volume of interesting papers on this subject, strongly endorsing the political tenets of Thomas Jefferson. By faith he was a Presbyterian.

In the latter part of 1765 David and John Gray joined their uncle, William Gray, in America. They first came to Alexandria, thence into the Shenandoah Valley, where William Gray had established himself. An original grant, now dilapidated and mostly illegible, from George the Third of England, bearing date of 1730, perhaps indicates the time of William Gray's arrival. David Gray settled with his uncle in what is now Jefferson County, West Virginia. He served through the American Revolution with General Hugh Stephenson's Riflemen. He married Elizabeth Craighill, of the Charlestown neighborhood, and died in 1796, without issue. His widow married a Mr. Willis, with whom she had two sons, Rich Willis and William Willis. John Gray besides learning languages in University also led civil engineering, and outside of his interests as a land proprietor he performed an immense amount of work as a civil engineer and surveyor, both before and after the Revolution. He surveyed portions of Virginia, Ohio, Tennessee, Kentucky and North and South Carolina, mapped out many towns and villages. This was a work that in the main preceded settlement, and involved expeditions into the very heart of the wilderness, risking privation, dangers from wild animals and red men, and complete isolation for months at a time from family and civilization. For these services John Gray acquired title to extensive tracts of land involving many thousands of acres in Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio and on the Monongahela River in what is now West Virginia, besides an estate in Berkeley County. He owned a number of slaves, though there is no record of the purchase or sale of slaves by him or by his sons. The first slaves came to him as slaves of his wife's dowry after the Revolution. His family home was at Springhill, near the Village of Gerardstown, Berkeley County, and was established after the Revolution. All his children were born there.

After the death of his mother, Jean Wardrop, in 1771 at Fife, Scotland, the younger brothers and sisters being orphans, joined John Gray in America. William and Elizabeth settled on his southern lands, which he conveyed to them later in fee simple. Margaret married Thomas Russell in Scotland and died shortly after coming to Virginia, leaving an infant son, John Russell. After her death Thomas Russell married Margaret Craighill. He built the house at Runnymede in Berkeley County where he lived until his death. Christian came to America a widow with her small daughter, Jean MacDonald. She married Thomas Cowan and lived a number of years in Berkeley County, at the Cowan home, Graylands, eventually removing to Tennessee. The youngest sister, Jean, married Thomas Moon. She was about thirteen when she came to Virginia and she lived the rest of her life in Berkeley County. She died August 27, 1804. She was the great-grandmother to Attorney General Harry M. Daugherty of Ohio and Washington, D. C.

David, John, William and James Gray served in the Revolution, the last two named in the southern campaigns, and John during 1775-76 with Captain Hugh Johnson's Company of Riflemen and the Virginia-Maryland Riflemen from Berkeley County. John was erroneously reported killed. As a matter of fact he survived to share the vicissitudes of the Continental Army, and had many stories of the winter at Valley Forge. Stephenson's was a company that "took a bee line" for Boston, 600 miles long, starting July 15, 1775, and arriving August 10th, to find a man missing. He introduced his company as being "on the right bank of the Potomac." They were warmly welcomed by Washington personally, to whom many of them were known. They gave good service.

In 1787 John Gray laid out the Village of Gerardstown, on lots on land belonging to William Gerard, son of Rev. John Gerard, a Baptist minister, who had settled here with a colony of Baptists in 1754. There had been a previous Baptist settlement in 1743 and a still earlier Scotch-Irish settlement. At least two churches were built on the site in the Baptist graveyard at Gerardstown. The last building was demolished after the Civil war. The original trustees of Gerardstown were William Henshaw, James Hlaw, Robert Allen, Gilbert McKown and John Gray.

May 28, 1782, John Gray married Mary Sherrard Cowan. No children were born to this union. After her death he married, on March 21, 1805, Jenn Hyndman Gilbert, he being fifty-nine and his bride twenty-two.

Jean Gilbert was born in 1783 in County Antrim, Ireland, of Scotch parentage, daughter of Edward Gilbert and his wife, Jean Sim Rennie, of Covenanter stock from Galloway, Scotland. The Gilberts were in comfortable circumstances, owned an estate near Belfast, a large bleach green and interests in the Irish linen industry. They immigrated to America in 1785 on a sailing vessel, the voyage lasting three months. They landed at Philadelphia, where Edward Gilbert died a few years later, leaving his family well provided for. His widow subsequently moved with the Scotch Irish tide through the Path and Cumberland valleys into the Shenandoah Valley, where her children grew to maturity. These children were six, four born in County Antrim, William in 1778, John, 1780, Elizabeth, 1781 and Jean, 1783, and two in America, Helene and Edward. Their mother died in 1837. Her sons William and John died without surviving issue in Berkeley County. Elizabeth married David Sherrard, of what is now Morgan County, and she removed to Illinois. Her son David Sherrard was prominent in his locality, president of the Sherrard Banking Company, and of the Sherrard Coke & Coal Company and director in other organizations. Helene married John Sherrard, brother of David. Her descendants are Hon. James W. Stewart of Cleveland, Ohio, Rev. Maitland Vance Bartlett of New York City, and Laurence Bartlett, M. D., of Buffalo, New York. The Sherrards were Scotch-Irish from Ulster, and were among the earliest settlers of the northern end of the Shenandoah Valley. Edward Gilbert, Jr., married Elizabeth Patterson and after some years removed with his family, except one daughter, to Indiana.

While John Gray was from Scotland and Jean Gilbert from Ireland, both were Scotch to their finger tips. They had four children that reached maturity, one daughter, Mary, and three sons, James William, John Edward and David Wardrop. Mary, born December 25, 1805, was educated at a young ladies seminary in Alexandria, Virginia. Her descendants are Miss Eloise Nadenbousch of London, England, and the family of Mr. Alexander Parks of Martinsburg. The second son, John Edward Gray, was born in 1814 and died in 1837, unmarried, a studious and exemplary young man. The youngest son, David Wardrop Gray, born in 1817, several months after his father's death, had a disposition as gay as that of his brother was quiet and retiring. He read and practiced law with Judge George S. Lee of Batavia, Ohio, and was to have married Judge Lee's daughter, but the war with Mexico intervened. In that war he was commissioned a first lieutenant in the American forces, First Regiment of Virginia Volunteers, going out with a company from Berkeley County under Capt. E. B. Alburitis, but later exchanged into another company. (In the Archives of West Virginia it is stated that officers under captains were non-commissioned officers; in the roster of Captain Alburitis' Company Lieutenant Gray is listed as second lieutenant. His record from the War Office shows he was commissioned first lieutenant; also his own letters. He received $65 per month, with an allowance of $16 for his servant. Only commissioned officers had servants. Also he was received and entertained with the other commissioned officers by the governor of Virginia.) He served throughout the war, was honorably discharged June 30, 1848, and left Mexico with a party of forty men for the United States. As far as known none of that party reached home. They were probably ambushed and murdered by Mexicans or Indians.

John Gray, father of this family, died July 1, 1816. His widow lived more than half a century after his death and survived all her children. She died in 1869, full of years and good works.

Hon. James William Gray, the second principal figure in this story, was the oldest son of John Gray and Jean Gilbert and was born at Springhill September 1, 1811. He and his brothers were educated at a private school. Wherever the Scotch or Scotch-Irish went it is said they built first a church and then a school. The Presbyterian Church at Tuscarora, two miles south of Martinsburg, is said to be the oldest church west of the Blue Ridge still in use. It is seven miles north of Gerardstown. There is evidence of a Presbyterian Church several miles south of the present village of Gerardstown. The first Presbyterian Church erected in the village of which there is authentic record was built in 1793. The present church, built on the same site, was erected in 1892. Within the same enclosure was the schoolhouse, known as Stonewall Academy, a structure roughly but substantially built of stone. Educational facilities were not lacking in this section, and these schools were very thorough, usually taught by college men, not infrequently by the pastor of the church. The course included English, Latin, French, mathematics and other branches, with considerable emphasis on mathematics. The students were required to write out rules and work out examples in blank books, and some of the specimens of penmanship are very fine. The school in which James W. Gray and his brothers were educated was of this sort, and it was in the serene atmosphere of school and church and a cheerful home that they grew to manhood. James W. Gray was a country gentleman of the old school, of unquestioned probity, with a breadth of view far beyond that of most of his contemporaries. He was a Free Mason, a Presbyterian and a democrat.

A leader in his party in his section, he was elected to the Virginia House of Delegates in 1852. He resigned because of failing health and an infection of the eyes that confined him to a darkened room for several months. He never fully recovered his health, therefore was compelled to decline other nominations tendered him, though he was as active in his party as his circumstances permitted.

During the Brown raid at Harper's Ferry in October, 1859, Captain Gray commanded the Berkeley Rangers, a company of Berkeley men and supported Captain Albertus in the premature attack on the engine house. It failed, but would have succeeded had the attacking party not been fired on by their friends as well as their foes. Later Captain Gray was ordered by Col. Robert Baylor to guard the railroad bridge over the Potomac, left undefended by the withdrawal of Rowan's Company. He stood guard there from late afternoon until after the arrival of the Marines from Washington under Col. Robert E. Lee at 10 P. M., when he was relieved by the Hamtramck Guards.

In the period of unrest and apprehension that followed the Brown raid Virginia armed for self-protection. Berkeley County raised seven companies. Three companies were stationed at Gerardstown, the Winchester rifles under Capt. William Clarke, the Old Dominion Grays of Darksville under Capt. William Sherrard, and the Berkeley Rangers under Captain Gray. Mr. Gray's diaries cover much of the period from the Brown raid to the Civil war. They reflect faithfully the spirit and aspirations of the time and make interesting reading. Incidentally they show considerable activity on his part. Many names later made famous appear in them. Besides his diaries he has left other documents and some fugitive verses.

In 1861 he raised and equipped but could not fully mount a company of thirty-three men, with which he did scout duty for the Confederates while Johnston's Army remained in Berkeley County, first under Colonel Edmondson and then attached to the command of Colonel (afterwards General) J. E. B. Stuart, who was a warm personal friend. Because he could not secure the fifty rank and file of mounted men the Confederate service required this company disbanded after a few weeks. Mr. Gray remained with Stuart until after the first battle of Manassas, when he was discharged for disability. From this time his health failed rapidly. When the war closed and martial law was declared he was made to pay for all the horses pressed by the Confederates in his section, no inconsiderable matter with his lands devastated, labor scarce and efficient and his farming stock gone. He was further harassed by being obliged to pay in legal tender was compelled to receive the discredited Confederate notes any debt due him. He died July 10, 1866.

February 6, 1840, James William Gray married Mar Jane Gilbert. She was of Scotch-Irish ancestry, daughter of Edward and Elizabeth (Patterson) Gilbert, and born in Frederick County, Virginia, April 23, 1823. She died February 2, 1893, having survived her husband over a quarter of a century. Her mother, Elizabeth Patterson, was an only child whose parents died during her infancy and she was reared by her grandparents, who had immigrated from Ulster and settled in Frederick County. She became their sole heir, inheriting from them a large farm and other property. James W. Gray and wife had eight children, six daughters and two sons.

The oldest daughter, Mary, married Frank Silver November 6, 1867. She resides in Martinsburg with her son, Hon. Gray Silver.

Virginia married Lient. Robert Hanson Stewart, the Confederate Army, a number of years her senior. Lieutenant Stewart died in 1879 and she in 1880. They were no children.

Elizabeth married Congressman George M. Bowers and lives in Martinsburg with her family.

The older son, John David Gray, living at Needmore Berkeley County, a widower without children, was educated at the Shenandoah Valley Academy, Winchester, Virginia, is a Presbyterian and a democrat.

The younger son, J. William Gray, was educated at Shenandoah Valley Academy and at the Wherry School at Worsham, Virginia, being a member of the Kappa Sigma fraternity at Worsham. He offered himself for service the war with Spain but was rejected because of physical disability. He took an active interest in politics, was a leading democrat of his section, but refused several nominations. Like his father, he was fond of versifying. He liked to take his dogs and gun and go afield, but he seldom returned with bloody trophies, although a good shot. His pockets of his hunting coat bulged with pebbles, shells, bulbs, roots and plants instead of game. He died October 5, 1904. He married Harriet Wilson, but had no children. Both these sons were men of unimpeachable integrity, good citizens and good neighbors, with a large charity for limitations and short comings of others and frank recognition of their own. One of the unmarried daughters is young. Two survive. Among the descendants of J. Gray may be found members of the Daughters of the Confederacy, the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Alumnae of the Mary Baldwin Seminary, Fairfax and other institutions and organizations.

MISS LYNNE WADDELL, principal of the Grant District High School in Preston County, is a native of that county and one of the best educated of its native daughters. She was educated in some of the higher institutions of education, but the service that has called out her great enthusiasm has been the educational progress and upbuilding of her home locality.

Her grandfather, John Matthew Waddell, came from Frostburg, Maryland, to Preston County in 1844 and established his home on the hill overlooking the village of Britton. He remained there the rest of his life, continuing the trade as a shoemaker. He married Sophia Fogle. They were the parents of two children, Richard B. and Rael. The latter died as the wife of Henry Myers, of Ellioville, Pennsylvania.

Richard Bonaparte Waddell was born at Frostburg, Maryland, September 14, 1837, and was seven years of age when his parents moved to Preston County. He acquired little or no schooling, but had a practical knowledge of affairs and was deeply interested in the progress of schools and in later life served as president of the Board of Education. He learned the trade of carpenter and at the age of twenty-five went into the military service during the Civil war, being commissioned by Governor Pierpont as captain in the One Hundred and Fourteenth giment, Third Division, Tenth Brigade of the West Virginia Militia. He was afterwards made third sergeant, Company L, Sixth Regiment, West Virginia Cavalry, and subsequently quartermaster sergeant of Company E, Sixth West Virginia Regiment. In the closing months of his military duty he was with his command at Fort Laramie, Wyoming, and while there made the acquaintance of the Indian chieftain Spotted Tail, and a warm friendship sprang up between them. He remained on the frontier on Indian duty until May 22, 1866. After the war he returned to West Virginia, farmed and worked at his trade, and in 1894 was elected a county commissioner and re-elected in 1898. He proved a thorough and capable county official, and he was also postmaster for six years at Clifton Mills and was postmaster and merchant at Brandonville from 1899 to 1902. The death of this good citizen occurred February 24, 1907. Richard Bonaparte Waddell married, April 11, 1858, Lucy Anne Weyant, who was born January 1, 1835, at Somerset, Pennsylvania, where her parents, John and Susan (Fichtner) Weyant, settled when they came from Germany. She died September 11, 1919. Her children were: Mrs. Virginia Benson, of Uniontown, Pennsylvania; Mrs. N. J. Chorpensing, of Mount Pleasant, Pennsylvania; Miss Lynne, of Brandonville, West Virginia; and Dr. C. W. Waddell, of Fairmont, West Virginia. Miss Lynne Waddell to the age of twelve lived in the village of Clifton Mills and thereafter at Brandonville. She acquired a public school education there. Miss Waddell is one of the first young women of Preston County to go outside the state to complete her literary education. She spent four years in the college preparatory scientific course at Mount Carroll Seminary in Illinois. After returning home she took up teaching, subsequently taught three years in the Glenville Normal School, and from there entered the University of West Virginia, where she completed in English and graduated A. B. in 1908.

For five years following her graduation from university Miss Waddell was in charge of the Department of English at Shepherd College, Shepherdstown, West Virginia. On leaving from a work that entailed specially heavy duties she took a year's rest and resumed her profession as principal of the high school at Albright, where she remained four years, and for one year was at Newburg. She then joined actively in the crusade for better educational advantages in Grant District, and her high standing as an educator and long experience enabled her to give convincing arguments in behalf of the establishment of a modern high school for the district. She has been principal of the high school since 1919. For several years she was a member of the County Textbook Board of Preston County, representing Grant District. She has also spent much time in club work, boys and girls club work and camp fire work, being girls' club agent and instructor in sewing and superior in various branches of school and home activities.

With the constitutional amendment granting universal suffrage Miss Waddell has accepted the opportunity to use her vote intelligently in behalf of good government and war candidates. She was reared in a republican home and in 1920 voted for Harding for president. She is a member of Shenandoah Junction Branch of the Eastern Star and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

JAMES ABRAHAM GRAHAM, M. D., has been engaged in the practice of his profession in West Virginia for more than a quarter of a century, and for the past twenty years has been successfully established in active general practice in the City of Fairmont, Marion County. He was born in Preston County, this state, April 10, 1868, and is of Scotch lineage. His grandfather, Samuel Graham, was a pioneer of Preston County, and there David Graham, father of the doctor, was born in 1836. His death occurred in 1892 and his entire active career was given to farm enterprise. He is a gallant soldier of the Union in the Civil war as a lieutenant in a West Virginia regiment. His wife, whose maiden name was Martha Field, likewise was a native of Preston County, where she was born in 1840. Doctor Graham attended the common schools and summer normal schools, and as a young man was a successful teacher in the schools of his native county for three years. In 1896 he graduated from historic old Jefferson Medical College in the City of Philadelphia, and in the same year he engaged in practice at Kingwood, judicial center of his native county. Five years later he returned to Jefferson Medical College for a post-graduate course, and since 1902 he has been established in practice at Fairmont. He is an honored member of the Marion County Medical Society and holds membership also in the West Virginia State Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

At Kingwood, Preston County, in 1898, Doctor Graham wedded Miss Orpha Christopher, daughter of Irvin and Mary (King) Christopher, she having been born in that county in the year 1874. Doctor and Mrs. Graham have four children, whose names and respective dates of birth are here recorded: Pauline (Mrs. Loe), April 25, 1899; James P., October 19, 1904; Ben Irvin, September 17, 1912; and David Field, June 7, 1916.

EDGAR N. DEARDORFF. One of the well ordered and thoroughly modern establishments contributing to the commercial prestige of the City of Huntington is the large and well equipped department store of the Deardorff-Sisler Company, of which Edgar N. Deardorff is president. This establishment, now one of the leading department stores in West Virginia, is situated on Ninth Street, between Fourth and Fifth avenues, and it controls a large and representative supporting patronage. H. A. Robson is vice president of the company, and E. B. Sisler is its secretary and treasurer.

Mr. Deardorff was born in Putnam County, West Virginia, November 23, 1864, a son of Isaac N. Deardorff, who was born in Bedford County, Virginia, in 1827, and who died at Gallipolis, Ohio, in 1899. Isaac N. Deardorff was a son of Peter Deardorff, who was born in Virginia, in 1798, and who came to what is now Putnam County, West Virginia, in the year 1849, he having been one of the substantial farmers of this county at the time of his death, in 1880. Isaac N. Deardorff was a young man at the time when the family home was established in Putnam County, where he became a prosperous farmer and whence he removed to Gallipolis, Ohio, in 1880. He there engaged in the hotel business, but he retired from active business a number of years prior to his death. He was a democrat, and both he and his wife were earnest members of the Baptist Church. Mrs. Deardorff continued to reside at Gallipolis until her death in 1920. She was born in the present Putnam County, West Virginia, in 1832, a representative of a sterling pioneer family of that county. Of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac N. Deardorff the eldest is Miss Alda W., who resides at Gallipolis, Ohio; Okley M. is the wife of William A. Horner, of that place; Camden R. is a railroad man and resides at Columbus, Ohio; Edgar N., of this sketch, was next in order of birth; William P. is a merchant at Gallipolis, Ohio; Miss Nannie E. likewise resides at Gallipolis; Betty R. is the wife of H. L. Cadot, of Columbus, Ohio.

In the public schools of Putnam County Edgar N. Deardorff continued his studies until he was sixteen years of age, when he accompanied his parents on their removal to Gallipolis, Ohio. For a time he was employed on a steamboat on the Ohio and Kanawha rivers, and for ten years thereafter he was employed in mercantile establishments at Gallipolis. On the 4th of March, 1893, he there established a dry goods store, and he is still the head of the business, which has been developed into one of the most important of its kind in Gallia County. In 1915 Mr. Deardorff came to Huntington, where he has maintained his residence since July 1st of that year. In October, 1912, he had here purchased the stock and business of the firm of Valentine & Crow, dealers in ready-to-wear garments. In the expansion of the enterprise into one of general department-store order he finally effected the organization and incorporation of the present Deardorff-Sisler Company, which has built up a large and representative mercantile business, based on effective service and fair and honorable dealings.

Mr. Deardorff is a democrat and is a liberal and progressive citizen and business man who has had no ambition for public office. He is a director of the Huntington Banking & Trust Company, is president of the Retail Merchants Association of this city, is treasurer of the local Kiwanis Club, and is a director of the Commercial Savings Bank of Gallipolis, Ohio. His modern and attractive residence in Huntington is at 1210 Eighth Street. He and his wife are zealous members of the First Methodist Episcopal Church at Huntington, and he is a member of its Board of Trustees. The Masonic affiliations of Mr. Deardorff are here briefly noted: Morning Dawn Lodge No. 7, A. F. and A. M., Gallipolis, Ohio; Gallipolis Chapter No. 79, R. A. M.; Moriah Council No. 32, R. and S. M., Gallipolis; the Rose Commandery No. 43, Knights Templar, at Gallipolis; the Scottish Rite Consistory at Cincinnati, Ohio, in which he has received the Thirty-second degree; and Beni-Kedem Temple of the Mystic Shrine, Charleston, West Virginia. He is affiliated also with the Knights of Pythias and the United Commercial Travelers, as is he also with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is an active member of the Huntington Chamber of Commerce and also of the Guyandotte Club and the Guyan Country Club.

At Gallipolis, Ohio, on the 14th of April, 1892, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Deardorff to Miss Launa M. Sneed, daughter of the late Frank M. and Sarah (Haptonstall) Sneed, the father having there been a successful contractor and builder for many years. In conclusion is entered the brief record concerning the children of Mr. and Mrs. Deardorff: Herbert Carroll, born May 28, 1894, is his father's assistant in the department store, and is a veteran of the World war, in which he served as a member of the Fifteenth Field Artillery with the American Expeditionary Forces in France, where he took part in the major engagements of St. Mihiel, Chateau Thierry, Belleau Wood, and those on the Vesle River and also the Argonne. His service in France and Germany covered a period of nineteen months. He is a graduate of the Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, and he married Miss Samantha Miller, of Gallipolis, that state. Frank N., born May 16, 1896, is an assistant in the department store of his father, and completed his education by attending the Staunton Military Academy at Staunton, Virginia. He served thirteen months in France, as a member of the Signal Corps of the American Expeditionary Forces. He is a popular member of the American Legion.

CARL ELIAS BEATY has had a well diversified business career in Marion County, but his active interests are now concentrated in the automobile industry, as president and general manager of the Standard Garage Company of Fairmont.

Mr. Beaty was born at Mannington, West Virginia, July 6, 1884, son of Newton S. and Margaret Ann (Blackshere) Beaty, and grandson of James and Maria Beaty, both natives of Mannington. Newton S. Beaty was born at Mannington in 1838, spent the first part of his life as a farmer, and subsequently had extensive interests in real estate, specializing in the handling of coal and oil lands. In the latter part of his life he was a director of the Exchange Bank of Mannington, an institution which he helped organize. He held that office at the time of his death in 1898. In the order of Masonry he was affiliated with Mannington Lodge No. 31, A. F. and A. M., Orient Chapter No. 9, R. A. M., Crusade Commandery No. 6, K. T., West Virginia Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite at Wheeling, and also Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling. His wife, Margaret Ann Blackshere, was born at Mannington in 1849, daughter of Elias and Eliza (Raymer) Blackshere, natives of Greene County, Pennsylvania, and of Scotch ancestry.

Carl E. Beaty, representing the third generation of the family at Mannington, attended the public schools of his native town, spent one year in the University of West Virginia, and left there in 1904 to continue his studies in Ohio Northern University at Ada, where he graduated with the degree Ph. G. in 1906. In August of that year he entered the drug business at Mannington, and continued successfully in that line for seven years. Selling out his store, he took up farming and the live stock business, operating the farm from his home in Mannington. In the meantime he was appointed deputy United States marshal, with headquarters at Clarksburg, and held that office for two years, following which he was elected deputy sheriff of Fairmont, and performed the duties of that position for two years.

At the close of his term as deputy sheriff, Mr. Beaty moved to Morgantown and opened a garage, operating a year. He sold this business in order to return to Fairmont and buy an interest in the Standard Garage Company, and in 1921 he became president and general manager of this organization, which furnishes complete adequate facilities that are greatly appreciated by all motor car owners in Fairmont.

Mr. Beaty is affiliated with Mannington Lodge No. 3, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He married 1908 Miss Lottie Deveny, who was born at Fairmont 1888, daughter of Thomas A. and Lottie (Burns) Deveny of that city. Mr. and Mrs. Beaty have three children: Thomas Deveny, born in 1910; Carl Elias, Jr., born 1911; and Robert Newton Beaty, born in 1915.

LUTHER B. BURK, M. D., who is established in successful practice in the City of Fairmont, Marion County, as specialist in diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat, was born on a farm at Sand Fork, Gilmer County, this state January 5, 1862, a son of Archibald and Malinda (Moyers) Burke, the former having been born on the same farm as the son, in the year 1835, and the latter having been born in Greenbrier County, Virginia, April 9, 1841. Her parents were pioneers of Greenbrier County, from which they removed to Braxton County. Archibald Burk, whose death occurred August 8, 1902, was a son of John Burk who was born in Virginia and who became a pioneer of what is now Gilmer County, West Virginia, where he settled in the midst of the forest and instituted the reclamation of a farm. His father, John, Sr., was a native of Ireland and came to America as a British soldier in the British Army in the Revolutionary war, after the close of which he settled permanently in Virginia, now West Virginia.

Doctor Burke was reared on the old homestead farm and after attending the rural schools he continued his studies in the State Normal School at Glenville, West Virginia, in which he was graduated in 1886. He had previously made a successful record as a teacher, and after his graduation he continued his service in the pedagogic profession nine years. From May, 1888, to June of the following year he was editor and publisher of the Gilmer County Banner at Glenville, West Virginia. In 1890 he entered the Louisville Medical School, and in the following year, after brief attendance in the Kentucky School of Medicine, he matriculated in the medical department of the University of Louisville, in which well ordered Kentucky institution he was graduated March 14, 1892, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. On the 1st of the following May he engaged in practice at Flemington, Taylor County, West Virginia, where he remained two years and six months. From October, 1894, until March, 1897, he was engaged in practice at Lost Creek, Harrison County, West Virginia, and since that time he has continuously maintained his office in the same building at Fairmont save for an interval of one year. He has built up a substantial and representative practice in his special field, of diagnosis and treatment of diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat, to which he confines himself exclusively. In 1896 he did post-graduate work in the New York Polyclinic and in the national metropolis he did post-graduate work also in the Manhattan Eye and Ear Hospital and the Northwestern Hospital. In 1897 he availed himself of the clinical advantages of the Presbyterian Eye and Ear Hospital in Baltimore, and in 1899 he specialized further by attending clinics at the Wills Eye Hospital in the City of Philadelphia. In that city in 1899 he graduated in the Eastern College of Electro-Therapeutics and Psychological Medicine, with the degree of Electro-Therapeutics.

E. W. Bush

September 5, 1893, Doctor Burk married Miss Edmonia Currence, who was born in Braxton County, this state, a daughter of Layben and Alice (Ward) Currence. Doctor Mrs. Burk are active members of the Methodist Protestant Church.

EDWARD F. HOLBERT is one of the young and progressive insurance men of Fairmont, where for twenty years he has been active in the insurance business and has built up an organization with all facilities for perfect service in the insurance field.

Mr. Holbert was born January 30, 1881, on the farm in Grant District of Marion County, son of Reuben W. and Minnie H. (Shaver) Holbert. His parents were also born Marion County, representing early families in that section of the state. Reuben W. Holbert in 1891 removed his home to Monongah, and died there in 1911. His widow lives.

Edward F. Holbert acquired a public school education, and before reaching his majority began working in the coal company's offices at Monongah. He left there in November, 1901, to join his brother Samuel in the insurance business at Fairmont. Somewhat later the firm of Holbert Brothers was established, and that title is still maintained, though the senior brother has not been connected with the firm since 1912. Mr. Holbert has one of the largest fire insurance agencies in Northern West Virginia.

He represents several old and well established insurance organizations, two of them being the well known Home of New York and the Insurance Company of North America.

Mr. Holbert is representing the insurance interests of the city in the Fairmont Rotary Club, is a member of the Fairmont Chamber of Commerce, and is one of the leading sons of the city, being a member of Fairmont Lodge No. 10, A. F. and A. M., past high priest of Orient Chapter, A. M., past eminent commander of Crusade Commandery 16, K. T., and a member of Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling. He is also affiliated with Fairmont Lodge No. 249, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

Mr. Holbert married Miss Lucy Haymond, daughter of John William S. Haymond, of Fairmont. Their family consists of three daughters, Agnes Helen, Mary Haymond and Ann Franklin.

L. L. CORDRAY, president and general manager of the Fairmont Garage Company of Fairmont, has been a progressive motorist in business circles of Marion County for the past twenty years, and his success in the automobile field makes him one of the leading men in that line in the state.

He was born on a farm in Winfield District of Marion County September 28, 1884, son of William E. and Jennie (Irons) Cordray. His father, who was born on a farm in Grant District of Monongalia County in 1845, removed to Marion County when a young man, married there, and during an active career gained prominence both in business and civic affairs. For twelve years he was a member of the Marion County Court. He left the farm when the dwelling was destroyed by fire in 1902 and removed to Fairmont, where he entered the feed business under the name of W. E. Cordray & Son. W. E. Cordray died in 1913, and his wife, Jennie, who was born in Marion County in 1856, died in 1918.

L. L. Cordray had a farm environment and training, and his education of the common schools was supplemented by attending the Fairmont State Normal School. Upon reaching his majority he became associated with his father in the feed business at Fairmont, but two years later he and his brother Joseph F. organized the Cordray Carriage Company, manufacturers and dealers in carriages. This firm was dissolved by the death of Joseph F. Cordray in 1910. Following the death of his brother Mr. Cordray sold the carriage business. For three years he was deputy county auditor for Winfield and Union Districts. He spent part of the year 1913-14 in the City of Cleveland, where he became familiarized himself with the automobile industry. He returned to Fairmont, and in the latter part of 1914 engaged in the automobile business on the East Side. The Hall Garage Company was organized by him in 1917, and this company now conducts one of the leading garages in the city and also acts as sales agents and distributors for the Maxwell and Chalmers cars over a territory covering fifteen West Virginia counties and a strip in Western Pennsylvania.

Mr. Cordray is president of the Fairmont Automobile Association, is a director of the Fairmont Chamber of Commerce, and is a member of the Kiwanis Club, Knights of Pythias, Elks, and the First Presbyterian Church. On April 24, 1912, he married Miss Hallie Hamilton, daughter of the late Joseph E. Hamilton, of Fairmont. They have an adopted son, Robert Luther.

ELBERT WILLIS BUSH. Prominent among the public officials who are contributing to the civic welfare and advancement of Huntington stands Elbert Willis Bush, city commissioner of public utilities, public buildings and grounds. He has held some city position regularly since 1915, during which time he has established an excellent record for conscientious and constructive work, and in addition to being well known in public life is a prominent figure in fraternal circles, particularly in the Knights of Pythias.

Mr. Bush was born February 15, 1878, at Sabina, Ohio, the only son and child of Owen and Mary (Fenner) Bush. His father was born in Clinton County, Ohio, and resided near Sabina all of his life, devoting himself without interruption to the pursuits of agriculture, in which he achieved success. He was a republican in his political views, and his religious faith was that of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he was an active worker. He died at Sabina in 1915. Mr. Bush married Miss Mary Fenner, who was born in 1857, in Adams County, Ohio, and died near Sabina in 1887.

Elbert Willis Bush was educated in the rural schools of Clinton County, Ohio, and prepared for a business career by attendance at the Buckeye Business College at Sidney, Ohio, in 1896 and 1897. For two years after graduation he served as an instructor in this college, and in 1903 came to Huntington, where he entered the employ of the Huntington Cold Storage and Commission Company in the general offices. Later he resigned this position to accept one with T. H. Clay, a brokerage commission merchant, with whom he was employed in office work. In 1915 Mr. Bush was appointed assistant city treasurer of Huntington by the city board of commissioners, and filled that office for three years. Next he was appointed city auditor, and held this office one year exactly. In the meanwhile he was elected a city commissioner of Huntington, in May, 1919, for a term of three years, his term of office expiring the second Monday in June, 1922. He is commissioner of public utilities, public buildings and grounds, and, as before noted, has established an excellent record. All those having business at Mr. Bush's office in the City Hall, Eighth Street and Fifth Avenue, have found him courteous, obliging and prompt, and he has succeeded in making and retaining numerous friends in the regular course of his duties. He is a republican in politics.

Mr. Bush has made a hobby of fraternal organizations, and is prominently known in this connection, particularly in the Knights of Pythias order. He was knighted in Huntington Lodge No. 33, Knights of Pythias, in June, 1906, elected chancellor commander in December of that year, received the Grand Lodge rank at Huntington in 1907, and in December, 1907, was elected master of finance, with which office he was connected until 1912, when he was elected keeper of records and seal, a position he has held since. He is the only grand chancellor to fill this office during his term, but the subordinate lodge would not release him. He served as deputy grand chancellor in 1912-13, was a representative to the Grand Lodge at the session held at Charleston in 1912, was made chairman of the committee on reports by Grand Chancellor Sam R. Nuzum, and elected grand outer guard in 1914, after which he was advanced each year until 1918, when he was elected grand chancellor at Clarkshurg. Mr. Bush is a member of Shiraz Temple No. 29 Dramatic Order Knights of Khorasan, of Charleston, having joined at a ceremonial held at Huntington in 1911. He likewise holds membership in Lewis Temple No. 22, Pythian Sisters; Huntington Lodge No. 313, B. P. O. E.; Mohawk Tribe No. 11, I. O. R. M.; Huntington Council No. 190, J. O. U. A. M.; Huntington Council No. 53, U. C. T., of which he served as secretary for several years; Huntington Lodge No. 347, L. O. O. M., and Ivanhoe Castle No. 13, K. G. E. He has other connections of a business, social and civic character, and is a member of the Huntington Chamber of Commerce. His religious connection is with the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church.

On January 9, 1918, at Covington, Kentucky, Mr. Bush was united in marriage with Mrs. Mamie (Roberts) Hardwicke, daughter of Frank N. and Mary Roberts, the latter now deceased and the former a resident of Hamlin, Lincoln County, West Virginia. Mr. Roberts, who is now ninety years of age, is living in retirement after a long and successful career as a merchant. To Mr. and Mrs. Bush there has come one child, Mary Virginia, who was born at Huntington September 2, 1919.

SAMUEL J. SUBLETTE is one of the keen and resourceful business men of Bluefield, where he has been a retail and wholesale merchant for a number of years. He took up commercial life soon after leaving school, and has achieved his success without special advantages aside from his own character and determined effort.

Mr. Sublette was born at Alleghany Spring, Virginia, February 4, 1876, son of James H. and Alice A. (Helm) Sublette. Sublette is an old name in American Colonial history and originated in the south of France, whence an ancestor came to the Colonies nearly 200 years ago. One of the important settlements of the family was at Powhatan Court House in Virginia. This family was represented in the Revolutionary war. James H. Sublette and wife were both born in Virginia, where the former was a farmer and stock raiser and took an active interest in politics. However, the only office in which he would consent to serve was that of school trustee, and he held that post for many years, due to his very sincere interest in the welfare of schools. During the Civil war he was in Company G of the Fourth Virginia Regiment, and was in from the beginning to the end of the war, though once he was captured and spent nine months in a Federal prison, where his principal diet was rice.

Samuel J. Sublette attended the common and graded schools of Alleghany Spring, and soon after leaving school he went to work as a traveling salesman for Bousack Brothers of Roanoke, Virginia. He was on the road for that firm three years and then set up a mercantile business of his own at Alleghany Spring. He did well there, and after five years sold out and moved to Bluefield, West Virginia, being attracted to this town by its great promise for the future. Here he opened a retail grocery store under the firm name of Sublette & Barnes. The partnership was dissolved in 1915, and after that Mr. Sublette continued alone for two years and then organized the Sublette Grocery Company, wholesale. He was the leading spirit in this corporation for a time, but in 1918 retired from the executive control, though he remained financially identified with the company until January 1, 1921, when he resigned and organized the Sublette Feed & Supply Company, Incorporated, with capital of $100,000. Mr. Sublette is president of J. T. McMullin, secretary of this company, which does a business all over Southern West Virginia.

In 1911, at Bluefield, Mr. Sublette married Miss Ethel R. Wall, daughter of James and Margaret Wall. They have two children, Margaret Hill and Samuel J., Jr. They are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Mr. Sublette has some business and social relations with such organizations as the Chamber of Commerce, Elks Club, is a Royal Arch Knight Templar Mason and Shriner and since coming to Bluefield has worked with other progressive citizens toward the ideal of making this one of the best commercial towns in the state.

SAMUEL B. JOHNSON, M. D. Medical science has so progressed that advances are made in it almost hourly.

Specializing observation on disease has worked marvelous changes in methods of treatment; tireless theoretic experiments have proved the truth of contentions, and only after results have been demonstrated beyond reasonable doubt are discoveries given to the public. In the work of the past quarter of a century, and especially during the period of the late war, so many practical advances have been made that it is impossible to enumerate them, but none of them have come naturally, but are the outcome of the tireless, aggressive and self-sacrificing work of the men who have devoted themselves to the practice of medicine, one of whom in Pendleton County is Dr. Samuel B. Johnson of Franklin. Doctor Johnson was born on the site of his present drug store, in the City of Franklin, September 6, 1867.

The Johnson family originated in England, and belonged to the House of Howard. While this country was still a English colony representatives of the name sought here a refuge, and found in the Valley of the Susquehanna, in Pennsylvania, the opportunity they sought. It was from that region that the Pendleton Johnsons came, and the first of the name in Pendleton County of whom there is record was Joseph Johnson and his son, Samuel Johnson, grandfather of Doctor Johnson, who was born at Franklin in 1800 and spent his life as a merchant and farmer. During the old muster days he served as a major of a regiment of the militia, and he was very highly regarded as a man and a citizen. Modern methods of doing business had not then been inaugurated, and this old-time merchant kept his own books, making the entries with a quill pen. His transactions as thus recorded were carried on with pounds, shillings and pence, instead of according to our own tables. Samuel Johnson died at Franklin in 1862.

The son of Samuel Johnson, Dr. John Dice Johnson, father of Doctor Johnson of this notice, was born at Franklin, December 26, 1833, and was engaged in the practice of medicine in Pendleton County for many years. His professional education was obtained at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, graduating there from in 1857, and he immediately thereafter began his practice. At that time he was the only virile practitioner in the whole region about Franklin, and because of this fact he was excused from service in the army by the Confederate authorities, and left to care for the people here. When this section was occupied by the Federal army he rendered professional service to its men just as conscientiously when it was required.

Dr. John D. Johnson was way ahead of his times, and continued not only a student of his profession throughout his life, but some of his methods of treatment were very original, and were carefully thought out. In the day when he was in his prime the established method of caring for a typhoid patient was to seclude him in a room as nearly air-tight as it could be made, and to keep from him all water. This was called the "burn 'em up" treatment, and was in great favor with the physicians of that day, although the fatalities from this disease were appalling. Doctor Johnson was not satisfied with the results, and sought other means of combating the fever. Called to attend a young man ill with typhoid, and realizing that unless a different treatment were followed there was no hope of recovery, he obtained his mother's permission to follow the method he had studied out as a last resort. Braving public opinion and the criticism of his fellow practitioners, Doctor Johnson had the young man carried to the banks of the South Branch and immersed him in its cool waters. Returning his patient to his home, he left him to make his other visits of mercy, trembling at what he had done, and yet confident that death would have resulted anyway. The following morning when he called again he found his patient had rested much easier, and he once more gave him a bath in the river, and kept up this original and vigorous treatment until he had fully restored him to health. This treatment and cure elicited much local interest and discussion, and the editor of Gilliard's Medical Journal, of Philadelphia, a man of considerable education and foresight, urged Doctor John-to write up the case and allow him to publish it, the busy physician, much more interested in curing than securing to himself the honor of so doing, took the time to follow this advice, and consequently Dr. Doctor Brann, of England, who made similar arguments at a subsequent date, is given the credit, and treatment is still known as "Brann's" instead of "Johnson's" as it should be.

The years passed Doctor Johnson commenced to extend the scope of his activities, and began merchandising and also acquired farm land which he operated. He was a good citizen's part in politics, as a democrat, and many years he was a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and during his earlier life he did it as an official. He married Isabel Mantz, of Merick City, Maryland, although born at Sharpsburg, state, her father having been a merchant of Frederick a number of years, and subsequently clerk of the Circuit Court. Mr. Mantz married Mary A. Grove, and when he was seventy-two years of age. Mrs. Johnson the eldest of a family of four daughters and three of whom four survive, and she died February 12, 1891, when sixty-eight years old. Dr. John D. Johnson and his wife had three children, namely: Florence, who when about twelve years old; Charles, who died in infancy; and Dr. Samuel Beam, of this notice.

Doctor Johnson, the younger, whose name opens this article, attended the public schools of Franklin and a private school taught by Professor Johnson, and then he came a student of Staunton Military Academy, and subsequently of Randolph-Macon College. For his medical training he attended the University of Maryland at Baltimore, and was graduated therefrom April 14, 1892, with degree of Doctor of Medicine. Returning to Franklin, he entered upon a general practice, and for four years in partnership with Dr. Fred Mooman. He is now city health officer, and has held the office for about five years, and for a quarter of a century was health officer of Franklin. During the influenza epidemic of 1918-19 practice became almost too strenuous for human endurance, yet as human suffering must be relieved he kept at his post and continued his visiting and ministering without yielding to his own tired and exhausted body, the epidemic was dissipated. Some years ago he closed the drug store he is conducting, which is a reliable one and the only one in the county, but continues his large practice as well.

Doctor Johnson has been very active in many directions, has been president of the Franklin District Board of Education for twenty-four years. As one of the organizers of the Franklin Bank he has always been active in its management, and has been its president since it opened its doors for business in 1911. Like his father and grandfather he is identified with rural development as a farmer, and in association with his son as stockman on a modest scale. He is a member of Pendleton Lodge, No. 144, A. F. and A. M., and is serving as secretary and treasurer. Like his father, he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and is an official of the local congregation.

On December 20, 1893, Doctor Johnson married in Franklin County, Pennsylvania, ten miles north of Hagerstown, Maryland, Miss Katherine Kennedy Snively, who was born at Lady Grove, Franklin County, Pennsylvania, November 1872. She received her early education by private tutors, and also attended Wilson College for Women, Chambersburg, Pennsylvania. Her parents were Frederick B. and Ella G. (Hammond) Snively, the former a native of Lady Grove, Franklin County, Pennsylvania, and the latter of the Benevolent, Washington County, Maryland. Mr. Mrs. Snively had nine children, those reaching mature age being as follows: Edwin S.; Jessie E., wife of J. Searrest, of Lincoln, Nebraska; Nellie C., wife of J. Searrest, of Lincoln, Nebraska; and Mrs. Snively, who was next to the youngest.

Doctor and Mrs. Johnson had the following children: Doctor Snively is mentioned below. Katherine Kennedy Snively was born at Lady Grove, Franklin County, Pennsylvania, and was educated from the Franklin schools and Mary Baldwin Seminary, Staunton, Virginia. She married James L. Mitchell, of Notasulga, Alabama, and resides at Washington, District of Columbia. Cornelia Isabel, who is a graduate of the Franklin High School, is now attending West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buckhannon. The son, Edwin Snively Johnson finished the public schools of Franklin and attended Randolph-Macon Academy, Front Royal and Jefferson School for Boys at Charlottesville, West Virginia. He served in the medical corps at Camp Meade during the World war, where he had charge of the dispensary, but the armistice was signed before he was sent overseas. After he received his honorable discharge he returned to Franklin, and is now a very busy young man, carrying on a large fire insurance business, acting as manager of his father's drug store and stock business, and in farming. He has become prominent in local affairs and is now mayor of Franklin. He is prominent in Masonry as a member of Pendleton Lodge, No. 144, A. F. and A. M., No. 1 Consistory at Wheeling, Thirty-second Scottish Rite, and a member of Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is also a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, No. 411, at Morgantown, and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Franklin.

While his son was at Camp Meade, Doctor Johnson was doing all in his power to render a loyal assistance. He was one of the examiners for the Draft Board of Pendleton County, and was otherwise helpful. He is a man of high ideals and has always lived up to them, and set a standard of right living that all would do well to emulate. Coming as he does of one of the very old and honored families of the country, he is proud of his ancestors, and anxious to so direct his life that his descendants may point to him and his deeds with equal pride.

LUCIAN N. YOST, M. D., who is engaged in the successful practice of his profession in the City of Fairmont, Marion County, was born at Fairview, this county, November 5, 1871, a son of Dr. Fielding H. and Malinda (Jones) Yost. Dr. Fielding H. Yost was born on the old family homestead near Fairview, this county, in 1827, and was a representative of one of the old and influential families of this section of the state. He graduated from the Eclectic Medical College in Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1861, and was for many years engaged in active practice at Fairview and Morgantown, West Virginia. His wife was born in Pleasant Valley, Monongalia County in 1830, a daughter of John Jones, who there conducted, prior to the Civil war, an old-time tavern or inn and who later became a prominent citizen of Morgantown.

Dr. Lucian N. Yost supplemented the discipline of the public schools by attending the University of West Virginia, 1889-91. In 1892 he received from the Ohio Northern University at Ada, Ohio, the degree of Doctor of Pharmacy, and in the following year he attended lectures in Starling Medical College, now the medical department of the University of Ohio, at Columbus. In 1895 he graduated from his father's alma mater, the Eclectic Medical College, in the City of Cincinnati, from which he received his degree of Doctor of Medicine. In the same year he established himself in practice at Fairmont, and here he has continued his effective service as one of the representative physicians and surgeons of his native county. He has held since 1911 the position of health officer of Marion County, his last appointment having been made in July, 1921. The doctor insistently keeps in touch with the advances made in medical and surgical science, and is affiliated with the American Medical Association, the American Public Health Association, the West Virginia State Medical Society and the Marion County Medical Society. He is affiliated also with the Masonic fraternity, the Elks and the Knights of Pythias, and both he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church.

In 1895 Doctor Yost married Miss Belle Kennedy, daughter of Rev. W. H. Kennedy, of Syracuse, New York, and her death occurred in 1903. The one child of this union is Rufus L., who was born October 20, 1896. In 1905 was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Yost and Miss Minnie Smith, daughter of Rev. H. N. Smith, of Louisville, Kentucky. Mrs. Yost is active in church work and club circles in her home city, where she is president of the Woman's Club and where she was specially active in patriotic service during the World war period. Doctor and Mrs. Yost have a daughter, Margaret Ann, born November 29, 1907.

WILLIAM EMMETT BUCKEY is making an admirable record of service in connection with educational work in the City of Fairmont, judicial center and metropolis of Marion County, where he is the efficient and popular principal of the high school. He was born at Beverly, Randolph County, West Virginia, on the 27th of March, 1886, and is a scion of a family that has been one of prominence and influence in that county for three generations. His father, Charles N. Buckey, likewise was born at Beverly, that county, the date of his nativity having been December 29, 1861, and both he and his wife being still residents of Beverly. Charles N. Buckey is a son of Emmett and Margaret (Ward) Buckey, the former of whom was born at Beverly, February 2, 1831, and the latter of whom was born at Elkins, now the judicial center of Randolph County, this state. Emmett Buckey was one of the venerable and honored citizens of his native town at the time of his death, in May, 1921, when ninety years of age. Charles N. Buckey married Miss Rosa McCleary, who was born in New York City in 1869, but was taken to California when a child. She is of sterling Irish lineage.

In the public schools of his native village William E. Buckey continued his studies until his graduation in the high school, and in 1912 he graduated from the West Virginia State Normal School at Fairmont. He received the degree of Bachelor of Arts from the University of West Virginia in 1921 and in the same year took a post-graduate course in historic old Harvard University, besides which in 1913 he was a student in the University of Pennsylvania. Mr. Buckey initiated his pedagogic career when he was eighteen years of age, and his novitiate was served as teacher in the rural or district schools of his native county. His record in his chosen profession has been one of consecutive advancement and has involved his service as a teacher in the schools of Central City, now a part of the City of Huntington, this state, and those of the village of Cairo, Ritchie County. He was for seven years principal of the normal training school at Fairmont, West Virginia. In 1921 he was appointed principal of the Fairmont High School, and in this position he is effectively maintaining his prestige as an enthusiastic and successful teacher. He is also serving as a member of the Certification Board of the Fairmont independent school district. In the period of the nation's participation in the World war Mr. Buckey served as a member of the Classification Board, an adjunct of the Draft Board of Marion County, and he also aided materially in other patriot activities in his home community. He is affiliated with Tygarts Valley Lodge No. 66, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in Randolph County, and with the Phi Beta Kappa fraternity at the University of West Virginia. At Fairmont he is an active and valued member of the Kiwanis Club, and is a loyal supporter of its progressive civic policies and service.

On June 23, 1915, Mr. Buckey married Miss Ada Dee Talkington, of Fairmont, a daughter of J. Raymer and Sarah E. (Talkington) Talkington.

JOHN A. CLARK, a highly honored citizen of Fairmont, has given the greater part of his active lifetime to the business and industry of coal mining, has been an independent operator for thirty years, and the interests associated with his name comprise some of the most successful coal companies in the state.

He was born January 22, 1855, at Cumberland, Maryland. His grandfather, John Clark, brought his family from Ireland, locating at Mount Savage, Maryland. His son Andrew was born in Maryland and married Ellen Colvin, whose birth occurred at Green Springs Run in Hampshire County, Virginia. Andrew Clark was a railroad engineer on the Baltimore & Ohio until after the death of his wife in 1857, and he then removed to Louisville, where he entered the service of the Louisville & Nashville Railway. Early in the Civil war he enlisted in the Confederate Army and served in Beauregard's Division. He died in Louisville in 1868, the result of a saber wound in the head received in a battle to hand encounter while serving in the army.

Following the death of his mother John A. Clark given a home by his grandfather Clark at Cumberland, Maryland, with whom he remained to the age of eleven when he became a bread winner. His education has been the result of practical experience rather than by any continued contact with schools. From 1866 until 1880 he clerked in a store at Lonaconing in the Georges Creek region of Maryland, and succeeding that he was store manager and paymaster for the Newburg Orrel Coal & Coke Company, Newburg, Preston County, West Virginia. Mr. Clark moved to Fairmont as manager of the store of the Monongahela Coal & Coke Company at Monongah, and in 1890 he was appointed superintendent of the Linden Coke Company, Clements.

April 1, 1891, he became an independent operator when he organized the Clark Coal & Coke Company, with plant at Pritchard on the Monongahela River Railway. His plant was at Anderson, on the same railroad, and the third at Chiefton on the same railroad. In 1899 he developed coal property at Ocean on the Parkersburg branch known as the Cleveland & Fairmont, and in the same year began developing the Columbia Coal & Coke Company at Columbia and also the Fairmont & Baltimore Coal & Coke Company at Adamston. All these were successfully operated by Mr. Clark, and the properties were sold to the Fairmont Consolidation Coal Company, in 1901.

In the latter year Mr. Clark began developments on the Waldo Mine at Wilsonburg, and also opened up the Golf, New Chiefton and the New Randolph mines, these being operated as properties of the Madeira Hill-Clark Company. In 1910 he took over the Piteairn Coal Company's mine known as the Piteairn and organized the Harry B. Coal & Coke Company, having as his partners his sons Harry John A., Jr., and Kenna. Mr. Clark is president of the company, Harry B., general manager, and John A., Jr., superintendent of all the interests.

The year 1922 finds the Clark coal interests approximately as follows: Harry B. Coal & Coke Company operating the Piteairn, mining gas, steam and domestic coal; Harry B. Coal Company operating the Junior Mine for low sulphur and gas coal; Salvatore Coal Company operating the Gre Mine and producing gas and domestic coal; Big Four Coal Company operating the Big Four Mine for high grade gas and steam coal; Dixie Mining Company operating the Ma Mine, gas, steam and domestic coal; Car-Diff Smokeless Coal Company operating the Car-Diff, steam and smithing coal, at Tunnelton, Preston County, West Virginia.

Mr. Clark married in 1880 Miss Nannie E. Clark, daughter of Jackson and Rebecca (Cresap) Clark, of Cumberland, Maryland. Their three sons have already been named: Harry, born in 1882, married Ann Nolan, of Pittsburgh, and is the father of a daughter, Mary. John A., Jr., born in 1888, married Annette Murphy, of Uniontown, Pennsylvania. Kenna, born in 1893, married Maria Haymont, daughter of Judge William S. Haymond, of Fairmont.

H. ERNEST HAWKINS is one of the progressive business men of the City of Fairmont, Marion County, where he is secretary and treasurer of the Scott & Hawkins Company, dealers in shoes and clothing. This company, which conducts one of the leading mercantile establishments of the city, was organized and incorporated in 1912, and its president, John S. Scott, is now postmaster of Fairmont.

Mr. Hawkins was born on his father's farm in Winfield District, Marion County, December 21, 1881, and is a son of Marcellus Marion and Ann (Hall) Hawkins, who still reside on their excellent farm homestead. The father has held various local offices, including that of president of the school board of his district. He is a republican and member of the Improved Order of Red Men, and both he and his wife are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. John Hawkins, grandfather of the subject of this review, was the original representative of the Hawkins family in Marion County, and here he married Amanda edith, a member of an honored pioneer family of the city.

Ernest Hawkins was reared on the home farm and had his youthful education in the public schools. In 1892 he took a position as clerk in a department store at Fairmont, and in this connection, in an experience of about five years, he gained thorough knowledge of mercantile sales and business methods, so that he was well fortified when he became associated with Mr. Scott in organizing the Scott & Hawkins Company, as noted in the opening paragraph of this sketch. He is a member of Fairmont Lodge No. 2, I. O. O. F., and the local organizations of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Modern Order of America, Loyal Order of Moose, Knights of the Maccabees and Knights of Pythias. He has been especially prominent in the Improved Order of Red Men, of which his affiliation is with Setting Sun Tribe No. 16, and he is a past great sachem of West Virginia. Mr. Hawkins is a staunch republican, and he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

May 3, 1905, recorded the marriage of Mr. Hawkins and Miss Sadie N. Harden, who was born at Fairmont, August 1881, a daughter of Thomas D. and Delia (Barnes) Harden. Mr. Harden was a gallant soldier of the Union during virtually the entire period of the Civil war, and was wounded at the battle of Winchester. As a young man he taught school, later was engaged in farming, and thereafter was engaged in the lumber business at Fairmont, where, still later, he operated a pottery. His wife was born September 4, 1847, a daughter of Isaac and Margaret O. (Holland) Barnes. Mr. and Mrs. Hawkins have three children, whose names and respective dates of birth are here recorded: Margaret Louise, July 27, 1903; Kenneth Harden, December 26, 1910; and Ruth Lillian, December 18, 1914.

HENRY J. HOFMANN, JR., who received his training in railroad offices at Toledo, becoming an expert traffic man, was called to Wheeling as traffic manager for the H. Bettis Company, one of the largest coopersage manufacturing concerns in the Ohio Valley. Mr. Hofmann has made his services increasingly useful to this corporation and is now vice president.

He was born at Toledo October 15, 1888. His father, Henry J. Hofmann, was born at Toledo, February 12, 1860, and has spent all his life in that city. For a number of years he owned and operated a meat market, later was connected with a wholesale meat firm, and finally was a permanent meat inspector, retiring from business affairs in 1911. He is a democrat in politics. Henry J. Hofmann, Sr., married Louisa Marie Umbs. She was born at DeLee, Ohio, March 21, 1861. Of their five children only Barbara died at the age of eighteen years. Julia Umbs was first married to Henry Steinbrecher, a cigar manufacturer, and she is now the wife of Emile Gaffner, connected with the Toledo Railway and Light Company. The third is Henry J., Jr. George E. of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, is assistant manager of a large furniture company of Philadelphia, and Miss Edna is at home.

Henry J. Hofmann acquired a public school education at Toledo, completed his sophomore year in high school, and in a year in the Melchior Brothers Business College. In 1905 he became a stenographer in the Gates Union Ticket office, and after nine months went with the Toledo general offices of the Wabash Railway. For a year and a half was stenographer and assistant ticket agent, following which he became city ticket agent for the Hocking Valley Railway Company at Toledo. After two years he was appointed chief clerk to the general freight agent of the Hocking Valley Company at Toledo.

February 3, 1913, Mr. Hofmann came to Wheeling as chief manager for the H. Bettis Company. This company manufactures slack coopersage and slack barrels, and its product is widely distributed all over the Central and Western states. The general offices of the company are in the Board of Trade Building at Wheeling. Mr. Hofmann, months after he became traffic manager was made vice president in addition to his other duties. In February, 1918, he became secretary and treasurer of the company, and since January, 1921, has directed the extensive business as president.

Mr. Hofmann is prominently and well known in traffic and business circles of the Ohio Valley. He is a member of the Pittsburgh Traffic Club, is vice president of the Wheeling Traffic Club, and a member of the Associated Coopersage Industries of America. He is a member of Council No. 37, United Commercial Travelers of America, Wheeling Chamber of Commerce, Wheeling Association of Credit Men, Wheeling Automobile Club, Old Colony Club, Wheeling Country Club and the Kiwanis Club. He is a republican, a Catholic, holds the chair of Grand Knight in Carroll Council No. 504, Knights of Columbus, being a Fourth Degree Knight of Columbus and holding the office of F. C. in Carroll Assembly, and is a member of Wheeling Lodge No. 25, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

June 17, 1914, at Toledo, Mr. Hofmann married Miss Margaret C. Seally, daughter of Roger and Elizabeth (Riely) Seally, of Toledo, where her mother resides. Her father was a merchant at Toledo and died in July, 1921. Mrs. Hofmann is a graduate of the Toledo High School. To their marriage were born three children, Betty Jane on December 23, 1915; Henry J., born September 2, 1917, and died in April, 1918; and John Joseph, born June 16, 1920.

WILL E. MORRIS. There are few citizens better known in public life in Harrison County, West Virginia, than Will E. Morris, who has ably filled the office of prosecuting attorney of the county for a number of terms. Mr. Morris is well qualified for this responsible position, having had sound legal training and wide and unusual experience. The esteem in which he is held at Clarksburg, his home city, is not only because of recognition of his abilities as a lawyer and his complete fulfillment of every official duty, but also is a hearty tribute to a man of sterling character and civic usefulness.

Mr. Morris belongs to West Virginia through birth and parentage, coming from old and substantial Harrison County families. He was born near Salem in Harrison County January 8, 1872. He grew up on the home farm, although agriculture did not particularly appeal to him as a vocation. He was ambitious and needed no urging to apply himself diligently to his studies, passing creditably through the grades in the public schools and when practicable attended spring and summer sessions in the normal schools and in other institutions. He was little more than a boy when he began to teach in the country schools, and alternated teaching with school attendance, and was graduated from the West Virginia Wesleyan College in 1899.

For some years Mr. Morris remained in the educational field, at one time being a teacher at the Glenville Normal, and for one year was an instructor in Marshall College, Huntington, West Virginia. In the meanwhile by private study and in the West Virginia University he was preparing for the law, and through this connection with the university, was selected as one of the twelve teachers the university was permitted to name by the Government for appointment as teacher in the Philippine Islands. Mr. Morris accepted this appointment, and the year and a half that he spent in the Orient not only benefited the dusky charges of the United States who came under his instruction, but benefited himself through the broadening influence that travel and change give to intelligent and observing persons.

Upon his return to his native land Mr. Morris resumed his law studies in the West Virginia University, completed his course and was admitted to the bar in 1903. He established himself at Clarksburg, and recognition of his legal ability was shown in the following year by his election to the office of prosecuting attorney of Harrison County, which office he held through two consecutive terms, eight years. Four years later, in 1916, Mr. Morris was again elected prosecuting attorney, and in 1920 was re-elected to an office in which he has been unusually efficient. As a lawyer he has always been considered effective as an advocate and trustworthy as a counsellor.

In 1903 Mr. Morris married Miss Camella Young, who is a daughter of the late Rev. William Young, formerly a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Conference. Mrs. Morris is a graduate also of the West Virginia Wesleyan College. Mr. and Mrs. Morris have four children: William, Robert, Ruth and John. In political sentiment Mr. Morris is a republican and an influential factor in his party in Harrison County. He leads too busy a life to be very active in social organizations, but is a thirty-second degree Mason and a Shriner and is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and a Kiwanisian.

LOYD LOWNDES. Clarksburg is the seat of an interesting branch of the Lowndes family, which, however, has been most conspicuously identified with the State of Maryland. To the direct line of the family or its connections Maryland has repeatedly gone for governors and other executive officers of the state. One of Maryland's recent governors, Lloyd Lowndes, was a native West Virginian.

Governor Lloyd Lowndes was born at Clarksburg February 21, 1845. He spent his early life in his native city and at the age of sixteen entered Washington College in Pennsylvania, but subsequently transferred his studies to Allegheny College at Meadville, Pennsylvania, where he was graduated in 1865, at the age of twenty. In 1867 he graduated in law from the University of Pennsylvania, and began practice at Cumberland, Maryland. He soon gained distinction as a lawyer, and became interested in politics and also in business and banking. When only twenty-seven years of age he was elected to Congress, in 1872, as a republican, and served one term. In 1893 he was elected governor of Maryland, and was the first republican chosen for that high office in thirty years. He was the forty-sixth governor of the state, and his administration from 1896 to 1900 was one of strength and wisdom in all matters depending upon his judgment. When he left the governor's chair he returned to Cumberland and resumed his law practice and business responsibilities. His death occurred at Cumberland January 8, 1905.

A brief review of the ancestry of Governor Lowndes will be in order. He was a son of Lloyd and Maria Elizabeth (Moore) Lowndes, grandson of Charles and Eleanor (Lloyd) Lowndes, great-grandson of Christopher and Elizabeth (Tasker) Lowndes, and great-great-grandson of Richard Lowndes of Bostock House, Cheshire, England. Elizabeth Tasker, wife of Christopher Lowndes, was a daughter of Benjamin and Anne (Bladen) Tasker, was a sister of Acting Governor Benjamin Tasker of Maryland (1753) and her mother was a niece of Governor Bladen of Maryland. Eleanor (Lloyd) Lowndes, paternal grandmother of Governor Lloyd Lowndes, was a niece of Governor Edward Lloyd of Maryland.

The family was established in West Virginia by Lloyd Lowndes, Sr., a native of Georgetown, D. C., who with his older brother, Richard, located at Cumberland, Maryland, where they engaged in business, but about 1831 Lloyd Lowndes, Sr., moved to Clarksburg, West Virginia, where he became a successful merchant, and had other extensive business relations until his death. A prominent representative of the family still at Clarksburg is his son Richard Tasker Lowndes, a merchant and banker.

Governor Lloyd Lowndes married his cousin, Elizabeth Tasker Lowndes, of Cumberland. She died at Cumberland January 4, 1922. They were the parents of eight children: Lloyd and Richard, twins, the latter now deceased; Charles, Bladen, Elizabeth Lloyd, Tasker Gant and two that died in childhood.

FREDERICK SCHMEICHEL, who is now living retired after many years of active association with business and civic interests in the City of Wheeling, is a venerable and honored citizen who specially merits recognition in this work.

Mr. Schmeichel was born at Graudenz in West Prussia, on the 9th of April, 1841, and is a son of Michael and Emelia (Werner) Schmeichel, both of whom passed their entire lives in that section of the German Empire, the father having been a wagonmaker by trade but having devoted the major part of his active life to farm industry. The parents were earnest communicants of the Lutheran Church.

After leaving school Frederick Schmeichel served a thorough apprenticeship to the cabinetmaker's trade, in which he became a skilled workman. On the 3d of March, 1871, about one month prior to his twenty-ninth birthday anniversary, he set forth for the voyage to the United States the trip being made on a steam vessel that arrived in the port of New York City fourteen days later. From this national metropolis he came forthwith to Wheeling, where he worked a few months at his trade, in the making of office furniture and bar fixtures, after which he was engaged in the building of staircases and in carpenter work until 1873, when he formed a partnership with Mr. Behren and opened a small furniture store in a virtual shant on Market Street. In the early period he and his partner manufactured by hand most of the furniture here sold, and the partnership continued until the death of Mr. Behren in 1883, when he became sole owner of the business, which continuously expanded in scope and importance, with the result that he tore down one building after another to provide more ample accommodations, a larger building being erected each time. He continued the enterprise at the original location until 1905, when he erected on Market Street near Twenty-third Street, the substantial and modern four-story brick building which he still owns and in which the business is continued under the active management of his son, Edward U., the entire building being utilized for the business. Mr. Schmeichel continued the enterprise as an individual way until 1896, when he admitted his son, Fred C., to partnership, under the title of F. Schmeichel & Son. In 1909 the business was incorporated as the F. Schmeichel & Son Company, and the business is owned exclusively by members of the family. Mr. Schmeichel continues as president of the company, of which his wife is vice president, and of which the son, Edward, is secretary and manager. The house is now the oldest of its kind in Wheeling. Mr. Schmeichel is financially interested also in other business enterprises in his home city, though he is now retired from active executive association with business, and passes the most of his time in his attractive home at 2137 Chapline Street. He is a staunch republican, is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and the Improved Order of Red Men, and he and his wife are devout and representative members of St. John's Evangelical Lutheran Church, of which he has served as president and vice president, and of the Board of Directors of which he is now an honored member.

At Wheeling, November 27, 1873, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Schmeichel to Miss Louisa Ulrich, who was born in the Province of Hanover, Germany, February 24, 1851, a daughter of Heinrich Christian and Ludovika (Brandt) Ulrich, both likewise natives of the Province of Hanover, and both of whom passed their entire lives in Germany, where the father was a veterinary surgeon in the service of the Government for many years. Concerning the children of Mr. and Mrs. Schmeichel the following brief data is available: Fred C., who is engaged in the furniture business at Morgantown, is individually mentioned on other pages; Ludovika, who was born July 12, 1876, remains at the parental home; Harry, born August 4, 1878, is associated with the furniture business founded by his father, the maiden name of his wife having been Jennie Vaas, and four children having been born to them, Caroline, Marie (died in infancy), Harry, Jr., and Eugene; Arthur, born February 11, 1880, married Anna McConahey, and they have one daughter, Leota; Marie, who was born June 25, 1883, is the wife of Curtis Lockard, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; Edward, born June 25, 1886, is manager of the store of F. Schmeichel & Son Company, as already noted, he having married Emma Guth, and their one child being Edward, Jr.; Oscar, born June 14, 1888, and likewise connected with the family business at Wheeling, married Emelia Bishop; and Albert, who was born August 5, 1891, died in infancy.

ON. WILLIAM GILLESPIE STATHERS. Clarksburg, West Virginia, is the home of many able professional men, and of the younger generation have become better known won greater distinction than Hon. William Gillespie Stathers, overseas veteran of the World war, member of law firm of Brannon, Stathers and Stathers, and member of the West Virginia Legislature.

Mr. Stathers was born at Wheeling, West Virginia, in 1877, and is a son of Dr. Walter E. and H. Virna (Whiteside) Stathers, the latter of whom was born in Missouri but was reared in Maryland. Dr. Walter E. Stathers is a native of Pennsylvania, but he served in the Union Army with the West Virginia troops. For a number of years he practiced medicine in Tyler and Ohio counties, West Virginia, and his wise and judicious administration as superintendent of the West Virginia Hospital for the Insane, added to his professional reputation in the state. Since retiring from his duties at Weston he has resided at Buckhannon, West Virginia.

William G. Stathers completed his academic course at the West Virginia Wesleyan College in 1907, then entered the University of Pennsylvania, from which institution he received his degree of LL. B. in 1914, and in the same year was admitted to the West Virginia bar. He entered into practice in Lewis County, but in the spring of 1915 came to Clarksburg, where a promising career opened up before him. When the World war came on, however, he set aside his personal ambitions and patriotically offered his services to his country. He was sent to the First Officers' Training School at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indianapolis, Indiana, and later to other training schools, was commissioned first lieutenant and assigned to the Three Hundred and thirty-second Infantry Regiment of the Eighty-third Division, at Camp Sherman, Ohio.

In June 8, 1918, Lieutenant Stathers and his comrades of the Eighty-third Division embarked for Europe, and landed at Liverpool, England, on June 15, 1918. The regiment to which Lieutenant Stathers belonged was sent to Italy, and later participated valiantly in the famous Gorizia Veneto campaign, covering a period of twelve days, from October 24 to November 4, of dangerous warfare, in which the American troops proved their courage and firmly established their reputation as gallant soldiers. Lieutenant Stathers was fortunate enough to escape serious injury, and he was honorably discharged from the service on May 19, 1919, after just two years of experience that will never be forgotten. He is a member of the American Legion and takes an active part in its affairs.

Upon his return from Europe Mr. Stathers resumed the practice of law at Clarksburg, and is a member of the prominent law firm of Brannon, Stathers and Stathers. His offices in the Goff Building, proved an able counselor in a number of important cases before the courts and fulfilled every expectation of his friends as to his professional future. An ardent republican throughout his political life, Mr. Stathers expressed their confidence and approval in the elections of November, 1920, by sending him as a delegate from Harrison County to the West Virginia Legislature, and their faith in his honesty, ability and independence has been justified by the nature of the bills which he received his approval, among those he has introduced is that of Clarksburg's present city charter, and the West Virginia fish and game law. On June 1, 1921, he was appointed Assistant Prosecuting Attorney for Harrison County.

On July 12, 1920, Mr. Stathers married Miss Geraldine Ellis, a daughter of W. T. and Laura (Day) Wallis, a descendant of old and substantial families of Harrison County, West Virginia, and Baltimore, Maryland. A thirty-second Degree Mason and a Noble of the Mystic Shrine, Mr. Stathers belongs also to the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and still maintains interest and membership in his old college fraternities, the Sigma Chi and the Phi Delta Phi. He belongs also to the Hare Law Club and the Clarksburg Country Club.

CARL S. LAWSON. In few sections of West Virginia will better educational conditions be found than in Harrison County, and it is only justice to attribute this in large measure to such faithful and competent educators as Carl S. Lawson, a former able superintendent of schools in Harrison County. His life long devotion to his profession is well known, and his election to that responsible office was not only a matter of wise public policy, but a mark of appreciation for a man of unusual worth in the educational field.

Carl S. Lawson was born on his father's farm in Harrison County, West Virginia, September 11, 1883, and is a son of Agrippa N. and Florence L. (Silcott) Lawson, and a grandson of Abner and Magdalene (Nutter) Lawson. The Lawson ancestors came to America from England at an early day and settled first in that state still known as Virginia, a later generation moving into what is now West Virginia and is an old family of Harrison County. The parents of Mr. Lawson still reside on their farm in Harrison County, highly respected in their neighborhood and faithful members of the Methodist Protestant Church. Six sons were born to them, two of whom N. Goff and Clifford, are deceased, the four survivors being: Carl S., Guy R., Claude F. and Willie D.

The eldest son of the family, Carl S. Lawson during boyhood and early youth found many duties to perform in assisting his father on the home farm, but these were not permitted to interfere with his determination to secure a fair education, and he completed the country school course at the head of his classes. Early recognizing the bent of his inclination, he decided to prepare himself for teaching, and with this end in view entered the State Normal School at Fairmont, from which institution he was graduated in 1911.

Mr. Lawson began teaching school when twenty-one years old, and has taught almost continuously every since, except when attending college or filling public office, during this time being a student in the West Virginia Wesleyan College and in the West Virginia State University. From choice he has devoted his time and efforts to Harrison County alone, teaching four years in the rural schools; serving three years as principal of the North View ward school at Clarksburg, and for three years being district supervisor of the coal district schools. In 1915 Mr. Lawson was elected county superintendent of schools in Harrison County for four years, and completed his term in 1919, but early in 1920 he was appointed to fill the office of the late superintendent L. W. Ogden until election in the fall of 1920, and later in the same year was again elected superintendent of schools for another four years, but resigned January 1, 1922, to engage in the life insurance business. Mr. Lawson's intelligent, broad-minded ideas, sound, practical methods and pleasant personality made him a popular and successful teacher, and the same qualities were equally effective as superintendent and his administration of the schools was efficient and satisfactory.

Mr. Lawson married in 1916 Miss Beulah Elizabeth Garner, of Marion County, West Virginia, and they have one daughter, Florence Louise. Mr. and Mrs. Lawson are members of the Christian Church. In his political views he is a republican, and fraternally is identified with the Elks and the Knights of Pythias, and also is a member of the West Virginia State and the National Teachers' Associations. During vacations and in leisure hours he did some life insurance business, and now represents one of the old line companies.

CLAIR NELSON PARRISH, the efficient and popular clerk of the County Court of Harrison County, was born on a farm in this county June 13, 1893, and is a son of Thomas J. and Mary (Morgan) Parrish. His father was likewise born and reared in this county, a representative of an old and honored family of this section of the state, and Mrs. Mary (Morgan) Parrish was born in Doddridge County, her death having occurred more than twenty years ago. Thomas J. Parrish was formerly one of the representative farmers of Harrison County, but for a period of about twenty years he has maintained his residence in the City of Clarksburg, the county seat, and been actively identified with coal, oil and gas productive industry, in this section of the state.

He is serving as a member of the City Council at the time of this writing, in 1921.

Clair N. Parrish continued his studies in the public schools of Clarksburg until his graduation in the high school, and thereafter he served four years as deputy sheriff of the county. In 1920 he was elected clerk of the County Court, and in this office he is giving characteristically effective service. He entered the United States Navy when the nation became involved in the World war, served in the gunning department, and is now a member of the American Legion. He is affiliated also with the lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks in his home city of Clarksburg. His political allegiance is given to the republican party, and he and his wife hold membership in the Episcopal Church. His marriage to Miss Agnes Morgan, of Clarksburg, was solemnized in the year 1918.

GEORGE HENRY DUTHIE has been engaged in the practice of law in the City of Clarksburg, judicial center of Harrison County, since 1912, and has gained secure status as one of the representative members of the bar of this county. Prior to entering professional life he had won for himself marked success and prestige in the industrial and commercial field, and he has in the most significant sense been the architect of his own fortunes.

Mr. Duthie is a scion of sterling Scotch ancestry and was born on a farm near Lexington, Sanilac County, Michigan, August 21, 1859. He is a son of William and Elizabeth (Forbes) Duthie, who were born and reared in Aberdeen, Scotland, where their marriage was solemnized and whence they soon afterward came to the United States, all of their children, seven in number, having been born in this country. The father was a skilled machinist, and he first worked at his trade after arriving in this country at Paterson, New Jersey. Later he continued in the work of his trade at Detroit, Michigan, until impaired health led to his establishing the family home on a farm near Lexington, that state, where his family remained during intervals in which he again followed his trade in Detroit. On this farm his wife died in her forty-ninth year, and he passed the closing period of his life in the home of his son George H., of this review, in Tennessee, where he died at a venerable age.

George H. Duthie passed the period of his childhood and early youth on the farm which was the place of his birth, and in the meanwhile attended the public schools of the locality. At Lexington, Michigan, he learned the machinist's trade, and at the age of seventeen years he initiated his independent career as one of the world's workers. As a journeyman machinist he worked at various places in the United States and Canada, and incidentally served as foreman of a number of high-grade machine shops. In the spring of 1887 he removed to Knoxville, Tennessee, and opened a machine shop, but in 1890 he removed his business to Harriman, that state, where he organized and established the Duthie Foundry Company, with which he continued his alliance, as its executive head, until the business and plant were sold in 1904. In the meantime he had given considerable attention to the study of law, for the purpose of better equipping himself for business. While still managing the business of the Duthie Foundry Company he completed the prescribed two years' course in the law department of the American Temperance University at Harriman, and in the autumn of 1899 he was admitted to the bar, upon examination before the Supreme Court of Tennessee. In 1901 he opened a law office at Harriman, where he continued in practice four years, besides retaining management of the foundry business until he sold his interest therein in 1904. In that year he took advantage of a splendid business opportunity and became a commercial traveling salesman. He was thus engaged about seven years, and in the autumn of 1912 he established his residence at Clarksburg, West Virginia, where he has since been actively and successfully engaged in the general practice of law, with offices in the Union Bank Building. He enjoys a general practice in West Virginia and the adjoining states and in the Federal Court, and he has become specially well known as a patent attorney, his skill and long experience as a mechanic giving him exceptional potency in this field.

Mr. Duthie was reared in the political faith of the republican party, but has been an independent voter for many years. He espoused the cause of the prohibition party, and while he has not subscribed fully to the doctrine of the socialist party he believes that a co-operative commonwealth represents the next forward step in civilization. He has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church since he was seventeen years of age, and is not an official of the church of this denomination at Clarksburg. He is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity as Master Mason.

In 1896 Mr. Duthie wedded Miss Flora Guthrie, who was at the time serving as principal in the public school of the City of Muskegon, Michigan. They have three children: Miss Grace I. is a popular teacher in the public schools of Clarksburg; James H. is architect for the Board of Education of Cleveland, Ohio; and Robert W. is in commercial business at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Both of the sons served as captains in the United States Army in the World war period, James H. having passed fourteen months on the stage of conflict overseas, and Robert W. having given twenty-one months of service, largely per personnel work, in camp life in the United States.

HARRY T. CLOUSE, the present sheriff of Ohio County, at Wheeling, has come to the dignity and responsibilities of this important office through the efficiency he displayed by several years of public work in the court house, by his splendid good citizenship, and as a result of the effective part members of the Clouse family have taken in the life and affairs of Wheeling for half a century.

Sheriff Clouse was born at Wheeling, May 15, 1892. His grandfather, Henry Clouse, was born near Stuttgart, Germany, in 1824, and brought his family to the United States about 1871, locating at Wheeling, where he continued to follow his trade as a brick mason. He died at Wheeling in 1894. His son, Charles Clouse, was born near Stuttgart in 1859, and was twelve years of age when brought to Wheeling, where he completed his education. As a young man he was employed as a puddler in the local steel mills. In 1896 he joined the Wheeling Fire Department, and at the end of a quarter of a century of efficient service he is now captain of Aerial Truck Company No. 1. Captain Clouse is a republican. He married Frances Weaver, who was born in Mason County, West Virginia, in 1862. They are the parents of four children: Stella, wife of John Kunz, a cigar maker at Wheeling; Charles, Jr., a steam fitter at Wheeling; Harry Theodore; and Gertrude, a student in the Wheeling High School.

Harry Theodore Clouse grew up in the City of Wheeling, attended the public schools, including high school, and in 1908 graduated from the Elliott Commercial School. During 1908-09 he attended the historic Linsly Institute, and left that to begin his serious career. For a short time he was in the service of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Company, and for three years worked in the steel mills of the Wheeling Steel & Iron Corporation. Mr. Clouse also had some newspaper experience, acting as reporter for the Wheeling News and Wheeling Intelligencer for a year. In the fall of 1913 he was appointed deputy Circuit Court clerk of Ohio County, and since that date his duties have been at the court house. In November, 1920, he was elected sheriff, and began his official term of four years January 1, 1921.

Sheriff Clouse has a military record, having enlisted in May, 1917, soon after America entered the war. He attended the Officers Training Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana, was commissioned a first lieutenant in August, 1917, was then transferred to Camp Zachary Taylor at Louisville, and finally was with the Forty-ninth U. S. Infantry at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. He received his honorable discharge in September, 1919.

Sheriff Clouse is a stockholder in the Fulton Bank & Trust Company. He is a republican, has served as a deacon of the Lutheran Church, and is prominent in Masonic 8, being a member of Nelson Lodge No. 30, A. F. and L. Wheeling Chapter No. 1, R. A. M., Wheeling Commandery No. 1, K. T., Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine, Wheeling, in which he has served as captain of the Arab; Wheeling Consistory of the Scottish Rite; and is a member of Royal Court No. 13, Royal Order of K. S., Black Prince Lodge No. 19, Knights of Pythias, Wheeling Lodge of Old Fellows and Wheeling Lodge No. 1, P. O. E., of which he is a director.

In 1915, at Wheeling, Mr. Clouse married Miss Alma Sax, daughter of Louis and Louise (Biery) Sax. Her father was a live-stock commission broker and is now deceased. Her mother is now Mrs. William Currence, of Wheeling. Mrs. Clouse finished her education by graduating from Mount De Chantal Academy near Wheeling, where she enjoyed an exceptional training in music and was a skilled pianist. Sheriff and Mrs. Clouse have one daughter, Alma June, born February 9, 1916. The home of Sheriff Clouse is an attractive residence at 31 Avenue A, Wheeling.

HERBERT ELIAS SLOAN, M. D., president and superintendent of the Mason Hospital, Clarksburg, Harrison County, was born in Washington county, Ohio, on the 17th of May, 1876, a son of Doctor Elias and Sarah Elizabeth (nee) Sloan. When he was two years of age the family moved to Williamstown, Wood County, West Virginia, where his father practiced medicine for seventeen years, at the expiration of which time, in 1894, he returned to Ohio and engaged in practice in the City of Marietta, where he resided the remainder of his life.

Dr. Herbert E. Sloan acquired his preliminary education at public schools at Williamstown and in Marietta, Ohio, where he was graduated in 1895. He then entered Eclectic Medical College in the City of Cincinnati, Ohio, from which he was graduated in 1898. For three years after graduation he practiced at Marietta, in association with his father. In 1901 he located at Clarksburg, West Virginia, where he continued to practice until 1908, when he accepted a position as instructor in his Alma Mater, the Eclectic Medical College at Cincinnati. He then resumed practice at Clarksburg, where he has since maintained his home. He is a member of the Harrison County Medical Society, the West Virginia Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He is president of the Mason Hospital Company and has the active management of his hospital. In his practice he has given special attention to surgery.

As a politician the Doctor is an independent democrat. He is affiliated with the Scottish Rite bodies of the Masonic Fraternity, and he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Church. In 1921 he was elected a member of the Council of Clarksburg, and in 1919-20 he served as a member of the State Public Health Council of West Virginia. During the World War period Doctor Sloan was a member of the Medical Advisory Board of his district. In 1914, he was united in marriage with Miss Luella Dye, of Clarksburg, and they have seven children, Elizabeth, Eleanor, Martha, Mary, Catherine, Herbert and Robert.

HENRY CLYDE ROBINSON. Though he won his present position as county assessor by popular election, Henry E. Robinson was thoroughly well qualified for his duties as a result of his eight years' work in the office of assessor deputy. Mr. Robinson is member of an old Harrison County family, and is himself widely known all over the county.

He was born on a farm near Shinnston June 4, 1882, and still maintains his own home there. His official headquarters are in the Goff Building in Clarksburg. His father, David W. Robinson, was born in Harrison County and at one time was high sheriff of the county and clerk of the County Court when the present Court house was built in 1888. James Allison Robinson, father of the county assessor, was born in Clarksburg August 18, 1856, and devoted his time and energies to his farm until 1904, since which year he has been in the feed business at Shinnston. Like his father before him and also his son, he has given active support to the republican party, and from early life he has been a member of the Methodist Church. James A. Robinson married Mary Jane Hawker, a native of Harrison County and daughter of James Hawker. She died in 1886, the mother of seven children, namely: James David, deceased; Betty, Mrs. S. C. McCarty; Cecil E.; Carrie, wife of A. G. Sprout; William Amos; Henry C.; and Miss Nellie J., at home.

Henry Clyde Robinson spent his early life on his father's farm near Shinnston, attended the public free schools, and finished his education in the West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buckhannon and the Fairmont Normal School. One important source of his popular reputation throughout Harrison County is due to his long service as a teacher. He taught his first term in the rural schools at the age of sixteen, and for thirteen consecutive years the greater part of his time was devoted to teaching. After leaving the schoolroom he was associated with his father for one year in the feed business at Shinnston. Mr. Robinson became a clerk in the county assessor's office in 1913, and during the next eight years his experience brought him a practical knowledge of everything connected with the assessment of county real estate. In November, 1920, he was elected county assessor, and has been ably discharging his duties in that capacity since January, 1921. He was elected as a republican. He is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, member of the Mystic Shrine, is affiliated with the Independent Order of Old Fellows and Knights of Pythias and is a member of the Methodist Protestant Church.

On October 15, 1904, Mr. Robinson married Miss Elsie May Hardesty, daughter of James L. and Amanda (Jones) Hardesty. Their three children are named Dennis Hardesty, Margaret Louise and Ruth Eleanor.

SAMUEL ROBERTSON HARRISON, JR., who was born at Clarksburg, Harrison County, on the 7th of June, 1890, is a member of the bar of his native county and is now serving as deputy clerk of the United States District Court, with official headquarters in the Post Office building in his native city. He is a son of Samuel R. and Sallie (Alexander) Harrison, and his early educational advantages included those of the Clarksburg High School. For three years thereafter he was a student in the University of West Virginia, in which he completed his course in the law department and was graduated as a member of the class of 1914. His reception of the degree of Bachelor of Laws was virtually coincident with his admission to the bar, and he forthwith engaged in the practice of his profession at Clarksburg. In the autumn of 1916 he was elected to represent his native county in the Lower House of the State Legislature, in which he served one term. In March, 1917, Mr. Harrison was appointed deputy clerk of the United States District Court of the Northern District of West Virginia, and in this position he has since continued his efficient service. He is a republican, is affiliated with the Scottish Rite body of the Masonic Fraternity, and his religious faith is that of the Presbyterian Church. He has substantial agricultural and stock-growing interests in Harrison County, and is a young man of civic loyalty and progressiveness.

October 10, 1917, recorded the marriage of Mr. Harrison and Miss Blanche Maxwell, daughter of Porter and Columbia (Post) Maxwell, and the one child of this union is a daughter, Emily Frances.

REV. WALTER AUSTIN SNOW, of Clarksburg, Harrison County, is not only a clergyman of the Congregational Church but is also doing splendid service in his executive office of general secretary of the West Virginia Sunday School Association.

Mr. Snow was born at Austinburg, Ashtabula County, Ohio, on the 13th of September, 1872, and on both the paternal and maternal sides he is a scion of influential and honored pioneer families of that county, the town of Austinburg having been named in honor of the family of which Mr. Snow's mother was a representative.

Rev. Walter A. Snow is a son of Albert H. and Cornelia

Sargent (Austin) Snow, both likewise natives of Ashtabula County. The paternal grandparents, Sparrow and Clara (Kneeland) Snow, were born at Sandersfield, Massachusetts, and the maternal grandparents, Lucius Montgomery Austin and Melissa (Whiting) Austin, were natives of Torrington, Connecticut. The grandparents on both sides were numbered among the early settlers at Austintown, Ohio, which has the distinction of being the second oldest town in the Buckeye state. Through descent from the original representative of the Snow family in America the subject of this review is eligible and has become a member of the Mayflower Society; through the Whiting ancestry he holds membership in the Society of American Colonial Wars; and his affiliation with the Society of the American Revolution is based on the patriotic military service rendered by ancestors of each the Snow, Austin, Whiting and Kneeland families.

Mr. Snow was reared on his father's farm to the age of eighteen years, and gained his preliminary education in the district schools of his native county. In 1894 he graduated from Grand River Institute at Austintown, an institution of which his maternal grandfather was the first principal. In 1897 he received from the University of Ohio the degree of Bachelor of Philosophy, and in 1900 he graduated from the Chicago Theological Seminary, his ordination as a clergyman of the Congregational Church having occurred in September of that year. For the ensuing five years he held a pastoral charge in the City of Minneapolis, Minnesota, and during the greater part of this interval he was also secretary of the Minnesota Congregational (Church) Club. After leaving Minneapolis Mr. Snow was for a short time associate pastor of the People's Congregational Church in the city of St. Paul, that state, and he then passed a year in North Dakota, where he took up a homestead, besides serving as a local preacher and assisting in Sunday School work. After remaining in North Dakota eighteen months he accepted a pastorate at Glenwood, Minnesota, where he remained two years. This was followed by a brief pastorate at Livingston, Montana, and he was then called to the office of general secretary of the North Dakota Sunday School Association, of which position he continued the efficient incumbent six and one-half years, with headquarters in the City of Fargo.

In 1916, with a record of admirable achievement in this office in North Dakota, Mr. Snow accepted his present position, that of general secretary of the West Virginia Sunday School Association, with headquarters at Clarksburg. He has done an admirable work in systematizing the work of this association and has brought to bear progressive policies that have conserved the remarkable growth and expansion of the organization. Under his regime the annual contributions for the support of the association and its work have increased from $8,000 to $30,000, while the original office force of three persons in the headquarters of the general secretary has been increased to ten, to meet the ever increasing demands.

Mr. Snow is affiliated with the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity of the University of Ohio, and he maintains affiliation also with the Masonic fraternity.

In 1899 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Snow and Miss Ella May Morris, a daughter of Rev. Maurice B. Morris, a veteran and honored clergyman of the Congregational Church.

WILLIAM BURRISS IRVINE is managing vice president of the National Bank of West Virginia, the oldest banking institution at Wheeling and the first to be established in Western Virginia.

It was organized as the Northwestern Bank of Virginia in 1817, and it is interesting to note that the first clerk of the bank was John List, a family and name that had not been without some interest in Wheeling's financial affairs for more than a century. The old Northwestern Bank was converted under the national banking law into the National Bank of West Virginia in 1865, and under that title is continued the history of the oldest bank in the state, and its resources and service have likewise made it one of the most substantial banks of West Virginia.

William Burriss Irvine has spent the greater part of active lifetime in this institution, and is justly regarded one of the financial authorities of the state. He was born at Smithfield, Jefferson County, Ohio, June 7, 1866. His grandfather, John Irvine, was born in Ireland in 18 and on coming to America settled at Smithfield with his mother. After reaching manhood he studied law, practiced his profession for many years at Smithfield where he died in 1877. He married Rebecca Lemast, George Fleming Irvine, father of the Wheeling banker, born at Smithfield in April, 1835, was reared and married in his native town, studied law but never practiced, was a merchant until the outbreak of the Civil war. 1861 he joined an Ohio regiment of Infantry and was all through the period of hostilities, being with Sherman on the march to the sea. After the war he remained in Washington for several years, an employee in a Government department. George F. Irvine came to Wheeling in the early seventies, and for a time was connected with the Bank of the Ohio Valley. In 1891 he removed to Pittsburgh, where he was in the wholesale produce business. He died at Pittsburgh in the fall of 1914. He was a publican, a very active member of the Christian Church, was a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and member of the Grand Army of the Republic. His wife, Rachel Burris, was born at Smithfield, Ohio, in 18 and died at Wheeling in 1871. She was the mother of three children: Mary Rebecca, now of Pittsburgh; John Charles, who is in the coal business at Smithfield, Ohio, and William B. The second wife of George F. Irvine was Sylvia Laughlin, who is now living at Pittsburgh.

William B. Irvine was a child when his parents moved to Wheeling, and in this city he acquired his public-school education. He is a graduate of Linsly Institute with the class of 1884. Soon after leaving school he became a messenger boy with the Bank of the Ohio Valley, and remained with that institution three years. He then entered the Exchange Bank of Wheeling as correspondence and collection clerk, was promoted to assistant cashier and was in the service of that institution until 1901, when he went with the old Bank of Wheeling as cashier. The Bank of Wheeling was consolidated with the National Bank of West Virginia in 1907, and since that consolidation Mr. Irvine has been managing vice president of the latter.

He is also president of the Farmers National Bank at Claysville, Pennsylvania, a trustee of the Mutual Savings Bank of Wheeling, a director in the Bank of Fulton, near Wheeling, is treasurer of the Industrial Savings & Loan Company, Morris Plan, at Wheeling, and president of the Fidelity Investment Association of Wheeling.

During and since the World war Mr. Irvine has been treasurer of the Wheeling Chapter of the American Red Cross. He was also chairman of the Banking Committee in all the Liberty Loan drives and his time and means were fully at the disposal of the Government at all times. He, a republican in politics, has been a member of the official board of the Fourth Street Methodist Episcopal Church for twenty years, is a past master of Bates Lodge No. 3, F. and A. M., a member of Wheeling Union Lodge No. 1, R. A. M., Cyrene Commandery No. 7, K. T., Wheeling Lodge No. 28, B. P. O. E., and is a member of the Old Colon Club and of the Twilight Club of Wheeling.

Mr. Irvine, whose home is in the suburb of Elmwood, married at Wheeling February 25, 1886, Miss Eva A. Drake, daughter of David M. and Virginia (Lindsey) Drake, both deceased. Her father was a Wheeling banker. Mr. and Mrs. Irvine have one son, Russell Drake, born December 27, 1890. During the war he enlisted, was stationed at Camp Custer, Battle Creek, Michigan, being army field clerk. He is now secretary-treasurer of the Fidelity Investment Association of Wheeling.

WILLIAM MCCOY. In the family of McCoy the tradition of ability, honor and worth left by those who have gone beyond set a worthy precedent which the present generation, and that from which it sprang, have followed, to which they have added a life chapter that must prove an inspiration and a positive incentive to those destined to after them. Among the notable exponents of the lawyer's integrity and professional and business capability was William McCoy, of Franklin, a lawyer, successful practitioner and editor of the Pendleton Times, a former representative of the State of West Virginia in the House of Delegates, and present prosecuting attorney of Pendleton county. He was born at Franklin, June 2, 1878, and his early years were spent in the city of his nativity.

The McCoy family is one of the oldest in this region, dating back in the history of Pendleton County to early days. The American progenitor of the McCoy's was William McCoy, who came to the American Colonies from Scotland, settling at Doe Hill, Virginia. He had sons, John and William, and several daughters, whose names are not matters of record. William McCoy, the elder, left his father and brother and went into North Carolina, where this branch still flourishes.

John McCoy, son of William McCoy the American pioneer, commanded a company of volunteers in the French Indian war, and his son Robert, when war was being waged against England, marched on foot into North Carolina to join General Greene, and thus became a soldier in the American Revolution. As such he participated in engagements, including that at Guilford Court House. After the war was over he returned in safety to his home in the vicinity of Franklin, where his father, John McCoy, long before established the family. John McCoy, Jr., a soldier under General Harrison, "Old Tippecanoe," was killed at the battle of Tippecanoe, at Battleground, Indiana, in 1811. The only sons of John McCoy to accompany him into the Pendleton District were Oliver and William, the former settling on the South Branch, near Lewis Mill. There he built a house that is still standing. John William McCoy, son of John McCoy, became a tenant at Franklin, and was an extensive land owner in Pendleton and Highland counties. In 1811 he was elected to Congress, and was returned for eleven consecutive terms, serving until 1832. During his long period of service he served on many committees, among which was an important one on ways and means, of which he was chairman.

John McCoy, the pioneer, married Miss Sarah Oliver, a daughter of Aaron Oliver, an immigrant from Holland, and she had a daughter of Colonel Harrison of Rockingham county, Virginia. The children born to John McCoy and Sarah Oliver, his wife, were as follows: Robert, Oliver, John, John, Benjamin, Joseph and James, and four daughters, Elizabeth, Jane, Sarah and Jemima. William McCoy, the congressman, married as his first wife Elizabeth Oliver, and she bore him a son, William, who died in 1863 as a Confederate officer. The second wife of William McCoy was Mary J. Moorman, who bore him the following children: Margaret C., who is unmarried and still at Franklin; Caroline H., who married William H. McCoy, is deceased and so is her husband; Mary V., who married William A. Campbell and died, as did her husband; John, who became the father of William McCoy, is now deceased; Pendleton, who married Catherine McCoy, and lived and died in the Franklin community; and a widow is residing at Moorefield, West Virginia; and who is the widow of Frank Anderson, resides at Mullins; and Alice Virginia, who died at Franklin, married Charles Chamberlain, now a resident of Salida, Colorado.

John McCoy, of the above family, was born in Pendleton county, in 1850, and was reared at Franklin, where he had large business interests, and was one of the leading factors of the place. He was very carefully educated, and took a classical course at the famous Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Virginia, at the time when Gen. Robert E. Lee was its president. After completing his course in that institution John McCoy returned to his home and took charge of his father's farm and stock interests, and it was the need for assuming these responsibilities which kept him from continuing his studies and preparing for a professional life. He continued in the same lines of business throughout his life, and died in 1919, universally respected. A loyal democrat, he gave his party a faithful service, and was its successful candidate as representative to the House of Delegates in 1890, and he was twice re-elected to that office on the same party ticket. While he was adverse to practical politics, his service in the House interested him and he regarded it as time well spent. For many years he served the Presbyterian Church as an elder, and was a member of it from early youth.

John McCoy married Martha Price, a daughter of James Price, who survives him and is living at Franklin. They became the parents of children as follows: Katie, who is the wife of Byron Boggs, of Franklin; William, whose name heads this review; George P., who is a practicing physician of Neodesha, Kansas; Richard C., who resides at Montrose, Louisiana; Cortland, who is also a resident of Montrose; and the youngest child, Alice, who is connected with the Farmers Bank of Pendleton.

Growing to manhood in his native place William McCoy attended its public schools and Hoge Academy at Blackstone, Virginia, for two years before entering his father's alma mater, Washington and Lee University, and he graduated from its law department in 1902, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. Immediately thereafter Mr. McCoy entered upon the practice of his profession at Franklin, and while carrying on its work took a prominent part in politics as a democrat. In 1906 he was elected to membership in the West Virginia House of Delegates, and served for one term. As the House was overwhelmingly republican, the only committee appointment he received of any importance was that on the judiciary. The speaker of the House was James A. Scaman. His experience as a legislator did not incline him to seek re-election, but he did consent to be the nominee of his party for the office of prosecuting attorney, was elected by a handsome majority, and assumed the duties of the office in January, 1909, succeeding H. M. Calhoun. The record he made was of such a character that he was returned in 1912, again in 1916, and in 1920 was elected for the fourth time, he having served longer than any other in this office during the history of Pendleton County. The service he has rendered has been endorsed repeatedly by the voters of the county, and it has been and is of a high order.

In February, 1913, Mr. McCoy began his identification with newspaper work when he founded the Pendleton Times, a weekly paper devoted to county matters and published as an independent organ. Its object is to record the local news and furnish a medium of advertising for the business men of this locality. The paper is a four-page folio, issued every Thursday. The circulation is 1,775, and it is the only paper published in the county, occupying as it does the field as the successor to the South Branch Review.

On October 27, 1918, Mr. McCoy married at Washington, District of Columbia, Miss Grace Hedrick, a native of Pendleton County, and a daughter of Robert E. Hedrick, postmaster of Franklin. For several years prior to her marriage Mrs. McCoy was a teacher in the schools of Franklin, and was very popular. Mr. and Mrs. McCoy have two children: Martha and William, Junior. Mr. McCoy is a Master Mason and Modern Woodman. Reared in the faith of the Presbyterian Church, he long ago enrolled his name on its membership books. In addition to his professional and newspaper work Mr. McCoy has contributed generously to movements calculated to promote the public welfare and those having for their object charitable purposes.

HON. HARRISON M. CALHOUN. To portray what manner of citizen and lawyer Harrison M. Calhoun undoubtedly is, how important are his services to the City of Franklin, the County of Pendleton and the State of West Virginia, and how ably and honorably he follows the profession of the law, needs no friendly hand. They are matters of public knowledge, unassailable facts, and as such are merely stated in what follows. He was born at Dry Run, Pendleton County, West Virginia, September 18, 1866, and is of the fifth generation from the ancestor, John Calhoun, who founded the family in this part of what was then so introduced a resolution to amend the constitution of West Virginia to provide for the initiative and referendum, and also one for the recall of officials, but the last failed of passage. In the election of a United States Senator by the House he voted for a time for Col. R. P. Vance but later supported Judge Daily of Romney, but Nathan B. Goff was elected. He has frequented the conventions of his party, and has also been a delegate to those of his congressional district, and as such helped to arrange the ticket for the subsequent elections. In the matter of assisting in local business enterprise, he organized the Pendleton County National Farm Loan Association, of which he is secretary-treasurer. He is a promulgator of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and in fraternal circles is well known as an Odd Fellow. On May 28, 1889, Mr. Calhoun married in Highland County, Virginia, Miss Virginia Mullenax, a daughter of Mr. Mullenax and his wife, formerly Elizabeth Calhoun, daughter of Aaron Calhoun. Mr. and Mrs. Calhoun have the following children: Camden H., who is now engaged in the lumber business in Nicholas County, West Virginia; Alfred R., who is a merchant of Franklin, Maryland; Edwin M., who is a merchant of Millersburg, West Virginia, married Lena Shinn; Mary Lillian, the wife of V. M. McMains, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; Phoebe Evelyn and Elaine, who are teachers in schools of Pendleton County; and Harlan M., who is now in the Potomac Academy at Keyser, West Virginia, the youngest child. Of these children, Camden Calhoun served in the World war as a member of the 1st Sixty-first Infantry. He served overseas, and was in the St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne offensive, in the course of which he was wounded. In July, 1919, he reached home after his honorable discharge.

Mr. Calhoun's office is a veritable curiosity shop. For years he has been a collector of rare objects of art, geological specimens and aboriginal relics until his collection presents the appearance of a museum. The development of fire arms from the old punk rifle and flint-lock to all the stages of improvement to the sporting and military rifles of today are shown, and these, together with a multitude of pistols which decorate the walls, give the impression of an arsenal or military stronghold.

O. M. SMITH. There are several reasons why Mr. Smith, proprietor of the reliable house of O. M. Smith, general hardware and implement merchant of Petersburg, has succeeded in life—energy, system and practical knowledge. The range of his activities is now large, from the beginning of his career Mr. Smith has sought steadily and well for ultimate results, and has been content to labor merely for the present. Since being connected with his present house Mr. Smith has contributed to its expansion until it is now one of the leading ones of its kind in this part of West Virginia.

Mr. Smith was born in Pendleton County, West Virginia, November 5, 1870, a son of Isaac D. Smith, son of Jacob Smith, and great-grandson of Henry Smith who lived to be nearly one hundred years old. During his active years he was connected with the farming interests of Pendleton County, and he is buried in the cemetery below the mouth of Seneca Creek, in Pendleton County. Jacob Smith was born in Pendleton County, he lived and died, passing away early in the '80s, about seventy years of age. He never sought public life but was content to do his duty as a private citizen, such won and retained the warm friendship of the people of his home community. He married a member of the Davis family, of South Fork, Pendleton County, and his wife became the parents of the following: R. Calvin, S. Henry, Isaac D., Mrs. George Harmon and his sister Susan, who, after her death, became the second wife of George Harmon.

Mr. D. Smith was born in Pendleton County, and died in Pendleton County, West Virginia, October 5, 1889. He was active as a farmer and stockraiser. While he did not see the war of the '60s, he furnished a soldier to the Union forces, and did everything within his power to assist the Federal Government, to which he remained consistently loyal throughout the great struggle. He and his wife had ten children, of whom Oceola McClure Smith is the eldest.

When his father died Oceola M. Smith was about nineteen years of age, and he continued to reside with his mother until he was married and established a home of his own. Leaving the farm when about forty years old, he came to Petersburg and entered his present house, the name of which became Parker, Smith & Ours. Mr. Parker subsequently died, and Mr. Smith purchased the interest of Mr. Ours, and now conducts his house under the caption of his own name, which he has continued to use since 1911. His trade is principally a retail one, and he handles a general line of light and heavy hardware and implements, and he also does a small jobbing business in heavy hardware and machinery. His customers come to him from a wide area from Petersburg. The financial strength of this house is equal to the volume of its business.

Mr. Smith has always been intelligently interested in local affairs, and has served as a member of the City Council of Petersburg, and also spent several terms on the School Board. As deputy sheriff under A. A. Parks and Isaac Lewis during their occupancy of the office of sheriff he made so excellent a record that he was chosen as the nominee of his party to succeed Mr. Lewis. He was elected sheriff by a gratifying majority in 1904, and entered upon the discharge of his duties in January of the subsequent year. During his term in office he proved himself utterly fearless and incorruptible. It was during his administration that so much trouble was experienced with the "moonshiners" in "Smoke Hole," and he proved his efficiency and resoluteness in handling these cases as well as those involving capital offenses. One of the dastardly deeds committed during that period, the murder of Mrs. Reed and her son at Medley, remains an unsolved mystery, as the guilty party was never found, but Sheriff Smith did everything possible to track down the miscreant and bring him to justice. So relentless and resourceful did he prove that his name became a dreaded one to offenders, and he succeeded in clearing the region of many old criminals who grew to recognize that he was not an officer who would overlook any infraction of the laws, but would pursue the suspect until he was captured, and then exert himself to the utmost to secure a conviction. When he retired from office Mr. Smith bent all his energies to merchandising, with the results recited above, although he had some time previously entered his present business. He is interested along other lines, and is a large stockholder in the Grant County Bank of Petersburg.

On October 5, 1913, Mr. Smith married at Keyser, West Virginia, Miss Elizabeth W. M. MacDonald, a sister of William MacDonald, a prominent attorney of Keyser. Mrs. Smith was born at Lonaconing, Maryland, in February, 1882, and is of Scotch descent. A record of the MacDonald family is given in the sketch of William MacDonald elsewhere in this work. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have a daughter, Elizabeth Wilson M., who was born March 4, 1920. In politics Mr. Smith is a republican, and has always been very active in party work in both the city and county. He is a Blue Lodge Mason, and zealous in behalf of his order. He was reared in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mrs. Smith is an Episcopalian, and is active in church affairs, and during the late war took part in war work in connection with the Keyser Chapter of the Red Cross. The Smith home at Petersburg is a delightful one, the house being of the bungalow pattern, brick in structure, and modern throughout. It is one of the attractive residences of the city, and its ten rooms are tastefully furnished. Here a genuine Southern hospitality is to be found, for both Mr. and Mrs. Smith are delightful entertainers, and welcome their many friends upon numerous occasions.

A man of unusual business capacity, his years of orderly and abundant work have resulted in acquired wealth and the same enjoyment of it, and he has at the same time maintained his interest in securing and preserving the welfare of his community. He has given strict attention to his business since his retirement from the office of sheriff, conducting it with a thoughtful and intelligent management which could not help but bring about satisfactory results. Mr. Smith continues to keep himself thoroughly posted on public events and matters of general interest, and is highly esteemed as a forceful, substantial man and excellent citizen.

ISAAC D. SMITH. Still a young man and a product of the agricultural community, Isaac D. Smith, prosecuting attorney of Grant County, has gained a recognized place among the lawyers of this section. His keen faculties of perception and analysis, and his mastery of the principles of the common law have made him a striking and successful prosecutor. If there is a close legal point involved in any issue his examination of authorities bearing upon it is exhaustive. With a thorough knowledge of the case in all its bearings and unerring and ready application of the principles of the law, his addresses before court and jury are necessarily models of clearness and convincing logic. Quick to perceive and guard the weak phases of his own case, he never fails to assault his adversary at the point where his armor is defective. In a word, Mr. Smith has developed the necessary talent of the modern court lawyer, to think and act both powerfully "on his feet."

Mr. Smith was born on a farm near Petersburg, Grant County, West Virginia, January 11, 1890, and is a son of Isaac D. and Mary L. (Harper) Smith, and a grandson of Henry Smith, who lived an industrious life on his farm, his home being located near the Pendleton and Grant County line. Mr. Smith never saw his father, who passed away in October, 1889, after nearly all of his life had been passed in farming and raising stock in Grant County. He married Mary L. Harper, a daughter of Amby and Elizabeth (McClure) Harper, the latter being a sister of John McClure, the well known stockman and capitalist of Pendleton County. They became the parents of four daughters and six sons: Oceola M., of Petersburg, one of the leading merchants of Grant County; Harry S., of Petersburg; Jacob A. and Charles A., also residents of this city; R. G., of Keyser, West Virginia; Mrs. Bessie L. Crawford, of Petersburg; Mary P., the wife of Carroll Elliott, of Oakland, Maryland; Sue M., the wife of W. H. VanMeter, of Mitchell's Station, Alabama; Nellie, now Mrs. George Copland, of Haldton, Oklahoma; and Isaac D., Jr., of this review.

The years of his childhood and early youth were passed at the family home in the country near Petersburg, and when he was sixteen years of age Isaac D. Smith, the younger, succeeded in securing a license to teach. After two years he entered the preparatory school of West Virginia University, at Keyser, for additional educational training on his own account, and there passed two years. This gave him sufficient credit to enter Washington and Lee University, where he enrolled as a student in 1913, following which he pursued a law course of two years and graduated with the Class of 1915, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Laws. Continuing his preparation for his chosen life work, in the fall of the same year he entered Emerson College of Oratory, at Boston, Massachusetts, and took part in the class work of the sophomore, senior and post-graduate classes, specializing in all studies pertaining to public speaking. On leaving the Boston institution Mr. Smith returned to his home and was admitted to the Grant County bar in January, 1916, at Petersburg. His first certificate to practice was issued in November, 1915, and when he returned from New England he opened an office to practice his calling. In the summer of 1916 Mr. Smith became a candidate for the office of prosecuting attorney of Grant County, being nominated in the primaries and elected in November following, on the republican ticket. Succeeding Arch J. Welton, he assumed his duties in January, 1917, and his records show him to have been industrious, honorable and careful in the preparation of his cases. Being a trained public speaker, he was not only efficient, but it was not long before he had impressed his merits upon the minds of his constituents, and he has achieved a rare popularity. In the general election he had no opponent. In 1920 he was not opposed for a re-election for the office in his own party, but the democrat put up a candidate to oppose him in the fall held election. This, however, did not affect his party vote.

From early life, even in youth, Mr. Smith has been republican. When he became of age he espoused his party cause actively. His first presidential vote was cast for William H. Taft, and his party fealty has been constant ever since. He believes in the achievements of the G. O. P., and is proud of the statesmen which it has given to the country. In local affairs Mr. Smith has taken an active part in the movements calculated to be of benefit to the community, and is a supporter of education, religion and charity. Fraternally he is a Master Mason and a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in each of which he is popular. His religious faith is that of the Presbyterian denomination, and his active church work was done as a teacher in the Sabbath School. In a business way Mr. Smith is a stockholder in the Grant County Bank and one of the charter members of the Potomac Valley Bank, both of Petersburg. His work during the World War was done as United States Government agent at Petersburg of Grant County until he entered the army. He became a member of the army under the selective service act, June 16, 1918, and was assigned to Headquarters Company of the Thirty-second Field Artillery at Camp Meade, where he received his honorable discharge December 10, 1919. Mr. Smith attained the rank of corporal, and during part of his service he was in charge of a regimental team.

Mr. Smith is unmarried. He has been more than loyal to the maternal home, and the principal events of his life have been those affecting his standing as a citizen and man and his career as an honored and capable member of his profession.

JAMES BREWER SOMMERVILLE was born near Beth Brooke County, Virginia (now West Virginia), June 1852.

His parents were William M. Sommerville, a native Harrison County, Virginia (now West Virginia), and Margaret A. Sommerville, whose maiden name was Margaret Steele, and who was a native of Belmont County, Ohio.

His paternal ancestors were of Norman stock, while his maternal line was Irish. His father, although without educational opportunities, was a man of unusual mechanical powers, comprehensive knowledge and strict integrity. His mother, while not highly educated, was a woman of common sense and was of irreproachable character.

The son showed but little interest in educational matters until he was about fifteen years old, when he developed strong taste for miscellaneous reading. This naturally led to a desire for a better education. He attended the public school at Bethany during parts of the winters of 1869-1870, where he made rapid progress.

In the spring of 1870 the family moved to the vicinity of Clinton, Ohio County, West Virginia. Here the young man, while performing the duties of a farm hand, diligently pursued the studies which he began in the Bethany public school, and continued his course of general reading.

In the fall of 1871 he determined to become a student of the West Liberty Normal School. West Liberty, seat of this school, was, however, nearly four miles from home and he was without the means of supporting himself there. This problem he solved by resolving to board at home and walk to and from school every day. He accordingly entered this institution in the fall of 1871, and two months after the beginning of the session and continued until the close thereof, in June, 1872. During the summer and fall of 1872 he worked part of the time on a farm and part of it for a man who had a contract for manual work on a public road in the community. In the winter of 1872-73, he taught a country school.

During all this time he continued his studies and general reading, and in the spring of 1873 again became a student at the West Liberty Normal School, resuming daily walks between his home and the school, and gradu-the class of 1873. After this he taught school one year in Ohio County, and, the family moving in the meantime, returned to Brooke County, he became a student in Hany College, in which he took special courses in mathematics and languages. While a student in this institution was nominated by the democratic party of Brooke County for the House of Delegates, to which position he was elected, serving in the session of that body for the year 1877, and being the youngest member thereof.

After serving in the Legislature he worked on the farm the summer and taught school in the winter, and pursued a study of the law whenever he had an opportunity to do so and was admitted to the bar in the fall of 1878. He used his first law office in Wellsburg, the county seat of his native county, on April 1, 1879, and soon became one of the leading members of that bar. He continued to practice in Wellsburg until the summer of 1887, when he located in Wheeling, the chief city of the state, where he still resides.

He has served on the boards of regents of the Normal schools, the Deaf, Dumb and Blind Institute, and the West Virginia University, remaining a member of the latter body nine years.

In 1884 he was elected to the State Senate from the 1st District of West Virginia, composed of the counties Hancock, Brooke and Ohio, and including the City of Wheeling. While serving in this body, during the session 1887, he was the recognized leader of the caucus forces the democratic party in the most bitter and most memorable contest for a seat in the United States Senate that ever occurred in the history of the state, during which, though he was not a candidate, he was repeatedly voted for that office, and on several ballots lacked but a few votes of being elected.

Shortly after he located in Wheeling he became local counsel for the Pennsylvania Railroad System, and several years later became solicitor therefor, and was placed in charge of the legal matters thereof for the State of West Virginia, which position he held until he was called to the bench. In addition to this he enjoyed an extensive and successful general practice, which frequently called him to the courts of adjoining states.

In the early part of the month of September, 1918, a vacancy occurred in the office of judge of the Circuit courts of the First Judicial Circuit by reason of the death of Hon. C. Hervey, who had held the position, by successive elections, for a number of years, and who was one of the ablest judges the circuit has known.

Under the law, as it then was, provided for the filling of this vacancy by executive appointment, the appointee to serve until the next general election, in November, 1919. It also provided that at that election a judge should be chosen to serve until the expiration of Judge Hervey's term, January 1, 1921; and that, at the election to be held in November, 1920, two judges should be chosen for the circuit, for the term of eight years, beginning January 1, 1921.

Shortly after the death of Judge Hervey the members of the bar of the First Circuit met and, without regard to political considerations, and against Mr. Sommerville's judgment and against his wishes, selected him to fill the vacancy, unanimously requested Governor Cornwell to appoint thereto which he promptly did. At the election of November, 1919, the name of Judge Sommerville was, with his solicitation, placed on the tickets of both the republican and democratic parties, and he was unanimously sent to fill Judge Hervey's unexpired term. And at the election of November, 1920, his name was, without his solicitation, placed on the tickets of both parties, and he was unanimously chosen for the full term of eight years. He is now serving under the last election, with general satisfaction to both the bar and the public.

SOLOMON VANCE YANTIS, whose death occurred at his home in the City of Harpers Ferry in the year 1899, accounted well to the world in sterling attributes of character and in large and worthy achievement. He passed his entire life in Jefferson County, and was a scion of one of its honored pioneer families. In this county he was born on the 21st of September, 1826, and in the same county was born his father, Isaac Yantis, a well fortified family tradition being that the latter was a descendant of one of four brothers who immigrated to America from Holland in the early Colonial period of our national history, one of the number settling in Ohio and the other three in the South. The ancestor of the subject of this memoir was one of the very early settlers in what is now Jefferson County, West Virginia.

Solomon V. Yantis was reared and educated under the conditions that marked the middle-pioneer period in the history of Jefferson County, and upon establishing his residence at Harpers Ferry he engaged in business as a tobaccoist. He also became secretary and part owner of the company that operated the flour mill in this city, gave loyal and effective service as a member of the City Council and also held for a number of years the office of postmaster. His wife, whose maiden name was Josephine Jones, was born in Fauquier County, Virginia, and she preceded him to eternal rest, her death having occurred in 1892. They became the parents of seven children, namely: Shaulter Vance, Arnold Stevens, Eleanor, Gertrude W., Margaret M., Josephine A. and Laura S. Laura S. is the widow of Theodore M. Conner, whose biography follows this and she is serving, in 1922, as postmistress of Harpers Ferry.

THEODORE McKIM CONNER was one of the prominent and highly honored citizens of Harpers Ferry, Jefferson County, and was serving as postmaster of this historic little city at the time of his death. His widow, who had been his valued assistant in the postoffice, succeeded him in this office and is postmistress here at the present time.

Mr. Conner was born at Winchester, Virginia, in the year 1852. His father, Patrick Conner, was a native of Ireland, and was a young man when he came to the United States and established his residence in Virginia, both he and his wife having long maintained their home at Winchester, where they remained until their deaths. The subject of this memoir was educated in the schools of his native place, and in 1880, when twenty-eight years of age, he established his residence at Harpers Ferry, where he became a representative business man and one of much influence in civic and political affairs. In 1889 he purchased the hotel which still bears his name. At the time when he bought this property the city was in the midst of a serious flood, and the water had risen to the height of the second floor of the hotel. He remodeled and refurnished the hotel, and made it one of the popular and well ordered houses of public entertainment in this section of the state, the hotel having continued to be conducted by him until the close of his life. He was a stockholder and director in a number of important industrial and commercial corporations, and was a member also of the directorate of the Bank of Harpers Ferry.

Mr. Conner was unflinching in his allegiance to the democratic party and was influential in its local councils and campaign affairs. In 1916 he was appointed postmaster of Harpers Ferry, and of this position he continued the efficient and popular incumbent until his death in 1920.

On the 4th of August, 1900, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Conner and Miss Laura Yantis, who was born and reared at Harpers Ferry and who is a daughter of the late Solomon Yantis, a memoir to whom is given in the preceding sketch, so that further review of the family record is not demanded in this connection. The discipline which Mrs. Conner received in the public schools of her native city was advanced by study under the direction of private tutors, and at the age of eighteen years she became a popular teacher in the schools of her native county. She served as assistant postmaster under the administration of her father and later under the regime of her husband, so that she was fully qualified when she was appointed acting postmaster after the death of her husband. Under this appointment she served two years, and then, in March, 1922, she was regularly appointed and commissioned postmistress. Mrs. Conner takes lively interest in all that concerns the well being of her native city and county, and here her circle of friends is coincident with that of her acquaintances. She is a stockholder in the Harpers Ferry Bank and the local electric light company, and is one of the representative members of the local Woman's Club.

BRISCOE BALDWIN RANSON, M. D., who is one of the representative physicians and surgeons of Jefferson County, is here established in successful general practice in the historic City of Harpers Ferry. He was born at Staunton, Virginia, August 18, 1845, and is a son of James M. and Mary Eleanor (Baldwin) Ranson, the former of whom was born in what is now Berkeley County, West Virginia, and the latter of whom was born at Staunton, Virginia, a daughter of Judge Briscoe Baldwin, a representative lawyer and jurist of that section of the Old Dominion. Matthew Ranson, grandfather of Doctor Ranson of this review, was born at Charles Town, Jefferson County, and he became the owner of a large and valuable landed estate in Jefferson and Berkeley counties, his extensive farm operations having been conducted with slave labor. Matthew Ranson married Elizabeth Bedinger, a member of the well known family of that name in Berkeley County, and both passed the span of three score years and ten.

James M. Ranson was in the commissary service of the Confederate states in the period of the War between the States, with the rank of captain. He succeeded to the ownership of the old homestead farm near Charles Town, and it is on this farm that the present village of Ranson, named in honor of the family, is situated. Captain Ranson here continued his active association with farm industry until his death, at the age of seventy-two years, and his widow passed away at the age of seventy-three years. Their children were seven in number, Thomas, Briscoe B., Mary, James M., Stuart, Betty and Martha, the last three being deceased.

Dr. Briscoe B. Ranson attended the Jacob Fuller School at Lexington, Virginia, and thereafter continued his studies in the Charles Town Academy. In 1862 he abandoned his studies to enter the service of the Confederacy in the Civil war. He became a member of Company B, Twelfth Virginia Cavalry, and from that time forward until the close of the war the history of this gallant command constitutes the record of his military career, which was marked by participation in numerous engagements, including a number of important battles.

After the close of the war Doctor Ranson was for two years a student in a preparatory school in Clark County, Virginia, and thereafter was a student in the medical department of the University of Virginia until he withdrew to enter the medical department of the University of Maryland, in which latter he was graduated, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, in 1869. He further fortified himself by two years of service as an interne in Bay View Hospital at Baltimore, and for the past thirty years he has been engaged in the successful practice of his profession at Harpers Ferry, where he now holds precedence as one of the veteran and honored physicians and surgeons of Jefferson County. The Doctor is an active member of the Jefferson County Medical Society, the West Virginia State Medical Society, the American Medical Association and the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Surgeons Society. He has long been retained as a member of the surgical staff of this railroad, and is also surgeon of Jefferson Camp of the United Confederate Veterans, of which he is one of the prominent and valued members, besides which he is affiliated with Logan Lodge, No. 25, A. F. and A. M.

In 1870 Doctor Ranson married Nannie Truxton Forrest, who was born at Norfolk, Virginia, a daughter of Samuel Forrest, who was a purser in the United States Navy. Mrs. Ranson passed to the life eternal in 1888, and was survived by four children: Anna Truxton, James M., Briscoe B., and Lyle M.

For his second wife Doctor Ranson married Josephine, daughter of Solomon and Josephine (Jones) Yantis, and the one child of this union is Josephine Briscoe. Briscoe

B. Ranson, Jr., graduated from the medical department of the University of Maryland as a member of the Class of 1902, and is now engaged in the successful practice of his profession at Maplewood, New Jersey. He married Daisy Yarbrough, of Staunton, Virginia, and they have four children: Briscoe Baldwin III, Mary and Nannie (twins), and John Patterson. Nannie is deceased.

JOHN HALL ALLSTADT passed his entire life in Jefferson County, and long held prestige as one of its most successful farmers and substantial and honored citizens. He was born on a farm near Halltown, this county, that village having been named in honor of the family of which his mother was a representative. After his marriage he purchased and settled on a farm on the Charles Town road, about three miles distant from Harpers Ferry. When John Brown made his historic raid in this county he and his men proceeded to the house of John H. Allstadt and there they confined Mr. Allstadt and his son Thomas prisoners. The father and son were confined with other prisoners in the army at Harpers Ferry and later in the engine house, where they remained through the siege and witnessed the killing and wounding of many of Brown's men. The son Thomas, now eighty years of age, recalls in vivid memory this incident in his early career and also the historic subsequent execution of John Brown. John Hall Allstadt acquired several farms, and continued to reside on his old homestead on the Charles Town road until his death, at the age of eighty-one years. He married Mary Ann Gardner, who was born near Charles Town, a daughter of Frank Gardner, the latter having come from Pennsylvania and having become a pioneer owner of a large landed estate in Jefferson County, where he died at the patriarchal age of ninety-four years. Mrs. Allstadt passed to the life eternal when seventy-three years of age. Mr. and Mrs. John H. Allstadt reared a family of five children: Sarah, Thomas, Harriet, Fanny and Mary, the last named being the wife of Benjamin F. Moler, of whom specific mention is made in the biography following.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN MOLER, who recently left his father and is now living retired at Harpers Ferry, Jefferson County, was born on a farm one and one-half miles distant from Halltown, this county, on the 24th of November, 1851. In this county was also born his father, Henry Moler, who was of Pennsylvania German lineage and whose parents were early settlers in Jefferson County, Virginia (now West Virginia). Henry Moler passed his entire life in this county, was a prosperous farmer, and at the age of eighty years of age at the time of his death. He married Miss Harriet Moler, who likewise was born and reared in Jefferson County and who here died at a venerable age. Of their fourteen children the following attained to maturity: Robert W., Sally Ann, Henry Clay, Emily, Mary Louise, John G., George A., Raleigh, Newton and Daniel J. and Benjamin Franklin.

Benjamin F. Moler made the best possible use of the somewhat limited educational advantages that were his in his youth, and has since broadened his mental horizon through reading and through the practical experiences of a busy and useful life. A few years after his marriage he settled on a farm near Keyser Ferry, and there he proved a vigorous and successful exponent of farm industry. Rock found in deposit on this farm had for years been held as of no value and a detriment to the place. He finally found this rock a source of profit, for he leased the farm to the Keystone Lime and Stone Quarry Company, which is now shipping from these quarries large quantities of stone to the steel factories in Pennsylvania. In 1920 Mr. Moler and his wife left the farm and established themselves in an attractive home at Harpers Ferry.

April 30, 1873, recorded the marriage of Mr. Moler to Miss Mary Allstadt, who was born on a farm near Harpers Ferry and who is a daughter of the late John H. Allstadt, to whom a memoir is dedicated on other pages of this work. Mr. and Mrs. Moler have five children: Susan is the wife of Robert Stifter, and they have three children: Belle, Edith, Geneva, Robert and Gail. Haris married and has one daughter, Mildred. Bessie is the wife of Clarence Watson, and they have two children, Evelyn (Mrs. Frank Lake) and Louise (Mrs. Nichols). Jessie Darke is the wife of Robert Huffmaster, and they have five children: Charles, Jeanette, Franklin, Marguerite and Forrest. Jeanette is the wife of John Ailes.

ROLFE MILLAR HITE. Considering the extent of his individual interests and the great properties and holdings in which he has acted as an operator, administrator or negotiator, Rolfe Millar Hite stands in the front rank of leaders in the coal industry in the northern section of West Virginia. His career is a long and notable one in many aspects.

He was born July 16, 1867, at Hite in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania. However, he is descended from a long and prominent line of West Virginia ancestors. His American forefather was Yost Hite, who has the historic distinction of being the first white man to make permanent settlement in old Frederick County in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia, now Jefferson County, West Virginia. Yost Hite came from Strasburg, Germany, to America, and first located in the Dutch Colony on the Hudson River at Kingston, New York, in 1710. He brought with him his wife and daughter. In 1717 he removed to what is now Germantown, Pennsylvania, and settled on his own land at that point. Later he exchanged this land for a large tract on the Schuylkill River to the mouth of what is known as Perkiomen Creek. There he built a substantial residence, also a mill, and it remained a home for several succeeding years. In the meantime he earned of the newly discovered country in the Virginia colony. Being by nature a pioneer, he made investigations and in that year secured from Governor Penn of the Pennsylvania Colony what Hite thought was a grant from the Virginia governor and council for a large land grant in the new country. In 1732, accompanied by his family and twenty other families of colonists, he entered the forests of what is now Jefferson County, at that time occupied by Indians only. The validity of his grant was later questioned, and for a time he was in danger of losing his land. But being conversant with the laws on grants and somewhat of a lawyer himself he eventually established his rights, settled on his land and spent the rest of his life there.

The oldest son of Yost Hite was Col. John Hite, a native of Kingston, New York, who accompanied his parents into Pennsylvania and Virginia, and became one of the prominent men of his locality. Old records show that he was surveyor in 1747, justice in 1748, assemblyman in 1752, 1772, 1780, captain on court martial in 1755, major on court martial, 1756, lieutenant-colonel on court martial, 1757, and colonel and president of court martial 1760. On different occasions he was present as a guest of his home "Surveyor Washington," "Colonel Washington," both titles being for the later distinguished General and President George Washington.

However, the direct ancestor of Rolfe Millar Hite was the second son of Yost Hite, Jacob, who was born in Pennsylvania. On going to Virginia he chose for his homestead a large tract of land from the grant of his father, situated in the northern part of Frederick County, near what is now Martinsburg, West Virginia. In order to secure competent settlers for the development of this land he visited Ireland and brought back with him a number of Scotch-Irish families. On the return voyage he met Catherine O'Bannon, whom he later made his wife. She lived only a few years after her marriage, and was survived by three sons: Captain John, Colonel Thomas and Jacob Hite, all of whom became distinguished men of their time. The second wife of Jacob Hite was Mrs. Frances (Madison) Beale, daughter of Ambrose Madison and a direct descendant of the founder of the Madison family in Gloucester County, Virginia, in 1653, from whom by another line was descended President James Madison.

Thomas Hite, son of Jacob and Frances (Madison) Hite, was born in 1750, in what is now Jefferson County, West Virginia, and became a prosperous man of affairs. Besides local offices he served as a member of the Virginia House of Burgesses. In 1772 he married Frances Beale.

James Hite, a son of Thomas and Frances (Beale) Hite, was born in Jefferson County in 1776 and died at the old Hite homestead in 1855. He was three times married. His son Col. James Hite by his second wife married Lydia Peterson, daughter of Henry Peterson, who married a daughter of Robert Morris, the distinguished Philadelphia Revolutionary financier. Henry Peterson's brother Louis made the first piece of copper pipe manufactured west of the Allegheny Mountains.

Peter Yost Hite, son of Col. James and his wife Lydia, was born on the old homestead in Jefferson county in 1832 and died August 21, 1911. He married Susan Rebecca Richardson, who was born in Warren County, Virginia, in 1831, and died November 2, 1884. She was a daughter of Marcus Calmes and Harriet Lydia (Christman) Richardson. To Peter Yost and Rebecca Hite were born the following children: (I) James (who died in infancy), (II) Samuel R., (III) Hattie Lydia, (IV) Marcus Calmes, (V) Lizzie Isabell, (VI) Rolfe Millar (subject of this sketch), (VII) Mary Virginia, (VIII) John Yost and (IX) Susan Rebecca.

Peter Y. Hite attended Virginia Military Institute, and as a young man in 1852 left that state and went to Allegheny City, Pennsylvania, where for several years he followed different lines of employment. In 1855 he entered actively the coal mining industry, and was also a manufacturer of salt at Hite in Allegheny County. His interests remained there from 1855 to 1887. During the following year he was a coal producer in Athens County, Ohio, and in 1889 returned to his native State of Virginia. In 1891 he established himself at Fairmont, West Virginia, where he had purchased a coal property as early as 1865, a property now operated by his sons. He was associated with his sons in the coal and coke business here.

Rolfe M. Hite grew up at Hite, Pennsylvania, attended public schools there and later the Newell Institute at Pittsburgh. Owing to the fact that he entered upon his business career at the age of eighteen his schooling was limited from the standpoint of time, though the fundamental training he acquired in his youth has been supplemented from year to year by constant reading and by first-hand knowledge of men and affairs.

Mr. Hite's active career in the coal industry began in 1885, when he engaged in mining and supplying coal to the town of Tarentum, Pennsylvania. In 1888 he was associated with his father as P. Y. Hite Sons Company in coal operating in Athens County, Ohio. In 1889 he removed to Tazewell County, Virginia, at a time when the Clinch Valley extension of the Norfolk & Western Railroad was being built from Tazewell Court House to Norton, connecting at the latter point with the Louiaville & Nashville Railroad. In that field Mr. Hite represented the interests of T. P. Trigg & Company, a subsidiary of the Tennessee Coal Iron and Railroad Company, a corporation then developing a vast tract of coal lands along the new line of railroad in Dickerson and Wise counties, Virginia. Mr. Hite had active charge of this mine development and still later, acting for the same company, was in the Kentucky coal fields.

Mr. Hite in 1890 organized the Virginia & Pittsburgh Coal & Coke Company, and the following year he located permanently at Fairmont, the center of his new interests. The company, in which his father and brothers were also interested, developed the Kingmont Mine and later the Morgan Mine at Rivesville in Marion County. In 1905 R. M. Hite with his brother J. Yost Hite and associates organized the Potomac Valley Coal Company, operating mines in Maryland, near Blaine, West Virginia. In 1920, in company with Mr. Glenn F. Barnes, was organized the Hite-Barnes Coal Company, operating the Eleanor Mine on Indian Creek in Monongalia County. From time to time during the last twenty years Mr. Hite's holdings in the above mines, especially the Morgan, have been increased by the purchase of coal lands, until his personal, together with his company's interests, have become recognized as some of the largest holdings of coal land in Northern West Virginia.

Besides being an operator he has been a buyer and seller and handler of acreage, and in that direction has been a factor in some extensive transactions. A notable instance was the sale of what was known as the Empire field of Pittsburgh coal to an eastern corporation in 1917. Mr. Hite and Samuel D. Brady handled this transaction, involving the sale of 10,000 acres of coal land for a cash payment of over $3,700,000 to the New England Fuel & Transportation Company of Boston.

Another episode in Mr. Hite's career was the part he had in settling up the properties of Josiah V. Thompson, the millionaire of Uniontown, Pennsylvania, who failed in business in 1915, with holdings aggregating a value of $65,000,000, and liabilities of $32,000,000. The Common Pleas Court of Fayette County, Pennsylvania, in 1915, appointed Mr. Hite one of the three appraisers of this vast property. Later the Federal Court of Pittsburgh and of West Virginia appointed him, together with David M. Hertzog and George R. Serugham, of Uniontown, appraisers of the property, the largest group of assets, comprising 143,000 acres of Pittsburgh coal in Pennsylvania and West Virginia. Later the Federal Court of West Virginia appointed him trustee for the West Virginia creditors, whose interests approximated $5,000,000. The Thompson affairs were ultimately settled to the satisfaction of all concerned, Mr. Hite and his associates receiving the commendation of the court for the business-like and thoroughly honorable methods they had employed in handling the matter.

At this writing Mr. Hite is president of the Virginia & Pittsburgh Coal & Coke Company, president of the Hite-Barnes Coal & Coke Company, president of the Lucille Coal Company, president of the Potomac Coal & Coke Company, and manager of the Montfair Gas Coal Company. He is a member of the Fairmont Chamber of Commerce, member of the State Advisory Board of the Old Colony Club, and is active in the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Fairmont.

In 1898 he married Miss Jennie Hunsaker, a native of West Virginia, and who died four months after their marriage. In 1900 Mr. Hite married Miss Louise May West, a native of Harrison County, West Virginia, and daughter of Felix and Gula West. Her father was a Confederate soldier and, after the war, a prosperous farmer in Harrison County. Mr. and Mrs. Hite have four children, Louise Virginia, Lucille Mildred, Helen Ruth and Eleanor May. Louise is the wife of Lieut. Harry K. Granger, who was in the aviation service overseas twenty-six months, and who is now associated with his father and brothers in the wholesale grocery business, as Granger Brothers, at Lincoln, Nebraska.

HARRY TEMPLIN LICKLIDER. One of the business men of high standing at Shepherdstown, Harry Templin Licklider, is vice president and manager of the Licklider Corporation, dealers in agricultural implements. He has passed his entire life in this community, where he has established a well-merited reputation for ability and integrity in business matters and public spirit and constructive ideas in the way of citizenship, and is president of the Chamber of Commerce. He is a native of Jefferson County, West Virginia, and a member of one of the old and honored families of this part of West Virginia.

Edward Templin Licklider, the father of Harry Templin Licklider, was born at Shepherdstown, January 20, 1853, a son of Grandison Templin Licklider, who was born at this place in 1820, a son of Adam Licklider, who was born on a farm one mile south of the city. His father, Conrad Licklider, was born on the same farm and was a life-long resident of the community, where he married Elizabeth Templin, a native of Frederick County, Maryland, where the Templin family were pioneers. Adam Licklider married Elizabeth Powell, of Frederick County, Maryland, and was a farmer and life-long resident of Jefferson County. Grandison Templin Licklider learned the trade of saddle and harness maker, and did a large and lucrative business, as at that time most of the travel was done on horseback, it being before the advent of the railroads and when lack of roads made travel by carriage practically impossible. He was also thrifty, carefully saved his earnings, and with them finally purchased the home farm, on which he died in 1901. Mr. Licklider married Amanda Humrickhouse, who was born at Shepherdstown, a daughter of Albe Humrickhouse, who was born on the Springfield farm, Frederick County, Maryland, May 5, 1787, while his father Peter Humrickhouse, was born in Washington County, Maryland, a son of John and Barbara Humrickhouse. Peter Humrickhouse enlisted in the Continental Army, May, 1776, as a private, and served through the war, but with the command that marched to Boston to the relief of General Washington. He married Mary Margaret Miller, daughter of Godfried Miller, who was born in Mannheim, Prussia, and came to America as a young man. In 1776 he was associated with Benjamin Franklin in the printing business at Philadelphia, and three of his sons fought as soldiers during the Revolutionary war. Albert Humrickhouse was prominent in business matters at Shepherdstown, where he conducted a general store, and also operated a stage line that extended from Baltimore to Winchester. He also served as postmaster, and was the first mayor of the town. Mr. Humrickhouse married Christina, and both lived to advanced years. Mrs. Amanda (Humrickhouse) Licklider died at the age of forty-four years.

Edward Templin Licklider attended the public school at Shepherdstown in his youth, and in young manhood adopted the vocation of farming for his life work. Eventually he settled on a farm one mile southwest of Shepherdstown on which he lives at this time. Since 1917 he has been president of the Licklider Corporation. On October 21, 1876, he married Ellen Virginia Entler, who was born at Shepherdstown, April 21, 1852, a daughter of Cato Moore Entler, who was born at Shepherdstown. His father, Joseph Entler, was born on a farm near Shepherdstown where his ancestors were pioneers. His brother, Dank Entler, served in the Revolutionary war. Joseph Entler was the proprietor of a hotel at Shepherdstown, and also operated a stage line. The house of which he was proprietor and in which he lived is now owned and occupied by his great grandson, Harry Templin Licklider, and is one of the oldest houses in the state. Built of logs, it was originally intended to contain twenty rooms and during the Revolutionary war, the War of 1812 and the war between the states was used as a barracks for the soldiers. It has in the past sheltered many distinguished visitors, including Gen. George Washington, Marquis de La Fayette and Henry Clay. Joseph Entler married a Miss Richard.

Cato Moore Entler entered the Confederate service at the commencement of the war between the states, as a member of Company B, Second Regiment, Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and served until the close of that struggle. After the war he served several years as city recorder. He married Mary Ellen Bowen, who was born at Shepherdstown, daughter of William and Elizabeth (Hill) Bowen. Elizabeth Hill was a daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth (Yearsley) Hill, and on the maternal side a granddaughter of Michael Yearsley, who was born in Alsace-Lorraine, was a Huguenot, and fled as a fugitive to America to escape religious persecution. After a short residence in Pennsylvania he came to Shepherdstown, acquired a large estate and presented a set of chimneys to the German Reformed Church. He reared seven daughters, to each of whom he gave a stone dwelling, all located at Shepherdstown, where he died in 1808, his remains being laid to rest in the churchyard of the German Reformed Church. Mr. and Mrs. Edward Templin Licklider became the parents of twelve children, namely: Mary Amanda, Harry Templin, Bettie Entler, Charles William, Florence Eggleston, Annie Virginia, Louise Moore, Edna Reika, Edmund Lee, Samana Entler, Ruth and Laura Elizabeth.

Harry Templin Licklider was educated in the public schools and as a young man entered the agricultural implement business of his father. He has advanced steadily through promotion won by fidelity and industry, and now occupies the positions of vice president and manager, in which he is practically directing the policies of the business and has developed it into one of the really important surprises of Shepherdstown. He is also a member of the Board of Directors of the Jefferson Bank and Trust Company of Charleston, Virginia.

Mr. Licklider married Miss Katharine Butler, daughter of William and Katharine (Lucas) Butler, and to this union there has been born one daughter, Katharine Tempin. William Butler was born on a plantation two miles south of Shepherdstown, in August, 1847, a son of Charles Thomas and Virginia (VanSwearingen) Butler, and a grandson of William and Nancy (Moore) Butler. Charles Thomas Butler was a planter who cultivated his fields with his own labor, and took a keen and active interest in public affairs, at one time representing his district in the State Senate. He died in 1899, his wife having passed away several years previous. William Butler acquired a good education in his youth, but on account of frail health did not adopt a professional career, choosing instead life on a farm. After a few years he entered the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, in the capacity of claim agent, a position which he has retained to the present. The out-of-door life and constant change has agreed with him and time has dealt genially with him, for at the age of seventy-five years he is fully alert mentally and active physically. Mr. Butler married Miss Katharine Hammond Lucas, who was born at Elmwood, Jefferson County, daughter of Robert Armistead and Katharine (Shepherd) Lucas and on the paternal side a lineal descendant of Robert Lucas, a native of England, who came to America in 1679 and settled in Bucks County, Pennsylvania. He was the father of Edward Lucas, who was the founder of the family in Jefferson County, where he settled about 1732, securing a large tract of fertile land from Lord Fairfax. He married Mary Darke, daughter of Gen. William Darke, of Revolutionary fame, and their sons fought in the Revolutionary and Indian wars. Katharine Shepherd was a daughter of Abraham and Eleanor (Strode) Shepherd, and a granddaughter of Capt. Abraham Shepherd, who was a son of Thomas and Elizabeth (SanMetre) Shepherd, the former being the founder of Shepherdstown.

JOHN JAMES SKINNER, who is now (1922) serving as county surveyor of his native county, maintains his home at Charles Town, Jefferson County, in which place he was born August 11, 1882. His father, Charles G. Skinner, was born on a farm lying on the line between Fauquier and Loudoun counties, Virginia, January 26, 1844, and at the same locality the latter's father, James Skinner, was born about the year 1813, a son of Gabriel Skinner, who was one of the representative pioneer farmers of that district, he having been of Scotch ancestry. His wife, whose maiden name was Betsey Jackson, was a member of the well known Maryland family of that name, and she was ninety years of age at the time of her death. James Skinner was one of the substantial farmers of Loudoun County at the time of his death, when sixty-two years of age. In that county was born his wife, Jane (Turner) Skinner, her father, Charles Turner, having owned and operated a gristmill at Millsville, that county. His wife, whose maiden name was Agnes Gulick, passed her entire life in that county. Their children were six in number: William Jefferson, Mary V., Edgar, Charles G., Janie and James II.

Charles G. Skinner was reared on the home farm and received his early education in the subscription schools of his locality and period. In 1862 he entered the service of the Confederacy, as a member of Company A, Seventh Virginia Cavalry, commanded by General Ashby. On the 22d of May of the same year he was wounded, in the battle at Buckton, Virginia, and his consequent physical disability led to his honorable discharge. About one year later he entered the commissary department of the Confederate Army, and in this connection he continued his military service until the close of the Civil war. In the autumn of 1865 Mr. Skinner went to Mississippi, where he was identified with the raising of cotton for a period of one year. He passed the following year in Fauquier County, Virginia, and in the fall of 1867 established his home at Charles Town, West Virginia. Here he was clerk in a hardware store for the ensuing seven years, and during the ensuing two years he was engaged in the merchandise business at Harrisonburg, Virginia. He then removed to his farm, seven miles distant from that place, where he remained until 1900. He then sold the farm and removed to Rectortown, Fauquier County, Virginia, where he served about ten years as magistrate. In 1908 he established his residence at Charles Town, where he has since lived retired. In 1874 he married Lucy M. Locke, who was born at Charles Town in 1841. Her father, William F. Locke, was born in Frederick County, Virginia, and became a leading merchant at Charles Town, besides which he became the owner of large tracts of land in Jefferson County. He served a number of years as magistrate, and was the presiding justice of the County Court. He was about fifty-five years of age at the time of his death. His wife, whose maiden name was Rachel Myers, was born in Pennsylvania. Lucy M. Locke Skinner died in 1907, the mother of two sons. Charles Locke, the elder son, graduated from the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania, in 1897, and he was a representative physician and surgeon at Charles Town at the time of his death, in 1917. His wife, Edna C., a daughter of James H. and Ellen (Coehran) Skinner, survives him, as do also their three sons and one daughter.

John J. Skinner profited by the advantages of the public schools of Charles Town and thereafter took a technical course in the University of Virginia. After leaving this institution he did a large amount of effective work as a chemist and civil engineer for various industrial corporations, and the year 1922 finds him the efficient and popular incumbent of the office of county surveyor of Jefferson County. Mr. Skinner is affiliated with the Blue Lodge and Chapter organizations of York Rite Masonry, and his political allegiance is given to the democratic party.

In 1903 Mr. Skinner wedded Miss Elizabeth Jane Skinner, daughter of James H. and Ellen (Coehran) Skinner, and the five children of this union are James, John, Ellen, Charles and Elizabeth.

EDWIN J. PAYNE, who came to West Virginia less than twenty years ago, has had a cumulative career in the coal industry, piling up one interest and responsibility upon another, and is one of the busiest and most successful men in his line at Huntington. The Lake & Export Coal Company, of which he is president, operates some of the large mines in the bituminous fields of West Virginia and Kentucky, and handles the product both for domestic and export trade.

Mr. Payne was born at Newport, Kentucky, March 29, 1883. His father, William A. Payne, was born in Illinois in 1852, was reared in the vicinity of Newport, Kentucky, and after his marriage lived in that city. For a number of years he was an employee of the American Express Company, and then he and his brother James A. organized, owned and operated the Eureka Tackle Block Manufacturing Company. William A. Payne, who died at Newport in 1905, was a republican, a member of the Episcopal Church and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He married Flora Elio, who was born at Newport, April 16, 1855, and died at Huntington, West Virginia, in November, 1920. Her two sons are Harry V., connected with a hardware business at Minneapolis, Minnesota, and Edwin J.

Edwin J. Payne acquired a grammar and high school education at Newport, attended Bartlett's Business College of Cincinnati in 1899, and subsequently pursued a mining course with the International Correspondence School of Scranton. Beginning at the age of eighteen, he was in the service of the Louisville and Nashville Railway Company for two years, and in 1904, about the time he attained his majority, he came to West Virginia and at Rend, now called Minden, became secretary to the general manager of the W. P. Rend Coal Company. This company sold out to the Bervind-White Coal Mining Company in 1905, but Mr. Payne retained the same position and was with that organization for eight years, serving in various capacities at the mines and in the office of the general superintendent at Chain. In 1912 he became secretary to George M. Jones, son of the late C. T. Jones, in the management of the C. T. Jones estate at Oak Hill in Fayette County. At the same time he became secretary of the Amherst Coal Company, and in 1913, when these interests took over the Virginia-Buffalo Coal Company, Mr. Payne was made its secretary and also secretary of the Argyle Coal Company. In 1914 he helped organize the Amherst-Fuel Company, and was vice president and general manager of these interests until 1917.

He organized in 1917 the E. J. Payne Coal Company, but on account of the war sold out to the Logan Pocahontas Fuel Company of Charleston, and acted as general sales manager of the Main Island Creek Coal Company until July, 1919. At that date he assisted in organizing the Lake & Export Coal Corporation, of which he is president. This is a West Virginia corporation, with Mr. Payne, president, H. E. Moran, of New York City, and F. L. Poindexter, of Huntington, vice presidents, and S. J. Hyman, of Huntington, secretary and treasurer. The corporation operates mines on New River, Coal River, in the Logan District of West Virginia and in the Big Sandy District of Kentucky. These various mines have a total capacity of 1,000,000 tons of bituminous coal annually. The main offices of the company are in the Leeco Building at Huntington, but in the sale and handling of the products offices are also maintained at New York City, Chicago, Norfolk, Detroit and in Paris, France. In addition to this corporation Mr. Payne has some individual interests in coal lands in Fayette County.

He is a republican, a member of Trinity Episcopal Church of Huntington, and was twice master of Oak Hill Lodge No. 120, A. F. and A. M., at Oak Hill, West Virginia. He is a member of Sewall Chapter No. 24, R. A. M., at Thurmond, Huntington Lodge of Perfection No. 4, Rose Croix Chapter No. 4 of the Scottish Rite at Huntington, West Virginia Consistory No. 1 at Wheeling, and Boni-Kedem Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Charleston. Mr. Payne is a member of the Rotary Club, the Guyandotte Club and the Guyan Country Club of Huntington. He has one of the finest homes in the city, located at 2976 Stanton Road.

In October, 1908, at Montgomery, West Virginia, he married Miss Margaret Baber, daughter of Dr. George P. and Amanda Baber, the latter a resident of Huntington. Her father, who was a physician and surgeon, died at Lansing, West Virginia, during Mrs. Payne's early childhood. Mr. and Mrs. Payne, have two children: Edwin Kent, born September 1, 1909, now a student in the Greenbrier Military School at Lewisburg, West Virginia; and Dorothy Alice, born July 7, 1914.

ALEXANDER HAMILTON STEVENS ROUSS, M. D. One of the prominent members of the medical profession in Jefferson County, Doctor Rouss was a medical officer during the war, seeing his chief service on army transports. His family is one of the old and substantial ones in the Valley of Virginia, and their patriotism in time of war has been matched by the qualities that distinguish good citizenship in times of peace.

Doctor Rouss was born on a farm in Kable Town District of Jefferson County, son of Capt. Milton Rouss, who was born in Frederick County, Maryland, and grandson of Peter Hoke Rouss, a native of York, Pennsylvania, whose father was John Rouss and whose mother was a Hoke. Peter Hoke Rouss from Pennsylvania removed to Frederick County, Maryland, and from there came into the Valley of Virginia, living for several years in Berkeley County and spending the remainder of his life in Kable Town District of Jefferson County. He married Belinda Baltzell, of Maryland, and both of them attained a good old age.

Capt. Milton Rouss was four years old when his parents came to Virginia and nine years of age when they settled in Jefferson County. He was pursuing his studies in the Virginia Military Institute at Lexington when the war broke out between the states, and at once he returned home and assisted in raising a company for the Confederate Army. It was designated as Company B, and attached to the Twelfth Regiment of Virginia Cavalry. He was commissioned first lieutenant and later, upon the death of his captain, was promoted to captain. He and the company did some valiant service in the early campaigns of the war, and at the battle of Brandy Station he was captured and was sent as a prisoner to Johnson's Island, Lake Erie and was held there until paroled at the close of the war. After the war he was in the general merchandise business at Lockport, New York, some four or five years, and then returned to Jefferson County and so settled on the farm in Kable Town District. This farm was his wife's inheritance, and it provided him the work of his years for nearly half a century, and he still lives there. Captain Rouss married Mary Osburn, a native of Virginia and daughter of Logan and Margaret Osburn. Captain Rouss and wife reared four sons, Doctor Rouss being the youngest and the only one to take up a professional career. Milton C. is a farmer and orchardist, as was elected in 1916 to represent Jefferson County in the State Legislature. George W. and Frank Hoke are also farmers and orchardists.

Doctor Rouss had rural school advantages when a boy and subsequently entered Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Virginia. He completed his literary education there and then entered the University of Pennsylvania for his medical course, graduating M. D. in 1901. Doctor Rouss first practiced in Frederick County, Virginia but after six years returned to Jefferson County, and took both a town and country practice, maintaining an office in Charles Town, and he and his family live at the country seat during the winter months. The rest of the year they have their home in the Kable Town District.

In 1907 Doctor Rouss married Annie Stouch, who was born in York, Pennsylvania, daughter of George and Lu Stouch. The only daughter of Doctor and Mrs. Rouss is Mary Osburn. The family are members of Zion Episcopal Church in St. Andrews Parish, and he is affiliated with the Jefferson County and West Virginia State Medical Associations.

Doctor Rouss was one of the first medical men in this vicinity to offer his services to the Government at the beginning of the war with Germany. He was commissioned for duty in the Medical Corps in 1917, and for a time was assigned to the Base Hospital at Newport News, Virginia with the rank of lieutenant. Three months later he was transferred to the transport service as ship's surgeon, and before the war was over he had made four round trips on transports overseas. He was in this service until March 1919, when he was given his honorable discharge, and since then he has been devoted to the rounds of his professional duties in his old home community.

FRANK H. BORDEN was educated as a mechanical engineer, but his business experience has been largely in the field of banking and the building supply and coal business. He is manager of the Citizens Coal and Supply Company of Bluefield, a business that has reached an imposing volume under his management.

Mr. Borden was born at Blacksburg, Montgomery County, Virginia, August 16, 1883, son of James H. and Margaret (Walters) Borden. His parents were also natives of Montgomery county, and his father died January 19, 1915, at the age of sixty-four, and his mother in 1910, at the age of fifty-eight. James Borden for thirty years was in the service of the Norfolk & Western Railroad as a steamfitter, and was foreman of the Lynchburg & Radford Division. He was an ex-Confederate soldier, having been in the war with a Virginia regiment until the final surrender at Appomattox. He and his wife were devoted members of the Christian Church.

Frank H. Borden is the youngest of five children. He attended the public schools of Blacksburg, spent one year in a business college at Roanoke, and took his course in mechanical engineering at the Virginia Polytechnic Institute at Blacksburg. He finished his technical education at the age of twenty-two and soon afterward became a assistant cashier of the Radford Trust Company. For a year he was connected with a hotel at Christiansburg, Vida, and in 1910 removed to Bluefield, where he assumed management of the Citizens Coal and Supply Company. He has been promoting the growth and prosperity of this company ever since, and it now does a business few times as volume it did when he took charge. Mr. Borden is an interested and public spirited citizen, and during the war worked with the various loan and Red Cross committees. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, Rotary Club, and he and Mrs. Borden are active in the Christian Church.

He married, October 2, 1909, Bessie L. Smith, daughter of H. P. Smith, of Christiansburg. Mr. and Mrs. Borden have one son and four daughters.

JAMES B. BELCHER. While one of the youngest business executives at Bluefield, James B. Belcher has had a long experience, beginning in boyhood, in connection with the lumber industry and is familiar with every phase of lumber production from the mills to the marketing of the finished product. With headquarters at Bluefield, he is a wholesaler also, handling a large volume of the hardwood products at this section.

Mr. Belcher was born on the Stewart farm in Russell County, Virginia, April 4, 1890, son of George C. and Maggie (Nuckles) Belcher. His mother is now living at Lords Creek, Virginia, at the age of sixty. His father, who was a farmer, died in 1901. He was a republican and a member of the Methodist Church. George Belcher and wife had six sons and three daughters. Two other sons are now in West Virginia, Silas H., associated with the Ritter-Burns Lumber Company at Huntington, and H. T., who has charge of the railroad yards at Gary.

James B. Belcher had only the advantages of the county schools in Russell County. He was eleven years of age when his father died, and in order to help educate his younger sisters and support his mother he went to work in the lumber business, and at the age of fourteen was doing duty as an instructor. He was with the Boice Lumber Company of Abbington, Virginia, and as an inspector traveled over a large area in Kentucky, West Virginia, Virginia, North Carolina and Tennessee. Mr. Belcher became an expert in estimating and grading lumber, and was a valuable employe of this corporation for a number of years. In 1917, with his earnings, he located at Bluefield and has since been doing business on his own account as a wholesaler and jobber in hardwood lumber. He handles the products of mills at Bluefield, Glenalum, West Virginia, and Falls Mill, Virginia.

April 22, 1914, Mr. Belcher married Vinnie N. Cole, daughter of M. W. Cole of Abbington, Virginia. Three children were born to their marriage. The two living daughters are Helen and Betty Wade. The only son, James B., Jr., died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Belcher are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Bluefield, and he is much interested in the Sunday school. He is a member of the Masonic Order, Honaker Lodge, No. 219, Inevitable and Protective Order of Elks, and in business organizations is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, the Kiwanis Club, the National Hardwood Association, and the West Virginia Builders Association.

CLARENCE B. SWEET. West Virginia is still one of the poorest states in the production of hardwood lumber. One of the important organizations manufacturing and marketing hardwood products is the National Lumber Company, with headquarters at Bluefield. The company was organized in 1908, and does an exclusive business in hardwood. The output of the various mills owned or under contract with this corporation is marketed all over the Southern states, from the Ohio to the Mississippi, and especially there is an extensive export trade with European countries.

The president of this company is Clarence B. Sweet, who for many years has been identified with the lumber industry. He was born at Bristol, Virginia, September 17, 1883, son of Thomas E. A. Sweet. His mother was a Mrs. Millard. Both parents were born in Virginia, and his mother is still living, at the age of sixty-one. Thomas Sweet, who died in 1912, at the age of fifty-eight, was prominent in Masonry, being a past master and past eminent commander of the Knights Templars, and member of the Shrine.

Clarence B. Sweet, one of three children, finished his academic education in Milligan's College, and for a time was employed as a bookkeeper in the King's Printing Company at Bristol. While at Bristol he entered the service of the Bryant Lumber Company, and subsequently he was at Kansas City, Missouri, with the Foster Lumber Company, and at Toledo, Ohio, as assistant sales manager for the Big A Hardwood Company. Mr. Sweet came to Bluefield in 1910 as manager of the National Lumber Company, and since 1919 has been president of the corporation. He is a member of the National Hardwood Association, and has been deeply interested in the civic affairs and progress of Bluefield during his residence here. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, the Kiwanis Club, the Country Club and the Masonic Order. His religious affiliation is with the Christian Church, while Mrs. Sweet belongs to the Presbyterian denomination.

In 1915 he married Virginia Bedinger, daughter of Everett W. Bedinger, of Louisville, Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Sweet have two children, Laura A. and Virginia B.

E. B. SISLER. The City of Akron, Ohio, knew Mr. Sisler as a merchant and business man for a number of years. With his success in that field well established he came to West Virginia, and has been identified with the management of several high-class stores in this state. His main interests are at Huntington, where he is secretary-treasurer of the Deardorff-Sisler Company, a department store.

Mr. Sisler was born at Akron, Ohio, July 14, 1872. In that city and over a large part of Summit County his father, Adam Sisler, was permanently known through his work as a physician and surgeon. Adam Sisler was born at Buffalo, New York, in 1824, was reared in that city, graduated M. D. from the Cleveland Medical College of Cleveland, and soon afterward established his home near Akron and continued in active practice in that vicinity for fifty-four years. In a profession that offers unlimited opportunities for service he exerted himself in a way to measure up to the highest standards. He died in 1908, at the age of eighty-four. Doctor Sisler was a republican, and in addition to the burdens of his medical practice he was also a lay preacher of the Christian Church and conducted services in his community every other Sunday in the absence of the regular minister.

Doctor Sisler married Amanda Hoy, whose father, Judge Hoy, was a native of Ireland, was a pioneer farmer in Summit County, Ohio, and died there in 1866. Amanda Hoy was born near Akron in 1826, and died at her home in that city in 1901.

Doctor Sisler and wife had a large family of children: Frances, who died at Canal Fulton, Ohio, age sixty-three, wife of Lafayette Swigart, a farmer now deceased; Charles, a real estate broker at Akron; Clara, wife of Frank Raber and living on the old homestead farm near Akron, where her parents had their home for many years; Mrs. Caroline Dissinger, of Akron; Louis E., a retired rubber manufacturer at Akron; E. B. Sisler; Jennie, of Akron, widow of Wilbur Rood, who at one time was principal of schools in Akron; John H., physician and surgeon at Detroit; and William, a rubber manufacturer who died at the age of forty years.

E. B. Sisler grew up on his father's farm near Akron, attended rural schools, and completed his literary education by graduation from the Ohio Northern University at Ada, with the class of 1892. During the next two years he divided his time between managing a general store near Akron and teaching school during winter sessions. Thereafter he gave his undivided attention to merchandising at Akron, but in the fall of 1906, having disposed of his interests in Ohio, he removed to Point Pleasant, West Virginia, and in that city owned and operated two stores, one of them being E. B. Sisler & Company, dry goods and women's furnishings, and the other the Union Clothing Store. Mr. Sisler retired from this business in June, 1910, and since then has been a resident of Huntington, where he first acquired an interest in the Biggs-Wilson Dry Goods Company. The Deardorff-Sisler Company was organized in 1912, succeeding to the business of Valentine-Crow Company. At that time the store was at the corner of Fourth Avenue and Tenth streets, but in 1915 was removed to 424-434 Ninth Street. The business is now a well organized department store, and is one of the important business concerns of its time in this section of the state. Besides being secretary and treasurer of this company Mr. Sisler also established the Sisler-Peck Company at Beckley, West Virginia, a store dealing in women's ready to wear and furnishings goods. He is vice president, secretary, treasurer, general manager and owns the controlling interest in this business.

Mr. Sisler is a republican, was baptized and reared in the Christian Church, is a charter member of Pharos Lodge No. 943, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, at Akron, belongs to the Rebekahs, is a past exalted ruler of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, is a member of Akron Council No. 126, Knights of the Macabees, at Akron, and Cabell Council No. 1998, Royal Arcanum, at Huntington. He is also associated with the work and membership of the Huntington Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Sisler has one of the most attractive homes in Huntington, at 438 Sixth Avenue, located in a restricted residential section. He married at Canton, Ohio, November 30, 1905, Miss Gertrude Jameson. She was born at Canton, was educated in the Canton public schools, and graduated from Mount Union College. Her father, David A. Jameson, was born and reared in Stark County, Ohio. At the age of eighteen he enlisted in the Civil war joining the Sixty-second Regiment, Company B, and serving until the close. He started in the hardware business at the age of fourteen, and finally entered into the general mercantile business, continuing in the same until his death, December 10, 1911, at the age of sixty-five.

BELLE JANE HALL, D. C., has the distinction of being the first practicing representative of the benignant system of chiropractic in the City of Clarksburg, Harrison County, and her technical skill is supplemented by her being also a trained nurse of marked ability and much practical experience.

Doctor Hall was born on the homestead farm of her parents in Harrison County, and the date of her nativity was September 6, 1876. She is the second daughter of David L. and Sarah (McPherson) Hall, the other three children of the family being Hattie E., Ivy M. and Raymond L., but the last named is deceased. The devoted mother died many years ago, and the father is one of the venerable and honored citizens of Harrison County, which has ever represented his home, his birth having here occurred August 30, 1840. His has been a useful and exemplary life, and since his retirement from farm enterprise in 1915 he has resided in the City of Clarksburg. Though he will soon (in August, 1922) celebrate his eighty-second birthday anniversary, he is hale and active and takes lively interest in the questions and issues of the day. He is vice-president of the Farmers Bank of Clarksburg. His father, Martin E. Hall, likewise was born and reared in Harrison County, the latter's father having been a native of Wales and having become one of the sterling pioneers of Harrison County.

David L. Hall was not yet twenty-one years of age when the Civil war began, and he promptly tendered his services in defense of the cause of the Confederate States. He enlisted in Company B, Seventeenth Virginia Cavalry, and with this gallant command he gave faithful and valiant service during virtually the entire period of the war, in which he took part in many engagements. After the close of the war he was for many years numbered among the most progressive and substantial exponents of farm industry in Harrison County. He is a staunch democrat, has been affiliated with the Masonic fraternity more than fifty years, and is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as was also his wife.

Doctor Hall was reared on the old home farm and received the advantages of the public schools of her native county. In 1900 she was graduated in the training school for nurses maintained by the New York Medical College of Hospital, and for several years thereafter she successfully followed her profession as a trained nurse, principally in the cities of New York and Washington. In 1911 she was graduated in the National College of Chiropractic, in the City of Chicago, and after thus receiving her degree she returned to Clarksburg, where on the 6th of May of that year she opened an office and engaged in the practice of her profession, as the first chiropractor in this city. Her success has been distinctive and attests alike to her professional skill and personal popularity. She maintains offices in Department F of the Gore Hotel. The doctor is a member of the Daughters of the Confederacy and a Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and is a communicant of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

ROBERT EDWARD KIDD has been prominent in the civic and official life of Clarksburg for a number of years. He is a justicer of the peace, juvenile court officer and proprietor of a real estate and insurance business there.

He was born at Point Comfort in Harrison County, West Virginia, May 7, 1883, son of Charles R. and Florence M. (Corley) Kidd. His paternal grandparents were William and Martha (Watkins) Kidd, who moved out of Old Virginia to Harrison County in an early day. They reared a family of nineteen children. The maternal grandfather of Mr. Kidd was William Corley, who also came from the Virginia to Harrison County. He married a Miss Hold. Both the grandfathers of Robert E. Kidd were pioneer draymen or teamsters. Charles R. Kidd, better known as Jack Kidd, also took up that occupation, and for years conducted a transfer business in Clarksburg, where he came well and favorably known. He died at the age of sixty-three, and is survived by his widow. He was a publican in politics, and some of his brothers served in the Union Army during the Civil war, and his brother Jim was killed in the Custer raid.

Robert Edward Kidd has spent practically all his life at Clarksburg. He attended the public schools, but his parents not being rich he early started to contribute his own labors to the family exchequer, and at the age of twelve was driving a team for his father in the transfer business. He worked in that line for several years, then was employed in the Lowndes Woolen Mills, and also the Atlas Glass Company's works. He was appointed constable in 1908 and for several years held the office of constable. In 1914 he was appointed justicer of the peace to fill out the unexpired term of G. H. Gordon, who had resigned, and in 1916 and again in 1920 Mr. Kidd was duly elected to this office. With the establishment of the Juvenile Court at Clarksburg in 1919 additional duties were given him as juvenile officer. For several years past he has employed the intervals of his official work in conducting a real estate and insurance business.

Mr. Kidd is a republican and a Knight of Pythias. Some years ago he bought the old home of his parents where he was born and where he now resides. In 1908 he married Miss Edith Prickett, who died in 1915. In 1916 he married Edith Pickett. The two children of his first wife were Robert Earl and Ruth Christine, the latter deceased. By his present marriage he also has two children, Virginia May and Jack Pickett Kidd.

GEORGE HARRY GORDON, who was for three terms mayor of Clarksburg and is now United States commissioner, his district, has been a resident of that city forty years and long active in business as well as in public affairs.

Mr. Gordon was born at Barnesville, Ohio, March 1, 1870, but represents an old Virginia family. He is a son of Samuel W. and Ursula (Waters) Gordon, natives of Virginia, his father of Frederick County and his mother Loudoun County. The Gordons were of Scotch ancestry when the Gordons came to West Virginia they settled in Preston County, while the Waters family established home in Harrison County. The paternal grandparents of George H. Gordon were John and Susan (Cooley) Gordon.

Walter Barnes.

ly were pronounced and ardent Unionists at the time of the Civil war. Their five sons, because of their political opinions, left Virginia and removed to Ohio. While Samuel W. Gordon enlisted in the Union Army and served throughout the war in the Sixtieth Ohio Infantry, the absence of his sons John Gordon, then an old man, in defending a small remaining store of corn, his only source of provisions, struck and killed a Confederate soldier who was making the raid. The Confederate officers aimed to punish the old man for his breach of military duty and it was then ordered that neither he nor his supplies should be molested. However, the civil authorities served upon him to leave Virginia, and he did so, making a trip in a wagon with his wife to the vicinity of Clarksburg in Preston County, West Virginia, where they resided. Subsequently they moved to Granville, Ohio, where he spent the rest of their years.

Samuel W. Gordon and Ursula Waters were married in Harrison County soon after the close of the Civil war. For several years they lived at Barnesville, Ohio, and in 1873 moved to Winchester, Virginia, and from there came to Clarksburg in 1882. The wife of Samuel W. Gordon died the age of forty-seven. She was the mother of two children, John William and George Harry Gordon. Samuel W. Gordon, who lived to the age of sixty-nine, married for his second wife Mary Hoff, and to this union was born a daughter, Helen. Samuel W. Gordon was a farmer in early life, later a traveling salesman for a Boston shoe house, and in about 1889 was elected a justice of the peace, an office he held for sixteen years, until he resigned to retire permanently. He was a republican and a member of the Methodist Church.

George Harry Gordon was three years of age when his parents moved to Winchester and was about twelve when he came to Clarksburg, which has been his home since the spring of 1882. He finished his common school education here, and soon after his marriage, at the age of twenty-one, became engaged in mercantile pursuits at Union, West Virginia. After two years he went into the northern Pennsylvania oil fields, and for ten years was in employ of the South Bend Oil Company and for a few years thereafter with other drillers of oil wells. Mr. Gordon in the fall of 1905 was appointed justice of the peace to fill the unexpired term of his father. This office he held ten years, and left it to become mayor of Clarksburg, an office to which he was first elected in April, 1915. He was re-elected in 1916 and again in 1917, and these terms marked a period of high efficiency in the conduct of municipal affairs. Mr. Gordon when he left the mayor's office in 1918 became an oil and gas well contractor, a business which he still continues. He also handles the estate and insurance, and since May, 1921, has performed the duties of United States commissioner at Clarksburg.

Mr. Gordon is a republican, a Methodist, and has long been active in the Masonic fraternity, being a Knight Templar and thirty-second degree Scottish Rite and a Master. He is also affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and the Elks. September 29, 1891, he married Miss Mary Ward. She was born at Plymouth, Vermont, and was brought by her parents to Clarksburg when five years of age. Four children were born to their marriage, the son Joseph dying at the age of four years. The three living are Susan, Ruth and George Samuel Gordon.

HOWARD WILLIAM VAN SCOY. In the requirements and efforts that it demands of its devotees the work of the educator is very exacting. Primarily, the business of the teacher is to instill into the mind of youth a practical training knowledge; yet at the same time the ideal educator is one who can also instill character into his pupils as well as worthy precepts. When the teacher has risen to a position where he governs not only one school or class, but a city, he must be possessed of executive abilities far beyond the ordinary. In this connection it may be said of Howard William Van Scoy, superintendent of schools of Harrison County, and at present a resident of Clarksburg, that during the time he was engaged in teaching he was able not alone to teach his children the ordinary rudiments of education, but likewise to gain their interest in the more spiritual side of character development; and that since assuming the duties of his present position he has exhibited abilities that have done much to advance the cause and standards of education in the county.

Mr. Van Scoy is a product of the agricultural communities of Harrison County, West Virginia, having been born on a farm near Good Hope March 25, 1895, a son of John A. and Rebecca (Cheuvront) Van Scoy. His father was born in Harrison County, May 10, 1863, a son of Adam and Susan (Wagoner) Van Scoy, the grandfather being a Union soldier during the war between the states, during which struggle he died as a prisoner at Andersonville stockade. Jerre Cheuvront, the maternal grandfather of Mr. Van Scoy, was of French origin and married Mary M. Brooks, a daughter of a Methodist Episcopal divine, born in England. Their daughter Rebecca was born in Harrison County. The Van Scoys are of Holland Dutch stock. John A. Van Scoy was left an orphan when a lad, and his early life was filled with hardships and obstacles, which he overcame through persistence and industry. In his young manhood he adopted farming for his life work, and this vocation he has followed throughout his active career, being now one of the substantial agriculturists of Harrison County and a man much respected and esteemed in his community. He is a member of the Methodist Church, as is his worthy wife, and in politics is a supporter of the republican party, but not a seeker for personal preferment. There are seven children in the family, of whom six are sons.

Howard William Van Scoy was reared on the home farm, where he assisted his father and brothers during the summer months and in the winter terms applied himself to his studies at the rural schoolhouse. Later he attended the high school at West Milford and spent two years at Salem College, finishing the standard normal course. At the age of twenty-one years he began teaching, and has since devoted himself to educational work. For a time he taught in two rural schools, after which he became a teacher in the Lost Creek High School, where he spent one year. He then moved to Salem, where he again took up the work of teaching in the country schools, continuing until he became principal of the Wolf Summit Junior High School and was thus employed until January 1, 1922, when he became county superintendent of schools of Harrison County. His career as an educator has been one marked with success, and he is giving the people an administration as county superintendent that is gratifying to them as it is beneficial to the public school system. Mr. Van Scoy is a republican in his political allegiance, and his religious connection is with the Methodist Episcopal Church. As a fraternalist he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America, and has numerous friends in both. He comes of good teaching stock, as his maternal grandfather was the first teacher of public schools in the Harrison School, located at the mouth of Isaac's Creek, where he settled and built a home.

In 1916 Mr. Van Scoy was united in marriage with Miss Mary Chadwell, of Salem, and they are the parents of two sons: Frank and Warren.

HON. J. WALTER BARNES, member and treasurer of the State Board of Control at Charleston, has for thirty years been a prominent figure in the educational, business and public affairs of the state. He was the administrative head for ten years of the Fairmont State Normal School. He developed and managed some of the strongest and most successful independent telephone companies in the state. His career at all points suggests a man of gifted personality, unusual resourcefulness, sound judgment and executive power and undeniable public spirit.

Mr. Barnes was born at Fairmont in Marion County September 3, 1862, son of Peter T. and Mary (Vandervoort) Barnes. This is one of the historic families of that part of old Virginia, now West Virginia, and has had a long and honorable history. The family is English and more remotely of Norman-French ancestry. In the early Colonial period it was represented by different branches in New England, Maryland and Virginia. The great-grandfather of J. Walter Barnes was William Barnes, who moved from Georges Creek, Maryland, to Monongalia County, West Virginia, prior to 1782. He was a millwright and farmer, and his son, Abraham Barnes, followed similar occupations. Peter T. Barnes was born on Tygarts Valley River, two miles above Fairmont, September 3, 1828, and for many years owned and operated the principal flouring mills at Fairmont. He was a member of the Seventeenth West Virginia Infantry during the war. His wife, Mary Vandervoort, was born in Monongalia County in 1827.

J. Walter Barnes attended public schools in Marion and Taylor counties, and was graduated from the State Normal School at Fairmont in 1879. He also took post-graduate courses there in 1880-81, and in the meantime taught in Doddridge, Pleasants and Hancock counties, and also studied law in the office of U. N. Arnett, Jr. He finished his studies in the law school of the University of West Virginia in 1882-83, and was admitted to the bar on attaining his majority in the latter year. Mr. Barnes began practice at Fairmont, but other demands on his time and talents have never allowed him the consecutive exercise of his profession. In the spring of 1885 he was induced to teach in the Fairmont State Normal School, and again in the spring of 1886, and soon afterward was elected to the regular teachers' staff. Mr. Barnes filled every position in that institution until he was made principal or president in 1892, and continued as its administrative head until 1901. In the meantime the Fairmont State Normal grew and prospered and enlarged its facilities so as to perform its functions as a source and training school of well qualified teachers for the state. Mr. Barnes was leader in the movement to secure from the Legislature adequate appropriations making possible the principal building of the Normal school, which was erected on the South Side.

In 1901 Mr. Barnes removed to Shepherdstown for one year, where he lived on a farm, but not finding country life altogether congenial he became manager of the Consolidated Telephone Company at Fairmont. He developed and enlarged the company's service from a few counties until it covered fourteen counties, and continued as manager of the company until the business was taken over by the Bell interests in 1915. He was also secretary and manager of the National Telephone Company of Monongalia County and of several other telephone companies. He served as president of the West Virginia Independent Telephone Association, being its first president in 1905. He was president of the Western Pennsylvania Independent Telephone Association, and president of the National Independent Telephone Association. He is also vice president of the Fairmont Trust Company, and has been a member of its board of directors since its organization in 1903.

All these offices and interests broadened the horizon of his experience as a man of affairs. Besides he was commissioner of finance and public utilities for the City of Fairmont from January 1, 1914, to September 1, 1919. He edited the Blue Book of Fairmont, setting forth the complete records of the administration of the city's affairs under the commission form of government. From 1911 to 1915 Mr. Barnes was a member of the Board of Education of the Fairmont Independent School District, and has long been a prominent layman of the Presbyterian Church, serving as an elder since 1890, was superintendent of the Sabbath school at Fairmont from 1889 to 1920, when he removed to Charleston, and was chairman of the building committee that constructed the beautiful church of the Presbyterians at the corner of Jefferson and Jackson streets in Fairmont.

Mr. Barnes was appointed by Governor Cornwell as member of the State Board of Control of West Virginia in March, 1920. This board, created by the Legislature in 1909, has entire control and management of all the state's penal, charitable and educational institutions. The new system has been justified by the results. The board conducts these institutions on strictly business principles, and the efficient and economical handling of the affairs has saved the state millions of dollars. The budget of expenditures through the state board of control now aggregates over $3,500,000 per annum.

Mr. Barnes in politics is a sound democrat, loyal to the principles of Jefferson, Jackson and Wilson. In 1901 he was a candidate for Congress on the democratic ticket, running ahead of the Parker and Davis ticket by over 100 votes. Most West Virginians will recall his work and responsibilities during the war. By appointment from E. A. Garfield, Federal fuel administrator, he was fuel administrator for the state, an office of peculiar importance because of West Virginia's great coal mining industry. He was also a Four Minute Speaker, but he neglected all personal business to effect a thorough organization of the fuel resources of the state for war purposes. This service was voluntary, and he received at the end of his eighteen months' service $1,000 from the Government in recognition of his service with the United States Fuel Administration. This token of appreciation of the Government represents something very much greater than money value.

On June 3, 1884, Mr. Barnes married Miss Olive Coe, daughter of Maj. William P. Cooper. Mrs. Barnes, who was born at Clarksburg, has long been identified with the activities of the W. C. T. U., has served as recording secretary and vice president, and for a number of years has been president of the West Virginia organization of the union. Mr. and Mrs. Barnes have five children: 1. J. P. Cooper, born July 23, 1886; George Roscoe, born March 18, 1888; Walter Kenneth, born April 6, 1891; Homer Francis, born May 12, 1895; and Mabel Irene, born July 17, 1901. The oldest son graduated from West Virginia University and is an engineer by profession. George Roscoe was one of the three sons representing the family in the army and navy during the war. He enlisted in the army as a private but came out with a commission. He is now a road tractor. Walter K. served with the navy and was "company commander." He is an attorney-at-law at Fairmont. Homer Francis enlisted in the army as a private in 1917, and rose to the rank of captain. He received his 23rd degree from West Virginia University the same year. He went overseas as adjutant of the Eight Hundred and 9th Pioneer Infantry, and was discharged with the rank of captain in July, 1919. While in England he spent a semester of study at Oxford University, and on being discharged from the army continued his college work at Harvard University, from which he received his A. M. degree. He is now instructor in a boys' school at Marion, Massachusetts, and he married Miss Mary Frances Hartley, Fairmont, a graduate of Smith College. Mabel Irene is teaching history in Central Junior High School of Charleston. All are graduates of the West Virginia University, except one, and he was a student there.

EDWARD JOHN WOOD is one of the able and successful architects in West Virginia and is engaged in the practice of his profession in the City of Clarksburg, Harrison County. His status as a leading representative of his profession and as a prominent citizen is specially pleasingly noted by reason of the fact that he is a native of Harrison County, his birth having occurred on a farm on Ten Mile Creek, near the old Point Pleasant Church, now known as Maken Church, and the date of his nativity having been August 28, 1863. On the paternal side the lineage traces back to Irish origin, and on the maternal to English. He is a son of James Alexander Wood and Margaret (Pritchard) Wood, the former of whom was born in Harrison County, Virginia, and the latter in what is now Harrison County, West Virginia. John Wood, grandfather of the subject of this review, was born and reared in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia, where his marriage was solemnized and whence in 1852 he came with his family to the present Harrison County, West Virginia, where he passed the remainder of his life as a farmer and where he died at the age of fifty-three years. Family tradition is to the effect that he was a descendant of one of three brothers who in an early day immigrated to America from the native Ireland, one of the number becoming a settler in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia.

Edw. J. Hood

James A. Wood was a young man at the time of the family removal to Harrison County. As a youth he taught school for a time, but during the greater part of his career he was a carpenter and builder by vocation, a field of enterprise in which he was specially successful. For an interval during the Civil war he served as a teamster in the Union Army. In Harrison County was solemnly the son of Edward Pritchard, who passed his entire life in his county and who was a prosperous farmer, early representatives of the Pritchard family having been iron workers in Pennsylvania and having come from that state to what is now West Virginia.

Edward John Wood gained his early education at Salem, Harrison County, whence in 1878 the family removed to Clarksburg, the county seat, where the father long held prestige as a representative contractor and builder and where he died at the age of eighty years, his wife having preceded him to eternal rest. In the schools of Clarksburg Edward Wood continued his studies until he was seventeen years of age, when he found it incumbent upon him to find employment and aid in the support of the family, he having been one of twelve children. Under the direction of his father he learned the carpenter's trade, and as a youth he also worked at the blacksmith trade about one year. From 1882 for a period of eighteen years he was associated with his brothers Wirt W. and James L. in contracting and building. About 1890 Mr. Wood began the private study of architecture and he carried his technical reading and work forward to the point that eventually gave him most ample fortification for the work of this profession. In 1900 he returned to Clarksburg, where he opened an office and has since given his exclusive attention to architectural work, in which he has met with gratifying success. He has drafted plans and specifications for many modern buildings, among the more important of which may be mentioned the following: Marion County jail and Sheriff's residence, St. Mary's High School at Clarksburg, the Prunty and the Traders Annex office buildings and the A. B. Maxwell residence at Clarksburg, besides many buildings of high grade in other cities and towns in this portion of the state. Mr. Wood is a member of the American Institute of Architects having been elected to membership in June, 1922, and being assigned to the Pittsburgh chapter.

Mr. Wood has long been affiliated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and he is a member of the Clarksburg Lodge of Elks, the Clarksburg Chamber of Commerce, the local Rotary Club, the Clarksburg Automobile Club and the Cheat Mountain and Allegheny Clubs. He attends and supports the Baptist Church, of which his wife is a member. He maintains his offices in the Lowndes Building and in the practice of his profession now has an able assistant in the person of his only son, upon whose admission to partnership the firm name of Edward J. Wood & Son was adopted. Politically Mr. Wood is a democrat and was elected to the City Council in 1906, serving in that capacity until 1908, when he was elected mayor of Clarksburg, serving one term after which he retired from politics. In 1893 Mr. Wood married Miss Jessie F. Cost, who likewise was born and reared in Harrison County, her father, the late Jacob F. Cost, a native of Virginia, having been for many years a representative farmer and citizen of Harrison County. Mr. and Mrs. Wood have two children, Eleton C. and Virginia M., both of whom remain members of the parental home circle.

Carleton C. Wood was born in the City of Wheeling, December 11, 1893, and his public-school education was completed by his graduation in the Clarksburg High School, a member of the class of 1913. For a year thereafter he was in his father's office and studied architecture, besides assisting in the general work of the office and business. In the fall of 1914 he entered Carnegie Institute of Technology, Pittsburgh, where he completed a two years' course in architecture. For one year thereafter he was engaged in the work of his profession at Pittsburgh, and then returned to his father's office. When the nation came involved in the World war he enlisted, October 15, 1917, at Allentown, Pennsylvania, and was assigned to the ambulance service of the United States Army. Eight months later he was detailed on construction work at Camp Crane, and finally he was formally transferred to the construction corps of the army. In this service he continued until February 27, 1919, when, at Allentown, Pennsylvania, he was honorably discharged, as ranking first sergeant. He is an appreciative member of the American Legion and is affiliated with its post at Clarksburg. As previously noted, he is now associated with his father in the practice of his profession, and he is making an excellent record as a skilled and successful architect.

CHARLES LEWIS HICKMAN was the first formally to practice the profession of architect in Clarksburg, and to the increasing burden of responsibilities in that vocation he has devoted more than forty years of his life. As a youth he manifested an inclination to the technic of mechanical construction, and while engaged in the practical work of a building contractor he studied and became proficient in the general science and art of architecture.

Harrison County has been his home since birth, and he is a member of one of the historic families of West Virginia, his ancestors having fought the Indians before they could establish their homes in peace and security on the western slope of the Alleghenies.

His pioneer forefather was Sotha Hickman, who was of English ancestry and was born in Montgomery County, Maryland, June 10, 1748. He settled in what is now Harrison County, West Virginia in 1772. He lived here throughout the period of the Revolution, and in the fall of 1780, toward the close of the struggle for independence, he enlisted at Nutter's Fort in what was then Monongalia County for a period of six months, under Capt. William Louthen. He re-enlisted in the fall of 1781 for two months, and again, in the fall of 1782, volunteered for a period of six months, his captain being the same in all enlistments. He did his part toward holding off the Indians in trespassing the frontier. His record appears in the archives of the United States War Department in connection with his claim for a pension, which was granted. Prior to his service as a soldier he and Levi Douglas, another pioneer of Harrison County, were taken prisoners by the Indians and carried to Scioto County, Ohio. While their Indian guards were asleep they slipped away, crossed the Ohio River on a log raft and finally returned home in safety.

For a century and a half the seat of the Hickman family in Harrison County has been the little community of Quiet Dell, five miles south of Clarksburg. That was the old home of Sotha Hickman, and he died there April 2, 1832. He married Elizabeth Davies, who died December 16, 1837. Their children were named Thomas, Comfort, Rebecca, Sotha, Jr., Arthur, Cynthia, Nancy, Zaccariah and Elizabeth.

One son of this pioneer couple was Thomas Hickman, who was born at Quiet Dell and died there February 8, 1881. He married Love Seranton, who was born in Marshall County, West Virginia, and died April 16, 1856. Her children were named Marshall, James Luther, Hiram, William, Rufus Theodore, Ruth and Rudolph H.

The third generation of the family lineage was represented by Marshall Hickman, who was born near Quiet Dell, October 4, 1815, spent all his life in that locality and died November 24, 1864. He married Mary Butters, daughter of Samuel Butters, who came from Ohio to what is now West Virginia. The first home of Samuel Butters was at Morgantown, and from about 1821 he lived at Clarksburg. He was a potter by trade, conducting the first pottery in Clarksburg, and in later life he operated a grist mill near Quiet Dell, where he died. Mary Butters, his daughter, was born at Clarksburg June 27, 1823, and died March 1, 1876. The children of Marshall Hickman and wife were Lloyd, Sarah Love, Laura Ann, Samuel Butters and Charles Lewis.

Thus Charles Lewis Hickman comes in the fourth generation of this historic family in Harrison County. He was born at the old homestead at Quiet Dell August 3, 1848, and spent his early life on the farm and had a share in its responsibility owing to the early death of his father. He acquired a common school education, learned the carpenter's trade by apprenticeship, and at the age of twenty began taking contracts as a builder. He had a vision of a wider service than that offered by his success as a building contractor, and he diligently carried on his studies for several years in architecture, until in 1878, when he was thoroughly qualified, he opened the first architect's office in Clarksburg. Nearly forty-five years has passed since then, and he is still active in his profession, and a long list of important buildings and other structures might be mentioned as a glimpse of the miracle work he has done in his profession. He has not only designed, but has supervised construction. He was architect for the Clarksburg Post Office and the Merchants National Bank, Clarksburg, West Virginia, also Science Hall, State Building at Morgantown, West Virginia, and in charge of their construction. Under appointment from the governor he is a member of the State Board of Examiners for licensing of architects in West Virginia. His high professional and business standing is in no small measure due to his integrity of character. He was the originator of the independent telephone service in West Virginia, and he and T. Moore Jackson of Clarksburg installed the first independent telephone exchange of West Virginia, at Clarksburg.

Mr. Hickman has been a very busy man, has manifested no disposition to get into politics, is a democratic voter, a member of the Sons of the American Revolution, a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Clarksburg Chamber of Commerce.

In 1876 he married Miss Carrie Leach, daughter of Alexander Leach. They have had a most happy married companionship for nearly half a century. No children were born to their union. Mr. and Mrs. Hickman are members of the Baptist Church.

DAVID HENRY LOAR, now located at Reedsville, relied upon the heavy and continuous program of a practical farmer to give him prosperity, and he has performed a useful part in his community and is known and admired for his effective citizenship.

He was born near the Mount Vernon schoolhouse in Valley District of Preston County August 1, 1859. His father, Jonathan S. Loar, was born near Oakland, Garrett County, Maryland, in January, 1832, and was reared and educated there. When he was a boy the pioneer implements of cultivation and harvesting were still in use, including the old flail for threshing grain. He was one of a family of eighteen children, and on reaching his majority he left home to make his own way. Coming West, he established himself near Reedsville, where he married Susan Freeburn, daughter of Robert Freeburn. She was a native of Scotland and was a small girl when her parents came to America. Jonathan Loar and wife settled down as farmers, and lived near the village of Reedsville, where he died January 8, 1915, surviving his wife several years. He stood well as a citizen of the community and was a trustee of the district schools and constable of the district, and a life-long democrat. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His children were: William Robert, a photographer at Grafton; Jennie, widow of Frank Wolf, of Reedsville; Mollie, wife of S. D. Snider, of Masontown; David H. and Thomas E., twins; Belle, wife of O. W. Ringer, of Terra Alta; and Mattie, who died as the wife of Sanford L. Coburn, of Masontown.

David H. Loar and his twin brother grew up on the farm, and while both attended the district schools it was the lot of David to keep close to the duties of the farm, and he exhibited a splendid loyalty to his parents, with whom he remained and for whom he cared until he was about thirty years of age. On leaving home he rented a farm near Reedsville, and a year later bought the place where he now lives. He and Mrs. Loar started with limited means, and out of their labors they paid for their farm and for the splendid improvements they have placed on it. Their income and prosperity have been chiefly derived from grain and stock.

The main business of agriculture has been supplemented by other interests. Mr. Loar was a clerk for his brother-in-law, B. F. Wolf, in Reedsville, was at one time proprietor of the Reedsville Hotel, and for four years postmaster of the village under the administration of Grover Cleveland. On leaving the Post Office he turned it over to Mrs. Mary Watson. He cast his first presidential vote for General Hancock in 1880, and has always voted the democratic national ticket. He is a Baptist and Mrs. Loar, a Methodist.

August 29, 1889, Mr. Loar married Alice Conley, daughter of Elias and Clarissa (Fortney) Conley. The Conley and Fortney families were established in Preston County in pioneer times. Elias Conley lived in the vicinity of Kingwood and Reedsville, was a splendid example of earnest citizenship, and besides owning and operating a farm he was a plasterer and brick maker. He died at a venerable age of ninety-four, and his widow died several years later. Their children were: Milton, a resident of Ohio; Letitia, deceased, who was the wife of Mes. Jennings; Jennie, who married Clark Powell and died at Morgantown in February, 1921, just a month before her sister Letitia died; Josephine, wife of Clark Hamilt living near Independence in Preston County; Edith, who married Ward Wrightmeyer and died in Parsons, W. Virginia; Mary, wife of David Stuebel, at Canes Creek, Mrs. Alice Loar; and Kate, Mrs. Guy Smith, of C. Creek; and Bertie, Mrs. Mack Cale. Mrs. Loar was born May 11, 1864. The only child of Mr. and Mrs. Loar, Frankie, now the wife of J. Sherman Cale, of Reedsville and they have two children, Loar and David Lynn Cale.

Thomas E. Loar, twin brother of David Loar, was for many years one of the useful educators of Preston County. He laid the foundation of his education in the common schools and taught his first school at the age of seventeen at Aurora, in the south part of the county. He taught the winters and attended school himself for several years took normal work, and had the instruction of one of the best educators in this locality, Professor M. O. Gorman. He also studied Latin and higher mathematics, but never realized his complete ideal for an education, since his time was required on the home farm. For thirteen years he was a teacher, and frequently did all the work which several teachers might properly have performed. His last teaching was done in the Reedsville school. Along with education work he has been correspondent for local papers, and has the special gift of writing solicitously on memorial subjects. His memorial article on the life of the late Congressman Junior Brown has been especially commended.

He has been a democrat since voting for General Hancock in 1880, and for the past twenty-five years has served on the board of election commissioners. Mr. and Mrs. Loar are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, at Reedsville, and he is one of the trustees of the church at Reedsville.

In Monongalia County in 1900 he married Miss Nell B. Holt, a native of that county and daughter of William B. and Martha (Hymen) Holt. Mrs. Loar possesses much artistic talent, which she has developed and has used effectively in producing landscapes, monogram drawing and also mechanical drawing and drafting for architectural purposes. Her friends greatly prize some of her special productions, and her art is especially evident in her home. The Loar Library is filled with books, and both esteem the privileges of literature and all that makes life worth while. Mr. and Mrs. Loar have no children, but have a deep interest in child welfare and have contributed not a little to the educational ideals of their community.

WILLIAM L. WHITE, JR., is superintendent of the Alport Portland Cement Company's plant at Manheim in Preston County. This is one of the most prominent industries in the state, and something regarding it and Mr. White, though the latter has been a resident of West Virginia only a few years, have a proper place in this publication.

Mr. White was born at Easton, Pennsylvania, July 2, 1889. The Whites were an old family of Long Branch and Red Bank, New Jersey, where his father, William L. White, Sr., was born in 1859, and as a young man removed to Pennsylvania, where he entered life insurance and has been highly successful in building up an extensive business in that field. At Easton he married Miss Mary E. Hild id, now deceased, who spent her life at Easton, where her father, Wilson Hildebrand, was the last burgess. William L. White, Sr., had four children: William L., Jr., Clara H., Dorothy and J. Ludlow. Ludlow was with the Engineers Corps in France during the war, going overseas after his enlistment, and remaining on active duty for several months after the signing of the armistice. William L. White, Jr., attended public school at Easton and finished his technical education in Lafayette College, where he graduated a Civil Engineer in 1911. He has had extensive experience in various branches of engineering for the past ten years. For a year and a half he was employed on a branch of the West Shore Railroad lines. He then his service has been with the Alpha Portland Cement Company. He began as a field engineer, and had charge of construction work at different plants, with headquarters at Easton. Mr. White knows every technical detail of the cement industry. In the early years he supervised mines and quarry work, and has directed the installation of every piece of machinery required in cement works.

Mr. White came to Manheim as superintendent of a cement mill in 1916. He brought with him a wide experience in the construction of cement warehouses and other permanent buildings for his company, and this experience has been utilized at Manheim, resulting in reconstruction that has almost made a new plant here. The replacing of old machinery as the old became inefficient or obsolete, the installation of electric shovels, electric locomotives, the substitution of concrete trestles for the old ones under the company's house tracks, the building of three cement warehouses, the construction of cement dwellings for workmen, the pulling and modernizing the company's old water system—all these have been features of his work as superintendent and have affected vitally the entire system of production and distribution of the product of this, the only Portland cement mill in the state, where 250 men are regularly employed.

Through his official connection with an industry which supplies basic material for the making of good roads, Mr. White has enlisted permanently in the war against poor highways. He is also in touch with state and local politics in West Virginia, and has a deep interest in the common problems and keeps himself thoroughly well informed on the progress of the Manheim school, not only as a unit in the general educational system but through its opportunities for usefulness to the industry which he serves. Mr. White was reared in a home where the principles of the republican party were upheld, and he has maintained the spirit of his forefathers in his political creed. He believes in protection as a fundamental part of the American industrial policy.

Mr. Easton in April, 1919, Mr. White married Miss Leola M. Mattes. They have known each other from childhood and were schoolmates in high school. Her parents were Harry S. and Sellie K. Mattes, and her father spent all his active career with the Lehigh Valley Railway Company, dying while still in the service, in 1920. Mr. and Mrs. White have two children, Elizabeth M. and William L. III.

THOMAS THEODORE ENGLAND, now in his second term as county general of West Virginia, is a resident of Logan. While there he has built up a state-wide reputation as a successful lawyer, a reputation that has been enhanced by his singularly able and efficient administration he has given as head of the state's law department.

Mr. England was born in Jackson County, West Virginia, a 168, son of A. J. S. and Mary Elizabeth (Welch) England. His father was a native of Barbour County, West Virginia, and a minister of the Methodist Church. General England spent a boyhood and youth of mingled labor and rest to advance and improve himself. His education was largely derived from the opportunities he created. He attended public schools, the Concord Normal at Athens, West Virginia, graduating therefrom in 1892, and graduated from the degrees Bachelor of Science and Bachelor of Laws from the Southern Normal University at Huntington, Tennessee.

He began the practice of law at Oceana, then the county seat of Wyoming County, in the spring of 1899. From there seeking a larger field for his activities, he removed to Logan, county seat of Logan County, in 1901, and from that county his abilities as a successful lawyer have gained him recognition throughout practically the entire state. Mr. England served as mayor of Logan in 1903 and in 1908 and again in 1912 was elected to the State Senate. He was a leader in the work of the Senate for eight years, and in 1915 was elected president of the Senate.

In 1916 he was elected on the state republican ticket as attorney general, and in 1920 was re-elected by an increased majority. During the past six years the law department of the state has been burdened with an unprecedented amount of business, both domestic and Federal relations. It was during General England's administration that the Virginia-West Virginia debt settlement was negotiated and finally cleared up. During his term occurred the World War, and there were many matters growing out of the war period that were assigned to his office. During the war General England was a member of the State Council of Defense, and as a Four Minute Man his services were enlisted as a speaker in all the campaigns and drives for war purposes.

General England is widely known over the state as an official of the Knights of Pythias. During 1920-21 he was grand chancellor of the order for West Virginia, and is now a junior vice grand chancellor. He is also affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Elks and Loyal Order of Moose, and is a member of the Kiwanis Club of Charleston.

General England has his official headquarters at the state capitol, and his residence at Logan. He married Miss Leoma Lemburg, and their three children are Arline, Max and Marjorie.

ROBERT LEE BURGESS was interested in the first garage and automobile sales agency at Bluefield, but principally his business here has been as a dealer and contractor in electrical supplies. He is now proprietor of the Burgess Electrical Supply Company at 37 Bland Street, a business whose trade and service territory covers a large section of Southern West Virginia and adjacent states.

Mr. Burgess was born in Henry County, Virginia, December 28, 1873. His birthplace was on a part of the land grant given to the Burgess family by King George in Colonial times. His parents were John and Mary (Foster) Burgess, both native Virginians, the former born in Henry County and the latter in Patrick County. John Burgess owned a fine plantation of a thousand acres, and had twenty-two slaves before the war. During the Civil War he was captain of a Virginia regiment, and was in many of the great battles of Southern Virginia. He was liberally educated, had been a teacher, and always took a deep interest in educational progress and was a leader in the democratic party, serving twenty years as democratic committeeman. He and his wife were members of the Primitive Baptist Church. John Burgess died at the age of eighty-one. His widow, now seventy-seven and living in Florida, is very active and independent physically and makes many long journeys over the country alone. The vitality of these parents has been transmitted to the children, since of five sons and five daughters all are living.

The third child is Robert Lee Burgess, who finished his education with a commercial course at Oakridge College in North Carolina. For several years he was in the hotel business at Covington, Virginia, and that gave him opportunity to form a wide acquaintanceship and many of his oldest friends were gained while he was in the hotel. Mr. Burgess came to Bluefield in 1908, and with his brother J. K. Burgess established a little shop for electrical supplies. They had just one-half of a storeroom. Soon afterward they bought the Appalachian Garage from F. M. Smith. This was the first garage in the city. They continued the business two years, selling the Hupmobile and Hudson cars. After leaving the automobile business they concentrated their attention on the electrical supply and contracting business. J. K. Burgess, who married Mrs. Walters Sanders, subsequently withdrew from the firm and since then Robert L. Burgess has continued the business alone. He has a large and well equipped store, and as an electrical contractor does installation work all over the southern part of the state and portions of Virginia and Ohio.

In 1907 Mr. Burgess married Miss Nannie Tyree, daughter of Henry Tyree and sister of Ed Tyree. Mr. and Mrs. Burgess have one daughter, Elizabeth. They are members of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Burgess is affiliated with the Lodge, Chapter, Knight Templar Commandery, Scottish Rite Consistory and the Shrine in Masonry. In politics he votes for men and measures that appeal to his best judgment.

ALFRED LUTHER HAWKINS is proprietor of the Hawkins Undertaking Company of Bluefield. He has been a Bluefield business man twenty years, at first as a general merchant. He is a graduate and licensed embalmer, and has perfected a highly adequate and efficient service in his profession and business.

Mr. Hawkins was born at Lynchburg, Virginia, November 6, 1875, son of Thomas B. and Betty M. (Hatcher) Hawkins. His father, a native of Bedford County, Virginia, was a representative of an old family in that section of the state, and grew up on a farm, his people having been planters and farmers for several generations. He entered the Confederate Army when a young man, in Stonewall Jackson's Brigade, and was with that great leader when he fell at the battle of Chancellorsville. Later in the same year Thomas B. Hawkins was wounded at Gettysburg, and after being wounded served as an officer in the Home Guard. Following the war he became a prominent tobacco exporter, with headquarters at Lynchburg, and maintained offices both in England and Italy. He was active in that business until he retired, and in 1902 removed with his family to Bluefield, where he lived until his death in 1917, at the age of sixty-nine. The mother died in 1915, aged sixty-two. They were members of the Baptist Church, and the father was a democrat in politics. Of their fourteen children six are still living, Alfred L. being the youngest.

Alfred L. Hawkins acquired his early education in Lynchburg and in Bedford County, Virginia, and for two years was employed as salesman by a Lynchburg concern. He was also a salesman at Farmville, Virginia, and on moving to Bluefield became associated with his brother, S. C. Hawkins, in a mercantile business on North Mercer Street. Two years later Mr. A. L. Hawkins entered the Pittsburgh College of Embalming, and after completing his technical training established his undertaking parlors at 84 Bland Street and from there moved to Pulaski Street and finally to his present location at 72 Bland Street. Here he has a funeral chapel and morgue, and has complete equipment of automobile hearses and other facilities for expert service.

May 30, 1920, at Princeton, West Virginia, Mr. Hawkins married Miss Lola Browning, of Logan County. They have one daughter, Betty. Mr. Hawkins is a member of the Elks, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias, the Kiwanis Club and is an independent democrat in politics.

DAVID C. STEMPLE. The country home of David C. Stemple at Aurora in Preston County is an example of progressive management and efficient handling of the resources of the soil and all the details of good farming. Moreover it is a farm that has been in one family for four generations, and succeeding generations will find it more productive than ever when Mr. Stemple completely retires. He has passed the age of three score and ten, but is still a man of action both on his farm and in community affairs.

He is a descendant of Godfrey Stemple, who came from Hagerstown, Maryland, and established his home at what is now the village of Aurora as early as 1780. In the year the governor of Virginia, Henry Lee, signed a grant of 1,000 acres near Aurora in Preston County to Godfrey Stemple, as he spelled his name. This grant was No. 1. He brought his family to occupy the land in 1784. It was a wilderness, with wild animals and game abounding. He had three sons, David, Martin and John, all aided in effect, a clearing for the first crops and in building the pioneer home into which the family removed after spending the first winter in a canvas tent.

His son John Stemple, whose life for half a century spent on part of this farm, died about 1830 and is buried in the Carmel graveyard, the oldest burying ground in the locality. He married Sarah Boyles, and their children were Margaret, Isaac, David, Susan, Christina, Sarah and Elizabeth.

Of these David Stemple, father of David C. Stemple, was born December 17, 1808, and died June 15, 1898, in his 90th year. The schools of his day were crude and he had little book learning, but he became a thoroughly practical man as a farmer and kept in touch with the world around him and also the news from the outside world. He was an interesting visitor and conversationalist, and very active in the Lutheran Church, having a part in the erection of the church at Carmel, and serving as deacon and elder. He was a democratic voter, but not a politician. After his marriage he settled on the farm now occupied by his son David C. His wife was Susan Lantz, and they were married November 17, 1835. They lived together for more than sixty years, and Mrs. Stemple died in 1902, at almost ninety-one. She was born May 16, 1811, daughter of Henry and Eva (Bishoff) Lantz. David Stemple's wife had the following children: Harriet, who died young; married; John H., who was a Preston County farmer and miller and died in 1904, leaving a family by his marriage to Rebecca Ann Shaffer; Miss Christina, living at Aurora, Lewis S., a farmer at Aurora; Eva, wife of David Schuler, near Eglon; Jacob S., who lived many years in Mahoning County, Ohio, where he married Lydia Simon, daughter of Stilling Simon, and after her death in 1890 he returned to West Virginia and is now living on a farm near Aurora and David C.

David C. Stemple was born July 9, 1851, on the farm where all his years have been spent. He attended the public schools of Aurora, and for half a century his efforts have been put forth as a grain grower and stock raiser on the old homestead. He has cleared many acres, raised the first crops from the virgin soil, and has had his full share of the heavy labor involved in this class of pioneer work. While his sons had the advantages of agricultural colleges, Mr. Stemple has practiced the fundamental principles of scientific agriculture for a long period of years. He was one of the first in this section to advocate the liberal use of lime and commercial fertilizer, has always diversified his farming by keeping stock, and has made it a point to replace all the elements of fertility taken away by crops and stock, so that his land is getting better every year. As a wheat grower he has kept some interesting records. In the preparation of his ground for wheat he mows the stubble and second growth before plowing then makes liberal application of manure, plows about six inches deep, and has harvested about as high as forty-bushels to the acre.

While his farm and its management has been his chief business Mr. Stemple has interested himself in local affairs, has served as trustee of the Mountain Top school and steadily voted as a democrat since casting his first ballot for Horace Greeley for president in 1872. He is a member of the Lutheran Church.

September 26, 1880, at Aurora, he married Miss Mary Trotter, daughter of James and Elizabeth (Stock) Trotter, and a sister of President Frank B. Trotter of the University of West Virginia. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Stemple were Forrest, Rodney Milton, Grover Dayton, and Mary Elizabeth. Forrest died at the age of six years, and Mary Elizabeth, who finished her education in the Wesleyan College at Marion, Ohio, and the Carnegie Institute of Technology at Pittsburgh. The son Forrest graduated from West Virginia ersity in 1910, took his Master of Science degree in culture at the University of Wisconsin, and was a professor in Ohio State University and West Virginia University, which latter position he resigned on account of his health and is now principal of the Union District School in his home locality. He married Grace Towns, and they have three children, Alice Elizabeth, Mary Ida and David Townsend. Rodney Milton Stemple was born August 26, 1914, when in the midst of a most promising and useful career. He was a graduate of West Virginia University, for some years was employed in an expert capacity by the H. J. Heinz Company, later was with an independent pickle and kraut factory, and was serving as an agent of Berkeley County, West Virginia, when he married Florence Warden, of Connecticut.

David S. Stemple, an older brother of David C. and one of the well known farmer citizens of Preston County, was born March 6, 1844, and in February, 1865, enlisted in Company I of the 17th West Virginia Infantry, under Captain Samuel Holt and Colonel Day, and was in training at several points in West Virginia until the close of the year. He received his discharge July 7, 1865. After he worked as a stove maker in a cooper shop at Amboy, and in a shop just south of Eglon, then became a farmer, and for many years has been active as a farmer. On October 25, 1878, at Oakland, Maryland, he married Alice McCrum, daughter of James and Lydia (Wagner) McCrum, another well known family of Preston County. Stemple was born near Aurora January 20, 1852, and died September 22, 1881. She was the mother of two children: Daisy, wife of Wilbert Gorby, of Oklahoma City, and Chester David, who died in childhood.

O. JAY FLEMING, one of the every-day busy, influential citizens in the life and affairs of Taylor County is O. Jay Fleming, vice president and cashier of the First National Bank of Grafton and member of one of the oldest families in the county. Business and the professions have enlisted the services of several of the later generation of this family, though in pioneer times their interests were almost altogether agrarian.

One of the pioneer of the family in this part of West Virginia was James Fleming, a native of Eastern Virginia. He took up a large area of land in Taylor County, and in the course of his activities and character the village of Fleming was named. His three sons were Patrick, Minor S. Johnson C., and there were also six daughters in his family.

Minor S. Fleming was born in the vicinity of Flemington, devoted his years to the tasks of farming. He married Martha Bartlett, and both are buried at Simpson. They had one son, James B., and the following daughters: Martha, who married James W. Bartlett; Olivett, who married Lewis Windle, a brother of Mrs. James B. Fleming; Mary who married George Dawson; Florence, who married the wife of George Utterback; and Pamelia, who married to Luther Bartlett.

The parents of the Grafton banker are James B. and Elizabeth (Windle) Fleming, now in venerable years, residents at Trapp Springs, Taylor County. The father was born at the Village of Flemington, January 1842, and the latter at Philadelphia January 23, 1845. James B. Fleming at the age of nineteen volunteered in Company F of the Third West Virginia Infantry, and was wounded and captured and held in a Confederate prison. He was under the command of General Franz Sigel, saw service in West Virginia and old Virginia, and in some of the hard battles toward the end of the war. He was discharged after the surrender of Lee, and in subsequent years took an active interest in the Grand Army of the Republic. He is a staunch republican. His life career has been devoted to farming, his prosperity derived chiefly from raising and handling such livestock as cattle and sheep. He and his wife, who are members of the Baptist Church, had the following children: Mary D., of Clarksburg; Minerva, wife of John Cork, of son; O. Jay; Sigel, of Cumberland, Maryland; Minor

S., a merchant at Weston; and Leotia, wife of I. T. Johnson, of Level, West Virginia.

O. Jay Fleming was born November 23, 1869, in the old home community on Gabes Fork between Flemington and Simpson. Between the age of four and ten he lived with his mother's parents near Buckhannon, and while there he first attended a rural school. After returning home he was a pupil in the private school of Professor Colgrove, and at the age of sixteen began teaching, his first school being near Stone House in the Knottsville District. It was his ambition to complete a college and university education, but lack of funds made it necessary for him to be satisfied with something less. For some years he taught in the summer term, attended school in the winter, and also did a season of farm work. In 1892 he graduated in the normal course at Fairmont, and he subsequently taught one term at West Grafton and two terms in the Fetterman School. He resigned in the middle of the second term to go into business as bookkeeper and cashier for Ruhl & Company of Grafton. In 1895 he became office man at Mabie for the McClure-Mabie Lumber Company. In 1899, a little more than a year later, he resigned to become cashier of the Tucker County Bank. This institution was then owned by the First National Bank of Grafton, but when the controlling interest was purchased by the Davis interests it was moved to Elkins, Mr. Fleming going along. While at Elkins he was made treasurer of the Davis Trust Company, the primary purpose of which organization was to handle the estates of Senators Davis and Elkins.

In August, 1902, Mr. Fleming returned to Grafton and became assistant cashier of the First National Bank. Two years later he was made cashier, and since 1919 has also had the duties of vice president. The Grafton Bank, chartered as a state institution in 1873, with $50,000 capital, was succeeded by the First National Bank in 1880, with capital of $57,000, this being subsequently increased to $100,000. Besides paying dividends to the aggregate of almost $500,000, the bank's accumulated surplus is over $330,000. Some of the most prosperous chapters of the bank's history have been written since Mr. Fleming became cashier. Twenty years ago the deposits were about $500,000, total resources about $800,000, and the semi-annual dividend four percent. During the past year or so the bank has paid a semi-annual dividend of ten percent, has deposits averaging over $2,300,000, and total resources of about $3,000,000. The bank has been housed in its present building since 1896, and the business long since outgrew such accommodations. Plans have been completed for the reconstruction of the entire property, including the Parsons Building, also owned by the bank. When remodeled the bank will have a lobby seventy-six feet long, with triple vaults, including a 15-ton circular door safe, a separate cash vault, triple storage vaults, a modern equipped book vault, making in all seven vaults. The vaults will be electrically lined with the delicately constructed electrical appliances of the Bankers Electrical Association, a company that has electrified the vaults of the United States Treasury and several of the Federal Reserve Banks.

Mr. Fleming is a leader in the civic and social as well as the financial life of his home city. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, was one of the organizers of the Rotary Club, and for fifteen years was a member of the Grafton Board of Education, during which period the new high school was planned and built. He is a republican and served with the rank of colonel on the staff of Governor Hatfield. In Masonry he is past officer of the Lodge, Chapter and Commandery, is grand-swordbearer of the Grand Commandery of West Virginia, is a representative of the Grand Commandery of New Hampshire in West Virginia, and in the Scottish Rite has achieved the honor and dignity of the rank of a Thirty-second Knight Commander of the Court of Honor. In December, 1920, he was made Illustrious Potentate of Osiris Temple of the Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling, and is a charter member and director of West Virginia Educational Association of Scottish Rite Masonry. He is also affiliated with the Order of Elks and Moose.

In Taylor County June 16, 1897, he married Miss Florence Kimmel, who was born in Grafton, daughter of S. P. and Henrietta (Carrington) Kimmel. Mr. and Mrs. Fleming have three talented children. Carrie Kathryn graduated at the age of sixteen from the Grafton High School, and in 1920 received her A. B. degree from West Virginia University and is a Phi Beta Kappa honor student. Florence Rosalyn graduated from high school at seventeen and is now a sophomore in the University. Harry Carrington, the only son, was born in 1910, and is in grammar school.

GEORGE R. E. GILCHRIST was born January 8, 1857. His father was a civil engineer and his mother was a daughter of a civil engineer who after the close of the Civil war was engaged by the Government as chief engineer under General Wetzel, in charge of the construction of the Louisville Canal. Both the father and mother died years ago at their son's home.

George R. E. Gilchrist had a sister, Adelaide, who was an artist, and he had a brother, Harry. The sister died unmarried and the brother, likewise, the latter while attending school at the University of Virginia. Both died before their father and mother.

George R. E. Gilchrist received his academic education at the University of Wooster and his education in law at the University of Virginia. He was admitted to practice in West Virginia, at Wheeling, in 1881, and has always lived there. In more than forty years of work he has specialized in corporation, estate and labor union litigation in State and Federal Courts; while in his offices, rooms 600 to 608, making up the sixth floor of the National Bank of West Virginia Building, he has one of the largest individual law libraries to be found in the United States.

George R. E. Gilchrist married in 1883, and of that union three children were born. Ethel, the eldest, unmarried, lives with her parents in Wheeling. Mabel, the second child, is married, and with her husband and the two children born to that union lives at Phoenix, Arizona. Virginia, the third child, died unmarried in 1914, while attending a girl's school near Roanoke.

JAMES REASON SMOOT was one of the ablest men of his time in Preston County, a successful financier, lumberman, farmer, whose tremendous energy and executive ability brought prosperity to many others besides himself and his own family.

The name Smoot figures conspicuously in the Colonial records of America. The founder of the family was William Smoot, an Englishman. He was a man of wealth in England, and before leaving that country he acquired an interest in New World settlement, being granted a patent to lands on the Potomac River at St. Ingecos on June 12, 1646, as the records show. As a non-resident he devoted much of his plantation to the cultivation of tobacco, and when he sought a market for this product outside the nationalist channels of the English sea trade he violated a law and principle that brought him into active conflict with his native country and caused him to leave England with his family and servants and settle on his lands in the Colonies. He added to his wealth and prestige in America, and besides keeping up his large plantation he owned a fleet of vessels for use in the export trade. One of his ships was purchased by Lord Baltimore. On account of his activities in shipping tobacco to other countries in Europe he claimed his share of the "Dutch Crestones," a reward that was in the nature of a subsidy from the Dutch Government to encourage commerce with the Colonies. His evident ability as a man of affairs led to his appointment as one of the appraisers of the estate of Leonard Calvert, and for this act Margaret Brent, who purchased the estate, gave him 2,000 pounds of tobacco. Old records reveal a number of financial transactions with Margaret Brent, indicating the high esteem in which he was held by this lady and wealth and importance. Other records show that he was often in court, either suing or defending a suit, and the judgments were invariably awarded in pounds of tobacco and a hoghead to hold it. If he sued a party who failed to appear in court, the judge found a verdict for him covering the damages and also the time and expense of attending court forty miles from his own home.

The sons of William Smoot were Richard and Thomas, both of whom married sisters of Lieut. Col. William Barton. Among Thomas' children was a son Barton, mentioned in his father's will of date 1704. The name Barton in many of the succeeding generations of the family, and the presence of that name in the Preston County branch strong presumptive evidence, even if there was no other, identify it with the descendants of William Smoot, pioneer.

One branch of the family was established in Hampshire County, Virginia, where John Smoot bought lands in 1704. He and his wife Mary had twelve children, the oldest of whom was Barton, and these children scattered the name all through the western country. Another son, John Smoot, was founder of the Newburg family, and recorded in old Hampshire County show him to have been in Preston County as early as 1835. He settled close to Scotch Hill, purchasing the land upon which Newburg was platted, and he built the first house on the townsite. He was a Barton and is buried on Scotch Hill. His children were Sarah Walker, Henry, William, Minor Barton, Sarah Evans, James Reason, Julia and Harriet.

James Reason Smoot was born in Hampshire County, Virginia, in 1834. March 4, 1854, he married Sarah Howard who became the mother of four children. His second wife was Susan Powell, daughter of John M. Powell (Howard) Powell. The children of this union were three sons and three daughters, the oldest being John Reason Smoot.

James Reason Smoot was born at Newburg in Preston County and was thirteen years of age when his father died, causing the burdens of the family and household to rest upon his shoulders. Consequently there was little time for school, but as a boy he manifested a special genius for hard work and getting things done. In after years, when he was called upon to explain his career as a financier, he said "that to his mother belonged much of the credit for his effective life work, for she was a woman of ability, capacity and rare business acumen." Beginning the battle of life against odds, he worked in boyhood for day wages, and while he had a due amount of pride it did not prevent his doing any manual labor promising an honest dollar. As a youth of eighteen he was pick and shovel man on the digging of the big cut east of Newburg for the Baltimore & Ohio Railway during its construction. He soon acquired a modest capital, permitting him to enter business as a merchant at Independence, but a year later he moved to Newburg, where he established a store and subsequently built up a very extensive trading enterprise.

If any one phase of his business life assumed preponderance it was lumbering. He became one of the big factors in the lumber industry of Preston County, owning and operating three mills in the county and one in another county. The daily cut of these mills at one time reached 45,000 feet. His first mill was established in 1869, and soon sought export connections for his large lumber output, and much of it was shipped to Liverpool, England. Besides his mills he became owner of extensive timber lands in outlying portions of the state and dealt extensively in real estate, owning much property in Newburg, where he built his splendid home. He also owned a number of good farms, did a cattle business on a large scale, and of his farms is the McGrew farm near Kingwood. At Independence he owned and operated steam roller mills and did a large business in flour and grain.

He was a stockholder of the Tunnelton, Kingwood & Fairchance Railway project, was chosen president of Kingwood Coke Company, and during his last years organized the First National Bank of Newburg and elected its president, serving in that capacity until his death in 1905. He not only did things for himself but pointed the way to success of others, was a friend of the ambitious and aspiring youth, and his advice and financial support set many of them on the way to success. He sought his advice on family as well as financial affairs, and he always found a way to help. A man of peace him-ought the aid of courts only when methods of negotiation failed. He was reared in the Primitive Baptist Church, but he and his family attended the Methodist Protestant Church in Newburg, and this house of worship erected on a lot furnished by him and he was a large contributor toward the edifice itself. He provided a home for his mother during her first widowhood, and after the death of her second husband, Zedekiah Waldo, she again lived with him until her death.

Ray Smoot, son of the banker and business man was R. Smoot, has been a worthy representative of his great father. He obtained his early education in the Western Maryland College Preparatory School and soon afterward entered the First National Bank of Newburg. The bank was founded by his father and opened for business in September, 1903, and still retains its original capital of $25,000.00, while its surplus and undivided profits are equal to its capital stock and has paid annual dividends for the year after its founding. Its deposits at the peak of high prices reached $630,000.00. Its officers and directors are: Gordon B. Late, president; D. J. Gibson and W. R. Annan, vice presidents; J. Ray Smoot, cashier; W. Calvert, C. E. Guskey, J. C. Harrington, F. W. Horch and F. Richter.

Ray Smoot became cashier as the successor of Emory Smith, and has been with the institution now for fifteen years.

1909 he married Miss Mary Fromhart, daughter of B. Fromhart. They have three children: James R., Jr., Mary Jane and Walter Thurman. Mr. Smoot is a Knight Templar Mason in the Grafton Commandery, a past noble of Newburg Lodge of Odd Fellows, was reared in the Methodist Protestant Church and for fourteen years has been superintendent of its Sunday School.

GEORGE W. NISWANDER is one of the veteran business men and honored citizens of Parkersburg, where he has lived in his home since the year 1871, and in which he now conducts a substantial wholesale and retail hardware business, with a well equipped establishment at 230-232 Court Street.

He was born in Rockingham County, Virginia, October 21, 1845, and was reared in that county, he is one of the two surviving members of a family of thirteen children born to his parents, Isaac and Elizabeth (Hughes) Niswander, natives of Bridgewater, Virginia. The father's people were from Dutch ancestry, founded in the stone State in the early Colonial period of our national history, while the mother's ancestors were natives of Nelson County, Virginia, for several generations.

George W. Niswander was afforded the advantages of the best of the period, and when the war between the states was precipitated on the nation his youthful loyalty to the federal government prompted him to immediate enlistment, and in 1861, at sixteen, enlisted in R. P. Chew's battery of Erie's brigade, General Stewart's horse artillery. His main applied for front rank service, which was at once rendered the valiant command. Thus Mr. Niswander, still a young man, soon gained full experience in connection with the war combat and took part in many engagements, including a number of the most important and decisive battles of the great conflict between the states, including Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, the Wilderness and others in which his command was involved. In the engagement at Trevilian Station, nine miles south of Gordonsville, Virginia, he was severely wounded. After recuperating partially from his wounds he was assigned to clerical service in the Commissary Department and was thus engaged when the war ended.

Prior to the war Mr. Niswander had served a partial apprenticeship to the miller's trade at Bridgewater, Virginia, and after the close of his military career he engaged in work as a millwright and carpenter. He continued his education in Virginia until April, 1871, when he located in Parkersburg, where he was engaged at the carpenter's trade until 1876. He then accepted a clerkship in the wholesale hardware establishment of W. H. Smith, for many years he was traveling salesman for six years. This position he resigned to accept a position as representative of the wholesale hardware house of Greer & Lang of Wheeling. After ten years' service as such, having rendered himself proficient, surrounded himself with friends and won the confidence of those with whom he met, he organized the firm of G. W. Niswander & Company, and in 1892 purchased the hardware establishment and business of A. G. Jackson & Company. In 1893 he purchased the hardware store of Harry Gould on Court Square, where he has since continued in the wholesale and retail hardware trade, as one of its oldest and most honored business representatives of the city.

Mr. Niswander is an active member of the Parkersburg Chamber of Commerce, is affiliated with Parkersburg Lodge No. 7, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and with Parkersburg Lodge No. 198 of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party, and he and his wife are zealous members of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of whose Official Board he had been an efficient member for thirty years.

Mr. Niswander married Miss Fannie C. Long, likewise a native of Rockingham County, Virginia, in 1867. Her father, Captain John Long, was captain of the Bridgewater Grays in the Confederate service in the war between the states, and was captured and confined in the Federal prison at Hilton's Head, South Carolina, where he died in April, 1865. To this marriage three children were born: Lulu P., the wife of W. C. Plumb, of Parkersburg, West Virginia; Mabel M., the wife of A. L. Thayer, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and George R., of New Haven, Connecticut, who married Flora MacDonald, of that city.

Mrs. Fannie C. Niswander died February 25, 1886, and on the 25th day of October, 1888, Mr. Niswander married Miss Mary Jane Long, the sister of his first wife, with whom he has since lived in their spacious home at No. 1211 Murdock Avenue, Parkersburg, West Virginia.

STEPHEN R. NUHFER, before he reached the years of his majority, had become identified by practical experience with the work of the oil fields, and with his brothers is now owner of extensive equipment and they are directors of a complete organization as drilling contractors. Their business covers a large territory, and for over twenty years Mr. Nuhfer has made his headquarters at Parkersburg.

He was born near Oil City, Venango County, Pennsylvania, December 26, 1867, one of the nine children of Thomas and Mary (Keoberline) Nuhfer. His parents were both of German ancestry and both families came to the United States during the forties and have since been Americans in spirit as well as in deed. Mary Keoberline was born while her parents were crossing the ocean. Thomas Nuhfer was born in Michigan, a son of George Nuhfer. Both Thomas and George Nuhfer were farmers, though Thomas eventually followed the trade of mason in the oil fields of Pennsylvania, and was a well known citizen in the western part of that state. He held the office of school director.

Stephen R. Nuhfer acquired a practical, common school education. At the age of nineteen he went to work in the oil fields, and his business has become a highly specialized one in contracting for the drilling of both oil and gas wells. His first operations in West Virginia were in Doddridge and Wetzel counties, but since 1897 he has had his business headquarters and home at Parkersburg. Subsequently he was joined by his brothers Philip G. and Joseph A., and as a firm they have had contracts for some of the largest companies operating in the eastern fields.

Mr. Nuhfer otherwise has a prominent part in the industrial and commercial life of Parkersburg. He is treasurer of the Parkersburg Machine Company, treasurer of the Parkersburg Mattress Company, president of the Parkersburg Builders Material Company, vice president of the McKain Fishing Tool Company, and president of the Pollard Boiler Works. He is a Catholic and in politics votes independently.

In 1897 Mr. Nuhfer married Mary Benninger, of Brady, Pennsylvania. Of the four children born to their marriage

Joseph died in infancy, and the three living are Leo R., Thelma Mary and Francis F.

RALPH MASON HITE is a doctor of dental surgery, and has practiced that profession at Mannington for seventeen years. He is one of the popular citizens of Marion County. He represents one of the old and honored names in West Virginia and was born at Grafton, Taylor County, October 26, 1882, son of Thomas R. and Katherine (Mason) Hite and grandson of George W. Hite. Doctor Hite is a graduate of the high school of Cameron, West Virginia, also of Linsly Institute at Wheeling, and he then entered the Baltimore College of Dentistry, where he was graduated D. D. S. in 1905. Immediately after leaving college Doctor Hite located at Mannington, and has been steadily in practice here, building up a reputation second to none among the dentists of Marion County. He is a member of the West Virginia State Dental Association and in 1912 was appointed a member of the West Virginia State Board of Dental Examiners. He was re-appointed in 1916 and again in 1921.

Doctor Hite is affiliated with Mannington Lodge No. 388, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Mannington Lodge, Knights of Pythias, is a charter member of Mannington Kiwanis Club, is a Presbyterian and a republican. He married in 1908 Miss Gypsy Prichard, daughter of A. L. Prichard, of Mannington. They are the parents of three children: Mary Prichard, born June 9, 1909, now a high school student; Thomas Arthur, born November 6, 1911; and Ralph Mason, Jr., born July 2, 1913.

EDWARD BATES FRANZHEIM. The record made by Mr. Franzheim in the profession of architecture is exemplified at many points throughout the Ohio Valley besides his home City of Wheeling. Mr. Franzheim is one of the very popular citizens of Wheeling, a man of versatile gifts, of high public spirit, and only a great devotion to his profession has prevented him from securing recognition in other fields.

Mr. Franzheim was born at Wheeling July 20, 1866, son of George William and Mary Ann (Hornung) Franzheim. His mother was a native of Allentown, Pennsylvania. Her father came of a long line of musicians and writers in Germany, and was brought over from Heidelberg to take up professional work as an educator at Philadelphia. Mr. Franzheim's father, George William Franzheim, was one of the notable men of Wheeling during the last century. He was born in Germany, of a family that at different times had held important Government positions in the Department of Forestry. George W. Franzheim was six years of age when his family came to America, and after a period of schooling he took up grape culture and the manufacture of native wine, an industry which he developed to be one of the largest plants in the country at that time. The large stone arched cellars used in wine manufacture attracted many visitors. He held many important positions in the State of West Virginia, and was one of the commissioners to build the capitol at Wheeling and was also a regent of the State University.

Edward Bates Franzheim attended Linsly Institute at Wheeling, Chauncy Hall at Boston, and had private tutoring under Professor John M. Burch and professors from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He later studied under John H. Sturgis, a noted Boston architect, and remained with him for six years, until the death of Mr. Sturgis. This long course of training was supplemented by travel and study abroad in Europe.

After the death of Mr. Sturgis in 1892 Mr. Franzheim returned to Wheeling and opened an office as an architect. The City of Wheeling itself contains numerous examples of his work as an architect and designer, and he has designed and erected many notable buildings in other cities as well. Mr. Franzheim was architect for the Court Theater in Wheeling, erected in 1901, and he was then selected to manage the theater for five years. His management laid the foundation for the Court's great fame as a local playhouse. Prior to that time and also during the period Mr. Franzheim was director of the noted local "Players Club," which produced many notable plays, and in these productions Mr. Franzheim usually took leading roles. work on the stage attracted more than local attention, he was offered opportunities to take up work with leading New York managers. While these offers were tempting and attractive, Mr. Franzheim felt that his vocation was in architecture, and he has been satisfied with only an amateur's role on the stage. However, he has written several plays.

Mr. Franzheim has held the office of director at different times in a number of corporations and institutions. He has been an independent voter since the Palmer and Bucknall campaign of 1896. In that year he took a leading part in behalf of the republican candidate, and was personally thanked by Major McKinley for the assistance given him. Mr. Franzheim is a member and has held the high offices in Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling, is a Knight Templar in the Order of Masons and is a past exalted ruler of the Elks. He is a member of the Larch Club of New York, the Southern Society of New York, the Fort Henry Club and Country Club at Wheeling, the West Virginia Society of Architects and the American Institute of Architects.

At Wheeling, November 1, 1905, he married May Whit daughter of John and Katherine McKernan Whitty.

J. A. EVERLY. Happy is the man who finds his joy and duties within his home neighborhood and makes his work a matter of increasing satisfaction to himself as service to the community. Such has been true of J. A. Everly, of Kingwood, former county assessor of Preston County, and in earlier years a teacher and merchant.

Mr. Everly was born at Herring in Valley District March 8, 1872. He comes of a family that established its home in Preston County in pioneer days. His great-grandfather and two brothers left Germany and eventually found the way to Preston County, where they became farmers at where two of them established homes in Grant District. The grandfather of J. A. Everly was Peter Everly, a native of Grant District, who subsequently moved to Valley District, where he reared his family and was a substantial farmer. He married Miss Brannon, and one of their children was Absalom Everly. Absalom Everly was born in Valley District August 5, 1839, and as a young man enlisted in Company C of the Third West Virginia, and for more than three years was a brave and faithful soldier in the Army of the Potomac. Like many men who perform their duty in those days of warfare he was reticent in regard to his army experiences and seldom talked of them except when among old comrades. In one battle a rifle he passed through his left thigh, and he was one of the prisoners of the war. After coming out of the army he devoted himself to farming, and reached the age of seventy-eight. He married Sarah Jane Carroll, who was born in the same community as her husband. The Carrolls were an old family there. Her father was James M. Carroll and her mother was a Burke. Sarah Jane Carroll was born January 27, 1840, and died March 14, 1900. She was mother of the following children: Roy C. M., a farmer near Uniontown, Pennsylvania; William T. S., of Kingwood; Ed C., former county clerk and a resident of Kingwood; Mrs. Cora Calvert, of Morgantown; J. Ami; James J. D. who died February 1, 1905, in Monongalia County; Olive M., a dairyman at Morgantown; Mary E., wife of John McCreary, of Monongalia County; Foster K., a steamboat engineer out of Pittsburgh. All these children were brought up in the faith of Methodism, which their father and mother practiced.

J. Ami Everly grew up on his father's farm, attended the local schools, spent one winter at the Kingwood school and spent some time in the summer normal there. Beginning at the age of eighteen, he taught for eight years in country districts and for two years of that time he was master of the Long Hollow School, where he himself had learned his early lessons. When he had finished his last year at Long Hollow he turned to commercial lines, and at Kingwood spent two years as a clerk in a drug store another two years with John H. Garner, and for several years was associated with the veteran steamboat merchant mes A. Lenhart. Following this he entered the service of the Tri-State Lumber Company, being bookkeeper of the mill and manager of the store and finally superintendent of the plant. After almost three years in the lumber business he joined the Coffman-Fisher Company at Howesville, but was soon transferred to Albright, and he only left this service after four years to perform his elective duties at the court house in Kingwood.

Mr. Everly was a candidate for the nomination for county assessor at the republican primaries in the spring of 1916, contesting the nomination against five competitors. He was nominated and in November was given the largest majority on the ticket. He had been a regular party worker for a number of years, though never a candidate for office, and his candidacy was the convincing proof of a great personal popularity. Mr. Everly entered the assessor's office as successor to E. B. Hauber, and handled the responsibilities capably four years. Before the expiration of his term he was appointed campaign manager for Preston County in the campaign of 1920. In that year of general republican triumph he set a new record for the party in Preston County, since never before had the county set so large a number of votes and never before had a publican ticket received such a handsome majority. Since leaving the court house Mr. Everly has been in business. For a time he sold the Ford car, but is now a traveling representative for the John S. Naylor Company of Wheeling.

In Preston County December 24, 1899, Mr. Everly married Miss Lilly May Wolfe. They have three children: Paul D., a graduate of the Kingwood High School and was a student in the University of West Virginia; Mary E., who graduated from high school in 1921 and is attending the West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buckhannon; and John Donald, a pupil in the grade schools at Kingwood. Mrs. Everly represents one of the oldest families in this section of West Virginia, established here by a branch of Pennsylvania Dutch. Her great-grandfather, Philip Wolfe, is probably born in Preston County, and lived out his life in the eastern part of the county as a farmer. He was buried near Fellowsville. His son, Jonas J. Wolfe, was a rich and industrious farmer in Reno District. He married Margaret Barbara Bolyard, and among their sons were John W., Daniel M., Hezekiah, Charles, Philip M., William and Henry M., while the two daughters were Rhoda, who married Henry Combes, and Alice, who became the wife of John W. Wolfe. Of this family John W. Wolfe is a Union soldier in the Civil war, was wounded in the battle of Winchester, and after the war he and his brothers Philip and Henry moved West and settled in Nebraska.

Hezekiah Wolfe, father of Mrs. Everly, was born in Reno District January 12, 1847, was a teacher in early life, and after his marriage settled on a farm in Union District, where he lived until his death on February 19, 1920. His wife was Mary Jane Beatty, who was born at Salt Lick, Preston County, daughter of Thomas and Eve (Lantz) Beatty. Hezekiah Wolfe and wife had thirteen children, nine of whom reached mature years: Charles W., Felix E., Mrs. Lilly M. Everly, Susan M., deceased wife of G. W. Nease; David F., of Morgantown; Elizabeth, wife of C. E. Appleton, of Cumberland, Maryland; Rachel, Mrs. Fred Sey, of Keyser, West Virginia; Albert L.; and Priscilla, who became the wife of Lawrence Jones and is now deceased.

MONONGALIA COUNTY JUVENILE HOME. The County Commissioners of Monongalia County established a Juvenile Detention Home on May 1, 1918. Children are committed to this institution through the authority of Judge Zelle of Morgantown, and he exercises a general responsibility over the institution, which, in effect, is an adjunct of the judicial office. The present property was acquired by the commissioners in December, 1919, and the home was opened here July 1, 1920. It is located three miles north of Morgantown. In the meantime quarters had been obtained in a rented house. At the removal there were twenty-one inmates, and forty-nine were kept during the winter of 1920. There are accommodations for a hundred, and the average so far has been about forty. These are dependent children, from infancy to those about grown. Surrounding the home is about thirteen acres of ground, located on the Stewartstown Road. The county has so far expended about twelve thousand dollars on this institution. The farm is well stocked with fruit.

The matron of the detention home is Mrs. F. M. Harris, who has given practically her entire life to educational work. She was for thirty years a teacher in Mason County, and had been matron of the Montgomery Preparatory School for six years when she was called to Morgantown to supervise the establishment of the Men's Hall at the University, and was in charge of the Woman's Hall on the campus until chosen to her present duties. In the Detention Home she conducts a school, teaching all the subjects from the first to the eighth grade, the same course as laid down for public schools and following the State Manual.

Mrs. Harris was born in Mason County, West Virginia, and her maiden as well as her married name is Harris. She began teaching at the age of seventeen, and after the death of her husband resumed that vocation as a means of supporting herself and children and also as the true exercise of her God given talents for service. She has a No. 1 certificate. Mrs. Harris is the mother of three children: Willie B., wife of Dr. H. A. Walkup, of Mount Hope, West Virginia; Edward E., a photographer at Morgantown; and Ernest M., a druggist who lives with his mother. Mrs. Harris also directs the general work both in and outside the home, using the garden plot not only for the purpose of growing vegetables, but as a means of training the boys to farming operations. The girls learn housework and are taught both plain and the finer technique of sewing and needlework.

Dr. Esther A. Woodward, the eminent psychologist, at one time spent two days at the Detention Home. An opinion she expressed was that "as other such institutions should be started the matrons should spend two weeks with Mrs. Harris before assuming their duties." Mrs. Harris has the experience and professional qualifications for this office, and even more, her heart and soul are enthusiastically enlisted in what represents one of the important auxiliary establishments of philanthropic enterprise in the state.

HARRY A. HIGGINS. One of the prosperous smaller towns of Monongalia County is Star City, down the Monongahela River, three miles north of Morgantown. It is located in a mining and industrial district. One of its popular citizens is Harry A. Higgins, who is now postmaster and also a merchant there.

Mr. Higgins was born in Marshall County, West Virginia, February 13, 1885, son of Chester K., a native of the same county but now a resident of Cleveland, Ohio. Harry A. Higgins had a common school education, and at the age of thirteen became a boy worker in the glass industry. He was in that work and trade for eight years, and spent three years as a practical coal miner along the Monongahela River.

June 29, 1920, he took the office of postmaster at Star City. The business of the office has been tremendously increased within the last two or three years, and on April 1, 1921, the office was advanced to third class. Since he became postmaster the number of boxes has increased from 147 to 243, and more are in demand. In connection with the post office Mr. Higgins conducts a confectionery store.

At the age of twenty-two he married Minnie O. Brewer, of Star City, daughter of George Brewer. They have five children, Thelma May, George Everett, Ethel Rosella, Floyd Herman and Harry Kenneth.

EDGAR W. GARLOW. The Garlow family was part of the first tide of civilization that swept over the Alleghany Mountains into the Ohio River Valley in the years preceding the Revolutionary war. They have had their home in Monongalia County for a century and a half. From here various members have scattered to other states, some have been in the professions, while Edgar W. Garlow represents the traditional occupation, farming and stock raising and still owns the old Garlow homestead, which was located by one of his ancestors prior to the Revolution. His home is in Cass District, and, while he owns the old Garlow estate, his residence is on the Lazelle farm, situated on a small run in a rugged section characteristic of all the surrounding country.

Mr. Garlow was born on the original Garlow farm, on Crooked Run, nine miles north of Morgantown, October 3, 1868. The founder of the family in West Virginia was Christopher Garlow, who probably lived at some time in New Jersey, and came over the mountains to Western Virginia from Maryland, settling on Crooked Run in Cass District about 1772. He lived there during the Revolution, and his home was subjected to Indian attack. One of his sons was killed in the War of 1812. The next generation was represented by Andrew Garlow, a native of New Jersey, who spent his active life as a farmer and stock raiser on Crooked Run in Monongalia County. Christopher Garlow was probably the first settler in the Crooked Run neighborhood. His will is dated in 1796. His farm, now owned by Edgar W., has never changed ownership out of the direct family line. A son of Andrew and the grandfather of Edgar W. Garlow was Ephraim Garlow, who married Jane Miller. He reared two sons, Josiah and William Edgar. The latter is now living in Nebraska, past eighty years of age. Josiah Garlow acquired the old homestead and spent his life there. He died at the age of seventy-eight. His wife, Mary Eliza Davis, died young, leaving twin sons, Edgar W. and Ezra C. Ezra is a graduate of West Virginia University, a civil engineer by profession, and since 1893 has had his home at Alliance, Ohio. Ephraim Garlow was a strict democrat in politics all his life, but his son Josiah cast his first vote for Lincoln and continued as a republican, and in that political faith his son Edgar has followed.

Edgar W. Garlow was reared and educated in the old home community and has devoted his time and efforts to farming, particularly stock raising, to which the land of this locality is particularly adapted. On his farm is a vein of the Pittsburgh coal, but it has not yet been worked out.

At the age of twenty-three Mr. Garlow married Mary Elizabeth Haines, whose home was a few miles distant, in Greene County, Pennsylvania. They have two children, both at home, Elsie Marie, a graduate of high school, and Melvin Christopher.

CLYDE O. LAW. The Law family has been one of prominence in West Virginia for several generations. Men of this name have figured in agriculture, the various professions, and the name today is one of the most significant in the pure bred livestock industry of the state. Mr. Clyde O. Law is a resident of Wheeling and has exhibited a special genius in the field of insurance. He is general agent for State of West Virginia representing the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company.

Mr. Law was born at the Village of Lawford in Ritchie County, West Virginia, October 14, 1883. His grandfather, Asby Law, was a native of Harrison County, West Virginia, was a farmer and minister of the Methodist Church, and was held in the highest esteem in his community in Ritchie County. Some years later, when a post office was established there, it was the suggestion of his son Martin Luther Law, who became the first postmaster, that the post office department should call it Lawford, in honor of this pioneer farmer and minister. Asby Law married Deborah Gaston, a native of Harrison County, who died at Lawford. Asby Law died at the age of forty-five, during Civil war times, and his wife subsequently became the wife of Phineas Bartlett.

Martin Luther Law was born January 2, 1858, and has always lived in the Lawford community. He has some very extensive interests there as a farmer and livestock man, and he and his sons and other associates have developed what is probably the finest herd of Hereford cattle in the state. As noted above, he was the first postmaster of Lawford, and for a number of years has been a member of the local school board. He has always been prominent in local republican politics, being a delegate to various state and county conventions, but has never actively sought an office for himself. He is one of the leading members of the Methodist Church in his home town, and Ritchie County places him among her most substantial citizens. Martin L. Law married Mida McKinley, who was born at Pullman in Ritchie County November 26, 1862. Clyde O. Law is the oldest of their six children. Lura is the wife of Carl Reger an architect at Morgantown. Verner V., a resident of Jane Lew, West Virginia, has made a great reputation in the pure bred Hereford cattle industry, and is manager of the Law & Roberts Company, which owns the largest herd of Herefords in the state. Verner Law had technical training in agriculture and animal husbandry at the University of West Virginia. He is president of the Harrison County Farm Bureau. Russell Lowell, the fourth child, is associated with his brother Clyde in business at Wheeling, is a graduate in agriculture from West Virginia University, and during the World war was a first lieutenant and assigned to duty training recruits. He is a stockholder and director in the Law & Roberts Hereford Company. The two youngest children were Glenn G., who died at the age of eighteen months, and Velmah, a member in the senior class in West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buckhannon.

Clyde O. Law attended the public schools of his native town, and in 1905 graduated from the Buckhannon Seminary, now West Virginia Wesleyan College, and he continued his college work there, receiving his Bachelor of Science degree in 1909. During 1905-06 he was a teacher under the Indian Bureau of the School of Creek Indians in old Indian Territory. In 1909-11 he was principal of schools at Clarksburg, West Virginia. Mr. Law spent two years in Harvard University School of Business Administration, specializing in the subject of insurance, and he graduated in 1913 with the degree M. B. A. He had the prize thesis on the subject of life insurance, and it was accorded special and honorable mention.

Mr. Law began his practical work in the insurance profession at Clarksburg, where he was district agent for the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company until January 1, 1920. The splendid record he made while there brought him promotion to a state general agency and his removal to Wheeling, where he also has under his jurisdiction the adjacent Ohio counties of Belmont and Jefferson. Mr. Law has had a business partnership with George Paul Roberts since May 1, 1915, the title of their firm being Law & Roberts, general agency of the Northwestern Life Insurance Company, with offices in the Wheeling Steel Corporation Building.

Mr. Law is also a director and treasurer of the Law & Roberts Hereford Company, is a director in the Concrete Steel Bridge Company of Clarksburg, and a director in the Roberts Oil Company. He is a trustee of West Virginia Wesleyan College, being the first lay graduate to be chosen for that office. He is a member of the Wheeling Chamber of Commerce, is president of the West Virginia University writers Association, has been president of the Alumni Association of West Virginia Wesleyan College, is a republican, and a member of the official board of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

June 24, 1914, at Harrisville, West Virginia, Mr. Law married Miss Maude Lininger, daughter of John H. and Dora (Heaton) Lininger, the latter now deceased. Her father is cashier of the People's Bank of Harrisville. Mrs. Law was also a student in West Virginia Wesleyan College, and completed her training in Wooster College of Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Law have three children: Helen, born October 23, 1916; John Martin, born August 25, 1918; and Marjory, born October 20, 1920.

JAMES MILLER has lived in the Kingwood community of Preston County seventy years. As a boy he worked on the farm, later became a coal miner, operating on a modest scale, then resumed farming, and finally gave up the responsibilities of farm life to engage in merchandising at Kingwood, where he is still active in the citizenship.

He was born three miles west of Kingwood, July 19, 1851. His grandfather, James Miller, was a weaver by trade, an occupation he learned and followed at Mother-

Clyde O. Law

Scotland, until 1847, when he brought his family to the United States and established his home near Kingwood. He and his wife, Elizabeth Brownlee, died and were buried at Cameron, West Virginia. Their children were: John, who was a merchant at Cameron and later moved to Keyser, West Virginia, and died in Pennsylvania; James, who served the railroad service of the Baltimore & Ohio and was killed when a young man by falling off a train near Melinton; William M.; Mary, who became the wife of James Cunningham; Mrs. Grace White; Mrs. Jane Beverley; and Margaret, who was married to William McFarland.

The father of James Miller of Kingwood was William Miller, who came with the family to the United States in Scotland. Later he became a foreman of construction and one of the trusted men in the service of the well-known contractor, John Humbard, for whom he worked many years. He was foreman of construction during the building of the Sand Patch tunnel on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. Subsequently he went to Brazil as foreman for John Humbard, and spent seven and a half years in that country on tunnel work near Rio de Janeiro. He was sent during the Civil war, but finally the South American climate undermined his health, and he died in 1873, soon after his return to the United States. William M. Miller married Elizabeth Turner, daughter of Alexander Turner. He was born in Preston County and lived to the age of sixty-five, passing away February 21, 1919. She reared two children: James and Elizabeth. The latter became the wife of James Wolfe and died in Preston County. James Miller spent his boyhood in the woods around his old home near Kingwood, attended a few terms of school, and assisted his father in cultivating the homestead. He thus learned farming and also did coal mining. For about twenty years was active in the coal business as a miner and also hauled the product to market. In this manner he kept up his farm at the same time, and finally gave it his exclusive attention. He still owns the homestead of his parents, but about eight years ago gave up its cultivation and has since been engaged in general merchandising at West Kingwood.

Mr. Miller has never been an aspirant for office, is a democrat, but has not a consecutive voting record, since politics has made no appeal to him. Mr. Miller married Miss Amanda Wolfe, of Preston County, daughter of William and Lucinda (Sidelwell) Wolfe. She was born January 20, 1855, and was reared near Fellowsville in Preston County. The other children of her parents were Walter, Will, James, Frank, Laura (wife of William Griffith), and Mrs. Mary Hyres. Mr. and Mrs. Miller have six children: William O., a coal operator at Kingwood; Harley P. of Morgantown; Arthur Ray, of Kingwood; Ross Franklin, on the home farm; Ada May, wife of Henry H. Galloway, of Kingwood; and Emma Grace, wife of George Spring, of Kingwood. Besides these children Mr. and Mrs. Miller have a number of grandchildren: Two by the marriage of their son William to Alice May Smith; three, the child of Harley P. and Carrie (Stone) Miller; a granddaughter by the marriage of their son Ross Franklin to Miss Brown; three children of Mrs. Ridgeway; and one daughter of Mrs. Herring.

WILLIAM H. EVERLY, of Masontown, is one of the youngest surviving veterans of the Civil war. He was in the Union service in the closing days of the rebellion and was on the frontier of the far West fighting Indians. The last century since the war he has spent as a farmer.

His grandfather was a native of Ireland, and he and his father came from that country and not long after the close of the Revolutionary war and settled in West Virginia, the grandfather in the Pisgah community of Preston County, while the brother located below Morgantown on the Monongahela River. The grandfather spent the rest of his life as a farmer in Grant District of Preston County, and his father was laid to rest on his home farm. He was twice married, his children, all by his first wife, being: Peter, whose record is given below; Lewis, who spent his life in Preston County; Joseph, who lived in the vicinity of Terra Alta; William and Henry, who went to one of the states east of the Mississippi and lived out their lives there; Julia Ann, who became the wife of Tine Wolfe and died in the Pisgah community; Mrs. Sallie Cale, who remained throughout her life in Preston County; Nancy, who became the wife of John Smith and spent her years at Terra Alta, where she is buried.

Peter Everly was born in the Pisgah locality, near Hudson, on the old Everly farm, now the Galloway farm. He acquired a subscription school education, attending a log schoolhouse with big wood fireplace, slab benches and greased paper for window lights. He too was a Union soldier. Early in the war he joined the Third Maryland Infantry as a private, and was taken prisoner by the Confederates at Harpers Ferry, but was paroled instead of being sent to prison. His parole did not prevent his taking up arms again, and he had finished his term of enlistment and was discharged before the war ended. After the war Peter Everly resumed life as a farmer in his native community, and was known as a man of special industry and honor, though never active in public affairs beyond voting the republican ticket and for his active service in the Methodist Episcopal Church. He helped build the Friendship Schoolhouse, where religious meetings were also held.

Peter Everly married Margaret Brandon. Her father, William Brandon, was a school teacher in the Hudson community of Preston County and is buried at Brandonville, an old village named in honor of the family. Mrs. Peter Everly, who was born at Pisgah, died when about seventy and is buried at Masontown. Peter Everly survived his wife and lived to be nearly a hundred years of age, and at his death was laid beside his faithful companion. Their children were: Senath Ann, who married Jehu Taylor and spent her life near the Robe Post Office and is buried in the Cale Cemetery in Valley District; Absolom, who was a Union soldier in the Third West Virginia Infantry from 1861 to 1864, was wounded at Cloyd Mountain, and after the war spent his life on a farm and is buried at Morgantown; Albert, who died before the beginning of the Civil war; John G., who was a Union soldier in the Fourth Cavalry, and after serving out his term returned to his farm and died near Rohr and was laid to rest in the Cale Cemetery; William Henry; Mary Jane, who is the wife of Aaron Shaffer and lives near Friendship Schoolhouse; Caroline was the wife of William Taylor and died at Rohr; Hosea is a stock dealer at Terra Alta.

William H. Everly was born near Pisgah November 16, 1846. He attended schools very much like those in which his father acquired his education, and he also has vivid recollections of the slab bench, the old fireplace, and the hickory withe. He was still a schoolboy when his thoughts became diverted by the war, and in the spring of 1864, before he was eighteen, he enlisted in the Sixth West Virginia Cavalry, under Capt. John Summerville. He was in service with his regiment in the Shenandoah Valley and around the Federal Capital, doing night patrol duty, and among other skirmishes was at Moorefield. In the spring of 1865 his regiment was sent to Kansas to put down a threatened Indian outbreak. The troops took the train at Parkersburg for Cincinnati, thence on to St. Louis, where they were transferred to the Mollie Dozier, a Missouri River boat, for Kansas City. After eight days from St. Louis they reached Kansas City, and thence proceeded westward over the plains to Fort Kearney, Nebraska, to Julesburg, Colorado, Fort Laramie, Wyoming, and then to Fort Casper, where they went into winter quarters. Twice they were attacked by the Indians, who were repelled without difficulty. In the spring of 1866 the regiment was ordered home, marching back to the Missouri River at Fort Leavenworth, and thence by train to Chicago and on to Wheeling, West Virginia, where they were mustered out.

William H. Everly after more than three years of service reached home on the last day of May, 1866. He immediately resumed farming as his vocation, and that has been the object of his industrious efforts ever since.

In Preston County he married Louisa Shaffer. She died, leaving five children: Lura L., wife of Nester Molisee, Sylvester Ward, Samuel Wakeman, Ivy Pearl and Addie Blanche. For his second wife Mr. Everly married Laurara Shaffer, a cousin of his first wife. She died in September, 1920, leaving five children: James Franklin, Asabel Dell, Isa Pearl (wife of Jacob Radabaugh), Tarlton Ashby and Mrs. Effie Lustella Cutright.

CALVIN MAY CLELLAND, M. D. As a physician and surgeon Doctor Clelland is well and favorably known in two counties, Harrison, where he practiced thirty years, and in Marion, where he established himself at Fairview in 1911.

Doctor Clelland was born on a farm in Lincoln District, Marion County, September 5, 1858, son of John and Eliza Ann (Clayton) Clelland. His father was born at Barricksville, near Fairmont, in 1830, and was killed in a railroad accident in 1894. The grandfather of Doctor Clelland was Patrick Clelland, who was also born in the vicinity of Fairmont. The great-grandfather and pioneer of the family in West Virginia was James Clelland, a native of Ireland. As a young man he came to America as member of the British Army to fight the Colonies in their struggle for independence. When the opportunity came he deserted from the forces of the King and joined the Colonial Army and fought until the close of the Revolution. Probably his name was originally spelled McClelland, but when he left the army he dropped the Mc. For his services the United States gave him a tract of land situated back of the present City of Fairmont, and he settled there not long after leaving the army. He married a Pierpont, of the same family as Governor Pierpont, the war governor of West Virginia. The mother of Doctor Clelland, Eliza Ann Clayton, was born in Marion County in 1842, and is now a resident of Fairmont. Her father, William Clayton, was born at Paw Paw Creek in Marion County, son of Lyttle Clayton, who was also a Revolutionary soldier and a pioneer in that section of West Virginia. The Clellands and Claytons have been progressively identified with the farming interests of this section of the state for four or five generations.

As the oldest grandchild Dr. Calvin May Clelland when a year old was taken to the home of his paternal grandparents and reared there on their farm to young manhood. In the mean time he attended the district schools, the Fairmont State Normal School, and soon afterward began the study of medicine. He graduated M. D. from the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore in 1881, and in the same year began practice in Harrison County, where he remained for thirty years. In 1911 he moved to Fairview, Marion County, where his long experience and abilities have commanded for him a continued success as a physician and surgeon.

Doctor Clelland is also interested in politics as a democrat, though not an office seeker. He is a member of the Marion County, West Virginia State and American Medical associations, and is affiliated with the Order of Elks, Knights of Pythias and Odd Fellows.

Doctor Clelland in 1882 married Alice Robinson, of Harrison County, daughter of Wesley Robinson. She died in 1884, leaving no children. Doctor Clelland married in 1885 Hattie Lynch, of Harrison County, daughter of Isaac Lynch. Doctor and Mrs. Clelland have four children: Walter R., now a resident of Mannington, married Lillian White, and they have a family of seven children, named Harriet, Lydia, Calvin H., Eloise, Mary, George and John. The second child, Mary A., is now manager of the Western Union Telegraph Office at Connellsville, Pennsylvania. Bertie is the widow of Scott Ingram. Isaac H., the youngest, married Artie Barker, and they have a daughter, Mary Jane.

REV. ISAAC A. BARNES, D. D. The excellent standard of the public school system of Marion County is being admirably upheld and advanced under the administration of Mr. Barnes as county superintendent of schools in this, his native county. He was born on the old homestead farm of the Barnes family in Pleasant Valley, Union District, this county, and the date of his nativity was August 2, 1857. He is a son of Isaac N. and Margaret O. (Holland) Barnes, and the names of both families have been long and worthily identified with the history of what is now the State of West Virginia. The Barnes family branch, of which the subject of this review is a scion, has been on of prominence and influence in England for many generations, and the original progenitors in America came to this country in 1623, one or more of the number settling in Massachusetts and others in Virginia, of which latter line the subject of this sketch is a representative. William Barnes, great-grandfather of him, whose name initiates this article, came from the George's Creek District of Maryland and settled in what is now Marion County, West Virginia prior to the year 1782. He was a millwright, and prior to this removal had owned and operated a grist mill on George's Creek, Maryland. He established one of the first mills in what is now Marion County. Here for several years this progressive ancestor ground the corn for the pioneer settlers of this section. Mary (Marietta) Barnes, the wife of William Barnes, was of German ancestry and had received superior education, and it is supposed that she was a member of the family in whose honor the City of Marietta, Ohio, was named. Official records in the State of Maryland show that on the 22d of January, 1777, William Barnes enlisted in the company commanded by Capt. James Pendleton and entered service as a patriot soldier in the War of the Revolution.

Abraham Barnes, eighth son of William the pioneer, was born in Marion County, October 13, 1784, and was here reared under the conditions and influences of the frontier. He contributed his aid to the development and general work of the old homestead farm in the Tygart Valley, and as a young man he married Miss Mary Ann Hall, daughter of Jordan Hall, of Pleasant Valley, this county. Mrs. Barnes passed to the life eternal on the 4th of June 1865, and her husband was one of the venerable and honored pioneer citizens of Marion County at the time of his death, July 25, 1872. He was one of the charter members of the First Presbyterian Church of Fairmont.

Isaac Newton Barnes, son of Abraham and Mary Ann (Hall) Barnes, was born on his father's farm in Pleasant Valley, September 24, 1823. As a young man he utilized team and wagon belonging to his father in the hauling of merchandise from Pittsburgh to Clarksburg and Fairmont, prior to the construction of railroads in this section. On one of these overland freighting trips of the early days he passed the night at the home of Allen Holland, a farmer near Smithtown, and that Miss Margaret O., daughter of his host, made distinct and favorable impression on the young man is evident, when it is stated that two years later their marriage was solemnized. Mr. Barnes became one on the substantial exponents of farm industry in Marion County, and also found much demand for his service as a skilled veterinary surgeon. His death occurred March 20, 1880, and his widow survived him by more than a score of years, she having passed away on the 7th of July, 1904.

Isaac A. Barnes, son of Isaac N. and Margaret O. (Holland) Barnes, supplemented the discipline of the public schools by attending the State Normal School at Fairmont, the University of West Virginia, the Westminster Theological Seminary at Westminster, Maryland, and Kansas City University, from which last named institution he received his degree of Bachelor of Philosophy, as also the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity. After his ordination to the ministry of the Methodist Protestant Church, Doctor Barnes gave twenty-two years of earnest pastoral service as a member of the West Virginia Conference, of which conference he was secretary five years and president one year. He organized a mission at Weston, Lewis County, and erected the first church building at that place. He also organized the Methodist Protestant Church in the Village of Watson, Marion County. The list of his various pastoral charges in the West Virginia Conference is here briefly recorded: Harrisville (two terms), Newburg, Grafton, Morgantown, St. Marys and Spencer. In each of these larges his pastoral administration was characterized by Christian stewardship and progressive policies, his work having been of the best constructive order and having secured both spiritual and temporal prosperity in his various parishes. In 1901 Doctor Barnes was transferred to the Pittsburgh Conference, after having accepted a call to the pastorate of the Second Methodist Protestant Church in the City of Pittsburgh. Within his four years' pastorate that historic old church its membership was increased by 100 per cent, and the salary 50 per cent.

After forty years of zealous and able service in the ministry Doctor Barnes shows no desire to abate his labors on behalf of his fellow men, and continues his labors as president of the Divine Master. He served two years as president of the West Virginia Christian Endeavor Union, and in this capacity presided over the greatest Christian Endeavor convention ever held in the state. Before entering the ministry, and for short intervals since, Doctor Barnes has taught in the public schools of his native state. In 1921 he was president of the Board of Education of the Union District of Marion County. On the 27th of November, 1920, he was appointed county superintendent of schools for Marion County, to fill out the unexpired term of the regular incumbent, who had resigned, and this term will expire July 1, 1923. He is discharging the duties of this office with characteristic energy and ability.

On June 16, 1880, was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Barnes and Miss Margaret A. Linn, daughter of Robert and Rachel (Hull) Linn, of Bentons Ferry, Marion County. Concerning the children of this union, brief data is given in conclusion of this review: Lena L., born September 17, 1881, died October 19, 1892. Fred N., born October 7, 1882, was for two years a student of mechanical engineering in the University of West Virginia, thereafter took a course in a business college at Pittsburgh, and for a number of years he was in the employ of telephone companies, including his service, 1910-11, as superintendent of the telephone company at Maquokette, Iowa. After returning to West Virginia he held a clerical position in the offices of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad until August, 1918, when he enlisted in the United States Marine Corps, in which he served until December, 1919, he having been stationed most of the time on the island of Haiti. He is now in the railway mail service. In October, 1920, he married Rena Durritt, of Fairmont, and they have one son, Dale Nelson, born on the 6th of August, 1921. Frank R. Barnes was born July 23, 1887, attended the State Normal School at Fairmont and the Mountain State Business College, he was for three years a teacher in the public schools of Marion County, and has since held a position in the post office at Fairmont. September 9, 1914, he married Martha ... daughter of James E. Bainbridge, of Bentons Ferry, and they have two children: Margaret Linn, born April 9, 1916; and James Allen, born April 13, 1918. Herbert ... Barnes was born September 17, 1888, was graduated from the State Normal School at Fairmont, taught one year in the public schools, thereafter served as telegraphist in the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and in 1910 he was appointed to a clerical position in the Department of Commerce and Labor, Washington, D. C. In May, 1918, he was graduated from the Baltimore College of Dental Surgery, and he is now engaged in the practice of his profession at Fairmont. While in the dental college he enlisted in the Medical Reserve Corps of the United States Army, and in October, 1918, he was ordered to Fort McPherson, Georgia, where he was stationed at the time the armistice brought the World war to a close, he having been commissioned first lieutenant. October 15, 1918, he married Goldie M., daughter of J. A. Swiger, of Fairmont, and they have two sons, Robert Allen, born September 18, 1920, and Maner Swiger, born November 16, 1921. Mary Virginia Barnes was born March 25, 1894, and was graduated from the State Normal School at Fairmont, when eighteen years of age. Thereafter she taught several years in the public schools of Shinnston and Fairmont, and December 1, 1917, she became the wife of Lawrence

R. Linn, a corporal in the United States Army. Corporal Linn was in service with the American Forces in France until the close of the war, he having been a member of the famous Eightieth Division that "went over the top" at Argonne Forest on September 20, 1918. He is now in the telegraph service of the Government, and his wife is assisting her father in the office of county superintendent of schools. Esther Willard Barnes was born July 17, 1896. She attended the normal school at Fairmont and later a business college, after which she accepted a position in the People's National Bank at Fairmont. October 23, 1919, she became the wife of Morgan B. Stanley, son of C. M. Stanley, of Bentons Ferry. Her husband had enlisted in the United States Navy and was assigned to service on the transport "Westerner," on which he made several trips across the Atlantic in conveying American troops to the stage of conflict in the World war. He is now following his trade, that of machinist. Mr. and Mrs. Stanley have one daughter, Eleanor, born April 4, 1921.

CHARLES EDWIN WEMPLE is secretary, treasurer and general manager of the American Stone Company, whose general offices and business headquarters are at Wheeling. This company has several factories in West Virginia and Ohio, manufacturing the grinding stones used in paper mill industries.

Mr. Wemple was one of the original producers of the first successful pulpstone producers in this country, and for fifteen years was manager of a quarry in Ohio where was produced the only good pulpstone on the Western hemisphere. The supply at that time was more or less limited, making it necessary for the United States and Canada to look to England for part of their supply. When the World war cut off the supply of the English product he immediately set out to find additional deposits of rock suitable for producing these large wood pulp grindstones, and it fell to the lot of West Virginia to become the second largest producer of these stones in the United States, which under rapid development took first place the third year after Mr. Wemple started producing stones in this state. The industry has grown rapidly, and is still expanding in order to keep up with the needs of the paper mills in this country, Canada, Mexico and Japan.

Mr. Wemple comes of a family noted for mechanical and business ability and was born at Lockport, New York, October 23, 1878. His grandfather, Myndert Wemple, was born in Holland April 9, 1810, and as a young man came to America and settled near Amsterdam, New York, where he followed farming until he retired in the Village of Amsterdam. He died there November 4, 1885. In New York he married Miss Catherine McKenney, a native of Scotland, who died in Greenwich, Connecticut, June 30, 1906. McKenney Wemple, father of Charles E. Wemple, was born in Ellenville, Schoenectady County, New York, October 30, 1827, was reared there, learned his trade in the locomotive shops of Schoenectady, and as a young man removed to Lockport. At the age of thirty-five he engaged in a repairing and general contracting business, and was an expert builder of high pressure municipal waterworks pumps. He continued a successful business career at Lockport until his death, January 26, 1918. He was a democrat, a faithful Presbyterian in religious affiliations, and a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. At Lockport he married Miss Eliza Jakeway, who was born in that city November 7, 1849, and is still living there. Her father, Edwin Jakeway, was born in Gloucester, England, in 1806, and as a young man settled at Lockport, where he became a millwright. He died at Lockport May 16, 1888. His wife was Jane Bradford, who was born in Southampton, England, in 1810 and died at Lockport September 7, 1896. McKenney Wemple and wife had the following children: Miss Martha, who died at Lockport at the age of thirty; Kate J., department manager of a department store at Lockport; Minnie J., wife of Austin B. Morrill, a Lockport merchant; Myndert, a millwright with the Federal Milling Company at Lockport; Charles Edwin; Arthur S., accountant for the Stratton Fire Clay Company, living at Toronto, Ohio; and McKenney, Jr., a carpenter and contractor at Toronto, Ohio.

Charles Edwin Wemple acquired his early education in the public schools of Lockport, graduating from high school in 1898. For three years following he was employed in the joint offices of the Lockport Pulp Company and the Lockport Felt Company. Practically his entire business experience has been in some phase of the paper manufacturing industry. On leaving Lockport he removed to New Philadelphia, Ohio, and was with the Tippecanoe Pulp and Grindstone Company until the business was dissolved in 1905. Subsequently he became secretary and manager of the Smallwood Stone Company at Empire, Ohio, but in 1915 he removed to Mannington, West Virginia, and bought the stone properties of J. A. Connelly at Littleton. With these properties he organized the American Stone Company, and has since been secretary, treasurer and general manager. Mr. Wemple moved the business headquarters of this company to Wheeling in November, 1920, the offices being in the McLain Building. The company produces a large line of wood pulp grindstones, used in grinding wood pulp for different mills. The factories where the stones are produced are at Littleton, West Virginia, Hammondsville, Ohio, and Sattes, West Virginia.

Mr. Wemple has been welcomed into Wheeling's circle of prominent business men. He is an elder in the Presbyterian Church, a member of the Wheeling Gun Club, Wheeling Rotary Club, and Wheeling Tennis Club, and is affiliated with Mannington Lodge No. 31, F. and A. M., Mannington Chapter, R. A. M., Wheeling Commandery No. 1, K. T., Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling, and belongs to West Virginia Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite. He is a past chancellor commander of the Knights of Pythias Lodge at Toronto, Ohio, and while living at Toronto was a member of the city council and a director and vice president of the Bank of Toronto. He is independent in politics. His home is a modern residence at 13 Laurel Avenue in Lenox, Wheeling. In June, 1903, at Lockport, Mr. Wemple married Miss Minnie B. Rignall, daughter of Charles F. and Louie E. (Bowden) Rignall, residents of Lockport, where her father is a shoe merchant. Mrs. Wemple is a graduate of the Lockport High School. They have four children: Martha Louise, born in May, 1905; Ella Kate, born in October, 1907; Priscilla, born in August, 1909; and Philip Edwin, born in November, 1921.

JAMES GORDON STONE organized and is manager of the Bluefield Candy Company, a successful commercial concern with a widely extended market for its products not only in Bluefield but over a large surrounding territory. Mr. Stone was formerly connected with the wholesale grocery business, and his commercial training began in early youth.

He was born at Rocky Mount, Franklin County, Virginia, November 29, 1877, son of William and Mary (Parker) Stone. He was named in honor of General Gordon, the great Confederate leader, who was a friend of his father, William Stone. The latter was a native of Pittsylvania County and his mother of Franklin County, Virginia. The father was related to the Irish Fitzgeralds. William Stone, who died in 1908, at the age of seventy-two, was all through the war in the Quartermaster's Department of the Confederate Army, serving as lieutenant and captain. He was a member of Lee's staff at Appomattox. In business he was a farmer, growing crops of tobacco, wheat and corn, and was always interested in local politics. The Stone family is an old one in Virginia, and some of the earlier members were soldiers in the Revolution. Mrs. William Stone is still living at Rocky Mount. Of her four sons and three daughters James Gordon was one of the youngest.

Mr. Stone attended school in Old Virginia, and for three years was a student in Bedford Institute. He remained with the Institute as teacher of shorthand and bookkeeping for a time and then removed to Norton, Virginia, where for ten years he was secretary of the Norton Wholesale Grocery Company. For another year he was associated with W. G. Jones & Company at Roanoke, and then removed to Bluefield, where he organized the Bluefield Candy Company, of which he is general manager and treasurer. T. L. Felts is president of the company.

Besides his successful business Mr. Stone is interested in the civic affairs of his community, votes rather independently, and is a member of the Rotary Club, United Commercial Travelers and Country Club. He is a deacon in the Baptist Church and is president of the Men's class in Sunday school.

In 1904 Mr. Stone married a daughter of John T. Fry, of Chilhowie, Virginia. She died in 1913, leaving two children, Gordon and Blair. January 16, 1917, Mr. Stone married Miss Leta Austin, daughter of Hugh Austin, of Bedford County, Virginia. They have one daughter, Mary.

OSCAR V. HEFNER is one of the prosperous business men of Bluefield, a heating, plumbing and tinwork contractor. He started business here with little more than his expert skill in his trades, and is now head of an organization that does a business all over the southern part of the state. It is known as O. V. Hefner & Company, with plant at 16 Roanoke Street. Since 1918 George M. Barger has been associated with the company.

Mr. Hefner was born at Hickory, North Carolina, September 16, 1877, son of Poley L. and Tennessee (Miller) Hefner. The latter lives with her son at Bluefield. Poley L. Hefner, who died in 1909, at the age of sixty-five, was on his way to join the Confederate Army when the war closed. He was a tinner by trade, and was in business at Hickory until 1886 and thereafter worked in various places, including Bluefield in 1892. His people were from Germany, and he and his wife were devout members of the Lutheran Church. P. L. Hefner began voting the prohibition ticket when there were few adherents of that party in his locality. He was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

Oscar V. Hefner, oldest son in a family of seven children, finished his education in the Hickory Seminary. He then served a three years' apprenticeship as a tinner under his father, and while employed in a combination shop at Greensboro learned the plumbing trade. He remained at Greensboro three years, then spent one year at Winston-Salem, North Carolina, and in 1900 he selected Bluefield as a town with a promising future. He opened his shop at his present location on Roanoke Street, his total capital being $250. As a contractor for several years he was frequently his only journeyman, but gradually he has built up a business, now employing several experts in the trade, and is regarded as one of Bluefield's prosperous and substantial citizens.

In December, 1900, Mr. Hefner married Zelta Abernathy, daughter of Calvin Abernathy. Mrs. Hefner was a schoolmate of her husband at Hickory, North Carolina. They have three children, Ralph A., Nannie R. and Cecil M. Mr. Hefner was one of the organizers of the Lutheran Church in Bluefield and is a deacon in the church and teacher of the Junior Class in Sunday school. Mrs. Hefner is a Baptist. Mr. Hefner is a staunch prohibitionist in politics, and is a member of the United Commercial Travelers and the Rotary Club.

WILLIAM WARD KERSEY has been a resident of Bluefield since 1903. He located there as a young man with some commercial training, but without any capital whatsoever. For about two years he was a clothing salesman in the Pedigo Store. He left that store in 1905, in debt $4.00 to his employer, but had determined to start a business of his own, and his character and record enabled him to obtain credit for equipment costing a little over seventeen hundred dollars, with which he started the laundry business now known as the Royal Laundry, of which he is proprietor. For several years his program was one of unceasing hard work in laying a substantial foundation for a business that has steadily grown and prospered, and the Royal Laundry today is one of the best equipped establishments of its kind in the state. It is housed in a building on Bland Street, especially erected for the purpose, and Mr. Kersey has won out in a difficult fight establish himself independently as a business man, and highly esteemed for what he has done and the success was made.

Mr. Kersey was born at Pulaski, Pulaski County, Virginia, February 16, 1879, son of Nelson A. and Elizabeth (Jukes) Kersey, the former a native of Pulaski and the latter of Nodaway, Virginia. The Kersey family was established in this country by David Kersey, an Englishman, who married an Irish girl, O'Dell. David Kersey lived in Tennessee and for a number of years was engaged in rafting timber down the Tennessee and Mississippi rivers to the New Orleans market. It is supposed that he lost his life by drowning. His son, John T. Kersey, lived both in Tennessee and Virginia, was a Confederate soldier and died during the war. Nelson A. Kersey has spent his life in Pulaski, Virginia, and is now sixty-seven years of age. He is a blacksmith by trade and for thirty years was employed by the Bertha Mineral Company and the past ten years has been in the service of the General Chemical Company. His wife died in November, 1910, at the age of fifty-five.

William Ward Kersey is the oldest of six children. He was educated in the schools of Pulaski and as a young man worked in the post office and also wrote life insurance. He was with this early training and experience that he moved to Bluefield in 1903. Mr. Kersey has in recent years, with some relaxation from the responsibilities of a business, been able to serve as city assessor and also deputy county assessor. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, and he and Mrs. Kersey are active members of the Bland Street Methodist Church.

On February 28, 1918, he married Miss Bertie Rateliff, daughter of George Rateliff. She was born at Tazewell, Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Kersey have two children: W. Jr., and Jack Nelson.

JAMES A. MENEFFEE. For practically half a century James A. Menefee has been identified with some phase of the lumber business, part of the time as a building contractor, then as a lumber manufacturer, and also as a dealer. He is one of Bluefield's prominent business men, proprietor of the Menefee Lumber Company of that city. He belongs to old Virginia's aristocratic lineage and was born in Rappahannock County, Virginia, on land inherited to his ancestors by the King of England in colonial times. His great-grandfather, Capt. James Menefee, fought in the war for independence, and owned a large estate, comprising 5,000 acres, and many slaves. Mining was also the occupation of his son James Menefee, grandfather of the Bluefield business man.

James A. Menefee, of Bluefield, was born in 1850, son of James Albert and Sarah E. (Amis) Menefee, his mother being a daughter of Col. Elijah Amis. James Albert Menefee was born in 1806 and died in 1898, at the venerable age of ninety-two, while his wife passed away at the age of sixty-two. James Albert Menefee was a planter and slave owner, and spent his life near the ancestral Menefee home. He was strict in performing his duties as a member of the Methodist faith. On his plantation he raised fine horses, and he had a string of racing horses. He appeared in all the circuits of the country, and it is said that he never lost a race in which one of his horses entered.

James A. Menefee was one of a family of three sons and five daughters. His brother Elijah was city auditor of Lynchburg, Virginia, for years, and his other brother, E. J., is in the lumber business at Warrenton, Virginia. James A. Menefee in spite of the troubled conditions attendant to the war between the states had good educational advantages, attending a private school taught by a noted teacher, G. B. McClelland, in Fauquier County. From the time he left school to the present he has followed some branch of the lumber industry. For several years he was a carpenter and contractor, he operated a sawing mill at Buena Vista, Virginia, and also at Lexington and at Warrenton, and while at Warrenton he was in the retail lumber business for a number of years.

In 1910 he located at Harrisonburg, Virginia, where for two years he operated a sash and door factory. Then, in 1912, he located at Bluefield, as manager of the manufacturing plant of the Saxon Lime and Lumber Company. Two years later he engaged in business for himself, organizing the Menefee Lumber Company.

October 17, 1875, Mr. Menefee married Miss Laura Laws, daughter of Edward Laws, of Hampton, Virginia. They have three children: Julian, the eldest, is manager of the National Biscuit Company's plant at Norfolk, Virginia; Randolph A. is in the automobile business at Washington, D. C.; Bessie is the wife of Robert Amis, at Huntington, West Virginia.

Mr. Menefee and family are members of the Episcopal Church and he was a vestryman at Buena Vista. He served as a member of the City Council while at Warrenton. He is affiliated with the Masonic Order and is a member of the Chamber of Commerce at Bluefield.

CHARLES MCCHESSNEY BRAY, M. D. New engaged in the practice of his profession as a physician and surgeon at Morgantown, Doctor Bray was a medical officer during the World war and is one of the talented young men from whom much may be expected in the future on the basis of their training and achievements.

Doctor Bray was born at Coopers in Mercer County, West Virginia, April 28, 1891, son of Charles Dudley and Virginia (Steele) Bray. There were four Bray brothers who came to America from England in 1632. Two of them settled in the South, one being the ancestor of Doctor Bray. Doctor Bray's great-great-grandfather was William Bray, his great-grandfather was James Bray, and his grandfather was James L. Bray, all natives of Virginia. Charles D. Bray was also born in Virginia, in the City of Richmond. Prior to James L., who was a hardware merchant at Richmond, the Brays were primarily country gentlemen. Charles D. Bray was born January 13, 1857, was educated in an academy at Richmond and took up the profession of accounting. Since 1913 he has been connected with the accounting department of the West Virginia State Tax Commission. During the adjustment of the West Virginia-Virginia debt he did much expert research work in Charleston, Richmond, Wall Street, New York, and Washington, going over many records. His findings developed many items favoring the balance of West Virginia, resulting in a total saving to the state of more than six million dollars as adjusted in the final settlement. C. D. Bray, whose home is in Charleston, is one of the prominent Masons of the state, a Knight Templar and Shriner, and has attained the thirty-third, honorary, degree in the Scottish Rite. His wife, Virginia Steele, was born in Augusta County, Virginia, February 2, 1857, daughter of Isaac and Elizabeth (Hawpe) Steele, both natives of Virginia, the Steeles being of Scotch-Irish and the Hawpes of German ancestry.

When Doctor Bray was a boy of seven years his parents moved to Tazewell County, and two years later located at Elkins, where he acquired a common-school education and later entered the Davis & Elkins College, from which he graduated with the A. B. degree in 1913. He received his Bachelor of Science degree with the class of 1915 at West Virginia University, and finished his medical course in the Western Reserve University at Cleveland, where he graduated in 1917. As an under graduate he did hospital work for a time at the Lakeside and City hospitals at Cleveland, and after graduation remained as resident physician in the department of pediatrics and contagious department of the City Hospital of Cleveland.

Doctor Bray was commissioned a first lieutenant in the Medical Corps on August 23, 1917, and was called to active duty June 21, 1918. He was ordered to Hospital No. 6 at Fort McPherson, Georgia, and on March 3, 1919, was transferred to Hospital No. 32 at Chicago, where he continued his duties until discharged June 17, 1919.

Doctor Bray began his professional work at Morgantown on September 1, 1919, and in addition to his private practice he is acting assistant surgeon of the United States public health service and is also instructor in physical diagnosis at West Virginia University. Doctor Bray, who is unmarried, is a Fellow of the American Medical Association, a member of the West Virginia State and Monongalia County Medical societies, and the Delta Tau Delta college fraternity.

WILBUR J. LILLY, who is associated with his brother Henry A. in conducting one of the leading retail grocery establishments of the City of Bluefield, Mercer County, under the title of the Royal Grocery Company, is a native son of this county and a member of a family that was here founded eighty years ago. His grandfather, Washington Lilly, was born in Virginia, October 31, 1815, and was one of the venerable and honored pioneer citizens of Mercer County at the time of his death, October 10, 1895. His wife, Mary Polly, was born March 10, 1815, and died July 22, 1892. In the year 1841 Washington Lilly came from Fairfax, Virginia, to what is now Mercer County, West Virginia, and he located on the site of the present Village of Dunns. He erected the first gristmill at that place and became a prominent and influential citizen. He was a loyal soldier of the Union in the Civil war, and was one of the first two men at Dunns to cast votes for the republican party. There was not a death in the family circle until the youngest of the ten children had attained to the age of fifty-four years.

Wilbur J. Lilly was born at Dunns, Mercer County, on the 22d of May, 1872, and is the eldest of the seven sons of John S. and Elizabeth (Meador) Lilly, who still maintain their home at Dunns, the former being sixty-nine and the latter seventy years of age, in 1921. John S. Lilly was born and reared in Mercer County, and has been active as a farmer, grist-mill operator and cabinet-maker, in which last mentioned line he formerly was called upon to manufacture coffins and caskets before the establishing of modern undertaking enterprises in the county. He is a republican and he and his wife are earnest members of the Baptist Church, his father having been one of the founders of the church of this denomination at Dunns. Of the seven sons the subject of this sketch is the first born; Dr. Donzie Lilly is engaged in the practice of dentistry at Athens, this county; Hobart M. resides in the City of Charleston, West Virginia, and is in the railway mail service; Carl was born in 1882 and died in 1903; Vernon was born in 1884 and died in 1919; Sam was born in 1898 and died in 1901; Henry A. is the subject of a personal sketch on other pages of this volume.

One of the pleasing memories of Wilbur J. Lilly is that of his frequent accompanying of his grandfather, Washington Lilly, upon hunting trips in the period of his boyhood and youth, the grandfather having been one of the skilled Nimrods of the county. After leaving the village schools at Dunns he entered the West Virginia Normal School at Athens, this county, and prior to his graduation in the same he had taught school to aid in defraying the expenses of his course at the normal school. After his graduation he became associated with his uncle, R. G. Meador, in the opening of a general store at Athens, and at that place he continued to be successfully engaged in business for twenty-six years. He then, in 1920, removed to Bluefield and became associated with his brother Henry A. in forming the Royal Grocery Company, which here opened a modern and finely equipped retail grocery store, of which he has since been the active manager.

Mr. Lilly is a staunch republican and is loyal and progressive as a citizen. He served as a member of the County Court from 1910 to 1916, within which period was instituted the present system of excellent road improvements in the county and the work carried vigorously forward. He and his wife are zealous members of the Baptist Church, and have been active in various departments of its work, including that of the Sunday school.

The year 1892 recorded the marriage of Mr. Lilly and Miss Vina E. Reed, who was born in Henry County, Virginia, and who is a daughter of James Reed. Mr. and Mrs. Lilly have no children.

REV. WILLIAM H. MILLER, whose home is situated on the Hedgesville and Bedington Road, in Hedgesville District, Berkeley County, was born in Gerrardstown District, this county, on the 23d of January, 1858, a son of William Smith Miller, who was born in the same district, ear in the nineteenth century, as was also his wife, who was born in 1819. William S. Miller was a son of William Miller, who presumably was born in Pennsylvania and who became a very early settler in what is now Berkeley County, West Virginia, where he purchased land and reclaimed a productive farm. In the pioneer days he transported merchandise by means of teams and wagons from Baltimore, west, and it was while he was absent from home on one of these long overland journeys that his death occurred. His wife, whose maiden name was Sally Hens, survived him many years and died at the venerable age of eighty-six years. Their children were five in number: David, James, George, William S. and Mary.

William S. Miller was reared on the pioneer farm, and as a youth manifested special interest in horticulture. The following quotation is from Bulletin No. 82, West Virginia Agricultural Experiment Station, of April, 1902: "If anyone deserves the distinction of being called the father of commercial orcharding in West Virginia the man is the late W. S. Miller, who lived over eighty-two years near Gerrardstown, Berkeley County, up to his death December 31, 1901. The frontispiece of this bulletin shows his likeness in October, 1901. On the farm where he died he planted in 1851 his first orchard of apple peaches and plums. This orchard contained but sixteen acres, an area which must have seemed to the people of that time entirely too large to be used for such purpose, but the area has been increased year by year. Upon that place over 4,000 apple trees have been planted, and have grown to bearing age. Some 25,000 peach trees, beside many pear, plum, quince and many other fruits are now bearing there. When the war between the states began Mr. Miller had an abundance of nursery stock on hand which could not be sold, so that he had opportunity to put out many orchard trees. The close of the war found him with about 4,000 peach trees in full bearing. Martinsburg was the nearest market. His eight boys, as they grew up, took charge of the retailing and sold direct from wagons to customers. The prices ranged from 75 cents to $1.00 per peck. The first sales in outside markets were made to a Baltimore party, who bought the peaches at $6.00 per four barrel. The boys hauled the peaches to market in a wagon-box, where the Baltimore agent measured them in a flour barrel, then poured them on the straw covered floor of the box-car. It may be said of the venerable orchardist that he had a greater love for trees and a greater interest in the possibilities to be obtained by expert horticultural methods than he had in the money to be gained from a large orchard. Indeed, he had made his farm an extensive experiment station. Every new variety of any kind of fruit which was mentioned with favor by a nurseryman was sure to find a place in his orchard. A prominent variety was often given a quick trial by top-grafting or budding on trees of bearing age. Thus this careful nurseryman tested the qualities of hundreds of varieties of new fruits in periods of one to three years. Even to his death he was seeking for new varieties. Much could be written in regard to the great horticultural value which Mr. W. S. Miller has been to West Virginia and the adjoining states. His name will ever live in the minds and hearts of those whom he has helped so much. He is and ever will be regarded as the most prominent and foremost of orchardists in the history of West Virginia. Hundreds of men, from far and near, who have contemplated planting orchards have visited his place, and he took great delight in showing them the merits and demerits of various varieties, knowing them invariably at sight, without stopping to look at labels. He never kept in his nursery any varieties he would not use in his own orchard. Many a man has received his inspiration and, indeed, his first stock of graft twigs and plants entirely from Mr. Miller, who seemed only too glad to have the opportunity of helping others. The present immense fruit industry in the Eastern Panhandle and adjacent states is a monument to his willingness to help others and to his great ability as an eximental orchardist. He never assumed the role of a man of superior knowledge. His knowledge was possessed in the greatest humility, so that he gave to strangers the idea that instead of granting them a favor he was receiving a favor from them in consulting him. Without a work, or some other similar life, there would be no successful orchards in our part of the country."

Isabella (McKown) Miller, wife of William S. Miller, was born and reared near Gerrardstown, Berkeley County, to parents, John and Sarah Louisa (DeMoss) McKown, being hence honored pioneers of this section of the state. Mr. Miller was a devout member of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Miller was not a member, but exemplified the Christian faith in his daily life. They became the parents of seven children: Charles H., Mary Louise, John M., Nancy O., William H., D. Gold, Edward DeMoss, Bessie L., Bert P., Harry W. and Lawrence Porter.

Rev. William H. Miller gained his early education in the local school of his home district, later attended Newark Academy, at Newark, Delaware, and after his graduation at Lafayette College, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, entered Princeton University, in the theological department of which he was graduated in 1886. In the Presbyterian ministry of the State of New York he was ordained to the ministry of the Presbyterian Church, and thereafter held various pastoral charges, he having been pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Egon Valley, Pennsylvania, where he suffered a nervous breakdown that caused him to retire from the active work of the ministry. He purchased an orchard near Hedgesville, in his native county, and has since given his attention to this property, in connection with which he is well upholding the high prestige of the family name in constructive horticulture, the while the indoor life has fully restored his health.

In 1887 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Miller and Miss Myrtle May Roberts, who was born at Chautauqua, New York, a daughter of Hiram and Adaline (Hiliker) Roberts. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Miller are: Charles R., Carroll R., Hensel M., Adelyne, Laurence and Elizabeth. Mr. Miller is one of the liberal and progressive citizens of his native county.

GEORGE WATSON HETHERINGTON, secretary and general manager of the Bluefield Ice & Cold Storage Company in the City of Bluefield, Mercer County, was born at Princeton, this county, on the 4th of November, 1878, and is a son of Joseph T. and Julia (Carr) Hetherington. The father, who celebrated in 1921 the seventy-seventh anniversary of his birth, was born on the old family homestead farm three miles distant from Princeton, this county, and his wife likewise is a native of Mercer County, she being seventy-four years of age at the time of this writing, in 1921. Joseph T. Hetherington was a gallant young soldier of the Confederacy in the Civil war, his service being mainly in charge of an ambulance service with the One Hundred and Fiftieth Virginia Regiment. He took part in the battles of Cloyd's Mountain and Lookout Mountain and in the conflicts marking the campaign from Chattanooga to Atlanta, in which his regiment was part of the command of Gen. Joseph E. Johnston. He had been held a prisoner of war at Camp Morton, Indiana, during the last three months before the close of the great conflict. He and his wife are devoted members of the Methodist Church at Princeton, and he is superintendent of its Sunday school. He is a stalwart democrat, and is affiliated with the United Confederate Veterans. His father, John J. Hetherington, was a native of Ireland and was a young man when he established his home in what is now Mercer County, West Virginia.

George W. Hetherington, the youngest son in a family of four sons and six daughters, gained his early education in the public schools and the academy in his native town of Princeton, and thereafter took a course in a business college at Staunton, Virginia. He was for four years a successful teacher in the schools of his native county, and worked in a sawmill he earned the funds to defray the expense of his course in the business college. In 1907 Mr. Hetherington became timekeeper at the roundhouse of the Norfolk & Western Railroad at Bluefield, and he held this place two years. He and his brother William H. then opened a general store on Bluefield Avenue, and two years later he became bookkeeper for the Bluefield Ice & Cold Storage Company, of which he has been secretary, treasurer and manager since 1917.

Mr. Hetherington is a valued member of the Bluefield Chamber of Commerce and the Kiwanis Club, is a democrat in politics, is a Knight Templar Mason, and is affiliated also with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Modern Woodmen of America, the Woodmen of the World and the United Commercial Travelers. He and his wife are zealous members of Grace Church, Methodist Episcopal, South, in their home city, he being a steward and trustee of the same and also superintendent of its Sunday school.

In 1907 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Hetherington and Miss Blanche Dunn, who was born and reared in Monroe County, this state, and the one child of this union is a daughter, Grace.

Mr. Hetherington is one of the progressive business men and liberal and public-spirited citizens of Bluefield, and in his native county his circle of friends is limited only by that of his acquaintances.

CLARKE V. FOLAND as a boy learned the printer's trade, and has been more or less continuously identified with the printing and newspaper business ever since. As a journeyman he became identified with Bluefield some years ago, and is now president of the Foland Printing Company of that city. His citizenship is enthusiastic, and he is one of the forceful men who believe that Bluefield has not only achieved big things in the past but has a still greater future ahead of it.

Mr. Foland was born at Scottsville, Albemarle County, Virginia, May 13, 1879. His grandfather, Valentine Foland, was one of a party of twelve members of the family who came to the United States from Germany. Valentine Foland was a cabinet maker, a very skilled worker in that line, and finally he and his family moved to East Tennessee and later he went to Indiana. Peter Valentine Foland, father of the Bluefield business man, was born at Richmond, Virginia, and during the last two years of the Civil war served as a Union soldier. He was once captured, and spent part of his time as a prisoner of war. He was a carpenter by trade, and his home for half a century was at Scottsville, where he died in July, 1915, at the age of seventy. He was a democrat, served as a member of the Council, and also was mayor of Scottsville, was a steward in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and for thirty years was superintendent of the Sunday school. Peter V. Foland married Elizabeth Clarke Stratton, who was born in Scottsville and died in March, 1921, at the age of seventy-five. She was a daughter of James and Harriet (Wood) Stratton, of Fluvanna County, Virginia. Harriet Wood was a daughter of Thomas Wood, of that county. Through his father Clarke V. Foland is a descendant of Randolph Jefferson, the only brother of Thomas Jefferson, sons of Peter Jefferson. James Stratton, his maternal grandfather, was a veteran of the Mexican war. Clarke V. Foland was next to the youngest in a family of seven children. His brother James G. is a machinist at Hendricks, West Virginia.

Clarke V. Foland spent his early life at Scottsville, where he attended school, and was also a student in the Virginia Polytechnic Institute at Blacksburg. In May, 1898, he volunteered for service in the Spanish-American war, being assigned to duty in the Blacksburg Band, and was with Gen. Fitzhugh Lee's command at Jacksonville, Florida. He was mustered out at Salem, Virginia, in December, 1898.

He learned the printer's trade in the office of the Scottsville Courier, and later was employed in various capacities on the Buchanan, Virginia, Banner, the Fincastle Herald, the Norton Free Press, the Tazewell Republican, and finally on the Bluefield Evening Leader. He was a part owner of the Leader when it suspended publication, and he lost all his savings at that time. In February, 1909, he organized the Foland Printing Company, which took over the very limited equipment of the old Leader. He became president of the new organization, which had a cash capital of only $65.00. For a dozen years Mr. Poland has kept the business growing to the limit of its facilities, and now has a complete commercial printing establishment, handling a large part of the printing business in this section of the state.

Soon after he came to Bluefield Mr. Poland was a clerk in the postoffice in 1901, under Dr. J. E. Martin, then postmaster, and again in 1904 he served for a time in the local office. Mr. Poland has the gift of music, has developed much skill with the violin, and for several years was choir leader of the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The church organist at that time was Miss Ethel Irene Stovall. This common interest in music culminated in their marriage on December 4, 1912. Mrs. Poland is a daughter of William A. and Hattie Stovall. Her father was formerly a school teacher, was a conductor on the Norfolk & Western Railroad, and still later in business at Bluefield. Mrs. Poland is a graduate of the Concord State Normal of Athens, West Virginia, graduated in music at Centenary College at Cleveland, Tennessee, and finished her musical studies in the School of Music and Arts in New York City. Her special field of proficiency is the piano, and since her marriage she has continued teaching and musical interests in general. They are now members of the Bland Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and Mr. Poland is a steward in the church and a member of the choir. Fraternally he is senior counselor of the United Commercial Travelers of America, is a past sachem of the Improved Order of Red Men, is a Royal Arch and Knight Templar Mason, being generalissimo of the latter, and is a member of the Shrine at Charleston. He belongs to the Bluefield Chamber of Commerce and the Rotary Club.

WILLIAM E. DEEGANS. The man who is the architect of his own fortune is to be congratulated only if the structure has been soundly erected and the materials used in its building are of a character that will stand the test of criticism. Too many of our so-called self-made men have climbed the ladder of success through the misfortunes of others. Likewise there are men who owe their present position to happy circumstance or fortuitous opportunity. The men who have thus risen are not really entitled to be known as "self-made" in the strict sense of the term. Those deserving of this title are men who have relied implicitly upon their own resources and have taken no unfair advantage; who have made the most of their opportunities, but have not strayed from legitimate methods in making the most of them; who have builded their structures on sound foundations, and who, on reaching the heights can point with a pardonable degree of pride to the work they have perfected. To have accomplished such an achievement has been the work of William E. Deegans of Huntington, president of the American Bank & Trust Company, an official in numerous other important enterprises, and a citizen whose activities in matters of a community nature have been constructive and helpful. He has traveled the hard road of self-made manhood, has met obstacles and overcome them, has suffered disappointments without allowing them to discourage him, and has attained a well merited position of prominence. The structure of his fortune has been firmly and substantially erected.

Mr. Deegans was born at Bellefonte, Kentucky, March 31, 1875, the son of James Franklin and Mary (Gannon) Deegans, both of Irish parentage, the former born at Bellefonte and the latter at Dearing, Lawrence County, Ohio. When he was three years of age his parents moved to Monitor Furnace (now known as Coal Grove), Lawrence County, Ohio, and there the lad was reared to the age of eighteen years. When he was nine years old he began driving teams, going to school during the short winter terms, and this constituted his education up to 1893, when his ambition for further preparation of an educational nature led him to enter Valparaiso (Indiana) University. His finances at this time were modest, to say the least, and in order to pay for his tuition, board and room rent he worked for one year in the University kitchen. In 1895 Mr. Deegans went to Fayette County, West Virginia, where for a time he was employed as a railroad section hand, subsequently becoming a coal miner under Charles Beurry, of the Beechwood Coal and Coke Company. Later he entered the service of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company at Thurmond, that state, under F. J. Ginn, and acted as baggagemaster at night yard clerk until resigning to accept the position of store clerk of the McDonald Colliery Company at McDonald, West Virginia, under the management of S. Dixon.

In 1898 Mr. Deegans found himself in a position to embark in a venture of his own, and, with H. C. McClain, founded the general mercantile firm of McClain & Deegans at Thurmond. This association lasted until 1900, when he sold his interest in the business to Mr. McClain and opened an establishment of his own, under the style of W. E. Deegans & Company, and for five years did a prosperous business, which was terminated by the destruction of his establishment by fire in 1905. Following this Mr. Deegans' attention and activities were drawn to the restaurant business, and under the style of Hofmeier & Deegans, he operated restaurants at Thurmond, Glen Jean, Scarbro and McDonald, West Virginia. While thus engaged it was but natural that he should note the opportunities offered in the coal business, and in 1908 he became the organizer of the Pocahontas Smokeless Coal Company at Welch, McDowell County. Following this, in the same year, he organized the Bank of Mullens, at Mullens, Wyoming County, of which he was the first president, a position he still retains. The following year saw him still more actively interested in coal when he purchased an interest in the Prudence (West Virginia) Coal Company, of which he became president and general manager. In the same year he was made president of the National Bank of Thurmond, an office which he held until 1919, when he disposed of his stock in that institution.

In 1910 Mr. Deegans became the organizer of the new Pocahontas Coal Company at Deegans, West Virginia, a town named in his honor, bought the controlling interest in the Holiday Coal Company at Keeneys Creek, this state, and organized the Mullens Realty Company and the Glen Jean Insurance Company, of both of which concerns he was president and general manager. In 1914 he purchased the controlling interest in the American Bank and Trust Company at Huntington, of which he has since been president. His organizing ability during that year was exemplified in his founding the Mullens Smokeless Coal Company, at Mullens; the Deegans Eagle Coal Company, at Accoville, Logan County; The Cub Fork Coal Company, at Yohyn; and the Orville Coal Company, at Ojay. He also bought the controlling interest in the Paragon Colliery Company, at Yohyn, the Guyan Valley Coal Company, at Accoville, and the Miller Pocahontas and Virginian Smokeless Coal Company, at Corinne, Wyoming County, all of these being West Virginia concerns. In 1915 he organized the W. E. Deegans Coal Company, which is the selling agency for the group of mines which he now owns, and of which concern he is president and general manager.

In 1918 Mr. Deegans bought the controlling stock in the Royal Block Coal Company of Morrisvale, West Virginia, of which he is president and general manager, and assumed like duties when he organized the Independent Coal Company of Toledo, Ohio, and the Royal Coal Company of Lansing, Michigan, these two companies operating large retail yards in their respective cities. In the same year he organized the Faulkner Coal Company of Huffie, West Virginia, and the W. E. Deegans Consolidated Coal Company of Huntington, where the main office is located, and is still president and general manager of both concerns. In 1919 Mr. Deegans organized the Marietta Coal Company of Stone, Kentucky, of which he is president and general manager, and assisted in the organization of the Greenbrier & Eastern Railroad, which connects with the Sewell Valley and the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, and of which road he is vice president. His activities in 1920 included the organization of the Margarette Coal Company and the Frances Coal Company, both of Maffrance, Greenbrier County; and his acceptance of executive position in the Winner Gas Stove Company and the Miller Casket Company, both of Huntington, which concerns he is president. He is also vice president of Van Zandt Leftwich Supply Company.

W. B. Deegan

With the foregoing wealth of business duties it might be thought as though Mr. Deegans had his time fully occupied, but he must not be considered as merely a business drone. He enjoys the companionship of his fellows in a fraternal social way, being a thirty-second degree Mason, a life member of the Elks, and a member of the Kiwanis, Guyan and Guyan Country Clubs, and at all times is ready to lend his abilities in support of civic measures directed to the promulgation of movements considered to be for the welfare of the community. In politics he is a democrat. He is a resident of Fayette County he served as a member of the County Court during 1899 and 1900, and as a member of the Board of Education in 1911 and 1912.

In 1899 Mr. Deegans was united in marriage with Miss Nettie Turner, at Thurmond, Fayette County. Mrs. Deegans, a devoted member of the Presbyterian Church, died March 4, 1917, being survived by two children: William E., Jr., and Mary Frances. On April 15, 1922, Mr. Deegans married Miss Kathryn A. Burgess, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Burgess, natives of West Virginia.

Silas H. BELCHER is one of three brothers who are presently identified with the lumber business, and all are of Bluefield. Silas Belcher is district manager of the Ritter-Burnes Lumber Company of Huntington, and has been one of the live and enterprising citizens of West Virginia for fourteen years.

He was born at Rosedale, Russell County, Virginia, May 17, son of George and Maggie (Nuckels) Belcher. His father is now living at Sword Creek, Virginia, at the age of 75. The father, who was a farmer, died in 1901. There were nine children in the family, and Silas was one of the oldest.

Belcher had the advantages of the rural schools in his youth, and as a boy he was employed as water boy in a sawmill at wages of 25 cents a day. At the age of 17 he had developed the technical skill required of a gauger and lumber inspector, and for several years he was employed in these capacities, and his duties took him to the lumber districts of West Virginia, Tennessee, Kentucky and North Carolina. For several years he was in the service of the Parkhurst Lumber Company of Sword Creek, Virginia, the Boyce Lumber Company of Richmond, Virginia, and the Ritter-Burnes Company of Huntington. For three years he was vice president of the Graham Lumber Company.

Belcher has had his home at Bluefield since 1909, and at that time has seen a city built up and outgrow the limits of his first acquaintance here. He was an active member of the Chamber of Commerce and the Elks Club, and is affiliated with the Elks order.

In December 19, 1900, Mr. Belcher married Miss Stella Steele, a daughter of P. E. Steele, of Tazewell, Virginia.

Belcher is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

JAMES W. OVERSTREET, secretary-treasurer and manager of the National Armature Company at Bluefield, was for several years an official of Southern Express Company and Norfolk & Western Railroad at Bluefield, and is one of the city's most energetic and forward-looking younger men.

He was born at Thaxton, Virginia, June 21, 1888, son of James H. and Jennie (Quisenberry) Overstreet, his father a native of Bedford County and his mother of Pennsylvania County. The mother died when James was 12, and the father, a stock and tobacco farmer, died in 1912, at the age of sixty. There were only two sons, James W. Overstreet, of Portsmouth, Ohio, and James W. Overstreet. Overstreet attended private school in Bedford County, Virginia, until he was sixteen, and when he came to Bluefield he was employed for one year as a salesman and bookkeeper by H. B. Thompson on Raleigh Street. After that firm to become clerk in the local offices of the Southern Express Company, and continued in the service at the end of fifteen years had charge of the office and supervision over the entire business of the company for the Pocahontas Division of the Norfolk & Western Railroad.

On account of his wide acquaintance with railroad men, mine operators and others, who had absolute confidence in him, he has contributed in no small degree to the success of the National Armature Company since he accepted his official responsibilities with that firm in March, 1920.

Mr. Overstreet married, April 29, 1914, Rosel Killey, daughter of Dr. P. H. Killey, of Vivian, Virginia. They have one daughter, Emily. Mr. and Mrs. Overstreet are members of the Episcopal Church. He is a York and Scottish Rite Mason, a member of the Shrine at Charleston, and is an active worker in such Bluefield organizations as the Rotary Club, Country Club and Chamber of Commerce. During the war he made strenuous efforts to get accepted for service, either as a private or through the Officers Training Camp.

HENRY BISHOP KITTS might be referred to appropriately as the dean of Mercer County journalism. He was editor of the first paper established in that county, and for a long succession of years carried the responsibilities of an editor and publisher. When he first came to the county the total population was about seven thousand. At the present time 49,000 people live within the limits of Mercer County. At one time Mr. Kitts knew personally nearly all the voters of the county. His home for many years was at Princeton, and he located there before Bluefield was on the map. Mr. Kitts is now one of the active men in Bluefield business affairs and is secretary of the Poland Printing Company.

He was born at Bland Court House, Virginia, April 13, 1861, son of Peter and Marianne (Edwards) Kitts. Kitts is a name of Holland Dutch origin, while the Edwards family lived for many generations in Fincastle County, Virginia. The great-grandfather of Henry B. Kitts was Henry Kitts, who was born in Wythe County, Virginia. His son, Jacob Kitts, moved from Virginia to East Tennessee, when his son Peter was a boy of seven, but subsequently returned to Virginia. Peter Kitts spent the greater part of his life at Bland Court House, was a shoemaker by trade, and also carried on farming. Peter Kitts was born in Grainger County, Tennessee, in 1827, and died at Bland Court House in 1878. His wife, Marianne Edwards, was born in 1844 and died in 1888. They were members of the Methodist Church. Henry Bishop Kitts is the oldest of ten children. A brother and sister live at Bluefield, George, an engineer of the Norfolk & Western Railroad, and Mrs. Leroy Landrum.

Henry B. Kitts attended school at Bland Court House until twelve years of age, but his literary as well as his technical education was acquired in a printing office. After leaving school he was a boy worker in the office of the Holston Christian Advocate, a Methodist paper. At the age of sixteen he was performing the duties of editor of the Bland County Gazette.

In 1881, forty years ago, and when only nineteen years of age, Mr. Kitts came to Princeton, Mercer County, West Virginia, and took charge of the Princeton Journal a few weeks after the establishment of this pioneer paper of Mercer County. He conducted the Journal for sixteen years. He became prominently identified with the democratic party in the county, was chairman of the Central Committee before he was twenty-one, and since then has called every county convention to order or has served as secretary of the body. While in Princeton he was assistant in the clerk's office at different times.

Mr. Kitts has been a resident of Bluefield since 1897, in which year he established the Advertiser, a weekly paper, and published this until 1904, when he sold out. During that year he was busy compiling and publishing a city directory. He then opened a job office, known as the Kitts Printing Company, on Princeton Avenue. In 1909 he returned to journalism as editor of the Evening Leader, and after that paper suspended he became secretary of the Poland Printing Company, one of the largest commercial printing establishments in the southern part of the state. During 1900 Mr. Kitts served as city treasurer.

In 1881 he married Miss Minnie Kahle, daughter of Samuel and Katherine Kahle. Mrs. Kitts died in 1910, the mother of four sons and four daughters. Two of the sons and two of the daughters are still living. Ernest is chief inspector for the Bluefield Telephone Company; Frank is now manager of a theater at Pocahontas, Virginia, and during the war period was in training at Camp Lee, Virginia. The daughter Eva is the wife of Richard Morgan at Matoaka, Virginia, while Mary is the wife of M. B. Hammitt, of Pocahontas, Virginia.

Mr. Kitts is one of the prominent members of the Kiwanis Club, and his associates in that organization affectionately refer to him as "Young Man Kitts." He was a delegate to the International Kiwanis Convention at Cleveland. He is a member of the Finance Committee of the Men's Club of the Bland Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and active in the work of the club. He is a thirty-second degree Mason and member of the Eastern Star, and is one of the oldest members of Bluefield Lodge of Elks.

MOSES WILLIAM BURR, a scion of one of the very early pioneer families of what is now West Virginia, was born on the old homestead of the family near Bardane, Jefferson County, on the 8th of February, 1819. His father, James Burr, was born near Bardane, April 2, 1776, a son of Peter Burr, who was born near Fairfield, Connecticut, October 21, 1727. Peter Burr married Mary Stuart, born August 17, 1730, and in company with a cousin who commanded a vessel in the coastwise trade, he landed at Alexandria, Virginia, and thence followed an Indian trail to the site of the present city of Harper's Ferry, West Virginia, where he obtained from Lord Fairfax a tract of land a short distance west of the present Harper's Ferry. He left his father in charge of this property and returned to Connecticut to settle his business and property affairs in that state. On his return to Virginia he was accompanied by his wife and seven children. In the meanwhile his father had become dissatisfied with the land which had been taken, the result being that the tract was given up and from Lord Fairfax another tract was secured, a part of the present village of Shenandoah Junction being situated on this land. About a mile west of the present village Peter Burr built a house and established a home in the midst of the wilderness. He reclaimed and otherwise improved much of his land, and on this old homestead he passed the remainder of his life, Alexandria having been the nearest market point and several days having been required to make the trip back and forth with teams and wagons. The names of the seven children of his first marriage were: Mary, Abigail, Sarah, Miriam, Jane, Peter and Hannah. For his second wife Peter Burr, Sr., married Jane Calhoun, who was born near Lancaster, Pennsylvania, a representative of the old and influential family of that name. The six children of this union were: James, Elizabeth, Moses, Anna, William and Esther. The son Moses was a captain in the War of 1812.

James Burr succeeded to the ownership of a part of his father's landed estate, and there he and his young wife established their home in a small log house. For several years he hauled his farm produce to Alexandria, stopping enroute at the wayside inns or taverns, and he won substantial success in his farm enterprise. He became the owner of two slaves, a negro and his wife, and these two, with their progeny, were all the slaves he ever retained. James Burr died in November, 1848, his wife having passed away in the preceding year. The maiden name of Mrs. Burr was Nancy McGarry. She was born in what is now Jefferson County, West Virginia, April 7, 1781, a daughter of John McGarry, who came from Ireland with his family and became a pioneer settler and farmer in Jefferson County, as now constituted. He was a weaver by trade, and with his hand loom did much manufacturing of cloth for the other pioneer settlers. James and Nancy Burr became the parents of five children: Edmund, James, Jr., John, Moses William and Nancy Jane.

Moses William Burr gained his early education in a little log school house erected by the people of the neighborhood, and profited much by instruction there given by John McKnight. He eventually succeeded to the ownership of his father's farm, and there he continued his successful activities as an agriculturist and stock-grower until his death, February 25, 1895. He was one of the honored and influential citizens of Jefferson County, and did his part in advancing its civic and material progress. In May, 1845, he married Mary Ann Porterfield, who was born in Berkeley County, October 23, 1824, a daughter of William and Mary (Williamson) Porterfield. William Porterfield was born in the present Hedgesville District, Berkeley County, in 1776, and was a son of William Porterfield, whose father likewise bore the personal name, William. Mary A. (Williamson) Porterfield was a daughter of a Revolutionary soldier who received from Virginia a tract of land in what is now the State of Ohio in recognition of his military service. Mrs. Burr died on the 10th of July, 1894. The names of their eight children are: Margaret Ann, Mary Jane, Bettie Porter, Susan Emma, James William, Nannie Belle, Milton Williamson and Alice Calhoun. Milton W. and his sister Mary J., Bettie P., Nannie B. and Alice C., now occupy the old homestead, and are among the few persons in Jefferson County, thus owning a property that has been in the family possession for four successive generations. The old homestead place, in Jefferson County, is situated about four miles from the village of Bardane, and the present house, a commodious frame structure of Colonial style of architecture, with modern improvements, including electric lights and steam heat, stands on the site of an old log cabin which was the original family domicile, the site being on an elevation that affords a commanding view of the surrounding country. The farm is in charge of Milton W. Burr, and his sisters are the gracious and popular chateaus of the beautiful and hospitable home. William Porterfield, the maternal ancestor, was born in Scotland, of Scotch lineage, came to America in the Colonial period and was one of the first settlers in what is now Berkeley County, West Virginia. The family name, his wife was Paul, and her father was one of the first settlers in the vicinity of Falling Waters, Berkeley County, where he acquired a large landed estate.

ELLIS C. CONLEY, who is engaged in the practice of his profession as a certified public accountant in the City of Huntington, is a native of the fine old Blue Grass State. His grandfather, Madison Conley, passed his entire life in Johnson County, Kentucky, where he was born in 1839, where he died in 1913, he having been a distinguished member of the bar of his native county and having been a gallant soldier of the Confederacy in the Civil war. His wife, Elizabeth, was likewise a native of Johnson County, having survived him and having been a resident of Floyd County, that state, at the time of her death. Their son, Samuel Clark Conley was born January 15, 1863, and now resides near Riceville, Kentucky, where he owns and operates a large and well improved farm. He is a democrat and both he and his wife are earnest members of the Baptist Church. Mrs. Conley, whose maiden name was Sarah E. Picklesimer, was born in Johnson County, Kentucky, November, 1864. Of the children Ellis C., of this review is the eldest; Leonard is a farmer in Floyd County, Kentucky; Grace is the wife of Walter Chatfield, a farmer, Lawrence County, Ohio; Ollie is the wife of Thomas H. a merchant in Floyd County; and Ross remains with his parents on the home farm in Johnson County.

Ellis C. Conley was born near Prestonsburg, Floyd County, Kentucky, August 3, 1883, and there gained in the rural schools his preliminary education. In 1900 he graduated from the East Kentucky State Normal School at Louisburg. He taught two years in the rural schools of his native county, and thereafter was for two years a student in Valparaiso University, Valparaiso, Indiana. During the ensuing two years he was again in service as a successful teacher in the schools of his home county, and in 1905 he graduated from the Bowling Green (Kentucky) Business

E. C. Conley

University. For the succeeding year he was an instructor in the commercial department of the high school at Katawa, Kentucky, and in 1908 he completed a post-graduate course in higher accountancy in La Salle University, Chicago. He was employed for three years as bookkeeper for various business concerns in Kentucky and West Virginia, and thereafter was associated with a firm of certified public accountants in the City of Cincinnati, Ohio, until 1913, in the course of which year he became secretary and treasurer of the H. Krish Wholesale Dry Goods Company at Catsburg, Kentucky. He resigned this position December 1916, and has since been engaged in successful practice as a certified public accountant in the City of Huntington, West Virginia, where he has a substantial and representative clientele. He received his first certificate as a certified public accountant on the 6th of July, 1916, under the laws of the State of Kentucky, and Governor A. O. Stanley of Kentucky, appointed him a member of the first State board of examiners for Kentucky certified public accountants. After serving one year he was reappointed, for a term of three years. November 18, 1918, he received his second professional certificate, from the State of Indiana; and on August 14, 1919, he received a similar certificate from the State of West Virginia. His well equipped offices are in the 1406 First National Bank Building, and he is the owner of the business conducted under the title of the Federal Audit Company at Huntington.

Mr. Conley is a democrat, and he and his wife are zealous members of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, in their home city, he being a steward of the same, and also secretary of the men's Bible class in the Sunday school. He is actively identified with the Huntington Chamber of Commerce and the Huntington Credit Men's Association, as is he also with the National Association of Public Accountants, the American Society of Certified Public Accountants and the West Virginia Society of Certified Public Accountants. At Huntington he is the owner of real estate, including his pleasant home property, 923 Fifth Street, and he is the owner also of a farm in Lawrence County, Ohio. In the World War period he was in the home-tax service of the government. His Masonic affiliations are here noted: Hampton Lodge No. 235, F. and A. M., Catsburg, Kentucky; Apperson Chapter No. 81, A. M., Ashland, that state; Huntington Commandery No. 9, Knights Templars; Lodge of Perfection No. 4 in home city; Beni-Kedem Temple of the Mystic Shrine Charleston, West Virginia Consistory No. 1, Scottish Rite, at Wheeling, in which he has received the thirty-second degree; Rose Croix Chapter No. 4, Huntington; Huntington Chapter No. 8, O. E. S.; and White Shrine of Jerusalem No. 3 at Huntington.

June 8, 1910, at Catsburg, Kentucky, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Conley and Miss Estella Chatfield, daughter of the late LaGrand Chatfield, who was a wholesale merchant in that city. Mr. and Mrs. Conley have no children.

VERNON EMIL JOHNSON, a former speaker of the House of Delegates of the West Virginia Legislature, is successfully established in the insurance business in his native town of Berkeley Springs, judicial center of Morgan County, and is a scion of one of the influential pioneer families of this section of West Virginia. He was born at Berkeley Springs on the 22d of May, 1880, and is a son of John W. and Eliza E. (Bechtol) Johnson, both likewise natives of Morgan County, where the father was born a farm near Berkeley Springs and the mother at Berkeley Springs, where her father, Louis Bechtol, was a representative business man. John W. Johnson bore the patronymic of his father, John, who was a farmer by occupation and who is supposed to have passed his entire life in what is now Morgan County. John W. Johnson was reared on the old home farm and gained his youthful education in the rural schools. After his marriage he engaged in the general merchandise business at Berkeley Springs, his father-in-law having been associated with him in this enterprise. He continued as one of the leading merchants and honored citizens of Berkeley Springs until his death, at the age of fifty-four years, his widow having passed away at the venerable age of seventy-two years. They became the parents of five sons, of whom two are living: Ernest L. and Vernon E.

The public schools of Berkeley Springs afforded Vernon E. Johnson his early educational advantages, and thereafter he completed a course in the celebrated Eastman Business College at Poughkeepsie, New York. He gained his initial business experience as clerk in his father's store, and after leaving the business college he continued his services as a clerk in his native city about six years. He then engaged in the general insurance business, in which he has since continued, his agency being now one of the most substantial and important in this line of enterprise in Morgan County.

Mr. Johnson has been notably loyal and influential as a progressive and public-spirited citizen and has been a leader in the local ranks and the councils of the republican party in his native county, his first presidential vote having been cast for Theodore Roosevelt. He was elected representative of Morgan County in the Lower House of the State Legislature in 1911, and the high estimate placed upon his service is shown in his having been re-elected in 1913 and again in 1915. He was a loyal working member in the deliberations on the floor of the House of Delegates and also as a member of the various committees to which he was assigned. His ability and popularity led to his being chosen speaker of the House for the session of 1915-6, and he had the distinction of being one of the youngest men ever selected for this position in that body. He served as a member of the military staff of Governor Glasscock and later as a member of the staff of Governor Hatfield, in which connection he gained the rank and title of colonel.

In the World War period Colonel Johnson was chairman of the Morgan County Draft Board and was otherwise influential in the furthering of local war activities and patriotic service. He has served as a member of the State Board of Trustees of Berkeley Springs, West Virginia, and as a member of the Council of the Town of Bath. He is president of the Bank of Berkeley Springs, and is the owner of a fine farm property in his native county, the same having a specially well developed orchard that shows the owner's interest in horticulture. Colonel Johnson is affiliated with DeFord Lodge No. 88, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

At the age of twenty-one years Colonel Johnson wedded Miss Willie Rice, who likewise was born at Berkeley Springs and who was a daughter of Jesse and Margaret Rice. Mrs. Johnson died at the age of thirty-six years, and is survived by one daughter, Virginia E., who graduated from the local high school and thereafter continued her studies by attending Madison Hall in the City of Washington, District of Columbia. For his second wife Colonel Johnson wedded Miss Ethel Harmison, who was born at Berkeley Springs, a daughter of Morgan S. and Martha Harmison, of whom more specific mention is made on other pages of this volume. Mrs. Johnson graduated from the Berkeley Springs High School and later attended the State Normal School at Fairmont, she having been a successful and popular teacher prior to her marriage. Colonel and Mrs. Johnson have two fine sons, Richard M. and Philip E.

MORGAN SIMEON HARMISON has served both as sheriff and clerk of his native county, a fact that sets at naught any application of the scriptural aphorism that "a prophet is not without honor save in his own country." He resides at Berkeley Springs and is the present county clerk of Morgan County. He was born on a farm near Berkeley Springs, the county seat, and the date of his nativity was February 14, 1852. His father, Thomas Harmison, was born on a farm at the confluence of Sleepy Creek and the Potomac River, June 10, 1813, and was a son of Elijah Harmison, who, so far as available data indicate, passed his entire life in what is now Morgan County, his five children having been Isaac, Thomas, David, Jane and Abigail. Thomas Harmison was reared on the old home farm and eventually succeeded to the ownership of the Rankin Sawmill, which he operated a few years. He then purchased a farm in the Sleepy Creek District, and there he continued as one of the substantial agriculturists and stock-growers of his native county until his death in 1883. He was influential in community affairs of public order and was a republican in politics. He married Miss Phoebe Mahala Rankin, who was born at Berkeley Springs, a daughter of Simeon and Matilda (Fardon) Rankin. Simeon Rankin passed his entire life in Morgan County, as now constituted, owned and operated a sawmill and was one of the leaders in the lumber industry in this section of the state, his lumber having been rafted down the creek and the Potomac River to Williamsport. Mrs. Thomas Harmison preceded her husband to the life eternal, her death having occurred in 1881. Of the two children the elder was John Franklin, who enlisted for service in defense of national integrity when the Civil war began. He became a member of Company F, First Maryland Volunteer Infantry, and he was killed in battle at Harper's Ferry, his remains being interred in the National Cemetery at Antietam.

Morgan S. Harmison was reared on the old home farm and gained his early education in the rural schools. He eventually succeeded to the ownership of the home farm, which he still retains in his possession and to the active management of which he continued to give his attention until his election to the office of county sheriff in 1896. He served four years in this office, and in 1902 was elected county clerk, a position of which he has since been the incumbent through successive re-elections.

September 28, 1876, recorded the marriage of Mr. Harmison and Miss Martha Prudence Thompson, who was born in Sleepy Creek District, this county, a daughter of Samuel and Ellen (McBee) Thompson, life-long residents of Morgan County. Mr. and Mrs. Harmison became the parents of ten children: Clara Jane, wife of C. R. Hovermale; Morgan Samuel, who married Nellie Custer; Bessie Mahala, wife of G. C. Hunter; Martha May; Lola E.; Etta, wife of Edward Smith; Ethel M., wife of Col. Vernon E. Johnson, who is the subject of individual mention on other pages of this work; Kate, wife of Leonard Collier; George S., who married Lillian Hovermale; and Frank, who married Hazel Collier.

EMERY C. QUEEN. In the present day when business honesty sometimes appears to be at a discount and when many public officials are being accused of trafficking with their honor, those whose integrity is unquestioned stand out with distinctive prominence. In this connection attention is called to the record of Emery C. Queen, who has passed the greater part of his life in the employ of the United States Government, who is now serving as postmaster at Berkeley Springs, and whose attitude toward the world is that of kindly friendliness, combined with the strictest probity and highest principles.

Mr. Queen was born February 8, 1886, on a farm near Johnstown, Harrison County, Virginia, a son of Armistead and Frances Diana (Alexander) Queen. His father was born in the same locality in 1844, a son of Levi Queen, who was born on a farm located on Peeltree Run, in the same county. In his youth Armistead Queen learned the trade of stone mason, a vocation which he followed with much success for many years, in addition to which he occupied himself as an agriculturist, and now, at the age of seventy-eight years, is living in retirement on his property. He and his estimable wife, who died in June, 1911, were the parents of seven children: Jesse C., Ida, Okey, Alice, Homer Moletus, Ledrew and Emery C.

Emery C. Queen attended the rural schools of his native locality during the period of his youth, this being subsequently advanced by a two-year course at Fairmont Normal School. In the meantime he had taught in the rural schools, and after he had completed his normal course he continued to devote himself to educational work until he had taught nine years. He then entered the railway mail service, running between Washington and Pittsburgh, and in 1917 was transferred to Roanoke, Virginia, as transfer clerk. After three months he resigned and became principal of the Mount Wesley graded school, but after a year left this post and returned to the railway mail service between Washington and Grafton. On October 1, 1919, Mr. Queen again left the railway mail service, but not to service of the Government, for he at once assumed the duties of postmaster at Berkeley Springs, a position which he had been appointed. He has continued to discharge the duties of this office in a thoroughly satisfactory manner, has elevated the standards and efficiency of the local office, and through his unfailing courtesy and obliging nature has won numerous friends and well-wishers.

At the age of twenty-four years Mr. Queen was united in marriage with Miss Madeline Fisher, who was born in Morgan County, West Virginia, daughter of Ross Fisher, and to this union there have been born four children: Helen, Emerson, Madeline and Donald. Mrs. Queen is a member of St. Vincent's Roman Catholic Church, while Mr. Queen belongs to the United Brethren Church and Rev. G. B. Hott's Bible Class. As a fraternalist he belongs to Berkeley Springs Lodge No. 4, K. P., and is also a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. He is president of the Morgan County Poultry Association.

WILLIAM OLIVER HUGHES, Jr., office manager for the West Virginia & Pittsburgh Sand Company at Berkeley Springs, Morgan County, was born in Harford County, Maryland, on the 11th of April, 1833, and is a son of William Oliver Hughes and Estelle (Morgan) Hughes, both likewise natives of that county. The Hughes family was founded in Harford County many generations ago, and there Amos Hughes, paternal grandfather of the subject of this review, passed his entire life, Robert Morgan, his maternal grandfather, likewise having been one of the substantial citizens of that county at the time of his death. William O. Hughes, Sr. was reared and educated in his native county, and as a young man was there appointed deputy sheriff, a position in which he served two terms after which he was sheriff of the county two terms, besides serving as tax collector. He and his wife still reside in Harford County, and Mr. Hughes is now virtually retired after many years of active association with business and in industrial enterprise.

His whose name initiates this review is one of a family of seven children and he received his early education in the schools of his native county. Thereafter he completed a four years' course in Tome Institute at Port Deposit, Maryland, and later took a commercial course at Cook Academy, Elmira, New York. He then, in 1903, came to Berkeley Springs, West Virginia, and took the position of timekeeper for the West Virginia & Pittsburgh Sand Company. He later became bookkeeper and is now the efficient and popular office manager for this important industrial corporation. He is also associated with his father-in-law in the general merchandise business at Berkeley Springs. He is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity and he and his wife are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

In the year 1911 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Hughes and Miss Ellen Belle Hunter, who was born at Berkeley Springs, a daughter of James Hunter, of whom individual mention is made in following biography.

JAMES HUNTER is one of the leading merchants of his native town of Berkeley Springs, the judicial center of Morgan County, and is a representative of one of the old and honored pioneer families of this county, his father, Charles Edward Hunter, likewise having been born at Berkeley Springs, and having been a son of William Hunter, who was prominently identified with the civic and material development of this county in the earlier period of its history. Charles Edward Hunter became a skilled artisan at the carpenter's trade, and was a successful contractor and builder at Berkeley Springs at the time of his death, when but thirty-five years of age. His wife, whose maiden name was Ann McCaffrey, likewise was born and reared at Berkeley Springs, a daughter of John McCaffrey, and she was sixty-six years of age at the time of her death.

David A. Parsons

Hunter, one of a family of five children, was reared and educated at Berkeley Springs, where as a youth he learned the carpenter's trade, to which he devoted his time for a few years. He then engaged in the general mercantile business in his native village, and with this endeavor he has continued his active connection during the intervening years, which have brought to him substantial success. He is a director of the Berkeley Springs Bank, is an active member in political adherency, and he and his wife are members in the Methodist Episcopal Church. When he was twenty-nine years of age Mr. Hunter married Emily F. Frey, who was born on a farm in Bath County, Morgan County, and who died September 15, 1921. She was a daughter of Lewis and Rachel Frey. Mr. and Mrs. Hunter had three children: Ellen Belle is the wife of William O. Hughes, who is the subject of the personal sketch preceding. Anna is the wife of W. J. Noel, and they have two children, Joseph and Elizabeth. Augusta, the youngest of the three daughters, remains at the parental home.

HOWARD PARSONS is one of the alert and progressive business men of the City of Martinsburg, Berkeley County, and he has shown both versatility and resourcefulness in the developing of the popular billiard and bowling establishment known as the Palace, besides which he is a stockholder and director of the Shenandoah Valley Bank & Trust Company and the Carnation Orchard Company. Mr. Parsons was born at Keyser, judicial center of Minnehaha County, West Virginia, on the 18th of April, 1879, and is the son of George W. and Ella Parsons. After having profited by the advantages offered by the public schools in his native place Mr. Parsons took a position as clerk in the forekeeper's department of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and later he was transferred to the transportation department. After continuing his connection with this railway for a period of five years he was for six years the chief clerk in the Berkeley Hotel at Martinsburg, Berkeley County, and for the ensuing three years he conducted a hotel at Waynesboro, Pennsylvania. He then returned to Martinsburg and opened a billiard parlor on the south side of West King Street. One year later, in 1919, he opened a present modern and finely equipped establishment, the Palace, at 121 West King Street, where he has a full complement of the best type of billiard and pool tables and bowling alley, besides having a soda-water fountain carrying full lines of cigars and tobacco, confectionery and sporting goods, in which last department he has the agency for the great sporting-goods house of A. G. Spalding & Company.

Mr. Parsons has received the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite, his basic York Rite affiliation being with Davis Lodge No. 51, A. F. and M. S., in his native Town of Keyser. He is a member of the Temple of the Mystic Shrine in the City of Wheeling, and is affiliated with Martinsburg Lodge No. 778, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; Washington Lodge No. 10, Knights of Pythias; Azrah Temple No. 226, Dramatic Order of Knights of Khorassan; and the local camp of the Order of Woodmen of America, besides which he is a valuer member of the Kiwanis Club in his home city.

Mr. Parsons wedded Miss Henrietta Katherine in his daughter of Herbert E. and Susan (Gardner) Hannon, a sister of Herbert E. Hannis, Jr., district attorney of whom individual mention is made on other pages of this work. Mrs. Parsons died at the age of thirty-two years, and for his second wife Mr. Parsons wedded Miss May Weller, daughter of George W. Weller.

IRVIN CHRISTOPHER, of the Pisgah locality in Preston County, is a splendid exemplar of the rugged, strong and self-reliant existence, his career having covered more than thirty years and having expended itself in hard work, citizenship and constant thoughtfulness and provision for his family.

He was born within a quarter of a mile of where he lives today, at the home of his son Ralph, on April 12, 1839. His father, John Christopher, was an orphan child in Pennsylvania, and at the age of about five or six was taken into the family of Mr. Seaport in the Pisgah community. Mr. Seaport later lost his life by drowning in the Cheat River. John Christopher was reared on the Seaport farm, and while he had few educational advantages, he gained enough literary training to suffice for his business needs. He married Mary Lawson, daughter of Benjamin Lawson, whose farm was in the same neighborhood as the Seaport farm. She died in 1854. Her children were: Frances Ann, who became the wife of George King and lived all her life in Preston County; Irvin and Jehu, twin sons, they having been teamsters in the Civil war and thereafter spending their career as farmers in the Pisgah locality; Marshall, who died at the same time as his mother; and Tazewell, who was a Union soldier at the time of the Civil war, was captured at Harpers Ferry, and died at Annapolis, Maryland, soon after his exchange.

The second wife of John Christopher was Delilah Walls, daughter of William Walls. The children of this marriage were: Aberry, a farmer in Pleasants District of Preston County; John, a farmer near Kingwood; Sylvester, of Pisgah; Mrs. Mattie Cunningham, of Uniontown, Pennsylvania, whose first husband was Jack Sadler; Mollie, wife of Ezra D. Matthew, of Fairmont; Lazona and Columbus, of Fairchance, Pennsylvania; Emmet, of Terra Alta; and Rosa, wife of French Greathouse, of Nilan, Pennsylvania.

Irvin Christopher had the privilege of attending the common schools a few months each winter and the rest of the year he employed himself in the work of the farm, and he remained about the old home until the beginning of the Civil war. He was a staunch Union man, and soon after the outbreak of hostilities he went to Pittsburgh and found employment as a mechanic during the construction of two large gunboats, the Mannanuk and the Umquah. After that he returned to the Big Sandy, and a few months later re-entered the service of the Government as a teamster. He and his brother Jehu drove teams for Colonel Reynolds and Captain Morgand, topographical engineers of the army in the State of Virginia. This phase of army service occupied Irvin Christopher three months. As a civilian he had borne some of the real burdens of warfare, and he then returned and soon after his marriage settled down on a farm. He built a frame house in the very yard where the home of his son Ralph now stands, and here he and Mrs. Christopher set themselves to the task of achieving prosperity from their operations as grain and stock farmers. In the years that followed, Mr. Christopher cleared away extensive tracts of the timber adjacent to the Cheat River, and he and his sons rolled many hundreds of logs into that stream destined for the mills lower down. For some years he and Mrs. Christopher also conducted the boarding camp for the Pittsburgh Lumber Company. In the course of many years Mr. Christopher cleared a large acreage, and of that clearing perhaps 150 acres was converted into fields of tillage, producing such crops as corn, wheat, oats and buckwheat. Mr. Christopher found a market for his grain at the Rockville Mill.

For all the duties implied in this busy program, Mr. Christopher did not neglect his support of schools and educational facilities for the young, and was similarly interested in the welfare of the church. He was reared a Methodist, and in former years was one of the leading members of the Pisgah Church. He and Mrs. Christopher were converted in the same revival meeting.

December 2, 1867, at Laurel Run, his home community, Irvin Christopher married Mary C. King. She was born in Preston County August 19, 1847, and died March 26, 1906, at the age of fifty-nine. She was a daughter of Thomas and Jane (Brandon) King, both born near Pisgah and spent their lives in the community as farmers. There were three daughters and five sons in the King family: Serena, wife of Ami Jenkins; Persis, who married Isaac Jenkins; Mrs. Christopher; Albert, who married Hester Jenkins; William, who married Elizabeth Street; George, whose wife was Frances Ann Christopher; Eugeneus, who married Mary Smith; and Thomas, who married Catherine Haynes. The sons Albert and William were Federal soldiers, were taken prisoners and both died in Andersonville Prison.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Christopher were: Tekoah, who married Mary Greathouse, and is a coal miner in Pennsylvania; Ralph Spencer; Orpha Jane, wife of Dr. J. A. Graham, of Fairmont; Minnie Belle, wife of Arthur J. Myers, of San Francisco, California; Persis Irene, wife of Joseph Kaszer, of Morgantown; Daisy Pearl, wife of Charles G. Ryan, of Morgantown.

Ralph S. Christopher has in his individual career supplemented and extended the worthy industry and influence of his honored father. He was born on the farm that he now owns April 8, 1872, grew up there, had a home school education, and worked in the fields, in the timber, and among the stock, and this early experience qualified him for the activities of the duties that have chiefly claimed his attention in manhood. He is still operating a saw mill on Christopher Run, and has in addition the responsibilities of a farm of 450 acres. Mr. Christopher has served as a trustee of the Grant District schools, and is a republican. His father cast a ballot for Abraham Lincoln during Civil war times.

September 17, 1892, Ralph S. Christopher married in Garrett County, Maryland, Miss Effie E. Ryan, daughter of Edward D. and Elizabeth (Wolfe) Ryan, the latter a daughter of Augustine Wolfe. Edward D. Ryan was a native of Ireland, came to America at the age of eleven years, and thereafter made his own way in the world. He soon entered the Union Army, served three years and then re-enlisted and came out of the army uninjured. He established his home three miles from Pisgah, and lived in that locality the rest of his days. He was a man of great industry and vigor, and much of the time he left his wife and children to look after the farm while he supplemented his living by work in the coke regions. He died at the age of fifty-three, and his widow survived him to the age of sixty-six. Their children were: Thomas J., Mrs. Julia Ann King, Daniel A., Ross F., Sanford E. and Mrs. Ralph S. Christopher.

Of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Christopher the oldest is Eddie Earl, who still remains in the Pisgah community and married Edna Jenkins. At the time of the World war he enlisted in Company I of the Fifty-second Infantry, was trained at Fort Thomas and Camp Forrest, Georgia, and from Camp Upton, New York, went overseas and was in the front line of the Argonne Forest at the time of the signing of the armistice and later was with the Army of Occupation in Germany. He returned home in June, 1919, his only injury being a slight gassing in the trenches. The second child, Harry Dayton, worked in the coal mines all through the war period and is now a merchant at Pisgah. He married Merle Everly, and their children are, Irvin Dale, Wilton L. and Warren G. The third son, Lloyd Irvin, was in the spruce division of the aeroplane service early in the war, was transferred to the Four Hundred and Fifth Aero Construction Squadron at Vancouver Barracks, Washington, and prior to the war was for six years in the employ of the Akron Rubber Works in Ohio. He is now in the navy, on the U. S. S. Prometheus. The fourth child is Hattie, wife of Lloyd O'Neal, of the Pisgah community. The younger children, as yet unmarried, are Vida Merle, Kermit Ray, Kenneth K., Erma Pearl, Pansy Pluma, Mary Marie, Dallas Darl, Quentin Spencer, Una Florine, Berta Love and Lola Valda. It is a roll of honor, one of the most remarkable family groups in Preston County or West Virginia, and for two parents to have brought into the world such a worthy heritage and for them to have been preserved without a misfortune is an interesting exception to the lot of mortal history.

JOHN LEE COULTER, dean of the College of Agriculture and director of the Experimental Station of the University of West Virginia at Morgantown, was born on the family farm at Mallory, Minnesota, April 16, 1881, a son of John and Catherine (McVeety) Coulter, natives of Ontario, Canada.

The American ancestors of the Coulter family were members of the Clan Coulter of Ayreshire, Scotland, came to America in Colonial days, going to the J. River settlements in Virginia. Their descendants spread into Maryland, Pennsylvania, and what is now Virginia, and while John Lee Coulter is western born is identified with early West Virginia. John Coulter born in 1846, and his wife in 1850. The McV. originated in the same part of Scotland as did the Coulter but the former came by the way of Canada, where were residing temporarily at the time of the birth of their daughter, Catherine. Both families settled in same section of Minnesota, and the parents of John grew up on neighboring farms in Ontario, Canada. They are still living, and while Mr. Coulter still retains large farming lands in Minnesota, where they spend summers, their winters are spent visiting among their children.

John Lee Coulter was reared on the Minnesota farm received his early education in the school established by the Coulters and their neighbors, which was taught by Scotch school-teacher who had been brought to America by them. Mr. Coulter later attended high school and entered the University of North Dakota, which institute was situated across the river, eight miles distant from Coulter farm, so that the youth lived at home while student there. He was graduated a Bachelor of Science in the class of 1904, and a Master of Arts in 1905, during his two last years studied law. In 1908 the degree of Doctor of Philosophy was conferred upon him by University of Wisconsin. Before this he studied at University of Minnesota and at Iowa State College specializing in agriculture at both institutions. He was an instructor at Iowa State College in 1907 and at University of Minnesota in 1908 and 1909, and in 1909 assistant professor in rural economics at the University of Minnesota, also holding that chair during a part of 1910. During those two years he also was special agent of Minnesota Board of Health. He became expert special agent of the United States Census Bureau in 1910, held that position until 1912; was in charge of the Division of Agriculture from 1912 to 1914; professor in rural economics at Knapp's School of Country Life, Nashville, Tennessee, during 1914-1915; and since the latter year has been dean of the College of Agriculture and director of the Experimental Station, University of West Virginia.

When Doctor Coulter came to the University of West Virginia in 1915 all the work in agriculture and rural economics was housed in the basements of different university buildings and all farm work done on about five acres of farm land. As an indication of the advancement made during his administration it may be stated that in 1921 there were about 400 students enrolled, there was complete new equipment housed in new buildings, and the seven farms, aggregating about 2,000 acres, were under cultivation, all being self-supporting. Doctor Coulter is well known as a lecturer, having held that post at Georgetown Washington University from 1910 to 1913 and at the Summer School of the South in 1910 and 1911. He served as a member and secretary of the United States Commission sent to Europe to investigate rural credits and co-operation in 1913, spending the summer in Europe. He has been a member of the editorial staff of the "American Economic Review," dealing with agricultural subjects.

During the World war Doctor Coulter served on the West Virginia Council of Defense as assistant state food administrator and later as expert for the Federal Council in charge of furnishing agricultural products to the Allies and the War Industry Board in charge of agricultural questions. Asking for active service, he was commissioned major in the summer of 1918 and spent seven months overseas. After the signing of the armistice he was agricultural advisor to the French Government in the rehabilitation of agriculture and was decorated by that Government for his services. He is at present (1921) commander of Monongahela Post, American Legion, and Americanization officer for the State of West Virginia. He is the author of "Economic History of the Red River Valley" (1910) "Co-operation Among Farmers" (1911), and of about on different public documents dealing with different aspects of agriculture. He was formerly a member of the editorial staff of the quarterly journal of the American Agricultural Association, and has contributed many articles delivered many addresses on economic and agricultural subjects.

Doctor Coulter is a Fellow of the American Statistical Association, and a member of the American Economic Association, the American Political Science Association, the American Association of Labor Legislation and the American Association of Agricultural Colleges and Experimental Stations, of which last-named he was vice president in 1917. He belongs also to the Morgantown Yacht Club, of which he is a director; the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce; the Cosmos Club of Washington, D. C.; and the Lodge of Perfection at Morgantown. He is a member of the board of directors of the Commercial Bank of Morgantown.

On September 23, 1911, Doctor Coulter was united in marriage with Miss Phoebe Everett Frost, daughter of Dr. H. Frost, a soldier during the Civil war, a political writer of note and a merchant and a cotton, rice and sugar planter of Richmond, Texas. Her mother, Mary Schley, of Georgia, belonged to the Admiral Schley family of U. S. Navy fame. Doctor and Mrs. Coulter are the parents of two children: John Lee, Jr., born August 1, 1912; and Kirkley Schley, born July 26, 1914.

DR. HOLMES HITE. The cause of science in general, and the entire agricultural industry of West Virginia, sustained heavy loss in the death of Bert Holmes Hite, in October, 1916. During his long and active association with the University he had carried on work that advanced agricultural chemistry to one of the fundamental sciences in the welfare of the human race.

He was still a young man when death took him away from his duties. He was born at Morgantown, August 18, 1871, son of Isaac and Catherine (Hennen) Hite. This branch of the Hite family came originally from Strassburg, Alsace-Lorraine, France, and was established in Virginia during the Revolutionary days by Matthew Hite, the American doctor, who went to Virginia from Philadelphia. He died as an officer under General Washington in the Revolutionary war, afterward became the owner of much land in this part of West Virginia, included in which the old Hite homestead in Monongalia County. He died when full of years, at Clarksburg. He married Mary Doherty and, following the line of direct descent, his son, George Hite, married Sallie Rusk, and their daughter married Lucy Longacre.

George Hite, son of George and Lucy (Longacre) Hite, was born at Morgantown, West Virginia, February 20, 1892, and died July 24, 1916. He married Catherine Hennen, who was born at Morgantown, July 6, 1832, and died August 27, 1919. She was a daughter of Robert P. Elizabeth (Wilson) Hennen, the latter of whom was a native of New Jersey, and died in 1871. Robert P. Hennen was born in Pennsylvania, a son of Matthew Hennen, who was the founder of the Hennen family in West Virginia.

Robert P. Hennen was a cabinetmaker at Morgantown for many years and took part in public affairs, being as a member of the borough council in early years. He died at Morgantown in 1873. Of Isaac Hite's family of one son and two daughters, Bert Holmes was the first born. His sisters, Alice Olive and Elizabeth Lee, resided at Morgantown, the former being the wife of Dr. Russell L. Morris of the University of West Virginia, and the latter the wife of Dr. D. N. Courtney.

The late Bert Holmes Hite was reared on a farm, and received his early education in the country, and in 1890 graduated Bachelor of Science from the University of West Virginia. From 1891 to 1895 he was at Johns Hopkins University, being holder of scholarships in chemistry, lecturing and assistant two years to the renowned Professor William of Johns Hopkins, and had a two years' fellowship in chemistry in that institution. In 1895 he was appointed chemist and vice-director of the experiment station of West Virginia University, and in connection with the work he did there he was also professor of agricultural chemistry of the University, chemist of the West Virginia State Geological and Economic Survey and in 1918 was appointed a consulting chemist to the Ordnance Department, United States Army.

Professor Hite was a Fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, a member of the American Society of Chemists, of the American Association of Officials of Agricultural Chemists, American Association of Food Central Officers, the American Electro Chemical Society, and of Franklin Institute, Philadelphia, which scientific body in 1921 awarded him the Longstreth medal for pasteurization and sterilization. He did notable work in molecular weights, reclamation of worn-out soils, sterilization by pressure, fixation of nitrogen, and was constantly experimenting with different ends in view. He made a life study of the soil of West Virginia, especially of the worn out soils, and his study of causes of the wide spread soil condition was supplemented by methods for reclaiming such soils. In his work with very high pressure he was a pioneer. For a number of years he carried on fixation of nitrogen at the experiment station of the University, having started this work at a time when very few people had any interest in or conception of what it meant to agriculture for national defense or world benefit.

In 1898 Professor Hite married Rachel Evelyn Pratt, who was born at Walker, Missouri, and is a daughter of Dr. Charles E. Pratt, of Wheeling, West Virginia. Mrs. Hite was graduated with the A. B. degree in the class of 1898, West Virginia University.

ALBERT H. KUNST, M. D. There is an element of unqualified distinction in both the personal career and ancestral history of this honored citizen of Parkersburg, who achieved high reputation in the work of his chosen profession, who made a record of fine administrative and constructive service in connection with railroad building and administration in West Virginia, and who has been influential in civic affairs and in the promotion of important business enterprises. He is now living virtually retired from active professional and business life, but finds ample demands upon his time and attention in the supervision of his substantial interests.

Dr. Albert Henry Kunst was born in Pruntytown, Virginia, now West Virginia, and is a son of the late G. H. A. and Sarah (Gauer) Kunst. The latter was born and brought up in the State of Maryland. His paternal grandfather, John Conrad Kunst, was a distinguished lawyer in Germany, where he passed his entire life, and where was solemnized his marriage to the daughter of a French nobleman who was notable for high literary attainments, and who was banished from Alsace-Lorraine on account of his religious proclivities.

G. H. A. Kunst was born in Germany on the 12th of March, 1796, and in his native land he received the best of educational advantages. At the age of sixteen he volunteered his service in the German army, and as a first lieutenant he distinguished himself in engagements against the armies of the great Napoleon, including the battle of Elba. As the representative of a prominent commercial house in the City of Bremen Mr. Kunst came to the United States in the year 1822, and after residing for some time in the City of Baltimore, Maryland, he established his home at Petersburg, Virginia. Later, for a year or more, he engaged in the tobacco-warehouse business in the City of Richmond, Virginia. Thence he returned to Maryland, but in 1844 he came to what is now Taylor County, West Virginia, and established his residence at Pruntytown. With the exception of about one year passed at Wheeling he ever afterward maintained his home in Taylor County, and there his death occurred on the 9th of July, 1875.

Soon after his arrival in the United States G. H. A. Kunst renounced his allegiance to the emperor of Germany and entered application for naturalization as a citizen of the land of his adoption. This was no idle or insignificant action on his part, for it meant to him the giving to the United States the full measure of his loyalty and appreciation, and that he was remembered and honored by his oath of allegiance was emphatically shown at the time when the Civil war was precipitated on the nation. The greater number of his friends and neighbors espoused the cause of the Confederate states at this period in the history of the nation, but though he was vigorously importuned to take similar action he steadfastly refused, as he held that his oath of allegiance to the United States rendered such an act on his part a matter of personal dishonor. Because of his high intellectual attainments, his sterling character and his gracious personality he commanded unequivocal confidence and esteem and was well qualified for leadership in community sentiment and action. He accumulated a substantial fortune, as gauged by the standards of the locality and period, and he represented the best element of citizenship in the land of his adoption and of his strong and abiding appreciation and loyalty. In politics Mr. Kunst was originally an old-line whig, and upon the decadence of that party and the organization of the republican party he transferred his allegiance to the latter, the principles of which thereafter received his staunch support until the close of his long, earnest and useful life.

Dr. Albert H. Kunst acquired his preliminary education in the public schools of his native county, and completed his academic studies under the direction of private tutors. In 1863 he served as the first deputy recorder of Taylor County, West Virginia, and performed all the duties of the office in the absence of the recorder, who was a captain in the Union Army. In consonance with his ambition and well formulated plans he finally began the study of medicine, later entered Starling Medical College, which is now the Medical Department of the University of Ohio, in the City of Columbus. In this celebrated institution he was graduated in March, 1868, and soon after thus receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine he was appointed assistant physician at the West Virginia Hospital for the Insane, at Weston, West Virginia, a position which he continued the incumbent about thirteen years. Thereafter he developed a large and representative private practice at Weston, the judicial center of Lewis County, and he continued a close and appreciative student of the best standard and periodical literature of his profession, in which he achieved more than local distinction and to the literature of which he made numerous and valuable contributions. His monograph entitled "Freaks of the Brain," published in a leading medical journal, attracted wide attention, and his work entitled "Puerperal Insanity" was eventually embodied in a medical textbook. At one time Doctor Kunst served as president of the West Virginia State Medical Society, and he did much to raise the standards of his profession in his native state. For some time he served as president of the Board of Pension Examining Surgeons for Lewis County. At Weston he became a citizen of much prominence and influence, and there he was for years the president of the National Exchange Bank. He finally withdrew from the practice of his profession to direct his energies into railroad promotive and construction work. In January, 1875, citizens of Lewis County organized and incorporated the Weston & West Fork Railroad Company, formed for the purpose of building a line between Clarksburg and Weston. A narrow-gauge road was completed and in the passing years was operated under different titles. Doctor Kunst eventually became president of the road. In 1883 a narrow-gauge line was completed between Weston and Buckhannon, and of this Doctor Kunst became the superintendent. He retained both of these official positions until 1888, in which year he was made president of the latter road also. It was freely predicted that these two lines could not be operated profitably, but under the vigorous and progressive administration of Doctor Kunst both were successfully maintained in operation for years. In 1889, owing to the increase in traffic and the general expediency of such action, the roads were changed to the standard gauge, and he then became vice president and general manager of the West Virginia and Pittsburgh Railroad which was extended to Pickens and Richwood, respectively. He continued in these positions until road passed into the hands of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company.

Governor A. B. White appointed Doctor Kunst superintendent of the West Virginia State Hospital for the Insane at Weston, and he was reappointed by Governor W. G. Dawson. He gave a characteristically able administration of this office, and after filling the same about five years he resigned and removed to the City of Parkersburg, where he has since lived virtually retired, though is at the present time vice president of the Hornor-Gayle Company, wholesale grocers, and a director of the Kobgard Company, wholesale dry-goods merchants, both of these representative houses having headquarters at Clarksburg.

Doctor Kunst served four years as a member of the Board of Regents of the University of West Virginia. The doctor still maintains affiliation with the West Virginia State Medical Society and the Wood County Medical Society. His political allegiance is given to the republican party, and he is an earnest communicant of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

March 16, 1875, recorded the marriage of Doctor Kunst and Miss Mary Matilda Camden, a daughter of Col. John S. Camden and a sister of the late United States Senator Camden of West Virginia. Of the four children of the union two survive the mother, the names of the four being entered in respective order of birth: George K. Earle, Irene and Johnson Camden. The two last mentioned are living. George K. received a military schooling, served as a battalion adjutant in the Spanish-American war, was later a member of the military staff of Governor McCorkle, as well as that of the latter's successor, Governor White, and he was a young man of fine character and great promise when death ended his career. Earle had encouraged literary ability and was the author of a number of published short stories and two books—"Justine" and "The Mystery of Evangeline Fairfax." Irene is the wife of William B. Craig, a prominent lawyer at Selma, Alabama. As a member of the State Senate, when but little past his legal majority, Mr. Craig gave specially effective service in codifying the laws of Alabama, and later he represents that state two terms in the United States Congress. Johnson Camden, the youngest of the children, resides at Parkersburg. The loved and devoted wife and mother passed to the life eternal in 1907, she having been a devout communicant of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

In 1913 was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Kunst and Miss Loretto Griffin, daughter of Hon. T. R. Griffin who served for twenty consecutive years as mayor of Somerset, Kentucky, and was otherwise prominent and influential in the old Blue Grass State. Mrs. Kunst, who is an artist by profession, is the gracious and popular chaste laine of the beautiful home which she and her husband have made a center of generous hospitality.

RICHARD R. FELLER, of Martinsburg, Berkeley County, sole proprietor of the substantial business conducted under the title of the Richard R. Feller Company and also of the Standard Concrete Pipe Company and has gained high reputation in engineering and construction work of important order. He was born in the homestead of the Feller family at the corner of North Raleigh and West Martin streets, Martinsburg, and the date of his birth was January 17, 1891. His father, Charles H. Feller, was born in Baltimore, Maryland, January 12, 1852, a son of John Feller who was born in Hesse Cassel, Germany, in March, 1820, and whose father, John Feller, with wife and their four sons and one daughter, immigrated to America and purchased land near Cleveland, Ohio, where he planted a vineyard and became a manufacturer of wine. After the death of his wife John Feller removed to Cleveland, in which city he died at the age of ninety years, his wife having died two years previously. They had five children: John, Charles, August, Baltzer and Mary. John Feller acquired a good education in his native land, and there learned the trade of weaver. He was a young man when he accompad his parents to America, and after residing for a time Ohio he removed to Indiana, where he worked at his de. Later he removed to Baltimore, Maryland, and for years he was employed in the construction department the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, after which he was a ight conductor for this road. In 1857 he came to what now West Virginia and engaged in the hotel business at Martinsburg, at the corner of Queen and West Race streets. Afterward he erected a commodious and substantial hotel, which he named the Shenandoah House. After rating this hotel a number of years he retired, and he a seventy-nine years of age at the time of his death. The maiden name of his wife was Catherine Schick, she ing born in Hesse Cassel, Germany, and having a child when her widowed mother came to the United tes and with her children established a home in Richad, Virginia. Mrs. Catherine Feller died at the age of enty-four years. Her children were six in number: Charles H. John A., George M., William S., Julia W. and Elizabeth R.

Charles H. Feller attended a private school at Martinsburg and for two years was a student in Knapp's German American Institute at Baltimore. Thereafter he was a time his father's assistant in the hotel at Martinsburg, and he then engaged in the grocery business, at the corner of West Martin and North Raleigh streets, where he continued the enterprise successfully for a period of twenty-years, since which time he has lived virtually retired.

July 30, 1874, at Sacramento, California, Charles H. Feller wedded Mary L. Roeder, who was born in a log house it stood at the northwest corner of Raleigh and West Martin streets, Martinsburg. Her father, Ernest Roeder, was born in Saxony, Germany, and came to the United States in company with his wife and their one child. For time he was employed in the United States Arsenal at Harpers Ferry, now in West Virginia, and he then removed (Martinsburg and purchased one-fourth of the block of land at the intersection of West Martin and North Raleigh streets, the family home being established in the little log house that was then the only building on this land. Mr. Roeder was long engaged in the grocery business at Martinsburg, and thus continued until his death, in 1874, at the age of forty-nine years. His widow and children went to California, but Mrs. Roeder later returned to Martinsburg, where she died at the age of seventy-seven years. Charles Feller purchased and still owns the former Roeder property mentioned above, the land now being the site of eight houses and a store building. He and his wife have two children, Richard R. and Charles V. Mr. and Mrs. Feller are active communicants of the Lutheran Church.

After attending the public schools and the Dickinson Preparatory School, Richard R. Feller completed a course in civil engineering at the University of West Virginia, in which he was graduated in 1913. Thereafter he was identified with engineering construction work at various places along the Ohio River until 1919, when he organized the Richard R. Feller Company, of the business of which he has been sole owner since 1920. In 1921 he completed a $140,000 contract in the construction of six miles of asphalt on the Winchester Turnpike, which connects Martinsburg and Winchester and which was traversed by both Federal and Confederate troops in the Civil war. Mr. Feller owned many war implements and relics which engaged in preserving this old-time thoroughfare, and he retains the same as historic souvenirs. He owns and occupies a modern house which he erected on the site of the old log house which had been owned by his father and maternal grandfather.

On December 16, 1914, Mr. Feller married Mary Ethel Tabler, who was born on a farm in Opequan District, Freestone County, a daughter of Elijah S. and Catherine (Whitmore) Tabler and granddaughter of Levi and Ruth (Shams) Tabler. Her maternal grandparents were Samuel and Catherine (Evers) Whitmore. Mrs. Feller is a member of the Reformed Church. Three of her uncles are physicians, two of her uncles became physicians and one brother became a physician. Mr. Feller is a communicant of St. John's Lutheran Church, and his wife, of Christ Reformed Church. He is affiliated with the Kappa Alpha college fraternity; Washington Lodge No. 1, Knights of Pythias; and Martinsburg Lodge No. 778, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

RICHARD HENRY EDMONDSON, M. D. The medical profession has been very prominent in the wonderful scientific achievements of the past century and that of the present. Through the bequests of great wealth trained medical men are devoting their time in laboratories fitted with every possible adjunct for study, to the solving of the problems which so closely touch humanity, its beginning, existence and end. Not every medical man is permitted these advantages, however enthused he may be with professional interest, but the discoveries which come to him in his daily practice are, perhaps, quite as creditable, and certainly they are frequent enough to demonstrate great ability. Since 1902 Dr. Richard Henry Edmondson has been accounted one of the leading physicians and surgeons of Morgantown, and during that period has proved his skill as a professional man and his worth as a citizen. Not only has he won the confidence of a large and remunerative practice, but also the esteem and respect of his fellow-practitioners, who have honored him frequently by election to posts of responsibility.

Doctor Edmondson was born in the City of Richmond, Virginia, May 22, 1867, a son of Richard Howell and Mary Missouri (Montgomery) Edmondson. This branch of the Edmondson family traces its genealogy to Samuel Edmondson, who was born in 1750 and died about 1830. He served in the Continental army during the Revolutionary war as quartermaster in the Fourth Maryland Battalion of the Flying Camp in June, 1776, was hospital surgeon's mate from June, 1777, to June 20, 1780, and was hospital physician and surgeon from September 20, 1781, to the close of the war. He married Martha Elmore.

Richard Coleman Edmondson, son of Samuel and Martha (Elmore) Edmondson, was born in 1789, and died November 6, 1859. On May 15, 1823, he married Susan Howell Chastain, who was born December 23, 1803, and died November 14, 1891, daughter of Isham and Sallie (Howell) Chastain. Richard Howell Edmondson, son of Richard Coleman and Susan Edmondson, was born February 2, 1829, and died June 23, 1910. He was a resident of Halifax Court House, Virginia, where his parents also resided, but in 1880 removed to Austin, Texas. On July 2, 1860, he married Mary Missouri Montgomery, daughter of Price and Elizabeth (McMurty) Montgomery. Mrs. Edmondson, who was born February 6, 1840, died September 2, 1868.

Richard Henry Edmondson attended a private school at Austin, Texas, until 1882, in which year he entered the University of the South at Sewanee, Tennessee, and was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1885. Subsequently he entered Hahnemann Medical College, Philadelphia, from which he was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1890, and began practice at Austin, Texas. He later followed his profession in Arizona and New Mexico until 1902, in which year he went to New York City and took a post-graduate course in the Post-Graduate Medical School. In June, 1902, he located at Morgantown, and in the following year was elected city and county health officer, a position in which he served during that year and 1904. In June, 1921, he was appointed city health officer. Doctor Edmondson was one of the incorporators and first secretary of the Morgantown City Hospital Association, and has served as president of the Monongalia County Medical Society. He was a delegate to the State Medical Society at its convention held at White Sulphur Springs in 1911, at which meeting he was elected counsellor for the second district. He is a member of the Sons of the American Revolution, of the Masonic Order and of the Improved Order of Red Men.

The following letter contains the war record of Doctor Edmondson:

On October 27, 1897, Doctor Edmondson was united in marriage with Miss Harriette Frances Codwise, daughter of Edward B. and Emma (Snyder) Codwise, of Kingston, New York. Mrs. Edmondson is ex-state regent and ex-vice president general of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution. Four children have come to Doctor and Mrs. Edmondson: Helen Louise, born October 23, 1898, at Gallup, New Mexico; Gladys Chastain, born May 22, 1900, at Gallup, New Mexico; Harriette Codwise, born July 16, 1905, at Morgantown, West Virginia; and Richard Edward, born April 20, 1910, at Morgantown, West Virginia.

H. W. RUSSELL has been an active member of the Parkersburg bar for twenty years, has also acquired interests that identify him with commercial affairs here, and he has been honored highly by the local bodies of Masonry.

Mr. Russell was born in Chester County, Pennsylvania, July 21, 1878. His grandfather, Alexander Russell, was born in the same section of Chester County April 15, 1780. He was a Presbyterian and spent his active life engaged in farming. In 1817 he married Hannah Dickey, who was born in 1798 and died in 1883. The youngest of their children was William C. Russell, who was born in Chester County and was also satisfied with farming as a life occupation. He died in May, 1903. September 4, 1866, he married Jennie Bunting, who was born in Chester County in 1849 and died March 4, 1912. Her father was Horatio A. Bunting.

Second among the three children of his parents, Horatio W. Russell grew up on the home farm in Chester County, attended township schools and in the fall of 1892 entered the senior class of the high school at Oxford, Pennsylvania, graduating in 1893. Then followed two years in the Oxford Academy, and in 1898 he received his A. B. degree from Lincoln University. The same year he entered the Dickinson School of Law at Carlisle, and was graduated in June, 1900. Though admitted to the Pennsylvania bar, he did not practice in his native state, but in March, 1901, removed to Parkersburg, where his influence as a lawyer and citizen has been steadily rising. In 1911 he formed a law partnership with Charles A. Kreps, under the firm name of Kreps & Russell.

Mr. Russell is a director of the Graham-Bumgarner Company and of the Acme Fishing Tool Company. To law and business he has given his time and abilities without reserve, and has not been in politics beyond voting as a republican. He is of the same religious faith as his ancestors, a Presbyterian, is a member of the Parkersburg

Country Club, and is affiliated with the Odd Fellows, and a member of all the York Rite bodies of Masonry at Parkersburg. In 1920 he had the honor of seeing Jerusalem Chapter No. 3, R. A. M., as high priest, during 1920-21 was eminent commander of Calvary Commandery No. 3, K. T.

On September 16, 1903, Mr. Russell married Carry Stevenson, daughter of Orlando and Flora V. (Baker) Stevenson, and a granddaughter of Governor William Stevenson of West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Russell have two daughters, Mary Constance and Ruth Stevenson.

WILLIAM E. STEVENSON, who was governor of West Virginia from 1869 to 1871, was born at Warren in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, March 18, 1820. Oldest in a family of nine children, he achieved conspicuous success after a strenuous struggle with the circumstances of near poverty. When he was about ten years of age he was apprenticed to a cabinet maker in Pittsburgh, and eventually became one of the skilled workmen in that line in that city. During working hours he attended local debating clubs, thus improving his education and laying the basis of a training for public life. In 1856 he was elected a member of the Pennsylvania Legislature, and participated in the session which resulted in the election of Simon Cameron to the United States Senate.

Before his term expired he left Pennsylvania, and in the spring of 1857 bought a farm at Valley Mills in York County in what is now West Virginia. Though busy with his farm work, his natural gifts for leadership soon attracted attention, and in the national crisis that arose in 1860 he proved one of the clearest voices in behalf of the union of the states in this section of Virginia. At this time the charge was made against him that he was circulating an incendiary document, "Helper's Impending Crisis," a copy of which he had in his library and loaned to neighbors by request. The charge was brought to the attention of the Grand Jury, and he was indicted in the County Court at Parkersburg. The excitement was intense. His life was threatened, and he was advised to leave the state until the excitement had abated. He promptly went to Parkersburg, accompanied by a large crowd of his neighbors, many of whom were opposed to him politically, but were prompted by the ties of friendship, and demanded a trial. Amid the confusion and excitement such excitement the trial was postponed, and remains postponed to this day. In the canvass of 1860 upon the question of secession, he took an active part, speaking in Wood and surrounding counties, and labored with untiring zeal for the Union cause. There are few men whose eloquence and ceaseless labors have contributed largely to the vote which that section of the state voted against secession; Governors Stevenson and Boreman, and the late John Jay Jackson, all of whom are now dead.

In the formation of the new state he took an active and conspicuous part, being a member of the convention of November 26, 1861, to frame a constitution for the proposed state. Delegate Stevenson by his excellent sense and sagacious judgment contributed materially to the success of the convention and afterward to the ratification of the constitution by the people. He was next elected a member of the State Senate, serving therein from 1863, to the close of 1868. During the last three years of his legislative term he was president of the Senate. In 1868 he was elected governor of the state for the first beginning March 4, 1869, and occupied that position until the first removal of the capitol to Charleston, serving his term in Wheeling and half in Charleston. He was re-nominated in 1870, but was defeated in the election by the Hon. John J. Jacob. He was the third republican governor of the state, being preceded by Governors Farnsworth and Farnsworth. Soon after he retired from the governor's chair he became associated with O. G. Scott in the publication of the State Journal at Parkersburg. He was active in its management until the sale of the Journal in January, 1882. In the meantime, in 1880, he had moved from his farm to Parkersburg. In 1881 he became receiver of the West Virginia Oil and Oil Land and held that office until a few days before his death.

As governor he has been described as a man of liberal and as vigorous progressive views, seeking to encourage projects of internal improvement and industrial enterprise, and was particularly interested in creating a real public school system for the state, and much of West Virginia's notable progress in educational affairs goes back to the influences set in motion by Governor Stevenson. His administration also promoted an era of good feeling. He was a great friend of the public schools, and the first high school established in the state was in the City of Parkersburg, West Virginia.

Writing from an intimate biography: "The prominent characteristics of Governor Stevenson were a strong will, sound judgment, a large fund of humor, keen knowledge of human nature, rigid devotion to that which he believed to be right, and an integrity of character that riches dared not attempt to bribe and power could not corrupt. In all his intercourse with men we have never met with a character more beautiful in simplicity and gentleness and more thoroughly honest than his. His was a singularly well-balanced mind, and his great personal dignity of character as well as his kindness of heart caused him to hold respect the worth and dignity of other men from whose opinions he differed, and also brought about a consideration for the worth of the opinions themselves. His scholarship was wide and profound, though the result of laborious, thorough and systematic reading, rather than of intensive academic training. So wide indeed was his range that he was equally at home in the scientific principles of mining, in those of law and government, or in those of literature and art. As a writer he was forcible, truthful, dramatic, humorous, sure of his points and he never wandered from his theme. His fund of humor was large, and he seldom made a speech whose appeal was not made stronger by that peculiarly human touch.

In 1842 he married Sarah Clotworthy, a native of Philadelphia. His son Orlando married Flora V. Baker, and his daughter, Carrye A., is the wife of Horatio W. Russell of Parkersburg.

WAITMAN BARBE. Former students and graduates of the University of West Virginia as long ago as a quarter of a century will recall with special gratitude their influential associations with the professor of English, Waitman Barbe. Waitman Barbe is one of West Virginia's distinguished scholars and educators, and has been officially identified with the State University since 1895.

The family has been in America for a number of generations, but the original seat was in the neighborhood of Remy, a few miles distant from the old fort St. Barbe Corraire, France. The grandfather of Waitman Barbe is Henry Barbe, who lived in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia, but subsequently removed to Monongalia County and bought several hundred acres lying on the west side of the Monongahela River in Grant District. He lived there the rest of his life, and he and his wife were buried in the Barbe burying ground, not far from Union Church. John Barbe, father of Waitman, was born in Shenandoah County, Virginia, in 1824, and was a youth when his parents moved to Monongalia County. He continued the education to which he had been reared, farming, but late in life he moved to Parkersburg, West Virginia, where he died in 1905, at the age of eighty-one. His wife, who died six years later, just at the same age, was Margaret Esther Robinson, who was born in what is now West Virginia in 1824, daughter of James Robinson, who was of English descent. John and Margaret Barbe had been married for nearly sixty years and for the same length of time had been members of the Presbyterian Church. Of their family there were two sons and four daughters. Waitman Barbe is the youngest.

Waitman Barbe was born in Grant District of Monongalia County November 19, 1864. The environment of the home stimulated rather than hindered his aspirations for scholarship. He attended country schools, the preparatory school of the State University, and in 1884 graduated

A. B. from West Virginia University. He received his Master of Arts degree in 1887 and his Master of Science in 1897, and during 1900-01 was a graduate student in Harvard University. He also was a student in Oxford University in England during 1908-09. Denison University of Ohio conferred upon him the degree Litt. D. in 1904.

After leaving college Doctor Barbe took up newspaper work, and from 1889 to 1895 was city editor or managing editor of the Daily State Journal of Parkersburg. In 1895 he returned to his alma mater as assistant to the president and associate professor of English. These duties he performed until 1910, and since that year he has held the chair of English and is also director of the summer school of the University. From 1904 to 1921 he was editor of the West Virginia School Journal.

Doctor Barbe is a member of the national scholarship fraternity Phi Beta Kappa, the social fraternity Beta Theta Pi, is a member of the American Association of University Professors, the Harvard Graduate Club, was president of the West Virginia Education Association in 1917-18, was vice president of the National Education Association for one term, and was a member of the Board of Regents of West Virginia State Normal schools from 1895 to 1902. He is a member of the official board of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Outside of that great body of former students who have derived inspiration and instruction from him Doctor Barbe is known in the world of letters through his authorship of "Ashes and Incense," poems, published in 1891; "In the Virginias," a volume of stories published in 1896; "Going to College," 1899; "The Study of Poetry," 1905; "Famous Poems Explained," 1909; and "Great Poems Interpreted," 1913. The last two works are very widely used as text books in schools and colleges of America, and they are also found in a number of universities and public libraries in Europe.

June 6, 1894, Doctor Barbe married Miss Clara Louise Gould, a native of Parkersburg, daughter of S. L. and Amanda (Worley) Gould. Her father was born at the Village of Caldwell, a suburb of Newark, Essex County, New Jersey, distinguished as the birthplace of former president Grover Cleveland, and her mother was a native of New Lexington, Ohio. After taking up his residence in West Virginia S. L. Gould established, with his three brothers, some forty years ago, the Parkersburg Mill Company, and was associated with its management and operations for many years.

JOHN W. LLOYD was paid only $1.00 a week for the first service he could render the business community of Martinsburg, and now, in the prime of life, he has given many years to a work that has taken on interesting and progressive variety and has constituted him in an important sense a man of affairs.

Mr. Lloyd was born at Lectown in Jefferson County, West Virginia, son of John T. Lloyd, who was born in Loudoun County, Virginia, in 1851, a grandson of Harrison Lloyd, a native of the same county, and a great-grandson of Harrison Lloyd, Sr., who was born in Pennsylvania and, according to a family tradition, was a lineal descendant of one of two brothers, natives of Wales, who came to Pennsylvania with William Penn. Harrison Lloyd, Sr., left Pennsylvania and located in Loudoun County and lived out his life there. Harrison Lloyd, Jr., grew up on a farm, and continued farming until late in life, when he retired to Martinsburg, where he died at the age of eighty-four. He married Eliza Bell, a native of Jefferson County, who died in Martinsburg. They both were active in the membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

John T. Lloyd spent some of his earlier years as a farmer, and after removing to Martinsburg engaged in the grocery business and is now living retired. He married Mary Elizabeth Nicholson, who was born in Jefferson County and died at the age of sixty-three. Her four children were: Annie M., who married John C. Keller; Elizabeth Alvira, who married Claude Dunham; Nora Ornett, who married Frank Watson and lives in Warren, Ohio; and John W.

John W. Lloyd was reared and educated in Martinsburg, and after completing his course in the public schools earned his $1 a week wages as an office boy. He was given twice that amount as clerk in a grocery store, and subsequently worked in a mill at $3 a week. Mr. Lloyd in 1901 began his business career as partner with his father in a grocery business. They were together about three years, and he then opened a stock of general merchandise, and continued a merchant of the little city until 1912.

In that year he established a bakery, of which he is sole proprietor. His business today represents the interesting contrast of baking and freezing, and the ice cream manufactured by J. W. Lloyd is as famous as his bread and other products of the oven. He started this business on a very small scale, and now has one of the most extensive and best equipped bakeries and ice cream plants in the state.

At the age of twenty-two Mr. Lloyd married Ella Cora Johnson, a native of Martinsburg, and daughter of the late William and Mary Ella Johnson. Six children have been born to their marriage, named Robert Linwood, Nora Ornett, Cora Elizabeth, Mary Virginia, John W., Jr., and J. Harold Lee.

Mr. Lloyd is a director in the Shenandoah Valley Bank and is member of its real estate committee. Like many other successful business men in this section, he is financially interested in the great apple industry and is secretary and treasurer of the Rosemont Orchard Company of Washington County. He is a member of the chamber of commerce, is on the executive board of the Potomac States Bakers Association, is president of the Progressive Bakers Association, and member of the National Bakers Association. He is affiliated with Robert White Lodge No. 67, A. F. and A. M., Wheeling Consistory, thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, Osiris Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Wheeling, Lodge No. 24 of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Tuscarora Tent of the Improved Order of Red Men and is a member of the Junior Order United American Mechanics. Mr. Lloyd also gives his time and influence generously to the promotion of community affairs and is now a member of the city council, serving on the committees on finance, real estate, ordinances, light, health and water.

WILLIAM FRANKLIN LEARY has clearly proved his resourcefulness and progressive policies in connection with business enterprise in West Virginia, and is now one of the representative business men of Berkeley Springs, Morgan County.

Mr. Leary was born at Downsville, Washington County, Maryland, on the 2d of January, 1864, and is a son of Benjamin and Virginia (Edwards) Leary, the former of whom died at the age of fifty-four and the latter at the age of sixty-eight years. As a skilled millwright the father followed his trade successfully in the equipping and repairing of flour mills, and he was a resident of Keyser, Mineral County, West Virginia, at the time of his death. The subject of this review is the eldest in a family of eight children, the names of the other children being as here noted: Albert, Green, Ella, Clifford, Bessie, Earl and Annie.

William F. Leary was a lad of seven years at the time of the family removal to Keyser, West Virginia, where he was reared to adult age and profited duly by the advantages of the public schools. At the age of eighteen years he found employment in a tannery at Romney, and after being thus engaged eight years he operated a flour mill at Romney, Hampshire County, thirteen years. He then purchased a one-half interest in a mill at Great Cacapon, Morgan County, but six months later he traded this interest for an interest in the Berkeley Springs Mill, the operation of which he continued until 1921, when he retired from this enterprise. In the meanwhile he had engaged also in the ice business, and with a well equipped plant and a substantial business he now gives his attention to this well-ordered enterprise at Berkeley Springs.

Mr. Leary is liberal and progressive as a citizen, is a staunch advocate of the principles of the democratic party and is, in 1922, chairman of the Democratic Executive Committee of Morgan County. While a resident of Romney, Hampshire County, he there served as a member of the city council. He is affiliated with Indian Mound Lodge No.

207, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and with the Patriotic Sons of America. Both he and his wife are active members of the United Brethren Church in their home village.

In 1898 Mr. Leary married Miss Victoria Shull, who was born and reared in Hampshire County, this state, a daughter of James and Maggie (Marshall) Shull, both natives of Frederick County, Virginia. Mr. Shull was a miller by trade, and for many years operated a flour mill at Romney, Hampshire County, where both he and his wife died. Their children were three in number: Victoria, Florence and John. By a former marriage James Shull had one son, Riley, who is now a merchant at Keyser, Mineral County. Mr. Leary and Mrs. Leary have eight children, namely: Ottilie, George, Margaret, James, Kenneth, Gladys, Lola and Katherine. Ottilie is the wife of Charles M. Woodruff, and they have two children, Virginia Lucille and Warren Franklin. George married Miss Nellie Waters, and they have three children, Evelyn, Bernetta and George William. Margaret is the wife of J. Walter Shockey, and they have two children, James Walter and Charles Franklin.

WILLIAM CROSFIELD. It is not difficult while considering the business men of a community to discover why some are frankly prosperous while others advance only slowly year after year. Persistent industry is a very necessary factor in the achievement of success, and those who possess this quality, along with a certain amount of ability and capacity for good management, are reasonably to be numbered among those who will attain prosperity. Industry has been one of the characteristics in the life of William Crosfield of Berkeley Springs, the owner of a planing mill, lumber business and farm, a dealer in wood and coal and proprietor of a handle factory, who is also accounted a progressive and public-spirited citizen.

Mr. Crosfield was born at Strathroy, County Lambton, Province of Ontario, Canada, a son of Rev. George Crosfield, who was born in the village of Boston Spa, Yorkshire, England. John Crosfield, the grandfather of William Crosfield, was born in Yorkshire, England, where he followed the business of milling, and late in life immigrated to the United States and spent his last years as a resident of Brooklyn, New York. His wife was a life-long resident of Yorkshire.

George Crosfield, the only son of his parents, acquired a good education in his native country, where in his youth he was converted and joined the Wesleyan Methodist Church in which he became a local preacher. Immediately after his marriage he came to America, accompanied by his bride the sailing vessel on which they traveled being several months in crossing the ocean. Upon their arrival they settled in the wilds of Canada West, as the Province of Ontario was then known, where Reverend Crosfield secured a tract of timber land in County Lambton and erected a small log cabin, in which he and his young bride started housekeeping. As they did not possess a stove, Mrs. Crosfield was compelled to prepare their frugal meals at the open fire place, and during their early years they experienced all the other hardships of pioneer existence. After a few years they returned to England, where they remained eighteen months, then returning to Canada and locating at Smithville, County Lincoln. Mr. Crosfield there joining the Methodist Episcopal Conference and remaining in the ministry for a few years. He then came to the United States and joined the Baltimore Conference, subsequently being sent to Romney, Hampshire County, West Virginia, and from that point to Hedgesville. While there, at his own request he was transferred to the West Virginia Conference and placed in charge of the Brandonville Circuit. Later he was transferred to Ellenboro, then to Pomeroy, and, finally, when in ill health, to Berkeley Springs, where his death occurred. He was a man of fine talents, an indefatigable worker in the ministry and a man who was held in esteem and affection in whatever community he labored. He married Dorothy Botterill, who was born in the village of Brannon, Yorkshire, England, and who spent her last year at the home of her son William, with whom she died at the age of eighty-five years. She and her husband were the ants of four children: John B., Mary Ann, William and Susanna.

William Crossfield received his early education in the public schools, this being supplemented by attendance at Wyoming Seminary, Kingston, Pennsylvania. When he was but fifteen years of age he commenced teaching, his first school being held in the Duling Church, near Keyser, Mineral County, West Virginia. He continued his labors as an educator for several years, and thus earned sufficient capital with which to embark in business at Berkeley Springs. His initial efforts were modest in character, but he has persevered, has been industrious and has exercised good judgment and effective management, with the result that he is a prosperous owner of a flourishing lumber yard, planing mill and coal and wood business and the proprietor of a well-cultivated farm on which there are to be found the latest improvements. His career has been one of consistent advancement and of close application to high ideals in his business transactions.

Mr. Crossfield married first Mrs. Belle Diel, who for seven years operated the Florence Hotel, one of Berkeley Springs' popular hostleries. After two years of happy married life Mrs. Crossfield passed away, and Mr. Crossfield married Anna Hunt, who was born at Miltonville, Ohio, a daughter of Nathaniel Hunt. They have had five children. Three deceased are George, Eugene and Hattie, the three living are Dorothy and Anna H. Mr. and Mrs. Crossfield are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he has served several years as recording steward and as superintendent of the Sunday school.

FRANK E. CONNER, proprietor of the leading tailoring and garment-cleaning establishment at Morgantown, Monongalia County, is one of the progressive and popular young business men of this vital little city. He was born on a farm two miles distant from Charleston, capital City of West Virginia, and the date of his nativity was December 2, 1892. He is a son of the late Joel P. and Elizabeth (Kendall) Conner, both of whom likewise were in near Charleston, where the respective families settled the pioneer period of the history of Kanawha County. Frank E. Conner remained on the home farm until he was twelve years old. In 1913 he was graduated from the public schools of Charleston. In the autumn of that year he entered the University of West Virginia, at Morgantown, but before completing a course in this institution he withdrew to enter business. While attending the schools of Charleston he supported himself by serving as "club" reporter on the Charleston Daily Mail, and while at the university he paid his expenses by conducting a modest tailoring and cleaning shop, which he established in 1914. After leaving the university he gave close attention to this enterprise, which he has since developed to an substantial order, with the result that the year 1921 finds him the owner of the most modern dry-cleaning plant in the State of West Virginia, with an investment of somewhat more than $30,000. His merchant tailoring business likewise is one of prosperous order. Mr. Conner is the only Morgantown member of the National Association of Master Dyers and Cleaners, and he is a member of the Western States Association of Dyers and Cleaners. He is an active member and a former director of the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce, is a member of the local Kiwanis Club, and he and his wife hold membership in the First Presbyterian Church. Mrs. Conner, whose maiden name was a Blodwen Mae Pugh, was born at Port Talbot, Wales, a daughter of Howell Pugh, now a department foreman at the plant of the Morgantown Sheet & Tin Plate Company. Mr. and Mrs. Conner have two children: Frank E., Jr., and Martha Mae, aged respectively three years and a year in 1921.

MONONGALIA COUNTY INFIRMARY. Something should be said in this history of the facilities provided by one of West Virginia's most progressive counties in the care of its infirm poor. For a number of years the county rented farm and home for this purpose, but in 1917 bought a property of 146½ acres two miles north of Morgantown.

During 1919-20 construction was under way, and the modernly appointed infirmary was opened April 17, 1921, the total cost of grounds and buildings being about $200,000. There are at present only about twenty-five inmates of the home, but the county made generous provision for all conveniences, and 120 persons could be accommodated. There is a well equipped hospital on the third floor, a chapel on the second floor, and the farm is operated with a view to making the institution largely self sustaining. A barn has been provided, specially arranged for dairy purposes.

The superintendent is Mr. Charles B. Morris. He was first appointed superintendent in 1912, and filled that post for seven years, while the institution was at Cassville. For a year he resumed his private business, and then was returned to the superintendency when the county bought the present farm. He is a thoroughly practical man, well qualified for the post, and Mrs. Morris, the matron, had special training for her responsibilities under her father, the late Josephus A. Ramsey, who for seven years was superintendent of the county's poor. She assisted her father four years, her mother being matron.

Mr. Morris was born in the Clay District of Monongalia County July 31, 1881, son of David P. and Mary Mazella (Berry) Morris. The father was born on the farm where he is still living. Charles B. Morris grew up in that part of the county, was educated there, and on December 13, 1905, married Lillian N. Ramsey. She was born in Cass District, and her father was also a native of that district, where he died at the age of sixty-nine. Her mother, Anna Elizabeth Waters, now living at Morgantown, was born at Flickersville in Grant District of Monongalia County, where her father, Nelson Waters, operated one of the early mills. Mr. and Mrs. Morris since their marriage have been engaged in farming and have given nearly ten years to the duties of the County Infirmary. Mr. Morris is affiliated with the Masonic Order, Knights of Pythias and Modern Woodmen of America. He and Mrs. Morris have two children, Mary Elizabeth and John Franklin.

DANIEL HOWARD is a veteran of two great and essential industries, railroading and coal production. His career has been a long and useful one, from the time, as a mere youth, he took upon himself the responsibilities not only of his own existence but in part the care of other members of the family. One of the leading figures among the coal operators of the Fairmont District, his familiar title of "Uncle Dan" conveys a degree of affection and esteem and also a tribute to his business success.

Mr. Howard, who is a resident of Clarksburg, was born in Ennis, Ireland, November 19, 1843. He was five years of age when his parents, John and Ellen (Russell) Howard, came to America and settled near Vandalia, Illinois. That was the home of Daniel Howard until he was sixteen years of age. In the meantime he had acquired a common school education, and his father's death called him home from a college in Chicago to the more serious duties involved in his own support and such contributions as his labors could make to the support of the family. Mr. Howard spent about twenty-five years in the railroad service, and was employed in different states of the Middle West. His last position was that of joint freight agent for the Big Four and Illinois Central railroads at Chicago.

On leaving railroad work Mr. Howard was a coal salesman for two years, and then came to West Virginia to look after the coal properties for the O'Gara Coal Mining Company of Chicago. Mr. Howard established his home in Clarksburg in 1905. Since then there has been a rapid accumulation of important industrial organizations in which he has been an influential and active figure.

In 1906 he organized the Central Fairmont Coal Company, of which he has been president from the beginning. This company operates the well known Snake Hill Coal Mine of Harrison County. He is president of the Monarch Coal Company, the Big Vein Coal Company and the Fairmont-Reynoldsville Coal Company. He has acted as receiver for the Phoenix Coal Mining Company, the Blue Ridge Coal Company, the Washington Fuel Company, and has been sales manager of the Peacock Coal and Harrison County Coal companies, and also for the Monroe Collieries Company, in which he is still financially interested.

Mr. Howard was the first president of the Central West Virginia Coal Operators Association, subsequently succeeded by the Northern West Virginia Coal Operators Association. He was the organizer of the Clarksburg Coal Club, in which he has been active from the beginning. No operator in the Fairmont region is better or more favorably known than Daniel Howard. He is a member of the American Mining Congress, the West Virginia Coal Mining Institute and the International Railway Fuel Association. He has been a Mason for fifty years, becoming a Master Mason in the State of Kansas, and is a past master of the lodge in which he was raised. He is a member of the Knights Templar Commandery, the thirty-second degree of Scottish Rite and the Mystic Shrine. Mr. Howard is an Elk, a member of the Clarksburg Rotary Club, and is a past president of the Clarksburg Chamber of Commerce. In politics he is a republican.

January 31, 1871, he married Miss Harriet Frederick, a native of Knox County, Ohio. They were married at St. Louis, Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Howard traveled life's highway together for more than half a century, celebrating their golden wedding anniversary, and their union was broken by the death of Mrs. Howard almost a year later, on January 22, 1922.

There are two surviving children. Frederick Howard is superintendent of the Central Fairmont Coal Company and a resident of Clarksburg. The daughter, Mildred Howard, is the wife of Hon. Fred E. Guthrie, a prominent lawyer and banker of Marion, Ohio.

JOSEPH ALEXANDER BLANEY has been closely associated with the commercial life of Morgantown for the past ten years. He has given freely of his time and influence in the promotion of worthy civic and patriotic movements.

Mr. Blaney is a native of Pennsylvania and was born at Whitesburg, Armstrong County, December 25, 1878, son of John Alexander and Minerva (Sinclair) Blaney. His parents were also born in Armstrong County, each representing a pioneer family of Western Pennsylvania. John Alexander Blaney was born on the Blaney homestead near Whitesburg in 1832, and was still living on that farm when he died December 23, 1900. While he always kept in close touch with his farm, he was for over half a century a general merchant and postmaster at Whitesburg. His wife, Minerva, was born in 1841 and died in July, 1913.

Joseph A. Blaney was born on the Blaney farm near Whitesburg, was educated in the public schools of that town and finished his education in Washington and Jefferson College. When he left college he entered business as a partner with his father in the store at Whitesburg. Later he spent some time in the West, and when he returned home his father offered him the complete management of the business at Whitesburg. He conducted it successfully for a number of years, and at the same time performed the duties of postmaster.

In 1901, in company with eight other business men of Kittanning, Pennsylvania, Mr. Blaney organized what was known as the Pittsburgh & New Jersey Land and Improvement Company. This syndicate acquired 2,200 acres of land on Barnegat Bay, New Jersey, and Mr. Blaney as secretary had charge of the enterprise and remained in New Jersey until the syndicate sold its holding. He then resumed merchandising at Whitesburg, and in 1912 sold his interests there and moved to Morgantown, where in 1913 he established a high class shoe business. On April 1, 1921, he retired from merchandising, having sold his store and building. For two months during the year 1921 he traveled in Ohio selling shoes to the trade, but tiring of this, he decided to again enter merchandising, and accordingly in March, 1922, he opened business with a full line of shoes for men, women and children, at 316 Hight Street. He has a number of other interests, including coal mining and coal land, and is a director of the Commercial Bank of Morgantown, an institution he helped organize.

Mr. Blaney is one of the prominent Masons of Morgantown. He is affiliated with Morgantown Union Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M., Chapter No. 14, R. A. M., Commander No. 18, K. T., Morgantown Lodge of Perfection No. 1, and has charge of the work of the eleven degrees of Scottish Rite represented in this body, and is a member of the West Virginia Consistory No. 1 and Osiris Temple of the 13th Shrine at Wheeling. He is a past chancellor commander of Athens Lodge No. 36, Knights of Pythias, at Morgantown. Mr. Blaney is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and St. Paul's Lutheran Church.

June 17, 1902, he married Alice Hulda Blose. She was born at Putneyville, Armstrong County, Pennsylvania, daughter of William Albert and Nancy Jane (Gramm) Blose. The five children of Mr. and Mrs. Blaney are Russell Sydney, Harold, Judson Alexander, Kathryn Virginia and Kermit Blose.

FRED CHRISTIAN SCHMEICHEL. One of the largest and most prosperous houses in the downtown retail district of Wheeling represents the accumulating energy and prosperity of the Schmeichel family, and in recent years Fred Christian Schmeichel has given the name new distinction to the business affairs of Morgantown, where he is a prosperous furniture merchant at 129-131 Front Street.

He was born at Wheeling, September 26, 1874, son of Frederick and Louise (Ulrich) Schmeichel. The business community of Wheeling has always had a great respect for Frederick Schmeichel, not only because of the extent of the business he has developed, but also because of his personal character. He was born at Graudenz in West Prussia April 9, 1841, son of Michael and Emelia (Wey) Schmeichel, natives of the same province. Michael was a wagonmaker by trade, though most of his life was spent as a farmer, and he and his wife lived out their lives in Germany and were devout members of the Lutheran Church. Frederick Schmeichel after completing his common school education learned the cabinet making trade, and landed at the Port of New York March 3, 1870, on a voyage of fourteen days. He went direct to Wheeling and for about five months was employed as a cabinet maker, then did stair building and general carpenter work until 1873, in which year he started the foundation of the splendid business of which he is now head. His modest stock of furniture was opened in a small store a little better than a shanty, on Market Street in Wheeling. Nearly all the goods he sold were made in his own shop, and these goods had a substantial quality that attracted patronage, and consequently the prosperity of the business increased from year to year. He always remained at the old location, but successively tore down and built one after another, each larger than the preceding, until in 1908 he completed a four story and basement brick building sufficient to accommodate the great and varied stock of furniture and house furnishing goods carried. Frederick Schmeichel did business under his own name until 1908 when he formed the firm of F. Schmeichel & Son, his associate being Fred C. In 1909 the business was incorporated as F. Schmeichel & Son Company, and that is the present title of the firm. All the stock is owned by the family. Frederick Schmeichel is president, his wife is vice president, and the son Edward is secretary and manager. The house is the oldest in its line in the City of Wheeling. Frederick Schmeichel has been interested financially in a number of enterprises and is thoroughly public spirited. He is a member of St. John's Evangelical Church, and has been president, vice president and is still a director of the congregation.

At Wheeling November 27, 1873, Frederick Schmeichel married Louise Ulrich. She was born in Hanover, Germany, February 24, 1851, daughter of Henry Christian and Ludowicke (Brandt) Ulrich, natives of Hanover, who both of them lived out their lives, her father being a veterinary surgeon in the service of the German Government. Of the eight children of Frederick Schmeichel and wife, Fred Christian is the oldest. Ludowicke, born at Wheeling July 12, 1876, is unmarried. Harry, born at Wheeling August 4, 1878, is associated with his father's business and by his marriage to Jennie Vaas, of Wheel-four children, named Caroline, Marie (who died in infancy), Harry Jr., and Eugene. Arthur Schmeichel, born at Wheeling February 11, 1880, is also in the store, and his wife, Anna, have a daughter, Leota. Marie, born at Wheeling June 25, 1883, is the wife of Curtis Wardt, and they live at Pittsburgh. Edward, born June 1886, is now manager of the business at Wheeling, married Emma Guth and they have a son, Edward, Jr., born June 14, 1888, is also in the Wheeling business and married Emelia Bishop. The youngest child, Herbert, born August 5, 1891, died in infancy.

Christian Schmeichel, who was born at Wheeling December 26, 1874, was educated in the public schools of native city and graduated from the Frazier Business College in 1887. His early training in commercial lines was received as clerk in a retail grocery store of his father, H. F. Behrens, with whom he worked about six years. He then joined his father in the furniture store, when the business was incorporated he became store manager, a post of duty he held until January 1, 1911, and the satisfaction of seeing the enterprise greatly increased during that period of about fifteen years. In 1909 he joined the Palace Furniture Store at Wheeling, and in August, 1913, came to Morgantown and bought the furniture business of F. A. Hennen at 129-131 Front Street. This was then a small and unpretentious establishment, and needed just the energizing spirit and broad qualifications of Mr. Schmeichel as a merchant to give it progress and prosperity it has since enjoyed. In 1916 Mr. Schmeichel remodeled the store, building a three story brick addition, and now carries a stock five times greater than when he took charge, and the volume of business increased fully six fold. At Morgantown Mr. Schmeichel has made himself an interested factor in community affairs, is a charter member of the Morgantown Yacht Club, a member of St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran Church, and a member of Morgantown Lodge No. 411, Independent and Protective Order of Elks. In Masonry he is affiliated with Ohio Lodge No. 1, A. F. and A. M., at Wheeling, Wheeling Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite, a charter member of the Lodge of Perfection at Morgantown, a member of Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine and is a past grand patron of the Eastern Star of West Virginia and a member of the White Shrine at Wheeling. In October, 1921, he received the K. C. C. H. degree. He is also a past master of Ohio Valley Lodge No. 30, Knights Pythias, at Wheeling.

On October 19, 1898, Mr. Schmeichel married Marie Augusta Reinecke. Mrs. Schmeichel was born in Braunschweig, Germany, May 22, 1876, daughter of Karl and Augusta (Marckmann) Reinecke, her father a native of Elminden in Braunschweig and her mother of Stadtoldendorf. Her father died in Germany February 7, 1907, and her mother died when Mrs. Schmeichel was four years of age. Karl Reinecke was a civil engineer by profession, and used his skill in the building of a number of railroad bridges. Mrs. Schmeichel has a younger sister, Anna, who was born February 25, 1879, and is the widow of Joseph Wundschwever and lives at Dusseldorf, Germany. Mrs. Schmeichel came to the United States in July, 1894, on a visit to her aunt at Bellaire, Ohio, and while here became acquainted with Mr. Schmeichel, their marriage occurring four years later. Mr. and Mrs. Schmeichel have three children. Emelia, born September 8, 1899, graduated in music at the West Virginia School of Music in 1921 and is a member of the class of 1923 in the State University, dying from the A. B. degree. The son Karl Frederick, born May 30, 1901, while in his senior year of the Morgantown High School was appointed to a cadetship in the United States Naval Academy, and spent one year in the preparatory Severn School at Boone, Maryland. While there as a member of the wrestling team and in a wrestling match he broke his foot, an accident which prevented his entering and graduating from the Naval Academy. The youngest child, Arthur Louis, born September 29, 1903, is a member of the class of 1922 at the Morgantown High School.

JAMES FRANCIS LOVING, president of the Loving Furniture Company, Incorporated, at Morgantown, was for thirteen years in the railway train service, and left that to establish his present successful business.

He represents two prominent family names of old Virginia, Loving and Lamford. His great-grandfather, William Loving, was a native of Fluvanna County, Virginia, where the ancestors of this name settled in Colonial times. He married Polly Williams, of Welsh descent. Their son, Richard Loving, was born in Fluvanna County and married Isabella Fisher. A son of Richard and Isabella was Richard Sidney Loving, who was born in Louisa County, Virginia, in 1839, and except for the time he was a Confederate soldier his life was devoted to the farm. He died March 6, 1874. He was in the fighting from the beginning to the end of the war between the states, his chief service being in General Mosby's command. He married Pattie H. Lamford, who was born in Albemarle County, Virginia, in 1839 and died March 11, 1910. Her parents were Nimrod and Sally (Williams) Lamford. Her grandfather was Nimrod Lamford. Lamford is an old and prominent name in Virginia family annals.

James Francis Loving was born on the farm of his parents in Louisa County, Virginia, October 1, 1871. He was only three years old when his father died, and he lived on the farm during schooldays and had charge of it for several years. In 1898 he took up railroading, and for three years was a brakeman with the Chesapeake & Ohio and then for ten years did service as a railway conductor. Mr. Loving located at Morgantown in 1911, and in the same year organized the Loving Furniture Company, his two business associates being S. P. Jones and C. S. Reams. Later he and George W. Davis bought the entire business and are the active officials in the present incorporated company.

Mr. Loving is a member of the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce and the Baptist Church. September 26, 1907, he married Nela V. Omohundro, who was born in Pittsylvania County, Virginia, daughter of Charles Fitzroy and Katie (Hudson) Omohundro. Mr. and Mrs. Loving have a daughter, Frances S., who was born June 11, 1911.

WILLIAM LINDSAY JOHNSON, superintendent in charge of the plants of the Morgantown Brick Company, is a native of Monongalia County and descended from two of the old families of that section of the state.

His paternal grandfather, Richard Johnson, founder of this branch of the family in West Virginia, spent his early life in Western Pennsylvania, where he married Minerva Colebank, a native of that section of the Keystone State. The Johnsons were Irish and the Colebanks Scotch in ancestry. After their marriage Mr. Johnson came to West Virginia and settled on what was known as the old Stewart farm, near Stewartstown in the Union District of Monongalia County. Here he and his wife spent the remainder of their lives, were substantial farmers, and devout members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Their son, William Johnson, was born on the old farm in Union District January 15, 1853. While he had some experience as a farmer, the greater part of his active years was devoted to Government work in the construction of dams and locks on the Upper Monongahela River. For several years he was a diver. He is still living, retired, in Morgantown. His wife bore the maiden name of Jemimah Ann Stewart. She was born on the old Stewart farm in Monongalia County, and died in 1911. Her parents, Daniel and Rebecca (Blosser) Stewart, were married in Pennsylvania and then came to Monongalia County.

William L. Johnson, son of William and Jemimah A. (Stewart) Johnson, was born on the Stewart farm in Monongalia County July 24, 1874. He had a common school education, but when only nine years of age he was earning a salary by employment as a water boy for the force of men performing Government service along the river, thus being close to his father, who was in the same work. Mr. Johnson at more or less regular intervals continued Government work along the river and in different capacities until 1905. He was married in that year and the following year went to work in the yards of the Morgantown Brick Company, at the old plant on the west side of the river. He was under Superintendent Williams, and later was transferred to the east side plant, under Superintendent S. S. Minor. Here he acquired a thorough proficiency in all branches of the brick making industry, and upon the death of Mr. Minor he was put in charge of the company's business. Since 1911 he has been superintendent, and has earned the reputation of being one of the expert brick makers in the state.

Mr. Johnson is a citizen alive to his responsibilities as a factor in the community. He is a member of Morgantown Union Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M., Monongalia Lodge No. 10, Junior Order United American Mechanics, and the Methodist Protestant Church. September 25, 1905, he married Valley Josephine Stewart, daughter of John and Jane (Evans) Stewart, of Monongalia County. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have one daughter, Helen Marguerite, born November 26, 1912.

EDWARD MILLER GRANT. There are some individuals whose lives are shaped by circumstances and others who overcome circumstances and shape their own lives. To the latter class it may be safely said that Edward Miller Grant, president of the Federal Savings and Trust Company of Morgantown, belongs. Tens of thousands whose boyhood surroundings were as lacking as his never emerged from them. However, he had a legacy of health, industry and integrity, and these, united to thrift, temperance and shrewd intelligence, have formed the equipment with which he has won his way to success. For over thirty years he has been identified actively with the banking, manufacturing and public improvement affairs of Morgantown, and during this time has gained prominence as one of the worth-while citizens of the city and state.

Colonel Grant was born in the City of Cleveland, Ohio, February 3, 1853, a son of William and Hannah (Turner) Grant, and a grandson of William Grant, of England. His father, William Grant, was a native of England, born December 3, 1813, in Great Grimsby, Lincolnshire. He came to the United States in 1850 and located at Cleveland, Ohio, and at the outbreak of the war between the states enlisted in Battery B, First Ohio Light Artillery, with which he served throughout the period of that struggle. Following the close of the war he went West to Indian Territory and located a few miles from what is now McAlester, Oklahoma, where he resided until his death, which occurred in 1896.

Edward Miller Grant was educated in the public schools of Cleveland, and began his business career as office boy with the firm of Hussey & McBride, oil refiners at Cleveland, with which firm he remained for some years, being ultimately promoted to clerk and bookkeeper. When that firm sold the business to Clark, Payne & Company Mr. Grant continued as bookkeeper for the latter firm. In 1872 he represented Clark, Payne & Company in the Pennsylvania oil fields at Foxburg, where he remained until 1880, during which period he assisted in building the town, erecting the water works, which he managed for a number of years, and was engaged in oil and gas promotion and development, in 1885 organizing the Union Light and Heat Company, which supplied gas and heat to Foxburg and St. Petersburg. In 1880 he became secretary and treasurer of the Crucible Steel Company of Cleveland, and in 1884 returned to the oil business.

In January, 1889, Colonel Grant located at Morgantown, West Virginia, and with others organized the Union Improvement Company, which later became the Union Utilities Company, supplying water, gas and traction service to the city, of which company Colonel Grant was manager for fifteen years. During that time he organized the Morgantown Building and Investment Company, of which he served as secretary, treasurer and general manager, this company inaugurating the general development of the city which has so greatly added to the growth of Morgantown into one of the most prosperous little cities of the entire country at this writing, in 1921. Colonel Grant is also secretary and treasurer of the Morgantown Brick Company, president of the Federal Savings and Trust Company, and a director in the Pressed Prism Plate Glass Company, the Athens Glass Company, the Bank of the Monongahela Valley and other corporations. He was manager for the Fairmont and Grants Gas Company, which was organized in 1892, and was general manager of the Union Utility Company, which company owned the gas and water plants and later built the Morgantown Street Railway. Colonel Grant is also keenly interested in real estate, both at Morgantown and in the surrounding country.

From 1899 to 1903 he served as a member of the Virginia Legislature, and his work in that body brought him prominently before the people of the entire state. He is a member of Morgantown Union Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M.; Orient Chapter No. 9, R. A. M.; Morgantown Commandery No. 18, K. T.; and Osiris Temple, A. O. C. M. S. Wheeling. He is also a member of Versailles Council No. 238, Royal Arcanum, of McKeesport, Pennsylvania; East End Council No. 20, Knights of the Maccabees; Valley Lodge No. 51, Ancient Order of United Workmen; Monongalia Lodge No. 10, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; and Morgantown Lodge No. 411, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of which he was the first exalted ruler, a position to which he was elected twenty years later. He is president of the Morgantown Kiwanis Club and a charter member of the Morgantown Country Club.

In 1901 Colonel Grant was appointed by Governor Vincent as a member of the Board of Regents of West Virginia University, and subsequently was reappointed by Governor Dawson to the same position, serving on the board until 1909. Colonel Grant was possibly the most active manager in war work in Monongalia County during the World War. Every big drive received his earnest support, hearty co-operation, and he was a generous subscriber and contributor to all causes. Likewise he served as chairman of the first Red Cross drive, when $15,000 was asked in Monongalia County and when $25,000 was raised. He was likewise chairman of the United War Work ("seven in one") drive, when $25,000 was asked for and $44,000 raised. He also represented the United States Labor Employment Bureau for this county and was county chairman of the National Council for Defense.

On July 13, 1876, Colonel Grant was united in marriage with Florence May Dale, daughter of Col. Frank and Julia (Pike) Dale, natives of Pennsylvania, and to this date there have been born three children: Dale, born March 18, 1877, who enlisted in the First West Virginia Regiment during the Spanish-American war, was transferred to the Reserve Ambulance Corps, and died October 2, 1898; Edna Mary, born December 3, 1878, who was married to Dr. John Zevely and has a son, John Grant; and Hannah Elizabeth, born January 30, 1880, who was married to Charles E. Casto, and has a son, Dale, and two daughters, Florence and Jean. All of the members of these families reside in Morgantown, where they are held in the highest respect and esteem.

CHARLES E. MILLER. Taking under consideration the various activities necessary to the upbuilding of a stable and prosperous community, perhaps none result in the permanency of benefit than the work done by the energetic and reliable realtor. Largely through his efforts outstanding capital is brought in and invested, values are established, business locations are made available, and great residential sections take the place of unsightly, unprofitable areas. There are many flourishing cities in the country that have arisen from a swamp or barren plain as the result of almost inspired foresight of a real estate dealer.

Charles E. Miller, secretary and treasurer of the Morgantown Security & Development Company, is one of the progressive business men of this city. Mr. Miller was born at Spartansburg, Crawford County, Pennsylvania, May 20, 1866, a son of Edmond T. and Emma (Smith) Miller. His great-grandfather, Abner Miller, was born in the State of New York, where his people had settled after removing from Massachusetts. In the late thirties his grandfather, Abner Miller (2), removed from New York to Crawty, Pennsylvania. His son, Edmond T. Miller, born 1832, practically passed his entire life at Spartansburg in Crawford County, where he died in 1917. He was a stonemason by trade. He married Emma Smith, who was born in Crawford County in 1839, a daughter of Stephen Smith, and she died there in 1914. Mr. Miller attended the public schools of his native city and then learned the art of telegraphy, following which he came home and entered the employ of the Oil Exchange at Oil City, Pennsylvania, as a telegraph operator, where his speed and accuracy were commended. For several years he worked as telegraph operator and station agent on different railroads in Pennsylvania and New York City, but in 1890 he accepted a position with the Standard Oil Company, and in this connection came to Morgantown, West Virginia.

At the meanwhile, as a wide-awake, observant man seeing many different sections of the country, Mr. Miller came to the conclusion that the real estate field offered great opportunities for business activity in Monongalia County. In 1908, in partnership with Harry Sanders, he entered the field under the firm name of Sanders & Miller, general insurance also being a feature of the business. In 1911 the firm organized the Morgantown Security & Development Company, of which Mr. Miller is secretary and treasurer, and during the past twelve years this company has contributed greatly to the substantial development of this city and environs. One of the firm's earlier operations was the purchase of acreage on the south side, its division into building lots and their improvement before sale. They have sub-divisions also on the west side of the river at Weirville and other points, and their residential properties are attractive with modern improvements. Mr. Miller as a business man and good citizen is greatly interested in the public improvements along the line of good highways. He is a director in the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce, and is vice president of the Union Building & Loan Association.

In 1891 Mr. Miller married Miss Mattie Baker, of Oil City, Pennsylvania, and they have three children: Charles, born March 25, 1892; LeRoy B., born February 19, 1899; and Virginia Baker, born August 9, 1900. Mr. Miller and his family are members of the Episcopal Church, of which he is a vestryman. He has never been unduly active in politics and has never desired a public office, but is quietly loyal to the party of his choice both in civic affairs and farther afield. He belongs to the Knights of Pythias and to the Rotary Club.

CHARLES FREDERICK BOEHLER. To some men the responsibilities in an active business career are always burdensome, while to others these responsibilities are as the path of life. They plan, organize and successfully carry out great financial policies and commercial enterprises, enjoying the stress and strain that would prostrate their weaker brethren, and in their substantial undertakings they bring to their communities progress and prosperity. Such a valued and useful citizen of Morgantown, West Virginia, is Charles Frederick Boehler, a foremost business man of this city.

Charles Frederick Boehler was born at Gruenewald, Baden, Germany, July 12, 1862. His parents were Conrad and Rudolph (Brugger) Boehler, both of whom were born in Prussia and spent their entire lives in Germany, where they died in 1867 and the mother in 1891. Conrad Boehler was in the sawmill and lumber business during a greater part of his life, a substantial business man of his community.

After attending the common and high schools of his native town, Charles F. Boehler at the age of seventeen years, was apprenticed to a brush manufacturer at Donschlag, Baden, where he learned bookkeeping, and also did some experience as a clerk in a business house in France-Lorraine. He was twenty years old when he entered the German Army for his necessary period of military service of three years, which in his case was shortened six months because of his exemplary conduct as a soldier.

In 1885 Mr. Boehler came to America, reaching the port of New York in October of that year. A few months later he went to Newark, New Jersey, where he worked in different factories for a time and then embarked in business for himself. In 1899 he came to Morgantown, West Virginia, called here to become secretary of the Seneca Glass Company, with which enterprise he has been identified ever since, and from 1902 until the present has been secretary and treasurer of the company. Very soon after locating in this city his business aptitude was recognized, public confidence was secured, his name soon becoming an asset in connection with some of the most important business developments of this section. His present high standing in the business life of Morgantown and Monongalia County, may be indicated by the relations he holds to many of the most important business concerns. He is vice president of the Morgantown Lumber Company; is secretary and treasurer of the Silver Hill Oil Company; is vice president of the Labor Building and Loan Association; is treasurer of the State Saving & Investment Association; is on the directing board of the Chaplin Collieries Company; and is a director also of the Commercial Bank of Morgantown, to all these enterprises bringing the quiet efficiency of business sagacity of a high order.

On August 8, 1892, Charles F. Boehler was united in marriage with Miss Elise Winkowski, who was born at Bromberg, Prussia. They have two daughters: Emma, who is the wife of Robert Lee Long, of Fairmont, West Virginia; and Louisa, who resides with her parents at Morgantown. Mr. Boehler and family belong to the Lutheran Church. He is a member of the Kiwanis Club, of Homestead Lodge No. 5878, Brotherhood of Yeomen, of Union Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M., and is a past commander of Monongalia Commandery No. 465, Knights of Malta. He is also an Elk, with membership in Lodge No. 411, and is a director of the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce.

WILLIAM C. MCCONAUGHEY, treasurer and general manager of the Star Grocer Company of Parkersburg, has been a resident of that city thirty years, and from the first prominently identified with its industrial, commercial and civic advancement. Among wholesale grocers his name is nationally known, not only for his effective efforts in his own business and immediate trade territory, but for the prominent part he has played in the National Association of Wholesale Grocers.

Mr. McConaughy was born at Cameron, Marshall County, West Virginia, February 14, 1862. His grandfather, Robert McConaughy, founder of this immediate line in America, was a native of Belfast, Ireland, where he married Elizabeth Lindsey. Soon afterward he came to the United States and settled in Western Pennsylvania, where he exhibited his industry as a farmer and his public spirit as a democrat filling the office of justice of the peace. He was a Presbyterian. His children were David, Elizabeth, William and James. There was still another Robert McConaughy, a cousin of the Robert just mentioned, who for several years was president of Washington and Jefferson College at Washington, Pennsylvania. From another branch of the same family came Lieutenant McConaughy, one of the signers of the Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence at the outset of the Revolutionary war.

William McConaughy, father of the Parkersburg merchant, was born near Wheeling, West Virginia, September 5, 1817, and was one of the first men to exploit the oil resources of West Virginia, helping develop the oil fields of Burning Springs. He was a merchant, a farmer in Washington County, Pennsylvania, and placed most of his capital and personal enterprise at stake when the first oil discoveries were made in Wirt County, and for many years was an active oil operator in the firm of McConaughy, Jones & Camden. He finally retired to Parkersburg, where he died October 10, 1899. He was a democrat and for many years an elder of the Presbyterian Church. May 19, 1842, at West Alexander, Pennsylvania, he married Margaret Templeton, who was born in that locality July 30, 1824, and died at Parkersburg December 24, 1904. She was a daughter of Alexander and Charity (McLain) Templeton. Alexander Templeton was a native of New England, of Scotch-Irish ancestry, and was deeply interested in the cause of education. Through a liberal endowment he became one of the founders of Washington College at Washington, Pennsylvania, which subsequently became Washington and Jefferson College.

William Chester McConaughy was next to the youngest in a family of eight children. His parents moved to Parkersburg in 1865, when he was three years of age, and later they lived in Wirt County, where he grew to manhood. He was educated in the public schools of Parkersburg and in Wirt County, and from 1879 until 1883 was a student in Washington and Jefferson College, where he received his A. B. degree June 12, 1883. While in college he was a member of the Phi Gamma Delta fraternity. The following two years he spent in the timber business with his brothers, and from 1885 for six years was in the mercantile and timber business in Wirt County, but since 1890 has made his home and has centered most of his interests at Parkersburg. For about five years he was manager of the Novelty Mills, flour mills, and in December, 1895, engaged in the wholesale grocery business by purchasing an interest in a wholesale grocery plant. He acquired a larger amount of the stock subsequently and in November, 1902, reorganized the business as the Star Grocer Company, of which he is still general manager. This has become one of the large distributors of food products to the retail trade in this section of the Ohio Valley. He is now the principal owner of the company.

In May, 1904, Mr. McConaughy was elected president of the West Virginia Wholesale Grocers Association, an office he still holds. He was one of the wholesalers who attended the meeting of grocers at Milwaukee in 1905, out of which came the National Wholesale Grocers Association of the United States. Mr. McConaughy was elected a director of the National Association in 1906, and in 1909 elected a vice president, serving in that capacity until June, 1921.

Mr. McConaughy is also interested in banking and has been a director since 1907, and since 1909 vice president of the Wood County Bank of Parkersburg. He was elected president of the West Virginia State Board of Trade in 1910. He is a democrat, has taken a keen interest in political affairs, but only once was a candidate for office, when he was elected a member of the Legislature, serving in 1884-85. He is a Knight Templar and Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner, a member of the Elks, the Blennerhassett Club of Parkersburg, was one of the founders and a member of the Y. M. C. A., and is a Presbyterian, while Mrs. McConaughy is a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

July 2, 1902, at Meridian, Mississippi, Mr. McConaughy married Emma Melville Neal, daughter of George B. and Caroline (McKinley) Neal, and member of one of the pioneer families of West Virginia. Mrs. McConaughy was born at Parkersburg, where her father for many years was a commission merchant. The only child of Mr. and Mrs. McConaughy died in infancy.

RT. REV. GEORGE WILLIAM PETERKIN, who was the first bishop of the Episcopal diocese of West Virginia, had his official residence at Parkersburg from 1878 until his death on September 22, 1916. He was born at Clear Spring, Washington County, Maryland, March 21, 1841, son of Rev. Joshua and Elizabeth Howard (Hanson) Peterkin, and a grandson of William W. Peterkin, who was a lieutenant in the early navy of the United States, later was a captain in the Merchant Marine, and early in the War of 1812 volunteered and commanded one of the batteries erected for the defense of Baltimore. He died of yellow fever at Baltimore soon after the war. Rev. Joshua Peterkin was born in 1814, and was a distinguished Episcopal clergyman. From 1855 until his death in 1892, he was rector of St. James parish in Richmond, Virginia. He married in 1838, Elizabeth Howard Hanson, who was born in 1820 and died in 1910.

George William Peterkin was the only son of his parents. He was educated in the Episcopal High School of Virginia during 1856-58, then attended the University of Virginia and during the war was a Confederate soldier and captain at first as a member of the Second Brigade of Stonewall Jackson's Division. He was made adjutant of the Twenty-first Virginia Regiment June 3, 1862, and later was aide on the staff of Gen. W. N. Pendleton, chief of artillery in the Army of Northern Virginia. He accompanied General Pendleton, who was one of the three Confederate commissioners to arrange the terms of surrender at Appomattox. Soon after the close of the war he began preparation for the ministry, and in 1868 graduated from the Theological Seminary of Virginia. He was made deacon in 1868, first serving in his father's parish at Richmond, and in 1869 was ordained a priest. He was rector of St. Stephen's Church at Culpeper, Virginia, from 1869 to 1873, and thereafter until he was made bishop, was in charge of Memorial Church at Baltimore. He was consecrated the first bishop of West Virginia May 30, 1878, and was afterward removed to Parkersburg. In addition to the heavy duties he performed in directing the affairs of his great diocese, he was for twenty-five years a member of the Board of Managers of the Domestic and Foreign Mission Society, served as vice president of the American Church Missionary Society, and had supervising charge of the Episcopal Mission in Brazil from 1893 to 1898. He made a missionary tour of Porto Rico in 1901. The same year he was consecrated bishop, Kenyon College and Washington and Lee University conferred the Doctor of Divinity degree upon him and he received the LL. D. degree from Washington and Lee in 1892. He was author and editor of several religious works, including the Records of the Protestant Episcopal Church in West Virginia, published in 1902.

October 29, 1868, Bishop Peterkin married Constance Gardner Lee, a descendant of the distinguished Lee family of Virginia, being a daughter of Cassius Francis Lee and a great-great-granddaughter of the eminent Virginia statesman, Richard Henry Lee. She was born in 1848 and died in 1877. In 1884 Bishop Peterkin married Marion McIntosh Stewart, daughter of John Stewart of Brook Hill, Virginia. The children of the first marriage were: George William, who died in infancy; William G., Constance Lee, Elizabeth Hanson and Anne C. The children of the second marriage were John S., Marion McIntosh and Mary S.

MAJOR WILLIAM G. PETERKIN, a son of the late and beloved Bishop George William Peterkin of West Virginia, has been a resident of Parkersburg since boyhood and has played a prominent part in the affairs of that city. He is president of the Citizens Trust & Guaranty Company and the Citizens Insurance Agency.

Major Peterkin was born in Culpeper, Virginia, October 21, 1870, and was eight years of age when his father set up his official seat at Parkersburg. Here he continued his education in the public schools to the age of thirteen and for six years lived with his grandfather at Richmond, Virginia, and attended the McGuire private school of that city. Major Peterkin was a resident student of the University of Virginia five years, graduating with his law degree in 1894. In the same year he began practicing law at Parkersburg, and was active in the profession until 1910. During the last three years of his practice he was secretary of the State Bar Association and later was elected president of the association. For the past fourteen years his attention has been chiefly devoted to the surety and insurance business.

He earned his title by a service of more than ten years in the West Virginia National Guard. During the Spanish-American war he became interested in military matters and was appointed small arms inspector, with the rank of major on the staff of Gen. B. D. Spilman, brigade commander of the West Virginia National Guard. He continued on the staffs of Gen. George W. Curtin, Gen. Clarence L. Smith and Gen. W. W. Scott. He was also judge advocate of his brigade, an office which he resigned in 1910. Major Peterkin in politics has been a democ-

W. H. Henshaw

He was elected a member of the City Council for 1902-03, in 1904 was candidate for secretary of state, and in 1910 was chosen a member of the State Senate, serving four years, and in both sessions acting as chairman of the committee on insurance. He has been chairman of the City Democratic Committee at various times, also secretary and treasurer of the Wood County Executive Committee. During the World war he was chairman of the Draft Board of Wood County, under the Selective Service Law. He is loyal to the church of his father and grandfather, a member of the Elks Order and Kiwanis Club. April 18, 1912, he married Miss Ora Moss Martin, of Parkersburg. Their two daughters are Julia Moss and Constance Lee.

HARRY LUDWIG HEINTZELMAN is one of the loyal citizens and progressive business men who are conserving the civic and material prosperity of the City of Fairmont, Marion County, where he is an executive officer of leading financial and industrial concerns of important order.

Mr. Heintzelman was born at Manor, Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, March 12, 1868, and is a son of Andrew and Mary (Wilson) Heintzelman, both of whom likewise were born in Westmoreland County, as representatives of families early founded in the old Keystone State. The parents were residents of their native county at the time of their deaths, the father having passed away in 1894 and the mother in 1896.

The public schools of his native state afforded Harry Heintzelman his early education, which was supplemented by his attending the Duff Business College and the Curry Institute, both in the City of Pittsburgh. As a young man he became identified with the glass manufacturing industry as an employee of McKee & Brothers at Jeanette, Pennsylvania. He later became superintendent of the Rochester Lumber Company at Rochester, Pennsylvania, this being the largest manufacturing of glass tumblers in the world. In 1904 Mr. Heintzelman came to Fairmont, West Virginia, and promoted and effected the organization of the Monongah Glass Company, which here established a modern plant and engaged in the manufacturing of glass. Mr. Heintzelman continued as secretary and treasurer of this company until the death of its first president in 1910, since which year he has been its president, his vigorous and progressive policies and his familiarity with the technical details of the business having been potent in the development of the important industrial enterprise. He was one of the organizers and incorporators of the Fairmont State Bank, of which he has been the president from the beginning; is a director in the Peoples National Bank of Fairmont, and is vice president of the Marion Securities Company, which publishes The West Virginian, the evening newspaper of Fairmont. He is vice president of the Hartford-Fairmont Company, is president of the Fairmont Box Company, is vice-president of the Greater Fairmont Investment Company, is vice president of the Stevenson Company, here engaged in the wholesale grocery business; and is a stockholder and official in various other local corporations. The brief data here given are sufficient to mark him as one of the most liberal and progressive men of Fairmont, and indicate that he is ever ready to give his influence and financial co-operation in the furtherance of enterprises tending to advance the interests of his home city. Mr. Heintzelman is a member of the directorate of the Fairmont Chamber of Commerce, has received the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite of the Masonic fraternity, his maximum York Rite affiliation being with the Commandery of Knights Templars at Fairmont, where also he is a popular member of the lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

Mr. Heintzelman married Miss Carrie E. Dougherty, daughter of James Dougherty, of Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, and the four children of this union are Ruth, Ethel, Grace and Harry. Ethel is the wife of W. C. Morehead, of Fairmont. They have a son, William C., Jr. Harry is identified with the Monongah Glass Company at Fairmont, and his wife, whose maiden name was Eloise Shain, was a resident of this city at the time of their marriage. They have a son, Harry L. Heintzelman III.

EDWIN L. DAVIDSON. The family of this name represented by the Parkersburg manufacturer and banker is of Scotch origin and has been identified with the life and affairs of West Virginia from almost the beginning of settlement.

Its founder was Alexander Davidson, who came from Scotland to America in 1729. He lived on a farm on the Raritan River in New Jersey. His family consisted of two sons and one daughter. His son William was the progenitor of the family in West Virginia, moving to Taylor County, which was a frontier locality to the close of his days. He was one of the pioneer millers in that vicinity. The next generation is represented by his son Alexander, who was born September 3, 1789. His life industry was that of farming. On February 3, 1820, Alexander Davidson married Dorothy Burdett who was born December 23, 1791. The names of their children with dates of birth follow: James, January 11, 1821; John, June 14, 1822; William, August 22, 1823; George, February 14, 1825; Alexander, September 23, 1826; Mary Martha, February 23, 1828; Joshua, November 10, 1829; Fred Edwin, October 6, 1831; Sarah Ann, February 13, 1834; Lucy, August 3, 1836; Stephen, November 15, 1837; and Franklin, August 9, 1840. One of these children, Alexander, never married and was distinguished by some versatile gifts and accomplishments. He wrote a history of one of the middle western states, and was also patentee of what was known as the Yost typewriter, which for several years was manufactured and enjoyed a considerable sale.

Three of the sons became identified with Parkersburg, where they lived and reared their families. They were Joshua, Stephen and Fred Edwin.

Fred Edwin Davidson became a contractor and builder in Parkersburg, and later entered the lumber business, out of which has grown the present Parkersburg Mill Company. His brother Joshua was also a contractor, and these three brothers at one time were associates in this line of business and constructed many important buildings in their day. Fred E. Davidson assisted in building the Courthouse of Wood County preceding the present structure. Fred Edwin Davidson died June 2, 1917, when eighty-six years of age. On December 16, 1858, he married America Mitchell, who died May 31, 1910, after they had been on life's highway together for more than half a century. Their three children were: Ora, Mrs. T. J. Kean, Edwin L. and John Mitchell. John Mitchell Davidson has for many years been a merchant at Parkersburg. He married Sue K. Dudley, and his two children are Mary Burdett and Fred Edwin, Jr.

Edwin L. Davidson, whose name has been chosen to represent the present generation of the family, was born November 3, 1863, and his business interests since early manhood have been in the lumber manufacturing field. He is now president of the Parkersburg Mill Company. He is also president of the First National Bank and has various other financial interests in the city.

Mr. Davidson was one of the organizers of the Parkersburg Y. M. C. A. and its president two years. He is a trustee of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, and a member of the Rotary Club, Country Club, and the Chamber of Commerce, which he has served as president, and his influence and support have been lent generously to every undertaking affecting the broader welfare of the city.

June 9, 1888, he married Miss Nettie Johnson, daughter of Edward and Mary (Irwin) Johnson, representing old West Virginia families. Mr. and Mrs. Davidson's only child, Dorothy Burdett, died in infancy.

JAMES W. VANDERVOORT. Forty years a member of the Parkersburg bar, Judge Vandervoort has a record of service fully consistent with the length of his experience. He has been judge, but first and last an able lawyer intent upon his professional work. The community has recognized him many times as one of its constructive factors and most influential citizens.

Judge Vandervoort was born at Masontown, Preston County, West Virginia, May 7, 1855, son of Amos A. and Susan (Holmes) Vandervoort. He is a descendant in the tenth generation from Michael Paulus Vandervoort, whose home before coming to America was near Antwerp in the village of Termonde, Belgium, a town practically destroyed in the World war. He immigrated to the Colonies in 1640 and settled at New Amsterdam. His son Paul was born at Bedford, Long Island, and his grandson Paul II and his grandson Nicholas were also natives of Long Island. In time one branch of the family moved to Virginia and Nicholas Vandervoort II went into that state. The sixth generation of the family was represented by Jonah Vandervoort and the seventh by Nicholas Vandervoort, who crossed the mountains and became a pioneer in Monongalia County in what is now West Virginia. Amos A. Vandervoort was a son of William Vandervoort. Amos was a Union soldier, was captured, was held in confinement at Andersonville and died while a prisoner at Savannah, Georgia. He was a member of Company B of the Fourth West Virginia Infantry.

James W. Vandervoort was a boy when his father died. He acquired a public school education, attended George's Creek Academy at Smithfield in Fayette County, Pennsylvania, and completed his sophomore year in the West Virginia State University. Some of his law studies were pursued under the eminent John B. Minor of the University of Virginia, and at this institution he took the complete law course. After being admitted to the bar he began practice at Clarksburg, West Virginia. He remained there two years, and on October 10, 1881, removed to Parkersburg, where for a number of years he was associated in practice with John A. Hutchinson. Mr. Vandervoort for over twenty years has been counsel for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company at Parkersburg and also for the American Express Company, and has been attorney on one side or another in many important civil cases. He is a republican in politics and was presidential elector on the McKinley ticket and at different times has entered campaigns actively. Governor A. B. White appointed him judge of the Criminal Court of Wood County, to fill a vacancy due to the death of Judge J. M. Jackson, but after a few months he resigned from the bench to resume his private practice. He is a Methodist, a member of the Country Club, Rotary Club and Elks.

Throughout the period of the World war Mr. Vandervoort was president of the local Red Cross Chapter. That organization was the chief medium for all local philanthropic work, undertaken by it directly or under its auspices, and the splendid patriotic record made by Parkersburg is due in no small degree to the efficiency of the organization of which Judge Vandervoort was the head. He is now a member of the Board of Law Examiners for West Virginia and represents the General Council of the American Bar Association for West Virginia.

June 7, 1882, Judge Vandervoort married Maude Shuttleworth of Clarksburg, daughter of Benjamin F. and Miriam (Blair) Shuttleworth. Her mother represented an old family of Augusta County, Virginia, and was a descendant of James Blair, founder of William and Mary College. Judge Vandervoort lost his wife by death October 11, 1914. He has four children: George H.; Edna B., wife of K. F. Williams; Maude S.; and Margaret E., Mrs. Frank F. Turner.

CHARLES D. MERRICK has been a Parkersburg lawyer over forty-five years, and throughout has been steadily accumulating honors due to the able lawyer and a scholarly gentleman.

Mr. Merrick was born in Portage County, Ohio, August 1, 1852, son of Henry A. and Sarah (Green) Merrick. His mother was a native of England. Henry A. Merrick was born in the Western Reserve of Ohio, son of Minor Merrick, who came from his native state of Connecticut in 1817, and was a pioneer in the Ohio Western Reserve. His home for many years was in Portage County, but he spent his last days at Salem in Columbiana County. Henry A. Merrick was identified with merchandising and lumber manufacture, and in the prosecution of his lumbering interests, and to secure a wider field of supply, he moved to West Virginia in the spring of 1868, locating in Ritchie County. In 1873 he moved to Chicago, and from there to Washington, D. C., where he died in 1887.

Of four children Charles D. Merrick is one of the survivors. During his boyhood he lived at Salem, Co., attended school there, also at Allegheny, Pennsylvania, did much private study. At the suggestion of Major A. S. May he began the study of law with Col. John S. Hoffman at Clarksburg, and while pursuing his studies he acted as Deputy Circuit Court Clerk of Harrison County. Mr. Merrick was admitted to the bar in the fall of 1873, and for two years practiced at Harrisville in Ritchie County. In 1875 he removed to Parkersburg, and this city has been the scene of his professional labors ever since. For one year he was a member of the firm, Scott, Cole & Merrick, then practiced alone, and in 1887 formed a partnership with Levin Smith. The law firm of Merrick & Smith is one of the oldest and has long been recognized as one of the ablest at the West Virginia bar. Mr. Merrick has satisfied his ambition in the profession of law and has allowed his outside interests to intrude upon his important professional duties. In former years he took considerable interest in politics and is a republican. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

April 4, 1878, Mr. Merrick married Miss Addie H. of Harrisville, West Virginia. Her father, Dr. Moses H., was a captain in the Union Army in the Civil war and came out with the brevet rank of colonel. Doctor H. was a brother-in-law of Gen. Thomas M. Harris, a member of the court that tried Mrs. Surratt, the famous Southern spy, for complicity in the assassination of President Lincoln. Mr. and Mrs. Merrick have four children. The oldest is Fred H., who about 1905 became a socialist and soon became a prominent one, somewhat radical in his methods, and was in consequence called upon to endure some very hard things, which he did without flinching and showed great courage. He became a writer and speaker of considerable capability, and is still pursuing the calls of his socialist faith. Julia M. is the wife of Henry B. Walker, of Lancaster, Ohio. Eleanor Constance is Mrs. J. C. Rosas, of Utuado, Porto Rico. The youngest is Roderick G.

Roderick G. Merrick left law school in 1917, to enter the Officers Training School in Fort Benjamin Harris, Indiana, was commissioned a second lieutenant in artillery, and was in training at Camp Shelby, Montgomery, Alabama. He did special census work there and at Camp Gordon, Atlanta, and in January, 1918, was sent overseas to France. After a period of intensive training he was assigned to the Fifteenth Regiment of Artillery in the Second Division, composed wholly of regular troops. His record includes some of the famous campaigns of the war, including the battles of Belleau Woods, Soissons, after which he was promoted to a first lieutenant, St. Mihiel, the fighting of the Champaign district east of Rheims, the Argonne woods, and the final march to Sedan. He continued with the Army of Occupation at Coblenz after the signing of the armistice and in July, 1919, secured leave to return to America. He now lives at Kalamazoo, Michigan.

WILLIAM TILGHMAN RITTENHOUSE. Though a native of Ohio, William Tilghman Rittenhouse has lived his life in Parkersburg, has been identified with oil production interests in West Virginia for many years, and is also a Parkersburg banker and one of the foremost Masons of the state.

He was born in Ross County, Ohio, February 27, 1841, son of William and Ruphelle (Flint) Rittenhouse. The Rittenhouse family in America was established by William Rittenhouse, who immigrated from Holland to Pennsylvania about 1687. Among his descendants was David Rittenhouse, one of America's early astronomers and with international distinction in the world of science. Several generations of the Rittenhouse family were identified with the paper manufacturing industry at Germantown, near Philadelphia.

The Parkersburg business man is a great-grandson of Samuel Rittenhouse, a grandson of Tilghman Rittenhouse. This branch of the Rittenhouse family became identified with Ross County, Ohio, very early in the nineteenth century.

[illegible]

C. M. Jenkins.

One of the pioneers of the family there lived to the age of 110 years. William Rittenhouse was both a farmer and merchant in Ross County, was honored with the office of county treasurer there, and in every way upheld the honorable traditions of his family.

William Tilghman Rittenhouse when six years of age was sent by his parents to West Virginia. They first lived at Parkersburg and later his father moved out into the oil fields. Mr. Rittenhouse acquired a public school education, attended Eastman's Business College at Poughkeepsie, New York, and his first business experience was in the oil fields in the Burning Springs District. More or less continuously ever since he has had some share and interest in oil industry.

Mr. Rittenhouse established his permanent home in Parkersburg in 1886, and in 1888, when the Citizens Building Association was organized, he was elected its secretary, and that capacity has to a large degree had the executive administration and management of this prosperous association for a period of thirty-three years. He is also secretary of the U. S. Roofing Tile Company, a Parkersburg industry which has an almost world-wide market for its products.

Mr. Rittenhouse has filled the offices of major, high priest and eminent commander in the Parkersburg York Rite bodies, is a member of the Scottish Rite Lodge, a member and officer of Nemesis Temple, and of the Mystic Shrine. The chief credit is due him for the reorganization of the Masonic Temple at Parkersburg, and he has been one of the officers of the Masonic Temple Association from the beginning. Mr. Rittenhouse in 1910 was elected right eminent grand commander of the Grand Comandery of the state, and in 1914 was high priest of the 10th Chapter. He is a Knight Commander of the Court of Honor and recently elected to the thirty-third degree at that Rite. Mr. Rittenhouse was city clerk of Parkersburg during the construction of the City Hall. He is a layman, a Methodist, is a charter member of the Parkersburg Kiwanis Club, a member of the Automobile Club and Country Club. He married Miss Isabelle Bryan. Four children were born to their marriage: William B., a student at Parkersburg; George Flint, of Wheeling; Owen Lee, who was a second lieutenant in the World war and instructor in training camps, and died of bronchial pneumonia at Camp Meade, Maryland, in 1918; and Tilghman, who died when seven years of age.

LEWIS HAROLD JENKINS, a prominent coal operator and influential citizen residing at Fairmont, Marion County, was born on a farm in Barbour County, this state, November 13, 1871, and is a son of the late Joseph J. and Delilah (Booth) Jenkins. The father was born in Barbour County, 1846, and was a resident of Taylor County at the time of his death, in 1917. He was a son of Jonathan Jenkins, who was a native of Virginia and who became a pioneer settler in Barbour County. Delilah (Booth) Jenkins was born in Barbour County, in 1847, and died in 1918, in Taylor County. She was a daughter of James Booth and was a descendant of General Booth, a patriot officer of eminence in the war of the Revolution. General Booth is numbered among the very early settlers in what is now Barbour County, West Virginia, and in that county his life and memory are perpetuated in the name of Booth's Creek. On this creek stood a school house that was long known as the General Booth School.

When Cletus H. Jenkins was one year old his parents removed to the village of Astor, Taylor County, where his father engaged in the drug business. After attending the public schools Mr. Jenkins continued his studies three years at the West Virginia College at Flemington, Taylor County, an institution that now figures as a county high school. He thereafter devoted six years to successful service as a teacher in the rural schools. He next attended the Mountain State Business College at Parkersburg during one year, and in 1899 he entered the office of the Hutchinson Coal Company at Fairmont. He has continued his association with this important industrial corporation during the long intervening period of more than thirty years, and from the position of stenographer and bookkeeper he has advanced to that of secretary and treasurer of the company, of which he is also a director. Mr. Jenkins is a director and the vice president of the Logan Coal Company of Fairmont, was one of the organizers of Fairmont State Bank, of which he is vice president, and he is a director also of the Community Bank of Fairmont, besides which he was one of the organizers and is a director of the Fairmont Building & Loan Association. As a director representing the coal district of Northern West Virginia Mr. Jenkins has been a member of the National Coal Association from the time of its organization. He gave three years of effective service as vice president of the West Virginia State Coal Association, and for several years was president of the Fairmont Coal Association. During the World war period he was president of the West Virginia Coal Operators Association, to the work of which he gave much of his time, not only during American participation in the war but also for nearly a year after the signing of the historic armistice. He is a director of the Fairmont Young Men's Christian Association, is prominently identified with the Fairmont Chamber of Commerce and is an active member of the local Rotary Club. He and his wife are members of the First Baptist Church in their home city.

June 25, 1902, recorded the marriage of Mr. Jenkins to Miss Delia L. Phillips, who was born and reared in Marion County and who is a daughter of the late John Phillips. Mr. and Mrs. Jenkins have three children: Doris is a junior at Mount Vernon Seminary, Washington, D. C.; Maxine D. is a member of the junior class in the Fairmont High School; and Cletus Harold, Jr., is a sophomore in the high school.

PAUL AMBROSE. Some men rise steadily and honorably to responsible positions in the business world through sheer ability and honest conduct. Their keen appreciation of responsibility and the value of the trusts reposed in them urge them on to renewed efforts, and they are rewarded by additional confidence on the part of those they so faithfully and intelligently serve. One of the men of Berkeley Springs whose name is an honored one in business circles because of the facts outlined above is Paul Ambrose, assistant manager of the Community Store, a corporation carrying an extensive line of general merchandise.

The name Ambrose has been known in what is now Morgan County, West Virginia, ever since the early settlement of this section of the state. From the best information secureable Daniel Ambrose was the founder of this branch of the family in America, and but little history pertaining to him is known. His son, Nicholas Ambrose, the great-grandfather of Paul Ambrose, was as far as is known a life-long resident of what is now Morgan County. The maiden name of his wife was Berthana Brooks, and among their children was Peter Ambrose, the grandfather of Paul Ambrose, and who was born on the road leading from Berkeley Springs to Sir John's Run, in September, 1844. Peter Ambrose was for many years in the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, and was still in the service at the time of his death in 1908. He married Sarah M. Clover, who was born on a farm about eight miles from Berkeley Springs, May 14, 1848, a daughter of Hughey Clover, who was a farmer and spent his last days in Maryland. It is thought, born in what is now Morgan County, West Virginia, of pioneer ancestry. Mrs. Ambrose died February 7, 1918, the mother of seven children: Melissa J., George H., Laura Virginia, Calvin, Raymond, Walter and Niota L.

Calvin Ambrose, the father of Paul Ambrose, was born at St. John's Run, and educated in the public schools of that place and Berkeley Springs. Leaving school when still a youth, he entered the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, but after some years acquired title to land in the Bath Mountains, near Berkeley Springs, which he leased to the West Virginia and Pittsburgh Glass Sand Company and became superintendent of that company's plant. He remained with that concern until his early death, when he was only thirty-eight years of age. Mr. Ambrose married Miss Ann Wolf, who was born in Morgan County, daughter of Martin Wolf. She survives her husband and has reared five children: Agnes, Helen, Mary, Paul Edward and Ruth.

The early education of Paul Ambrose was secured in the public schools of Berkeley Springs, and this was subsequently supplemented by attendance at St. Joseph's College. After completing his course there he furthered his training by a course at Strayer's Business College, and thus equipped he entered upon his business career as an employee of the West Virginia and Pittsburgh Glass Sand Company. A short time later he went to Akron, Ohio, where he was employed by the Firestone Rubber Company for a time, then returning to the South and entering the employ of the Virginia Shipbuilding Corporation. He remained with that concern until the close of the World war, when he again came to Berkeley Springs, and has since been assistant manager of the Community Store, a large corporation carrying an extensive line of general merchandise, including about everything used in the home or on the farm. He has contributed materially to the success of this enterprise, and has demonstrated the qualities of a live, progressive and intelligent business man.

On April 16, 1917, Mr. Ambrose was united in marriage with Miss Nellie Virginia Hasenbuhler, who was born at Sir John's Run, Morgan County, daughter of John and Ann (Kessecker) Hasenbuhler. The former was born in Pennsylvania, in the City of Philadelphia, a son of Louis Hasenbuhler, who was born in Switzerland and was one of three brothers to come to the United States. Mr. and Mrs. Ambrose are the parents of one daughter, Anna Carmen.

JOHN W. HUNTER. Despite the claims of many that success rests largely upon financial backing and influential friends at the outset of a career, it is to be found that many who have the best achievements to their credit have started life as poor boys and have gradually attained prosperity through hard work and an intelligent use of natural abilities developed through training and experience. John W. Hunter, a highly esteemed citizen of Berkeley Springs, had no financial assistance at the outset of his career. He possessed, however, unlimited ambition and industry and the ability to make the most of his opportunities. For nearly a half century he was engaged in carpentry, contracting and building, and is now living in contented and comfortable retirement, enjoying the fruits of a well-spent life.

Mr. Hunter was born at Berkeley Springs, Morgan County, West Virginia, August 21, 1849, a son of Charles Edward and Eliza (McCaffrey) Hunter. From the best information available his great-grandfather was John Hunter, a native of Ireland, and a pioneer of what is now Morgan County. His son William, the grandfather of John W. Hunter, was the proprietor of a hotel in Morgan County in the pre-railroad days, when stage coaches made regular trips between far separated points. He became one of the solid and influential men of his locality and served several years in the capacity of justice of the peace. William Hunter married Ann Cox, who, it is thought, was born in Berkeley Springs and was a resident of Morgan County. Charles Edward Bailey Hunter, father of John W. Hunter, was born at Berkeley Springs, where he attended the public schools and mastered the carpenter's trade. He became a building contractor, but did not live long enough to achieve success, death coming to him when he was but twenty-eight years of age. He married Eliza McCaffrey, who was born in the State of New York, a daughter of John McCaffrey, a native of Ireland. After the death of Mr. Hunter she married Martin Wolf. By her marriage with Mr. Hunter she had four sons: John W., Romanus, Charles Edward and James D. She and Mr. Wolf became the parents of one daughter, Ann Rebecca. Mrs. Wolf died at the age of sixty-one years.

John W. Hunter made the most of his opportunities to secure a public school education, and having inherited his father's mechanical ability applied himself to learning the carpenter's trade, which he followed for some years as a journeyman, and became a contractor and builder soon after attaining his majority. During a period of nearly half a century he continued to be so occupied, and his good workmanship and honest accomplishments are noted in many of the buildings now standing at Berkeley Springs and in the surrounding country. He achieved prosperity along legitimate channels, established a reputation for integrity and fair dealing, and is now living in quiet retirement, one of his community's highly esteemed men.

In 1874 Mr. Hunter was united in marriage with Miss Harriet Ellen Wheat, daughter of Hon. Joseph A. Miranda (Grove) Wheat, a sketch of whose lives appears elsewhere in this work. To this union there were born six children: Raymond, who married Helen Everett and four children, Alma, Bernard Everett, Philip Newrath, Thomas Marshall; Carrie, who married Wilson Shelley and has three children, Virginia, Herbert and Earl; Edwin Bailey, who married May Housholder and has three children, Harriet, John William and Irene; Jessie Edith, who died as the wife of W. H. Heller, leaving four children, Grace Ellen, Laura, Florence Thelma and William Hunter; Robert Leslie, who married Margaret Van Goshen and has one daughter, Phyllis Jane; Helen Eliza, who married Luther H. Kirby; and Albert Zimmerman. Alma Hunter, daughter of Raymond and Helen (Everett) Hunter, married Kenneth Nevin and has one son, Kenneth, Jr.

Mr. and Mrs. John W. Hunter are devout members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

FRANCIS MURRAY PHILLIPS, M. D. High on the roll of the medical fraternity of Jefferson County stands the name of Francis Murray Phillips, M. D., who for fourteen years has been engaged in the practice of his calling at Chesapeake Town. His career has been one of constant advancement in his profession, and the confidence in which he is held by his fellow-townsmen is a recognition of sterling ability, faithful performance of professional duties and an adherence to the highest ethics of his humane vocation. He was born on a farm near Laurel, Delaware, and is a son of George Bell Phillips and a grandson of Thomas Phillips.

Francis Murray Phillips received his early education in the district schools and prepared for college under private tuition. He then pursued a two-year course at the Western Maryland College, following which he became a commercial traveler in the Middle Atlantic states, a vocation which he followed with a measure of success for several years. When he left the road as a "knight of the gridiron" he enrolled as a student at the Baltimore Medical College, now the medical department of the University of Maryland, and was graduated from that institution as a member of the class of 1904, receiving the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Doctor Phillips commenced practice at Harper's Ferry, where he remained for four years, and in 1908 came to Charles Town, which has since been the scene of his practice and success. He carries on a general professional business as a physician and surgeon, is local surgeon for the Norfolk & Western Railroad, the Hagerstown & Frederick Railroad and several limestone quarries, and has a large private clientele. He keeps fully abreast of the constant progress being made in his calling, and is a valuable member of the Eastern Panhandle Medical Society, the West Virginia State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. As a fraternalist he holds membership in Malta Lodge No. 80, A. F. and A. M.

In 1905 Doctor Phillips was united in marriage with Miss Harriet Tryford Bagwell, who was born at Onancock, Accomac County, Virginia, a daughter of George and Rebecca (Tryford) Bagwell. Six children have been born to the union: Francis Murray, Jr., George Bagwell, Edwin Hamilton, Donald Tryford, Harriet Wilson and Doug Wise. Doctor and Mrs. Phillips are members of Zion Episcopal Church, in the work of which they take an active and helpful interest.

JOHN HENDERSON BISHOP was one of Mosby's men, and is one of the few surviving veterans of the great war between the states. Most of his long and useful life has been spent in the Valley of Virginia, and Charles Town has been his home community during his earlier as well as his later years. A practical business man for years, he did not meet the domain of the mind and has been a great reader. He has also found entertainment and done something of practical value in preserving in his scrapbooks many matters of family and local history that otherwise would go to oblivion.

He was born on a farm in Loudoun County, Virginia, October 24, 1835, and has now reached the age of eighty-seven. His father was Henderson Bishop, who was born in Frederick County, Virginia, in 1811. Henderson Bishop was apprenticed to learn the gunsmith's trade. After completing his apprenticeship he removed from Winchester to Baltimore, where he worked under Alexander McComas. For several years he was an employee in the United States Arsenal at Harper's Ferry, and then bought a farm in Loudoun County, and continued his interests as a planter in 1847. In that year he removed to Charles Town, to build a home, and engaged in business as a gun and locksmith and as a plumber. He was one of the pioneers in his line, and he had the distinction of installing the first works at Charles Town. He continued active in his line of business until his death in 1873. Henderson Bishop married Julia Ann Nisewaner, a native of Loudoun County and daughter of John and Mary Nisewaner, whose ancestors were pioneers of that county. Julia Ann Bishop died in 1843, when her son John H. was only eight years of age.

The latter, only child of his mother, attended public school at Charles Town, also the Charles Town Male Academy, and when his education was completed he went to work with his father and learned the trade of gunsmith and plumbing. In 1856 he removed to Harper's Ferry and was in the Government Arsenal there until about a month before John Brown's raid. His next location was at Middlebury in Loudoun County, where he continued work at his trade until the outbreak of the war between the states. On answering the call to the service of the Confederate Government he was, on account of his knowledge of the gunsmith's trade, assigned to the Armory in Richmond. A short time later he was sent home on a furlough, and while there was captured and taken to Washington, being kept a prisoner of the old capital ten months and then for seven months at Fort Delaware. He was finally exchanged and, returning to Middlebury, Loudoun County, joined the field service in Captain Tom Foster's company of the Twenty-third Battalion, attached to Mosby's command. He was with his famous organization of the Confederate Army in its various campaigns and battles on Virginia soil until the close of the war. He was paroled at Charles Town, May 5, 1865.

After leaving the army Mr. Bishop was in business at Middlebury until the death of his father, when he returned to Charles Town, and continued the business at the old stand. Among other important work he did he installed the new gas works and also the new water works at Charles Town, and altogether he continued a very successful business there until 1902, when, nearing the age of three score and ten, he retired and has since enjoyed the fruits of a well-spent life.

On January 1, 1856, Mr. Bishop married Sarah F. Hicks, who was born in Charles Town, daughter of William and Mary Hicks. She died May 16, 1884. On November 12, 1885, Mr. Bishop married Mary J. Hunsicker. She is also a native of Charles Town, born April 26, 1846. Her father, Robert R. Hunsicker, was born in Winchester, Virginia, and learned the trade of shoemaker, at a time when all boots and shoes were hand made and made to order. Soon after his marriage he located at Charles Town, and continued the business of his trade until his death, at the age of seventy-six. He married Maria Signafosse, a native of Winchester, who died at the age of fifty-four. The three Hunsicker children were James William, Mary J. and Alice E. Mr. and Mrs. Bishop are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and for twelve years he was a steward of the church. He has also served four years as a member of the city council of Charles Town.

His children are all by his first marriage, and their names are Charles, Julia and J. William. Charles married twice, and by his first wife has a son, Walter. His second wife was a Miss Catton, but no children were born by this union. Julia is the wife of Charles Stolle, and her family consists of Ernest, John Bishop, Lena, Raymond and Viola.

CLYDE DAVIS BARBE, who is successfully established in the real-estate and fire-insurance business at Morgantown, judicial center of Monongalia County, was born at Laurel Point in Grant District, this county, on the 21st of November, 1877, and is a son of George and Julia A. (Davis) Barbe, both likewise natives of this county, where the former was born in Grant District and the latter in Cass District. Henry Barbe, great-grandfather of him whose name initiates this paragraph, was born in Virginia, August 13, 1778, and was a representative of a French family of Alsace-Lorraine who sent representatives to Virginia in the early Colonial period of our national history. Henry Barbe came to what is now Monongalia County, West Virginia, about the year 1820, and became one of the early settlers on Flagg's Meadow, in Grant District. His wife, whose maiden name was Sarah Miller, likewise was born in Virginia, and in accompanying her husband to the frontier region now represented by West Virginia she made the journey on horseback, with her youngest child in her arms. Jeremiah, son of these sterling pioneers, was born in old Virginia in 1814, and thus was about six years old at the time of the family migration to the present Monongalia County, where he was reared to manhood and where in 1841 he married Julia A. Brand, a native of this county. He became one of the substantial farmers of Grant District, and there he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives. Their son, George, was born on the old home farm in Grant District, December 20, 1843, and was one of the gallant young men who went forth from this county as a soldier of the Union in the Civil war, in which he was a member of Company I, Fourteenth West Virginia Volunteer Infantry. After the war he taught school for a time, and later he served two terms as county assessor. For several years he was engaged in the mercantile business at Madsville, this county, and in 1894 he removed with his family to Morgantown, where he engaged in the hardware and roofing business in partnership with his son Clyde D., of this sketch, and M. W. Davis. The firm of Barbe & Davis erected in 1906 the large brick block known as the Barbe & Davis Building, on Walnut Street, and this substantial structure is still in the possession of the Barbe and Davis families, one-half interest being owned by Clyde D. Barbe. The firm of Barbe & Davis retired from business in 1912, and George Barbe thereafter continued his residence at Morgantown until his death, November 16, 1917, his devoted wife having passed to the life eternal July 16, 1911.

Clyde D. Barbe gained his earlier education in the public schools of Madsville, and in his fifteenth year he entered the University Preparatory School at Morgantown, where he continued his studies until he entered the University of West Virginia. In this institution he was graduated in 1899, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He taught one year in the city schools of Morgantown, and for two years thereafter was in the employ of a company engaged in the publishing of school textbooks. While yet a boy he had assisted in his father's store at Madsville, and when the firm of Barbe & Davis was organized, in 1904, he became a partner in the same. He thus continued until the firm went out of business, in 1912, and he has since developed a prosperous real estate business, in which he handles principally his own property, and in connection with which he conducts a general fire insurance business. Mr. Barbe is a director of the Union Bank & Trust Company of Morgantown, and is a progressive and valued member of the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce. He is a member of the Board of Trustees of Athens Lodge No. 36, Knights of Pythias, and for the past decade has served as chairman of the Board of Trustees of Methodist Protestant Church at Morgantown. In June, 1909, Mr. Barbe married Miss Flora E. Binns, who was born at Fairmont, Marion County, a daughter of Dr. J. H. and Rebecca (Cartright) Binns. Mr. and Mrs. Barbe have one child, Mary Teen, born July 20, 1913.

GEORGE A. WHITMORE, now engaged in business at Charles Town, was for many years a leader in the agricultural activities of Berkeley County and well known in the official affairs of that county.

He was born at Leesburg in Loudoun County, Virginia. His father, Samuel Paxton Whitmore, was born in the same locality. His grandfather, George Whitmore, was a native of Germany, and with two brothers came to America, one of them settling near Frederick City, Maryland, and another in Rockingham County, Virginia. George Whitmore was a hotel proprietor at Leesburg. Though of foreign birth, there was nothing to distinguish him from a real Virginian in a pace for good horses, and he became well known in local sporting circles. He married Rachel Wright, a native of Loudoun County and of early English ancestry, and both lived to a good old age. Their three children were William, Samuel P. and Anna.

Samuel Paxton Whitmore at the outbreak of the war between the states entered the Confederate Army as a member of Captain Hodges' company of Loudoun County Artillery, which was soon consolidated with the White's Battalion. He went in as a private and was promoted to lieutenant, and was with his command in its various campaigns and battles until the fall of 1863, when he was captured and for the remainder of the war was a prisoner. After being paroled he returned home, later engaged as a farmer in Loudoun County, West Virginia. His farm and its duties occupied him until his death at the age of sixty-five.

Samuel P. Whitmore married Phoebe Beech, a native of Loudoun County, Virginia, and daughter of John and Mary (Cullison) Beech. She died at the age of forty-seven. Her children were: Annie Elizabeth, George, Mollie C., Catherine, William Jasper, Sarah Alice, Florence, Samuel J., John A. and Clara Paxton.

George A. Whitmore attended school at Leesburg and also in the Mill Creek District of Berkeley County, and was a boy when his labors were turned to account on his father's farm. After reaching manhood he made farming his regular vocation, and his home and business interests were continued in Mill Creek District until 1919, when he moved to Charles Town, and has since been associated in business with his son as dealers in lumber and building supplies.

In 1872 Mr. Whitmore married Ella May Beesom, who died January 18, 1910, aged fifty-one years. She was born in Mill Creek District of Berkeley County, daughter of Lewis R. and Lydia Beesom. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Whitmore are: Lora Mason, Myrtle May, Ralph Richard, Hugh Paxton, Beulah Davis, Grace Beesom, George Wilson and Boyd C. Lora is the wife of H. V. Snyder, and her children are Jane, Paxton, Beeson, and Daniel Armstead. Ralph married Mammie Baldwin, and their family consists of Lydia, Phyllis, Ruth, Julia and Richard. The son Hugh married Vineta Osborne. Beulah Davis was married to Clarence Myers, and has two children, Mary Cullison and Paul Edward. George Wilson married Dorothy Hauptman, and has two sons, George A. and Kenneth H. Boyd died December 24, 1914, at the age of twenty-one. Grace is the wife of William Roberts, and has a daughter Helen Gregg.

George A. Whitmore and wife are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In the official affairs of Berkeley County he served three terms as a member of the board of education in Mill Creek District, and in 1912 was elected a member of the County Court, and by re-election was in office for six years, until he came to Charles Town.

JAMES ELMER BROWN, organist and choirmaster of the Bland Street Methodist Church, South, at Bluefield, Mercer County, was born in Buckingham County, Virginia, on the 21st of January, 1889, and is a son of Charles W. and Mary Elizabeth (Cash) Brown, both likewise natives of the Old Dominion State, where the respective families were founded many generations ago. Charles W. Brown was born in Albermarle County, Virginia, in 1854, and in early life he gave his attention to farm industry in his native state. Thereafter he was for many years in the service of the Norfolk & Western Railroad, and he is now living retired at Bluefield, West Virginia, to which place he came with his family in 1892 and established his home in the end of the village—a district now in the center of progressive city which has here been developed in the intervening period. His father, Colonel Brown, was a pious planter and slave-owner in Virginia prior to Civil war, in which he served as a gallant officer of Confederate Army. Like many other representative citizens of the South, Colonel Brown met with heavy reverses as a result of the war between the states of North and the South. Mrs. Mary Elizabeth (Cash) Brown passed to the life eternal in December, 1918, at the age sixty-nine years, and she is survived by two sons, of whom the subject of this review is the younger. The elder, William, resides at Bluefield and is assistant weighman in the service of the Norfolk & Western Railroad Company.

James E. Brown was three years old at the time his family home was established at Bluefield, and here he received the advantages of the public schools. As a lad twelve years he suffered a serious illness, and during period of convalescence, mainly as a pastime, he devoted himself to the study of music, one of his early teachers having been Miss Gertrude Walls, who gave him instruction in piano work. At fifteen years of age he was organist as a church organist, and he has been a church director since he was twenty years of age. At the present time he is the leader of the excellent choir of the Bland Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

At the age of seventeen years Mr. Brown went with Blinn Owen to Greensboro, North Carolina, where he remained three years, and continued the intensive study of music under the effective direction of Mr. Owen, besides which he became assistant to Mr. Owen in the teaching of younger music students. His love for and appreciation of musical art have caused him to continue his study during the intervening years, and he is a pianist of exceptional ability, besides having marked technical skill in the handling of the modern pipe organ and being proficient thorough base and harmony. Mr. Brown has given instruction to hundreds of music students, and is one of the leading teachers of music at Bluefield, with studio in the parlour of the Bland Street Methodist Church, in which church he has been the choir leader since 1909. He is leader in musical circles in this section of the state and has been instrumental in securing to Bluefield the appearance of many celebrated artists, besides having been one of the most prominent figures in the Bluefield Music Festival Society. He has trained the local chorus for many of the fine entertainments given under the auspices of the organization, and his admirable musical taste and discrimination have been shown in the special programs he has prepared for Easter, Christmas and other observances in the church in which he is choir leader. While residing at Greensboro, North Carolina, he served as organist of the Methodist Protestant Church in that city. He is secretary and publicity manager of the Bluefield Music Teacher Association, and was chairman of the Music Committee in connection with the "Billy" Sunday evangelistic campaign at Bluefield, since which he has continued to superintend the musical affairs of the Billy Sunday Club of this city. As a musician he has assisted in local entertainments given by the Elks and the American Legion, and is also vice president of the Foland Printing Company of Bluefield. Mr. Brown is a past master of the local Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, past high priest of the Chapter of Royal Arch Masons, and an active member of the Bluefield Commandery of Knights Templars.

In 1914 Mr. Brown wedded Miss Mary Shelton Stephens, who prior to her marriage had been a popular teacher in the public schools of Bluefield. Mrs. Brown was born in Virginia and is a daughter of Rev. H. I. Stephens, who is a member of the Baltimore, Maryland, conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Mr. and Mrs. Brown have two children: Mary Virginia and James Elmer, Jr.

HARRY CHARLTON is vice president and general manager of the Amicon Fruit Company, which has its headquarters in the City of Bluefield, Mercer County, and which maintains branch establishments at various places in the coal of this part of the state. John Amicon, president of the company, is a resident of Columbus, Ohio, as is H. N. Smith, the secretary. It is interesting to note that John Amicon began his business career by selling fruit from a cart on the streets of Columbus, Ohio, and that he has become one of the most successful representatives of the fruit business both in Ohio and West Virginia. The Amicon Fruit Company at Bluefield was established in May, 1906, and here the company is now preparing to erect for its use a modern six-story building at Bluefield Avenue, to connect with the present large plant. The storage capacity of the plant at the present time is 150 cars of fruit and provisions, and when the new building is completed the capacity will be amplified to 500 loads. The most modern sanitary provisions mark the plant, and here are handled all kinds of fruit and produce, the wholesale and retail business of the company is of large volume and marked prosperity. The company has been influential in furthering the success of fruit growers in this section of the state, and from the Bluefield headquarters the trade of the company has been extended to a radius of 100 miles from this distributing point, with seven representatives constantly on the road in the interests of the house. As general manager of this important enterprise Mr. Charlton is essentially one of the representative business men of Bluefield.

Mr. Charlton was born at Pearisburg, Virginia, January 1, 1874, and is a son of E. W. and Newtonia (Hale) Charlton, the former of whom died in 1917, at the age of fifty-two years, and the latter of whom resides at Bluff Springs, near Pearisburg, she being sixty-two years of age, in 1921. The father was a gallant soldier of the Confederacy in the Civil war, took part in many engagements, including that of Appomattox, and was once wounded. He was for many years a prosperous merchant at Pearisburg, and thereafter was engaged in farm enterprise near that place. He served as deputy sheriff of his county and for a number of years postmaster at Pearisburg. After the close of the Civil war he became one of the first men in his district to vote the republican ticket. He was a representative of one of the old and honored families of that section of Virginia. He served as superintendent of the Sunday school of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and his widow likewise is an earnest member of this church. They became the parents of six sons and three daughters, and of the eight now living the subject of this sketch is the eldest.

Harry Charlton received his youthful education in the schools of his native town, and as a lad of ten years he came to assist in his father's store. He finally became the owner of a store of his own at Pearisburg, and in this connection he early began to specialize in the buying of provisions from local producers. He gradually developed a prosperous business in selling provisions through the four districts of Virginia and West Virginia, and the direct result of his activities in this line was the establishing of the progressive company of which he is now vice president and general manager. He is an authority in the fruit trade and has proved himself a resourceful business man of much initiative and executive ability. He is a member of the Bluefield Chamber of Commerce, the local Country Club, the United Commercial Travelers and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He and his wife are prominent members of the Presbyterian Church in their home town.

In 1897 Mr. Charlton married Miss Lelia Woolwine, daughter of J. P. Woolwine, of Pearisburg, Virginia, and two children of this union are Harry, Jr., and Russell. Harry, Jr., was a member of the Officers Training Corps at the University of West Virginia in the closing period of the World war, and he is now (1921) a student in the medical department of that institution. Russell is the son of Douglas E. Leckie, of Bluefield.

HENRY A. LILLY has proved himself one of the most aggressive and resourceful business men of the City of Bluefield, Mercer County, where he has been prominently identified with mercantile enterprise since August, 1895.

Mr. Lilly was born in the village of Dunos, this county, on the 14th of April, 1877, and is a son of John S. and Elizabeth (Meador) Lilly, who still maintain their home at Dunns, the former being sixty-nine and the latter seventy years of age (1921). John S. Dunn is a son of Washington and Mary Polly Lilly, the former of whom was born October 31, 1815, and died October 10, 1895, the latter having been born March 10, 1815, and her death having occurred July 22, 1892. Washington Lilly came to Mercer County from Fairfax, Virginia, in 1841, and established his residence on the site of the present village of Dunns, where he built the first mill and was one of the founders of the Baptist Church in that community. He was led to establish his home here largely by reason of the excellent game-hunting attractions of the locality, he having had special delight in hunting expeditions. He and Russell French were the first men to cast republican votes at Dunns, and he was one of the sterling and honored citizens of the county until the close of his long and useful life. He reared a fine family of ten children, and it is worthy of special record that in the immediate family circle there was not a death until the youngest of the children was fifty-four years of age. Joseph, a brother of Washington Lilly, likewise settled at Dunns in the year 1841, and the family name has been one of prominence in connection with civic and material progress in Mercer County. Washington Lilly represented this county as a valiant soldier of the Union in the Civil war. The wife of John S. Lilly was born and reared in Mercer County and was a daughter of Josiah and Elizabeth Meador.

John S. Lilly was not only identified with farm enterprise but was also a prosperous merchant at Dunns for many years. There also he operated a grist mill, and at the same time did more or less work as a cabinetmaker until 1890, he having manufactured coffins and caskets of the best workmanship and his services in this line having been enlisted throughout a wide radius of country in this section of the state. He is a staunch republican and he and his wife hold membership in the Baptist Church. They became the parents of seven sons, of whom the eldest, Wilbur J., is associated with his brother Henry A., of this sketch, as a partner in the Royal Grocery Company at Bluefield, he being individually mentioned on other pages of this work; Dr. Donzie Lilly, the next younger son, is engaged in the practice of dentistry at Athens, Mercer County; Hobart M. is in the railway mail service, with residence at Charleston, West Virginia; Carl, who was born in 1882, died in 1903, at Bluefield; Vernon, born in 1884, died in 1919; and a son was born in 1898 and died in 1901.

Henry A. Lilly gained his youthful education in the public schools of his native village and the State Normal School at Athens. After two years of successful service as a teacher in the schools of his home county he was for four years engaged in the mercantile business at Dunns. He then took a place as delivery boy for the Bluefield Mercantile Company, in which he was advanced in turn to salesman and manager, he having continued in the employ of this company ten years. He then effected the organization of the firm of H. A. Lilly & Company, which now conducts two well equipped department stores at Bluefield and a branch store at Dunns, the concern being one of the foremost in the retail mercantile business at the county seat. As before noted, Mr. Lilly is likewise associated with his brother Wilbur J. in the Royal Grocery Company, of Bluefield, and he is also president of the Home Insurance Agency at this time.

Mr. Lilly was president of the Mutual Loan & Savings Company of Bluefield at the time when its business was merged into the Bluefield National Bank, of which he served for some time as vice president and of which he still continues a director. He became president of the Summit Shoe Company and retained this office until 1917. In 1915 he served as president of the Bluefield Board of Education, and he is now serving as a member of the Municipal Board of Directors of Bluefield under the new system of city government, he having received in the last election the largest number of votes cast for any candidate for municipal office in this city. He was tendered nomination for the office of mayor, but refused the honor, as he felt that his varied business interests would not permit his giving the requisite time to such official service. He is a member of the directorate of the Chamber of Commerce, is a loyal member of the Rotary Club, and he is affiliated with the local Blue Lodge and Chapter of the Masonic fraternity. He and his wife are zealous members of Calvary Baptist Church, in which he is a deacon and also served as superintendent of the Sunday School for ten years. In connection with the establishing of the Baptist College at Bluefield Mr. Lilly is serving as a member of the building, the finance and the general committees.

On the 14th of September, 1895, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Lilly to Miss Laura G. Akers, who likewise was born and reared in Mercer County. Of their two children the daughter, Eunice G., is now (1921) a student in the high school; the son, Orlando H., who died in 1919, at the age of nineteen years, had been admitted to the Officers Training School at Fort Union and was preparing for service in the World war at the time when the historic armistice brought the conflict to a close.

ERNEST HOGE GILBERT. Although yet a young man as counted in years, Ernest Hoge Gilbert, lawyer and railroad authority at Morgantown and president of the Gilbert-Davis Coal Company, operators in the Morgantown District, has become a financial power in the scope of his business achievements and a man of great public usefulness in West Virginia. That he has climbed from self-supporting boyhood to his present position of importance entirely through his own efforts adds interest to a story that carries its own significance to those who admire such sturdy American-born qualities that have marked Mr. Gilbert as boy and man.

Ernest Hoge Gilbert was born in Johnson County, North Carolina, October 22, 1884, a son of Charles Herbert and Amelia Matilda (Wilder) Gilbert, well-known family names in North Carolina since Colonial days. Charles Herbert Gilbert was born on the estate of his father, Charles David Gilbert, in the Old North State. For many years he was a railroad construction contractor. In 1898 he located at Norfolk, Virginia, where he died in 1919, at the age of sixty-six years. His widow still resides in the City of Norfolk.

After attending the public schools Mr. Gilbert took a commercial course in the Norfolk Business College and applied himself so diligently that he soon completed it and was but fourteen years old when he was accepted as a bookkeeper for the Western Union Telegraph Company at Norfolk, and during his leisure became proficient in the art of telegraphy. Thus when but fifteen years old he was master of two professions and, farther than that, had the self-confidence that led others to believe in his capacity. Probably he was one of the youngest station agents and telegraphers ever employed by the Seaboard Airline Railway in North Carolina. During the six following years he worked from coast to coast for different railroads, a close student of railway operations, and the observations he made during that interval later became the foundation of his valuable book of rules.

Mr. Gilbert came to Morgantown, West Virginia, in 1907 as chief train dispatcher of the Morgantown & Kingwood Railway, now a part of the Baltimore & Ohio system. He installed his book of rules in the train dispatchers' department of that railroad and he sent the first telegraphic order ever sent over the Morgantown & Kingwood line. His railroad responsibilities interested and to a great degree engrossed him, but he was not entirely satisfied, having cherished an ambition for years to become a lawyer. This ambition he satisfied after coming to Morgantown, where he almost completed his law course by working his way through the West Virginia University. In 1915 Mr. Gilbert was admitted to the bar, and afterward practiced law in this city for one year while still railroading, and he is a member of the West Virginia Bar Association. It was about this time he first became interested in coal operations.

In 1916 Mr. Gilbert was one of the organizers of the Davis Coal Company, which began its operations by buying and cleaning out abandoned mines which had been owned by farmers in the Morgantown District. The firm of Gilbert & Davis purchased their first mine, known as the Gilbert Mine, in Scott's Run, and later they became interested in the Anchor Mine, the first ever opened on Scott's Run. Through Mr. Gilbert's acumen the business grew to vast proportions and the Gilbert-Davis Coal Company, Incorporated, now operate the following mines: Gilbert No. 1 and No. 2, Gusten Run, Greenmont, Pittsburg and South Penn. The company is interested also in oil and gas properties to some extent. In all undertakings Mr. Gilbert's business vision and sound judgment have been dependable factors, and undoubtedly great industries in which he is interested will still render benefit by his ripened experience and business sagacity.

Mr. Gilbert married Miss Eleanor Mae Matthews, who was born at Cumberland, Maryland, and they have four children, a son and two daughters: Ernest Hoge, Jr., Eleanor Matilda and Bettie Jane. Mr. Gilbert and his family are members of the Presbyterian Church and actively concerned in furthering its many benevolent enterprises. To the degree Mr. Gilbert is interested in politics, for he is prominent a man to entirely escape civic responsibility, but in the main he has been too continuously immersed in business to give a great deal of attention to public affairs. He is one of the solid and influential members of the Morgantown Chamber of Commerce, and personally is always ready to give encouragement to laudable business enterprises that seek a home in this city. He is a member of the Morgantown Union Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M., the Morgantown Chapter, R. A. M., and belongs also to the Odd Fellows and the Elks. He is vice president of the Morgantown Kiwanis Club, and a charter member of the Morgantown Country Club.

WALTON SUDDUTH was trained as a mechanical engineer, and since leaving college has had an extensive experience in the heavy construction work of railroad building and other industrial developments in West Virginia, Kentucky and Virginia. He is now head of the Walton Sudduth Company of Bluefield and one of that city's most progressive business men and citizens.

Mr. Sudduth was born in Mercer County, West Virginia, but near Falls Mills, on September 17, 1886, son of Edw. Hugh and Jane Ansil (Crockett) Sudduth. His father was born in Clark County, Virginia, in 1851, and is now living at Falls Mills. Jane Ansil Crockett, daughter of Dr. Henry Crockett, was born September 11, 1862, and died August 1, 1900. She was married July 9, 1883, and she left two children, Walton and Nannie Kate, the latter the wife of H. D. Smith, of McComas, West Virginia. By a later marriage E. H. Sudduth has a son Edwin H.

Edwin H. Sudduth early took up railway construction work and came to Mercer County, West Virginia, as superintendent for Mr. Walton during the construction of the Norfolk & Western Railway. The name of his home employer he gave to his son. E. H. Sudduth located in Welch in 1893, when that town was very young. Later he became associated with E. L. Bailey in the manufacture of lumber, and they owned extensive tracts of timberlands and also became prominent coal operators. When his associate E. H. Sudduth opened the Bailey Mine at the Sudduth Mine on Pond Creek in Pike County, Kentucky, and they also organized the Williamson Coal & Coke Company at Williamson, West Virginia. E. H. Sudduth now owns the Samuel Walton farm at Falls Mills, where he indulges his hobby in the breeding of fine cattle and sheep. He was one of the first, if not the first, mayor of Welch. He is an independent democrat and a man of religious principles, though not affiliated with any church.

Walton Sudduth acquired his early school training at the Staunton Military Academy of Virginia, and in 1907 graduated in the Mechanical Engineering course of Pennsylvania State College. He then became associated with the Samuel Walton Company at Falls Mills, and continued active in that enterprise until the death of his father in 1914. He then became a member of the Corporation Walton Construction Company, his associates

Ernest H. Gibson

L. J. Barber, Taylor Rogers and W. W. Cline. This company took over the Samuel Walton equipment. In 1910 Mr. Sudduth organized the Walton Sudduth Company, and has since been active head of this organization. He has the facilities and equipment for handling all kinds of heavy construction work and has performed many large contracts for the Norfolk & Western and Chesapeake & Ohio Railroads in West Virginia, Virginia and Kentucky and for the Virginia Railroad.

December 19, 1914, Mr. Sudduth married Sallie Maddin Jenkins, daughter of Robert T. Hopkins, of Nashville, Tennessee. They have three sons, Walton, Jr., Edwin Madland and Robert Hopkins. Mrs. Sudduth is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

WILLIAM B. WOOLF is a graduate electrical engineer from Cornell University, was associated in a technical and business capacity with some of the prominent coal interests in West Virginia, but for the past ten years has been the executive head of the Woolf Milling Company of Keyser. He is one of the keen and resourceful young business men in this section. He has to his credit a year and a half of overseas service in France during the World war.

He was born at Keyser, January 19, 1883. His grandfather, Andrew Woolf, was a native of Fauquier County, Virginia, and spent his life as a farmer. He was a Southerner in sympathy at the time of the war, but was too young for army service and his sons too young. He was a very enthusiastic member of the Southern Methodist Church, and his public speaking and other public work were largely in the interest of his church. Andrew Woolf married Miss Ann Dowl. Both are buried at Middleburg, Virginia. Their children were: Mrs. Gertrude Love, whose husband was at Hamilton, Virginia; Mrs. Lanna Kinzer, who lives at Front Royal, Virginia; Mrs. Thomas Kincheol, Rectortown, Virginia; James A., who was a Baptist minister in Virginia; Mrs. Mary Fletcher, who lives in Tucker County; and Rev. William E.

Rev. William E. Woolf, father of the Keyser business man, was a prominent minister of the Southern Methodist Church. He was born in Fauquier County in 1852, and was a graduate of Randolph-Macon College. He took up the ministry as a career early in life, and in that capacity came to West Virginia in 1880. His last work as a minister was as pastor of the Church of Herndon, Virginia, where he died in 1919. His only fraternity was the Senior Order. At Keyser Rev. William E. Woolf married Miss Mollie Buxton, daughter of Upton and Eliza Davis Buxton. Eliza Davis, a native of Maryland, was a daughter of Hon. Henry Gassaway Davis and Col. Thomas Davis, of the distinguished West Virginia family of that name. The children of Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Woolf were: William Buxton; Harry G., associated with his father in the milling business at Keyser; Andrew, in the automobile business at Harrisonburg, Virginia; Louise, wife of Keyser; Blanche, wife of H. S. Pownall, of Richwood, West Virginia.

William B. Woolf, who has never married, received a primary education in the public schools, for two years attended Maryland Agricultural College, and from there went to Ithaca, New York, where he finished his preparatory work in the Cascadilla School, and then entered Cornell University, taking four years in the electrical engineering course. On leaving Cornell Mr. Woolf began his career in association with his kinsman, Col. Thomas Davis, as a mine superintendent in Taylor County. He continued in his work in that field until the death of Colonel Davis, and some time later gave up the coal industry and returned to Keyser.

In the year 1913 he organized the Woolf Milling Company, which was started with a capital of $50,000, with William B. Woolf, president, Harry G. Woolf, secretary and treasurer, and J. F. Cadden, manager. These officers are still serving. This is a wholesale and retail plant, with a capacity of twenty-five barrels per day, and they also jobbers of flour and feed and local distributors of the Alpha Portland Cement Company.

Mr. Woolf is also a director of the Thompson Furniture Company, a wholesale and retail concern in Keyser, is a director in the People's Bank of Keyser and is a partner in the Mineral County Garage Company, the local agency for the Ford cars. Mr. Woolf is a democrat, casting his first vote for William J. Bryan.

In conclusion should be presented his interesting army record as a first class private. In order to get to the field of action without delay he went direct to Paris, France, in October, 1917, and there enlisted, being assigned to duty with the United States Ambulance Corps, attached to the French Army, with the Second Dismounted French Cavalry. The first major engagement at which he was present was at Champaign, followed by the battle of the Somme, the intense fighting in the Montdidier-Noyon section, the Marne defensive just before Chateau Thierry, St. Mihiel and the Meuse-Argonne offensive, and after the armistice he accompanied the Army of Occupation to the Rhine. A part of the French Army to which he was attached held ground chiefly at Mayence and Worms. He remained in the army until the end of February, 1919, when his unit was ordered out, but he was stationed at different places in France before leaving the country, finally sailing from Brest in March, 1919, on the transport Pueblo, bound for New York. The unit was then sent to Camp Dix, New Jersey, and discharged about April 1. Mr. Woolf was awarded the French croix de guerre. He helped organize the Bouce-Houser Post of the American Legion at Keyser, and was made its first commander.

RAYMOND G. HARMAN is engaged in the general merchandise business at Camden on Gauley, Webster County, and has here found ample scope for the development of a substantial and prosperous enterprise. He was born in Randolph County, West Virginia, June 5, 1888, and is a son of Noah and Sarah (Nash) Harman, both natives of Virginia and representatives of families early founded in the historic Old Dominion State. The marriage of the parents was solemnized in Pendleton County, West Virginia, and the father became a prosperous farmer in Randolph County, this state. He passed the closing period of his life on his homestead farm in that county, and his widow was a resident of Richwood, Nicholas County, at the time of her death in 1906. Of the six children four survive the honored parents: Samuel L. is engaged in the mercantile business at Richwood and is also the owner of a valuable ranch property in the State of Texas; Professor James A. owns and conducts an excellent and successful school of music at Harrisonburg, Virginia; Mary is the wife of Rev. Schuyler C. Dotson, of Beverly, Randolph County; and Raymond G., of this sketch, is the youngest of the number.

After his graduation from the high school at Richwood Raymond G. Harman pursued a course of higher study by attending the University of West Virginia. He has been continuously associated with mercantile enterprise since 1910, first at Richwood, Nicholas County, and next at Blackwell, Oklahoma, where he remained until 1917, when he returned to his native state and engaged in business at Camden on Gauley, where the effective service of his establishment has gained to the same a representative supporting patronage and where he has gained prestige as a progressive business man and loyal and public-spirited citizen. His political allegiance is given to the republican party, he is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and he is affiliated with Richwood Lodge No. 122, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

The year 1913 recorded the marriage of Mr. Harman and Miss Sadie Kirby, and they have five children, the names and respective birth dates of whom are here recorded: Robert, January 17, 1914; Mary C., August 8, 1915; James, June 2, 1917; William, June 15, 1919; and John, April 10, 1921.

WAYNEFIELD L. STUMP, who is giving a most efficient and popular administration as postmaster at Camden on Gauley, a thriving village in Webster County, was born in Gilmer County, this state, October 13, 1851, more than a decade prior to the creation of West Virginia as an independent commonwealth. He is a son of Salathiel and Permelia A. (Stalnaker) Stump, both of whom were reared on pioneer farms in Gilmer County, the birth of the father having there occurred January 23, 1832, and the mother having been born June 23, 1831. After their marriage the parents settled on a farm in that county, and in 1860 the father engaged in the general merchandise business, his store having later been destroyed, in connection with the activities of contending troops in the Civil war. After the close of the war he again identified himself with farm enterprise, and later he purchased a sawmill and engaged in the manufacturing of lumber. Eventually he equipped a full roller-process flour mill, which he operated several years. He finally removed to Calhoun County, where he engaged successfully in the mercantile business and where he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives, both having been members of the Baptist Church, and he having been a democrat in politics. Of the ten children five are living in 1922, and of this number Waynefield L., of this sketch, is the eldest; Aurelia is the wife of L. H. Trippett; Sipio Lee is a resident of Parkersburg, this state; Laura is the wife of Mike Conoway, of Buckhannon, Upshur County; and Jacob E. resides at Parkersburg.

The schools of his native county afforded Waynefield L. Stump his youthful education, and he remained at the parental home and was associated with his father's business activities until he had passed his twenty-second birthday anniversary. He then married, and in the intervening years by his own ability and well directed activities he has achieved substantial success. He is a stockholder in the Lanes Bottom Bank at Camden on Gauley, and in this village is the owner of the postoffice building, his own residence property and other valuable real estate. He is giving most efficient service as postmaster of the village, is a democrat in politics, is a past noble grand of Lodge No. 169 of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and both he and his wife are active members of the Baptist Church in their home village, he being a member of its Board of Trustees.

On the 7th of May, 1874, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Stump and Miss Louisa J. Ellison, and they have six children: Theodosia B., wife of W. J. White; Thurman Z., of Camden on Gauley; Baylus; Frank; Florence H., who is the wife of Archibald Hyatt; and Sipio Gray.

HARRY S. CUSHWA, former representative of Berkeley County in the Legislature, is a successful merchant at Martinsburg, and has been in close touch with the agricultural, horticultural and business interests of this community for many years.

He was born on a farm two and a half miles west of Martinsburg and is a lineal descendant of John Cushwa, a native of Alsace-Lorraine, who brought his family to America some time between 1670 and 1680 and settled in Berks County, Pennsylvania, on land secured from the Penns.

A later generation, represented by David Cushwa, with his wife, Catherine, moved to what is now Washington County, Maryland, securing land on Conowcheque Creek in the Dry Run Creek section, three or four miles east of Clear Spring and St. Paul's Church, and he improved a farm there and lived on it the rest of his life. He took a prominent part in the Revolutionary struggle. His grandson, Jonathan Cushwa, grandfather of Harry S. Cushwa, settled in Berkeley County and bought land two and a half miles west of Martinsburg, and eventually he improved three farms. He died at the age of sixty-one. His wife was Catherine Muzzleman, who survived him several years, and they reared four sons and three daughters, John, Bernard (who served as sheriff of Berkeley County, West Virginia), David, William, Elizabeth, Margaret and Katherine. Elizabeth married George Seibert, Margaret was three times married, and Katherine married John Middlekauf, of Maryland.

The father of Harry S. Cushwa succeeded to the ownership of the old homestead, and spent his life prosperously in the pursuit of general farming. He was a democrat and an elder in the Reformed Church. His children were Jonathan S., Harvey T., Kate E., Mary V., William B., Charles

G. (who served as mayor of Martinsburg two years) and Harry S.

Harry S. Cushwa acquired a private and public school education, and at the age of eighteen came to Martinsburg serving an apprenticeship as a carpenter. Later with brother Harvey he engaged in business as a contractor builder, and in 1888 they entered the hardware business. Since the death of Harvey Cushwa in 1902 Harry S. Cushwa has been sole proprietor and has continued the business on a flourishing scale. He is also interested in several chards in this great fruit growing section.

His interest in public affairs led to his election as a member of the city council in 1896, and he was chosen representative to the State Legislature and again in 1901. Cushwa married Fannie L. Myers, a native of Berkeley County and daughter of Jacob Myers. Mr. and Mrs. Cushwa are members of the Reformed Church, of which is a deacon.

DONALD J. ROSS is prominently identified with one of the important industrial enterprises of Webster County, where he is superintendent of the Cherry River Boom & Lumber Company at Gauley Mills.

In the picturesque little village of West Bay, on an arm of Bras d'Or Lake, Inverness County, Nova Scotia, Donald J. Ross was born April 12, 1864, and both his name and the place of his nativity indicate unmistakably that he is a scion of Scotch ancestry. He is a son of George and Catherine (Morrison) Ross, both of whom were born and reared in Inverness County, Nova Scotia, their respective parents having been born and reared in Scotland and having become early settlers in Nova Scotia, where they passed the remainder of their lives on a farm which they reclaimed and improved in Inverness County. George Ross and his wife passed their entire lives in their native county, where he became a prosperous farmer, and both were devoted members of the Presbyterian Church. Of their eight children three are living at the time of this writing, in the subject of this review being the only one of the number in the United States; John owns and resides upon a farm of 400 acres in Nova Scotia, and Margaret is the wife of L. D. Morris, their home being still in Nova Scotia.

In the schools of his native county Donald J. Ross acquired his early education, and at the age of eight years he went to Boston, Massachusetts, where he was connected with the fisheries industry along the Atlantic Coast until the autumn of that year. In 1883 he made his way to Pennsylvania, and he has since been continuously identified with the lumber industry, with all the details of which he is familiar through active experience. From the Keystone State he finally came to West Virginia, where here he has made an excellent record in connection with the lumber business, of which he is now a prominent executive, as noted in the opening paragraph of this review. He is a stockholder in the First National Bank at Cow

The political allegiance of Mr. Ross is given to the republican party, and in the time-honored Masonic fraternity he is affiliated with Camden Lodge No. 107, A. F. & A. M., of which he is a past master; Sutton Chapter No. 29, R. M.; Sutton Commandery No. 16, Knights Templar; and with the temple of Beni-Kedem of the Mystic Shrine in the City of Charleston. He has been specially prominent and influential as a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of the local lodge of which he is a past noble grand, besides having served eighteen years as its treasurer. In the Encampment body of the fraternity he is past chief patriarch, besides being a member of the junior organization, the Daughters of Rebekah.

On the 30th of October, 1886, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Ross and Miss Edith J. DeLong, of Blancha Center County, Pennsylvania, and of the eight children this union all are living except one: George A., Chauncey Edith J., Burton (deceased), Thelma, Clair, Donald J., and Juanita.

JAMES W. HINKLE is a vigorous and efficient executive and holds the position of foreman of the Cherry River Boom and Lumber Company at Gauley Mills, West ary, this being one of the important industrial concerns of this section of the state.

W. Hinkle was born in Nicholas County, West Virginia, August 3, 1863, and is a son of Samuel and Eliza (McMillen) Hinkle, both natives of what is now Greenbrier County, this state, where they were reared and educated. Here they continued to maintain their residence until the removal to Webster County. Here the father became the owner of an excellent farm, and here he and his wife spent the remainder of their lives. He was a republican politician and Mrs. Hinkle was an earnest member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Of their eleven children the following are now living (1922): Margaret, Hetty, L. B., Bettie, Newman, M. D., and Mary F. (twins), and James W.

To activities of the home farm early enlisted a due regard of the attention of James W. Hinkle, and in the meanwhile he profited by the advantages offered in the schools of the period. He remained at the parental home until he was thirty years of age, and he has been actively engaged with the timber and lumber-manufacturing business for fully thirty-five years, during the last eighteen of which he has been foreman for the Cherry River Boom and Lumber Company. He is a stockholder in the First National Bank at Richwood, and is aligned in the ranks of the republican party. His wife holds membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In the Masonic fraternity he is affiliated with Camden Lodge No. 107, A. F. and A. M., Sutton Chapter No. 29, R. A. M.; and Sutton Commandery, No. 16, Knights Templar. He has passed the odd degrees in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is a member of both the Lodge and Encampment bodies of the Knights of Pythias.

On August 3, 1899, recorded the marriage of Mr. Hinkle and Miss Nannie Hinkle. They have no children.

W. D. McCLUNG. On the 5th of August, 1919, Mr. McClung was appointed postmaster of the City of Richwood, Nicholas County, and his effective administration has tended to augment his personal popularity in his native county. He was born on his father's homestead farm near Richwood, on the 29th of October, 1884. He is a son of John G. and Fannie (Grose) McClung, and is a scion of one of the honored pioneer families of this part of West Virginia. Jackson G. McClung was born on a pioneer farm in Nicholas County, July 14, 1849, and his wife likewise was born on a farm in this county, October 14, 1852. His original farm, near Canvas, this county, comprised only fifty acres, and the substantial success that has attended his progressive activities as an agriculturist and stock-grower indicated in his now being the owner of a well improved valuable landed estate of 350 acres in his native county. He is a democrat in political affiliation, and while he has been ambitious for public office he gave twelve years efficient service as deputy sheriff of the county. Both he and his wife are zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in which he is serving as a member of the board of trustees. Of their eight children the eldest is Harvey, who is one of the prosperous farmers of Nicholas County; Elizabeth A. is the wife of Newman H. of this county; Anderson is a successful merchant farmer of Nicholas County; Worth D., of this review, the next in order of birth; Augustus and Andrew are representative farmers of Nicholas County, as is also Coffey, who has active charge of the old homestead farm; Lester, who is at the parental home was with the American Expeditionary Forces in France at the time of the late world war, he having been in a battery of light artillery having been in active conflict at the front for a period of forty-five days.

The present postmaster of Richwood did not miss the rigorous discipline of the home farm in the period of his childhood and early youth. His public-school education included the curriculum of the high school, and thereafter he spent two years a student in the University of West Virginia. He put his scholastic attainments to practical test and use by entering the pedagogic profession, as a representative of which he was for thirteen years a successful teacher in the schools of his native county. Under the civil-service regulations he became a mail carrier from the Richwood post office, later was advanced to the position of assistant postmaster, and on the 5th of August, 1919, he was appointed postmaster of this city, the office of which he is now the incumbent. Mr. McClung gives his political allegiance to the democratic party, he and his wife are zealous members of the Presbyterian Church at Richwood, in which he is superintendent of the Sunday school, and he is affiliated with the Richwood Lodge No. 122, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and with the local lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. September 15, 1912, recorded the marriage of Mr. McClung and Miss Cora Baber, who likewise was born and reared in Nicholas County and who is a daughter of Joseph Baber. The three children of this union are: Pauline, Worth D., Jr., and Dee.

HAROLD A. RICE is one of the able and popular representatives of the pedagogic profession in Nicholas County, where he is superintendent of the public schools of the City of Richwood.

Mr. Rice was born on his father's fine homestead farm near Berkeley Springs, Morgan County, West Virginia, and the date of his nativity was October 29, 1894. He is a son of F. E. and Birdie (Fisher) Rice, the former of whom was born near Leesburg, Loudoun County, Virginia, February 21, 1864, and the latter of whom was born in the same historic old commonwealth, on the 19th of February, 1863. The father was given the advantages of the public schools of Virginia and West Virginia, also those of an academy in the State of Maryland. As a young man he gave sixteen years of effective service as a teacher in the public schools of West Virginia, his wife likewise having been a popular teacher prior to their marriage. After his marriage F. E. Rice established his residence on the farm which he purchased at a point eleven miles south of Berkeley Springs, Morgan County, West Virginia. He now has a well improved landed estate of 260 acres near Berkeley Springs, West Virginia, and has prestige as one of the substantial and progressive exponents of agricultural and live-stock industry in that county. He is a republican in political adherence, and he served seven years as a member of the County Court of Morgan County. He is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, and he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Of their five children Harold A., of this sketch, is the eldest; Ray R. and his wife reside in Morgan County, where he is a prosperous farmer; Worth K. is a graduate of the University of West Virginia; Ralph L. is a member of the class of 1925 in that institution; and Teddy R. is a student of the high school at Berkeley Springs, he being there a member of the class of 1923.

The stage of the boyhood and youthful activities of Harold A. Rice was the old home farm, and in the public schools of his native county he continued his studies until his graduation in the high school at Berkeley Springs in 1912. During the ensuing year he taught in a rural school in his home county, and in 1914 graduated from the West Virginia State Normal School at Shepherdstown, as president of his class. Thereafter he was principal of graded schools and in 1916-17 was found enrolled as a student in the University of West Virginia. Shortly after the nation became involved in the World War Mr. Rice enlisted, in the summer of 1917, and was assigned to the field artillery division of the United States Army, he having continued in service eighteen months, within which period he rose to the rank of Lieutenant and was stationed at various army camps, including Fort Sill, Oklahoma, where he was graduated in the advanced school of field artillery. He received his honorable discharge at Camp Knox, Kentucky, where he had been an instructor in artillery firing. He then resumed his studies in the State University, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1920, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. In the same year he became principal of the high school at Richwood, and in March, 1921, he was advanced to his present position, that of superintendent of the public schools of this city.

Mr. Rice is well fortified in his convictions concerning matters of economic and governmental policy, and is a loyal advocate and supporter of the cause of the republican party. He is affiliated with the Beta Theta Pi college fraternity, and in the Masonic fraternity maintains affiliation with DeFord Lodge No. 88, A. F. and A. M.; Richmond Chapter No. 37, R. A. M.; and Sutton Commandery No. 16, Knights Templar. He and his wife are zealous members of the Presbyterian Church in their home city.

June 30, 1921, recorded the marriage of Mr. Rice and Miss Beatrice Witt, of Elkins, this state. She graduated from the University of West Virginia in 1920, as a member of the same class as her husband. She is at the time of this writing, in 1922, a specially successful and popular teacher in the Richwood High School.

JAMES HUSTON HALL. In the four years since he came to Huntington as general agent for the Standard Accident Insurance Company of Detroit Mr. Hall has developed the business over his territory, comprising the two states of West Virginia and Kentucky, so that in point of volume and sustained production this is one of the most important general agencies of the company.

Mr. Hall entered the insurance business in his native State of Kentucky. He was born in Maysville, Mason County, July 10, 1879, representing an old and prominent family of that city. His grandfather, also named James Huston Hall, was born in Pennsylvania in 1817, and lived in Maysville from about 1825. He became a manufacturer of plows, and in 1840 established the James H. Hall Plow Company, which has manufactured a line of agricultural implements for over fourscore years. He was a Southern sympathizer at the time of the Civil war, and for this reason was held a prisoner several months in Fortress Monroe. He died at Maysville in 1886. His wife was Mary Brooks, who was born in Virginia in 1818, and died at Maysville in 1889.

James Huston Hall II, son of the pioneer plow manufacturer, was born at Maysville, February 23, 1849, and spent all his life in his native city. As a youth he became associated with his father's industry, and for a number of years was president of the James H. Hall Plow Company. He died at Maysville January 9, 1909. In politics he was a democrat, was a Mason, and one of the very prominent members of the Baptist Church of Maysville, in which he was a deacon for many years. James H. Hall II married Anna Belle Jackson, who was born at Maysville, February 3, 1855, and died in that city February 27, 1900. They were the parents of three children. Suzanne Huston is the wife of Carroll P. Marshall, special agent at Huntington for the United States Fidelity & Guarantee Insurance Company of Baltimore; Thomas Jackson, who died at San Antonio, Texas, January 4, 1899; and James Huston.

James Huston Hall III acquired a public school education at Maysville, and from the high school of that city entered the Staunton Military Academy at Staunton, Virginia, where he graduated in May, 1897, with rank of First Captain. After completing his education he went to San Antonio, Texas, and was clerk in the Menger Hotel of that city until 1899, when he returned to Kentucky and began work for the James H. Hall Plow Company as billing clerk. As representative of the third generation of the family he was connected with that industry until 1912, and for some time before his resignation he was vice president of the company. In 1912 Mr. Hall severed his connection with the plow company to engage in the insurance business. He formed a partnership with C. P. Marshall of Huntington, and under the firm name of Marshall & Hall took the general agency of the Standard Accident Insurance Company of Detroit, Michigan, for Kentucky and West Virginia. Mr. Hall removing to Maysville, where the Kentucky offices were located. In 1918 he purchased the interests of his partner and removed to Huntington. The business is being conducted under the name of James H. Hall "The Accident Man." During four years the volume of business of that company in Kentucky and West Virginia has quadrupled. His offices are in the First National Bank Building.

Mr. Hall is a democrat, was a member of the Maysville

School Board two years, and is a member of the First Baptist Church of his native city. June 12, 1900, at Cincinnati he married Miss Margaret Duke Watson, daughter of Duke and Mollie (Ravenscraft) Watson, now deceased. Her father for many years was a farmer in Kentucky. Mr. Hall finished her education in the St. Francis DeSas Academy of Maysville. Mr. and Mrs. Hall have a family of seven children: Annabelle Jackson, born April 14, 19 is a graduate of the Maysville High School and attends Kentucky State University; Mary Watson, born June 19, 1905, was a student in the Maysville High School; Jan Hinton IV, born September 14, 1911; Margaret Duke, born October 15, 1912; Bessie Duke born October 15, 1913; Thomas Jackson, born December 4, 1916; and William Franklin, born November 4, 1918.

JOHN GRIGSBY MCCLUER. One of Parkersburg's old and most distinguished lawyers, the late Judge McCluer who died April 13, 1921, long retained the vigor and enthusiasm of youth, was eloquent and brilliant in court and on the platform, and throughout a long life utilized to singular advantage his learning, oratory and many other versatile gifts.

Among many tributes paid him in his character as lawyer one that is most distinctive came from another prominent Parkersburg attorney, who said that Judge McCluer "never commercialized the practice of his profession giving little attention to the business end, but devoting himself to winning his cases on their merit without exacting a retaining fee, fighting his cases clear through with fairness, faithfulness and fidelity to his clients; a true and typical gentleman, a man of strong personality and eloquent orator who loves his profession and was an inspiration to his associates and friends."

John Grigsby McCluer was of Scotch-Irish ancestry and was born in Rockbridge County, Virginia, April 8, 184 son of John Steele and Seges Price (Cameron) McCluer. As a youth he attended country schools, Rural Vale Seminary near Lexington, and then entered Washington College, now Washington and Lee University, at Lexington. While a student there he also attended law lectures at Judge John W. Brockenbrough, whose private law school was subsequently consolidated with and became the law department of Washington and Lee University. The firm honors and distinction of Judge McCluer were those of a fearless soldier. He entered the Rockbridge Artillery, whose commander afterward was chief of artillery under General Lee. Later he joined Company B of the Twelfth Regiment of Virginia Cavalry, and at one time was attached to the staff of Gen. Stonewall Jackson as courier and scout. In 1864 he was captured, and remained a prisoner of war at Point Lookout until February, 1865, and the surrender at Appomattox occurred while he was home on a furlough. He immediately resumed the study of law under Judge Brockenbrough, graduated from Washington College in 1866, and soon afterward returned home to be with his father in his last illness. After the death of his father in 1867 he took charge of the home farm near Lexington and was busy with those duties until November, 1873, when he removed to Parkersburg and formally began his career as a lawyer. Judge McCluer had practiced law nearly fifty years before his death. He was elected prosecuting attorney of Wood County in 1880, reelected in 1884 and in 1888 Governor E. W. Wilson appointed him judge of the Circuit Court for the Fifth Judicial Circuit. After leaving the bench he resumed private practice. He was one of the most eloquent orators in the democratic party in Virginia, and participated in nearly all the campaigns. He was a democratic elector in 1892, attended the National Convention at Kansas in 1900, and was once a candidate for Congress.

September 12, 1876, Mr. McCluer married Bettie C. Cook, daughter of James Cook and member of a pioneer family of Wood County. Judge and Mrs. McCluer had the following children: James Steele; John Cameron, now a prominent lawyer of Pittsburgh; Henry Randolph, a banker in Parkersburg; John G., Jr., who died October 6, 1911; Earl Hamilton, who died October 16, 1916; Lawrence M.

James H. Fall,

ed August 20, 1916; Mary Cook, now Mrs. Paul C. Cook, of Parkersburg; and Charles F. A. McCluer, whose home is at Electra, Texas.

James Steele McCluer, the oldest son, was born at Parkersburg November 15, 1877, and was reared and educated in this city. For two years he was a student in his father's alma mater, Washington and Lee University, in the academic department, and then continued in the law, graduating LL. B. in 1899. After his admission to the bar he located at Parkersburg and became associated with his father in the law firm of McCluer, Forrer & McCluer. For twenty years before his father's death the firm was McCluer & McCluer. He is the present city clerk of Parkersburg, and since the death of his father has become associated with B. M. Ambler and Mason G. Forrer under the firm name of Ambler, McCluer and Forrer.

Mr. McCluer is a democrat, is a member of the Mu Pi Kappa college fraternity, is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, member of Nemesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine, is a past exalted ruler of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and a member of the Kiwanis Club.

October 21, 1903, he married Birdie B. Baker, whose father, Gen. S. B. Baker, died while serving as adjutant general of West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. McCluer have two children: Anna Elizabeth and Helen Baker.

WALTER E. STOUT has had a varied and active part in the program of business and civic affairs of Parkersburg. He is present postmaster of the city, was former clerk of the Circuit Court, and has always been identified at different times with the oil interests of the family.

One of the members of the family long prominent in the affairs of West Virginia was John Wilkinson Stout, grandfather of the Parkersburg postmaster. John W. Stout was born in Pleasants County, Virginia, June 23, 1831, son of Elias L. and Martha (Hathorn) Stout and grandson of Benjamin Stout, who established the family in Parkersburg on moving from Pennsylvania. John W. Stout was a farmer and also a civil engineer, and did a great deal of surveying in Pleasants and adjoining counties, having the task of surveying a tract of land once owned by George Washington. He was a member of the West Virginia State Senate and for years a school commissioner. John W. Stout married Ruth Ann Curtis, daughter of John S. and granddaughter of Mathew Curtis of Connecticut. John W. Stout moved to Pleasants County in 1820, acquiring an immense tract of land in that region.

John W. Stout was the oldest of the seven children of John W. Stout and his wife John L. Stout, who was born in Pleasants County, though the greater part of his life he lived in Wood County. He was a farmer and for about twenty years was interested in oil production and was also a Parkersburg manufacturer. His first wife, America Madson, was of Revolutionary ancestry. Their four sons were Charles R., Walter E., Elden M. and Okey J. Charles and Elden are deceased.

Walter E. Stout was born on a farm February 20, 1871, and moved with his parents to Parkersburg in 1883. He was educated from the local high school in 1889, and his active business and public career covers thirty years. For thirteen years he was an employee of the Standard Oil Company, where he was county clerk of Wood County for six years, from 1902 to 1909. During 1909-10 he was engaged in oil production and was then elected Circuit Court clerk, office he held during 1911 to 1914. During 1915-16 his business service was rendered as cashier of the Parkersburg Banking & Trust Company. He then resumed his oil production interests from the middle of 1916 to November, 1917.

His appointment as postmaster of Parkersburg on November 27, 1917, came entirely unsolicited on his part. He has capably fulfilled the duties of that office, involving an immense amount of detail and administrative work, now for four years. Mr. Stout is a Knight Templar Mason and Shriner and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Elks and Knights of Pythias. He is a member of the Baptist Church. On Thanksgiving Day, 1896, Mr. Stout married Georgiana Elliott. To their marriage have been born eight children, named Virginia, now Mrs. Roy Patton, Martha, Walter E., Catherine, Charles, John, and Robert and Richard, twins.

HUGH PHELPS DILS, who died at Parkersburg January 7, 1919, was a good business man, a good citizen, and performed with quiet efficiency a wide range of duties. He was content and happy in his work and his home, and was perhaps not as well known as some men less successful.

He was born at Parkersburg July 16, 1856, was a son of James Dils and grandson of Hugh P. Dils, who in 1846 entered the dry goods business in Frederick County, Virginia, and in 1856 moved to Parkersburg, where the name Dils has been a prominent one in commercial affairs for sixty-five years. James W. Dils, who was born at Parkersburg in 1826 and died in 1896, was his father's associate in business.

The late Hugh Phelps Dils acquired a public school education at Parkersburg, and at the age of fifteen entered the business founded by his grandfather and then conducted by his father. He was successively clerk, partner, and after 1908 a member and officer of the corporation known as H. P. Dils & Son Company. Mr. Dils attended Eastman's Business College at Poughkeepsie, New York. He was also a director and vice president of the Second National Bank. He was a member of the Methodist Church, but had few associations with organizations, since he preferred the quiet routine of home and his business office. He was helpful, public spirited, but always preferred that his name be withheld from any special act of charity.

In 1878 Mr. Dils married Eleanor Mary Hannon, of Parkersburg, daughter of Joseph T. Hannon. The two children of their union are Anna Eleanor and Sherman. The daughter is now Mrs. Roydon Murphy.

Sherman Dils, who was born in Parkersburg March 10, 1881, was educated in the public schools and West Virginia State University, and for fifteen years was associated with his father's business. Though representing the fourth generation of a family consecutively identified with mercantile affairs, his talents more dispose him to mechanical affairs, and for some years past he has been a figure in automobile circles in Parkersburg. He now has the authorized Ford and Ford Tractor agency in Parkersburg, and does an extensive business in the sale and repair of cars and tractors. His plant is a two-story brick building, with total floor space of 25,000 square feet. October 1, 1908, Sherman Dils married Gaynell Davis, of Parkersburg, daughter of H. H. Davis. They have one son, Sherman, Jr.

JOHN W. ROMINE. The Romines were a family established in the wilderness of Western now West Virginia before the middle of the eighteenth century, and the successive generations have maintained the name in associations of dignity, honor and usefulness. The family has been in Wood County for more than a century, and the present generation is represented by John W. Romine, a leading wholesale lumber dealer of Parkersburg.

As early as 1620 four brothers of the name came from Holland and landed at Plymouth, Massachusetts. Descendants have since scattered over the entire nation. From New England a branch of the family moved into the Valley of Virginia. Out of that valley Samuel Romine moved to what is now West Virginia, and died about 1749. A monument to his memory stands in the Bethel Church Cemetery in the Nubeck District of Wood County. His son, Peter Romine, was also a pioneer of this region, a farmer and a cooper by trade. He married Mollie Maddox. Their son, Thomas Romine, was born in Wood County in 1813 and followed the business of farming and broom manufacturing. He was active in the Baptist Church and a member of its Sunday School thirty years. Thomas Romine died in 1892. The mother of his four children was Nancy Rowland. Their two sons were Matthew N. and George Rowland. These two brothers served on opposite sides in the Civil war. Matthew was a Union soldier, and subsequently moved to the State of Oklahoma, where he is still living.

George Rowland Romine was born at Quakertown, Wood County, April 2, 1846, had a subscription school education and when only ten years of age went to work in a tobacco shop at 4 cents a day. During the subsequent years of his early youth he worked on his father's farm and also in other occupations, and at the age of seventeen he walked 200 miles to join the Confederate army, enlisting in Company F of the Seventeenth Virginia Cavalry. This was Jenkins Cavalry. One stormy night while doing picket duty in the Shenandoah Valley Colonel Thompson rode up and tried to pass by, simply announcing his name and rank. Romine made him dismount and give the countersign. His conduct was reported to General McCausland, now living at Point Pleasant. When Romine appeared before the general he explained that he was but following orders issued by McCausland himself. The general ended the interview by asking, "Why didn't you shoot him?" November 12, 1864, in the Shenandoah Valley, he was taken prisoner and remained at Point Lookout, Maryland, until July, 1865. The years following the war he had a difficult experience in getting a start in business. He did farm labor, rented a farm, moved to Parkersburg in 1867 and worked in the city, then became superintendent of a farm in Wood County, and after his marriage in 1870 he rented the farm for two years. He then lived for a time on the farm of his wife's father, and for fourteen years had his home in Jackson County, where he was a farmer and cattle drover. From farming he entered the lumber industry, and in 1899 he returned to his grandfather's homestead in Wood County. For five years he was financially interested in and manager of a planing mill at Parkersburg. During his last years he lived retired in Parkersburg, where he died March 23, 1919. He was highly respected by his fellows, was charitable in the extreme, and ever ready to extend a helping hand to the needy. He was a Baptist, a staunch democrat, and while living in Jackson was elected in 1890 a county commissioner, an office he filled six years, and for twenty-five years he was a school trustee. George Romine married sisters, Ellen and Victoria Flynn, daughters of John Flynn, a prominent resident in the southern part of Wood County. His first marriage occurred in December, 1870, and his second in 1877. The children of his first marriage were Victoria and Kate, while those of the second marriage were Edna, John Wesley, Dixie, Trixie, Thomas and Lucy.

John Wesley Romine, whose mother was Victoria Flynn, was born at Flynn, West Virginia, February 20, 1881. He graduated from the Parkersburg High School in 1897 and in 1904 received the A. B. degree from Washington and Lee University. Since leaving university his time and energies have been fully taken up with a broadening scope of business affairs, chiefly in the lumber business, with which for a time he was associated with his father. In 1905 he became a traveling salesman for a firm at Zanesville, Ohio, but since 1908 has been in the wholesale lumber business at Parkersburg. He is president of the J. W. Romine Lumber Company, and is also interested in the oil and gas industry and a number of other local enterprises. During the World war he was a leader in Parkersburg in promoting the various drives for funds. He is an active member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and a member of the Baptist Church. On July 25, 1916, he married Marguerite Baker, daughter of a distinguished West Virginian, Gen. Samuel B. Baker. They have one daughter, Marguerite Elizabeth, and one son, John W., Jr.

JOHN T. PAULDING, who is now living retired at Martinsburg, Berkeley County, was born at Greencastle, Franklin County, Pennsylvania, on the 3rd of November, 1845, a son of Frank Morgan Paulding, who was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in 1818, and whose father, John Paulding, was born in England and came to America at an early day. Representatives of the family have been numbered among the first settlers in Paulding County, Ohio, which was named in honor of the family. John Paulding removed to Pennsylvania and located at Valley Forge, where in his home he had the honor of entertaining Gen. George Washington, whose family physician, Doctor Johnson, and married Eleanor Paulding, a representative of the Paulding family. The ancient medicine chest that was carried by this pioneer physician, Doctor Johnson, as well as the skeleton which he used in weighing medicines, together with his insect, are now in the possession of John T. Paulding of this sketch, the interesting relics having been handed down in the family. John Paulding married Elizabeth Morgan of Welsh lineage and a member of the same family as Gen. Daniel Morgan, of Revolutionary fame.

John Paulding became a pioneer settler in Franklin County, Pennsylvania, where he acquired large tracts of land in what is now Antrim Township, and on a part of this land is now a portion of the City of Greencastle. He married Rebecca Prather, who was born in Venango County, Pennsylvania, of a pioneer family. Mr. and Mrs. Paulding passed the closing years of their lives at Brown Mills, Franklin County.

Frank Morgan Paulding became a prosperous farmer and live stock dealer in Pennsylvania, and about 1847 he moved from Franklin County to Park Head, Washington County, Maryland, whence, three years later, he came to what is now Berkeley County, West Virginia, purchased land and engaged in general farming and stock-raising. During the period of the Civil war his live stock and farm products were confiscated by the Confederate forces, and he was met with heavy financial losses. After the close of the war he again attended his farm operations, and he remained on the old homestead place until 1892, when he removed to Martinsburg, where he died at the home of his son John T. when eighty-seven years of age. His wife was eighty-nine years of age at the time of her death. Her maiden name was Sarah Royer, and she was born in Quincy Township, Franklin County, Pennsylvania, a daughter of John Royer, the family name of whose wife was Stover. The Royers removed from Philadelphia and became pioneer settlers in Franklin County. The children of Frank M. and Rebecca (Prather) Paulding were: George Morgan, Mary Elizabeth, Susan, John T., Rebecca Prather and Frank Farmer. The parents were members of the German Baptist Church.

John T. Paulding attended the district schools, a village academy in his native county and Mercersburg College, and after duly qualifying himself he engaged in teaching in the rural schools a portion of each successive year. He continued as a successful teacher for twenty-seven years, principally in the Hedgesville and Martinsburg districts of Berkeley County, West Virginia, and he gave eleven years of effective service as assistant county examiner of teachers.

Mr. Paulding was one of the first to recognize the value of Berkeley County limestone in its application to the iron industry, and he became associated with others in acquiring extensive quarries. In his correspondence with J. Pierpont Morgan, a distant kinsman, he told of the limestone of Berkeley County and voiced his belief that the product would be valuable as a substitute for the oyster shells that were used at the furnaces of the United States Steel Corporation. At Mr. Morgan's suggestion the steel men sent experts to make investigation, and the result is that large quantities of the Berkeley County limestone rock are now shipped weekly to the furnaces, while many men are given employment at the quarries. Mr. Paulding was actively identified with the development of this important quarrying industry, in which he still retains an interest, and he is now living virtually retired from active business.

Mr. Paulding married Miss Anna Brown Bowman, who was born in the house in which she and her husband now live, at Martinsburg, she being a daughter of Andrew J. Elizabeth (Gruber) Bowman. Mr. and Mrs. Paulding have two sons, John T., Jr., and Frank Bowman, but the latter is now deceased. The only daughter died at the age of five years. Mr. Paulding is a staunch republican, his first presidential vote having been cast for Rutherford B. Hayes, and he and his wife are earnest members of Christ Reformed Church in their home city. Their circle of friends in the tion of the state is limited only by that of their attainments.

LEVIN SMITH is junior member of the Parkersburg law firm of Merrick & Smith, a partnership that has been in existence for thirty-four years. Mr. Smith is an able lawyer, well qualified to handle the splendid practice that has come to this firm from all over the state.

He is a native of Wood County, born on a farm December 22, 1861, a son of William Haimes and Sarah (rector) Smith. His grandfather, Robert S. Smith, was a Englishman, being a son of Rev. Francis Smith and grandson of Rev. Robert Smith, both Baptist ministers in Nottingham, England. Rev. Robert Smith was a friend and contemporary of John Wesley.

Robert S. Smith married in England Lucy Lord Brooks, of Loughborough, and after the birth of their first child they came to America in 1819. Their first home was at Baltimore, later at Pittsburgh, and about 1825 they moved to the pioneer Town of Parkersburg, then in old Virginia. Robert S. Smith was a coppersmith by trade, though in Virginia his business was chiefly that of a merchant and a trader on the river. His children born in America were Robert, Henry, Thomas, Maria, Lucy, Mary and Elizabeth. Of these Robert was the father of Charles Brooks Smith, well known West Virginia congressman. William Haimes Smith, oldest son of Robert S. Smith, was born in England June 1, 1818, and was about seven years of age when the family moved to Parkersburg. He finished his education at Kenyon College in Ohio, and in early life was associated with his father in the mercantile business and in making trips to the stores at various points along the river. He also did flatboating down the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. He became a man of success and prominence in Wood County, and in the early days was appointed to assess the lands of the county. He was elected county recorder in 1870, and served as president of the Board of Education at Parkersburg. He was of a deep religious turn of mind, living his religion in everyday life, and for many years was a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In politics he voted as a whig, later as a democrat, and finally as a prohibitionist. He was a man of correct habits, and stood for everything progressive. His death occurred February 22, 1906, and his wife passed away in October, 1890. Sarah Rector, his wife, was a daughter of Charles Rector, who was high sheriff of Wood County when that county comprised the present Wirt and Pleasant counties. Of the nine children of William H. Smith and wife seven reached mature years: Alice Boot, William Haimes, Charles Robert, Arthur Beauchamp, Lucy, Troilus P. and Levin.

Mr. Smith has always lived in Wood County. He attended the public schools of Parkersburg and the private school of Prof. John C. Nash, graduated from high school in 1881, and the following fall entered Harvard Law School, where he completed a three years' course. He was admitted to the bar in 1884. He forthwith began practice, and three years later formed his partnership with Mr. C. D. Merrick in the firm of Merrick & Smith. The extensive business of this firm has fully absorbed his time and energies, and while interested in political affairs he held only one office, that of city solicitor for two years.

Mr. Smith is a democrat and a prominent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He has been a representative to the general conference and was appointed a delegate to the General Council of the Churches of Christ in America. He is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. June 21, 1887, Mr. Smith married Nellie Marshall Williams. They have a family of four children: Helen B., wife of James Selby McClinton, and they have one son, James S., Jr.; Sara Rector, teacher of history in the Parkersburg High School; Levin, Jr., who married Miss Catherine Kennedy; and Elizabeth Keith, a student at Ohio State University.

Levin Smith, Jr., is a graduate of the Kentucky Military Institute. He volunteered his services for the World war and made a good record while a non-commissioned officer at Camp Shelby. Deeming his chances of getting into service overseas unfavorable, he secured change of assignment to the tank service as a member of the Three Hundred and First Tank Battalion. He was with the British during the drive on the Hindenburg line September 29, 1918. On that date the tank blew up, four of the eight crew being killed and two seriously wounded, though young Smith escaped injury. After this he was assigned to special motor service, driving officers on tours of inspection until the close of the war. He is now a resident of Parkersburg.

VACHER BARNES ARCHER. One of the ablest lawyers of West Virginia, Vacher Barnes Archer has practiced in this state over forty years, the greater part of the time at Parkersburg. His eminence does not rest upon a record of public service so much as upon the ability with which he has handled a great mass of important litigation. He is also widely known as a legal author.

Mr. Archer was born in Noble County, Ohio, April 1, 1851, son of Elisha and Susan (Archer) Archer. The Archers for several generations lived in Virginia. Soon after the Revolutionary war the family moved into the Shenandoah Valley and later to the vicinity of the present City of Moundsville, West Virginia. From there a representative of the family, known as "James the first," established a home in Noble County, Ohio. "James the second" was the father of Elisha Archer, above named.

Vacher Barnes Archer was five years of age when his parents moved to Athens County, Ohio, and he grew up on their farm in that county. He supplemented the common schools by attending Miller's Seminary at Marshfield, and from the age of seventeen until twenty-five was a teacher, chiefly in the schools of Athens County. For seven years of this time he studied law, entirely under his own direction, and made such progress as to win special commendation from the judge of the court who examined him and licensed him to practice in the courts of Ohio in the spring of 1876. In June, 1879, he was admitted before the State Supreme Court.

Soon after qualifying as a lawyer Mr. Archer removed to West Virginia and was engaged in practice at Elizabeth in Wirt County until 1886, when he removed to Parkersburg, where his professional interests have been centered for the past thirty-five years. For some years he specialized in railroad law, and was general counsel for the Ohio River Railroad Company. While he has been engaged in an extensive general practice, he is probably best known as an authority on all branches of the law affecting the oil and gas industry. Out of his wide experience in that field he prepared and compiled a standard work entitled "Archer's Law and Practice in Oil and Gas Cases." Another legal work, deriving from his experience and litigation in interstate commerce cases, is "Archer's Federal Liability Act," which is yet to be published.

These few notes indicate the type of lawyer represented by Mr. Archer. He is noted for his broad scholarship, his comprehensive knowledge of a great range of the law in its theory and in its application, and it has never been necessary for him to resort to politics or the minor business of the courts to satisfy his ambitions for success in this field. Mr. Archer is a republican, and his father was one of the original members of the party, supporting General Fremont in the first campaign in 1856. Mr. Archer is a Methodist, and is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. April 13, 1876, he married Elvira Beard, daughter of William Beard, of Wood County, West Virginia. Mrs. Archer died in June, 1909, and is survived by a daughter, Zaluma, now the wife of John T. Chesley, of Washington, District of Columbia.

JAMES W. DILS is head of a business at Parkersburg that has been in existence for three quarters of a century and into which the energies, enterprise and business acumen of three generations of this family have been placed.

His grandfather, Hugh P. Dils, was a native of Pennsylvania and in 1846, under the name of H. P. Dils & Son, entered the drygoods business in Wood County, Virginia. In 1856 the business was removed to Parkersburg, where H. P. Dils continued active in the firm until his death.

His business partner and successor was his son, James W. Dils, who was born at Parkersburg in 1826 and died in that city in August, 1896. He bore a strong resemblance to Abraham Lincoln. He was a model citizen, a good husband and father, and too much cannot be said of his sterling character. He first became a member of the firm J. W. Dils & Hopkins, then was his father's partner in H. P. Dils & Son, and after the death of his father continued the business alone until 1871, when he and his son Hugh comprised the firm of J. W. Dils & Son, and with the addition of the present James W. Dils became J. W. Dils & Sons. The senior J. W. Dils was also for several years president of the Second National Park of Parkersburg, and was a leading member of the Methodist Church. He married Welthea Little, who died in 1904. After his death his sons Hugh P. and James W. bought out the other heirs and continued the business as the H. P. and J. W. Dils, but in 1907 incorporated as H. P. Dils & Son Company.

The head of the business today is James W. Dils, now the senior of that name, who was born in Parkersburg August 24, 1867. Except for three years he spent in the manufacturing business in Philadelphia his home has always been in Parkersburg. He was educated in the public schools here, and at the age of nineteen entered the establishment of his father. He is a charter member of the Scottish Rite Masonic bodies at Parkersburg, having been a thirty-second degree Mason since 1895. He is also a member of the Shrine, belongs to the Board of Commerce, the International Association of Rotary Clubs and is a splendid business man whose influence always goes out in behalf of a bigger and better city.

His first wife was Eva M. Walker, who died in 1906. In 1907 he married Bessie M. Rogers, of Philadelphia. They have a daughter, Dorothea E. Of the five children of his first marriage the two survivors are Nellie W. and James W., III. Nellie is Mrs. John C. Shryock, of Baltimore, and has two sons, John C., Jr., and James Fuller. James W., Dils, III, joined the United States Regular army at Columbus in May, 1917, and in June of that year went overseas as a member of the Seventeenth Engineers. He was detailed to drive the car of Brigadier General Dawes, and in that capacity he saw much of the battle front in Belgium and France and also was in Switzerland and England. He came back after the signing of the armistice and was honorably discharged at Columbus.

EDWARD S. MOORE. A thoroughly capable business man, active head of one of the leading wholesale grocery houses in the Ohio Valley, Edward S. Moore has converted the opportunities of life into deeds of usefulness and honor, and his friends and associates regard him as one of the best exemplars of loyal but unostentatious Christian conduct.

He was born on a farm in Wood County, West Virginia, March 24, 1867. His great-grandfather, Jacob Moore, was identified with the early settlement of Monongalia County, having a farm in the Clay District, near the Pennsylvania state line. His son Joseph was born on the farm in that county in 1811, and remained there until 1844, when he spent several years in Ohio, and in 1852 returned and settled on a farm in Wood County, where he lived until his death on November 3, 1890. His first wife was Nancy Tennant and his second, Rachel McCurdy. Of the children of his first marriage Simon Peter was born in Monongalia County May 12, 1839. He had the advantages of subscription schools, and for upwards of half a century was actively identified with the agricultural industry of Wood County, moving to Parkersburg when he retired from the farm in 1904. He held the office of constable nine years and justice of the peace twenty-three years. Simon P. Moore married Sarah Hains, who was born August 17, 1840, and died November 7, 1906. She was a daughter of Justus J. and Harriet (Woodruff) Hains. The five children of Simon Peter Moore were Nancy E., Mintie, Edward Seldon, Ross S. and Everett Blaine.

Edward Seldon Moore had the environment of a farmer during his youth, and was participating in its labors at management after the age of twelve. He attended district school in the winter and occasionally a subscription school in the summer, and despite limited advantages his industry enabled him to make the best possible use out of his opportunities, and at the age of seventeen he passed an examination for teacher and taught three winter terms of school, spending the rest of each year as a student in the State Normal at Fairmont. Even then he did not look up teaching as a permanent career. He took a course in the University of Lexington during 1887, and at once returned to Parkersburg to enter business, and now for thirty-one years has been identified with the wholesale grocery trade. For fifteen years he was connected with the firm of C. L. Martin & Company, and then entered the Shattuck & Jackson Company, serving as its treasurer and general manager, and since 1921 has been president, treasurer and general manager. In an important degree he has contributed to the steady growth and prosperity of this substantial concern, known throughout the Ohio Valley in the grocery trade. He has served as a director for West Virginia in the National Wholesale Grocers Association and is one of the vice presidents of the West Virginia Wholesale Grocers Association.

However, this does not complete his business record. For eighteen years he has been president of the U. S. Roofing Tile Company, one of Parkersburg's foremost industries. In 1904 he was one of the organizers, served as the first president and is still one of the principal owners of the Murray Roofing Tile Company of Cloverport, Kentucky, manufacturers of both roofing and quarry tile. He has been a vice president of the Citizens Building Association at Parkersburg.

In the enviable record of Parkersburg during the World War Mr. Moore shares credit on account of his leadership and influence in the various drives. He is a member of the Board of Directors and treasurer of the Parkersburg Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Moore married Mary Louise Meyer, daughter of Jacob M. and Mary Ann (Wile) Meyer. Her father was a well known Wood County farmer and at one time represented the county in the Legislature. Mr. and Mrs. Moore have two children: Beryl Chase, formerly a librarian at the Carnegie Library, was married in October, 1917, to Isaac Maxwell Adams, Jr. Mr. Adams, a prominent young lawyer, member of the firm Coleman, Light & Adams, received his second lieutenant's commission at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indianapolis, was stationed at Camp Sevier, Greenville, South Carolina, promoted to first lieutenant, and was doing the work of disbursing agent when the war closed. He and Mrs. Adams have a daughter, Mary Moore Adams, born January 2, 1919.

The only son of Mr. Moore is Meyer Thorold, who graduated from the Parkersburg High School, and was a member of the Students Army Training Corps at Marietta College during the war. He continued his studies in the University of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia, until 1920 and is now associated with his father in the wholesale grocery business at Parkersburg, West Virginia.

LUTHER HENRY CASKEY is one of the representative business men of the younger generation in his native City of Martinsburg, Berkeley County, where he was born on the 15th of October, 1891. His father, William H. Caskey, was born at Harpers Ferry, Jefferson County, this state, October 28, 1864, and he was a child of about one year at the time of the family removal to Martinsburg. Edward C. Caskey, grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was born at Martinsburg in the year 1836, a son of William Caskey, who likewise was born at Martinsburg, where his father, John Caskey, was an honored pioneer citizen. William Caskey, who died at the age of fifty-nine years, passed his entire life at Martinsburg, where for a number of years he was engaged in the draying business. He served at one time as constable. He married Mary Palmer, daughter of William and Julia Palmer.

As a young man Edward C. Caskey entered the service of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, with which he was a train conductor many years, he having resigned on account of ill health, and his death having occurred within a short time thereafter, in 1900. He married Mary E. Feaster, of Fairfax County, Virginia, and she died at the age of forty-six years. Their children were six in number.

William H. Caskey was reared and educated at Martinsburg, and at the age of twenty-one years he initiated his service with the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, with which he was connected twenty-five years. He is now working independently at the machinist's trade and is one of the substantial citizens of Martinsburg. At the age of twenty-two years he married Lillie Ripple, who was born and reared at Martinsburg, a daughter of James and Sarah Ripple. Mrs. Caskey passed to the life eternal when forty years of age, and is survived by four children: Lawrence R., Luther H., Anna G. and Mabel Marie.

Luther H. Caskey attended the public schools of Martinsburg until he was about fifteen years of age, when he initiated an apprenticeship to the tinsmith and plumber trades, in each of which he became a skilled workman. After completing his apprenticeship he went to Clarksburg, where he was employed at his trade until 1913, when he returned to Martinsburg and formed a partnership with C. B. Grimes in the tinning and plumbing business. Eighteen months later he became sole owner of the business, which he has successfully continued to the present time. He is also a director of the Martinsburg Bank, is a loyal member of the local Kiwanis Club, is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and he and his wife hold membership in Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

At the age of twenty-five years Mr. Caskey wedded Miss Lulu J. Strode, who was born and reared in Berkeley County, a daughter of Thomas Strode. Mr. and Mrs. Caskey have two children, Luther Henry, Jr., and Irene.

WATMAN T. SMITH, M. D. The unequivocal professional success that has attended the service of Doctor Smith bears testimony alike to his technical ability and personal popularity and marks him as one of the representative physicians and surgeons of Gilmer County, where he has been established in active general practice at Glenville, the county seat, since 1915.

Doctor Smith was born in Roane County, this state, April 20, 1859, and is a son of William R. T. and Catherine (Jarvis) Smith, the former of whom was born in Barbour County, in June, 1846, and the latter of whom was born in Calhoun County, in 1854, the respective families having early been founded in that section of Virginia which now constitutes West Virginia. William R. T. Smith was reared on a farm in Roane County, and so well did he profit by the advantages of the common schools of the locality and period that he became a successful teacher in rural schools when a young man. He was a republican in politics, and his wife was a member of the Advent Christian Church. Of the five children four are living, and of the number the eldest is Dr. J. W. Smith, who is a graduate of the University of the South and who is engaged in the practice of medicine at Gassaway, Braxton County; Dora is the wife of C. C. Ferrell, of Roane County; and Lizzetta is the wife of S. E. Steele, of Spencer, Roane County.

The boyhood and early youth of Dr. Watman T. Smith were passed on the old homestead farm which was the place of his birth, and his educational advantages in this formative period of his life were those of the public schools. In consonance with his ambition and well formulated plans he finally entered the medical department of the University of Louisville, Kentucky, in which institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1913. After thus receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine he continued to be engaged in active general practice at Spencer, judicial center of his native county, until the 1st of November, 1915, when he removed to Glenville, which has since continued the central stage of his earnest and successful professional service, his practice being of substantial and representative order. The doctor is a member of the Gilmer County Medical Society, the West Virginia State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He is a loyal supporter of the principles of the republican party, and is prominently identified with the Masonic fraternity, in which his basic affiliation is with Moriah Lodge No. 38, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. In the Scottish Rite division of the great fraternity he has received the thirty-second degree, in the Consistory in the City of Wheeling, and at Parkersburg he is a member of Nomesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine. The doctor is a stockholder in the Glenville Banking & Trust Company.

On the 11th of November, 1914, Doctor Smith wedded Miss Grace Looney, who had previously been for three years a student in the Powhatan College for Girls at Powhatan, McDowell County. Doctor and Mrs. Smith have two children: Gwendolyn and James R.

DALLAS C. BAILEY, county superintendent of the public schools of Gilmer County, is one of the representative citizens of Glenville, the county seat, his birth having occurred on a farm near this village, October 9, 1879. He is a son of Jacob F. and Jane F. (Springston) Bailey, the former of whom was born near Freemansburg, Lewis County, in 1855, and the latter of whom was born in Gilmer County, in 1861. Jacob F. Bailey was about ten years old at the time of his parents' removal to Gilmer County, the home being established on a farm on Leading Creek. In the course of years he became one of the substantial farmers of that district of the county, and in 1919 he removed from his farm to Glenville, where he has since lived virtually retired. He is a democrat, has served as a member of the school board, is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, and he and his wife are earnest members of the Baptist Church. In association with his son he is still interested in farm enterprise in this county, where the two own a well improved landed estate of 200 acres. Of the two children Dallas Carr Bailey, of this sketch, is the elder, and the younger, Ora B., is the wife of H. B. Powell, a farmer in the Leading Creek District of Gilmer County.

Dallas C. Bailey was reared on the old home farm and supplemented the training of the public schools by a course in the West Virginia State Normal School at Glenville, in which he was graduated. For twelve years he was a successful and popular teacher in the schools of this section of the state, and this direct pedagogic service was terminated only when he was elected to his present office, that of county superintendent of schools in 1918. His administration has been forceful, progressive and effective, and he has done much to raise the educational standard in his native county.

Mr. Bailey is a staunch advocate of the principles of the democratic party, and his religious faith is that of the Baptist Church. In the Masonic fraternity he has received the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite, besides being a member of the Mystic Shrine, his basic Masonic affiliation being with Gilmer County Lodge No. 113, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. He is a member also of the Order of the Eastern Star, is a past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias, and is a past noble grand in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, with the encampment organization of which he is likewise affiliated.

Mr. Bailey is a direct descendant of Stephen Bailey, who came from England and settled in Westmoreland County, Virginia, where he died in 1693, his life having been passed in the Old Dominion State, with the history of which the family name has been identified for many generations.

CHARLES NELSON MATHENY has been an honored member of the Parkersburg bar for twenty years. A resourceful lawyer and business man, he has gained the reputation of being a quiet and efficient worker in everything he undertakes. In 1920 he was nominated and elected prosecuting attorney for Wood County, and most of his time is now given to that office.

He was born at Pine Grove, Wetzel County, June 27, 1861, son of William Henry and Drusilla Ann (Morgan) Matheny. William Henry Matheny, a son of Noah Matheny, was born in Marion County, Virginia, and during his mature years lived in Wetzel and Jackson counties. His wife, Drusilla Ann Morgan, was related to one of the historic families of West Virginia. Its founder was Col. Morgan Morgan, a native of Wales, who had a military training and was also a minister of the Church of England. After coming to the American colonies he married and eventually moved to the Valley of Virginia and established a church at Winchester, of which he and his son were pastors. Two of his sons were prominent figures in the early history of what is now West Virginia, David, who settled in Marion County, and Zackwell, who was founder of Morgantown, West Virginia. The father of Drusilla Ann Morgan was Morgan Morgan, better known as "Spy Mod Morgan" on account of his activities in border warfare.

Charles Nelson Matheny was about four years of age when his parents moved to Jackson County, and he grew up there and attended the common and select schools, and after he was sixteen entered the State Normal School at Fairmont. For a number of years he followed teaching as a profession, and took up the study of law under Robert F. Fleming, then circuit judge. He passed a successful examination before a committee of three judges in 1888, and for several years practiced in Jackson County and in 1892 moved to St. Mary's, where he served as postmaster under President McKinley. Mr. Matheny has been a resident of Parkersburg since 1901, and in addition to his law business has acquired some valuable holdings in the oil industry.

In 1883 he married Eleeta Ann Swallow, who died November 29, 1895. They had two children. On March 18, 1897, he married Mrs. Fredrica Porter, daughter of Samuel A. Barkwill, who came from England to the United States about 1840. Her first husband, John W. Porter, was clerk of the County Court of Pleasants County, and died in 1895. Mr. Matheny was called upon to endure one of the heaviest afflictions of the human lot in the death of his two sons, Wilbur K., who died on November 12, 1916, and Charles H., on February 26, 1917, both children of his first marriage. These young men were just coming to manhood, with every promise of honor and usefulness in the life before them. No respecter of persons, the Grim Reaper's scythe left but ashes in the pathway of the stricken parent and friends.

JAMES A. WETHERELL. One of the oldest business houses of Parkersburg is J. Wetherell & Son, jewelers, a firm that has been in existence for over half a century.

The name of the company honors the career of his father, Joseph Wetherell, who was a native of England and as a young man was induced to come to the United States by his brother John. For a time they were associated in manufacturing business at Pittsburgh. From there Joseph Wetherell removed to Morgan County, Ohio, and had a contract to build a part of the old Marietta and Cincinnati Railway, now a part of the Baltimore & Ohio. About 1857 he came to Parkersburg, and for several years was proprietor of the old Northwestern House in the East End, selling that property towards the close of the Civil war. He was one of the good old-fashioned Englishmen of his time, and perhaps his outstanding characteristic was a horror of debt. Both he and his wife were reared as Episcopalians, but in Parkersburg they affiliated with the Presbyterian Church, in which Joseph Wetherell was an elder. Joseph Wetherell married Rachel Winn, also a native of England. She died September 25, 1913. Of their three children the oldest, Mary J., died when about twenty years of age. The older son, Thomas J. Wetherell, a well-known resident of Parkersburg, was born in Ohio August 29, 1847, and has been a resident of Parkersburg since he was ten years of age. For many years he was a steamboat clerk, later engaged in banking. He married Nannie M. Moss, whose father, Dr. John W. Moss, was a prominent figure in West Virginia affairs. Thomas J. Wetherell had three children: Margaret Moss is the wife of Judge C. D. Forrer; Mary Lulu is Mrs. Philip C. Steptoe, of Clarksburg;

the son Joseph A., who died in June, 1918, at the age of thirty-six, is survived by his widow and two children, Nancie and Joseph A.

James A. Wetherell was born in Ohio August 13, 1847, but since early boyhood his home has been in Parkersburg. He acquired his education here, and he served an apprenticeship at the jeweler's business with Robert A. Little. However, he had earned his first money as a train newsboy. Joseph Wetherell bought out the business of Robert A. Little, and when he attained his majority James A. became a member of the firm of J. Wetherell & Son, a name that has been continued for half a century. He succeeded to the business on the death of his father, and the store has become noted for its reliable merchandise. Mr. Wetherell is also a director of the First National Bank, treasurer of the United States Roofing & Tile Company, and for a number of years has been president of the Citizens Building Association.

He is active in social affairs, is a member of the Episcopal Church, a democrat in politics, and while president of the Board of Education was father of the movement that resulted in the building of the handsome high school building. Mr. Wetherell is a thirty-second degree Mason, a Knight Commander of the Court of Honor, and is now treasurer of several of the Masonic bodies at Parkersburg. He is a Knight Templar and is a charter member of Nemesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine and has been its treasurer since it was organized.

JOSEPH MILTON HARTLEY. The success and the high esteem in which Joseph Milton Hartley is held are due to a long devotion to the realm of business. He was learning the mercantile business during the Civil war, left to go into the army, and in the fifty-five years since the close of the war his time has been fully taken up with merchandising and in later years, since his removal to Fairmont, with the broader aspects of business, banking and the executive management of a number of financial and industrial concerns.

While he has achieved success over the long and difficult road beginning with his personal experience and the capital acquired by his earnings, Mr. Hartley inherits the tradition of a good and old family of West Virginia. His earliest known American ancestry was Joseph Hartley. His son James was a native of Virginia and was founder of this branch of the family in West Virginia, locating in Pleasant Valley of Preston County. Edward Hartley, a son of James, was born in Preston County and married Margaret Miller. Their son, Peter Hartley, father of the Fairmont banker and business man, was born at Masonstown, Preston County, in 1810, and devoted his active life to farming and stock raising. For many years he held the post of justice of the peace in his district. He married in 1834 Susan Swindler, daughter of Drake Swindler.

Their son, Joseph Milton Hartley, was born on a farm near Masonstown October 20, 1842. During his youth he was educated in the common schools and in Morgantown Academy. His business apprenticeship was acquired in the store of the Morgantown merchant, George M. Hagans. He left in 1864 to enlist in Company E of the Seventeenth West Virginia Infantry, and was with his command until the close of the war.

Shortly afterward, in 1866, he made a business alliance with Mr. Hagans, and under the firm name of Hagans & Hartley they opened a store at Reedsville in Preston County. This was sold two years later and they resumed with another store at Independence in the same county. Mr. Hagans sold his interest in 1872, and the business was then continued by the firm of Hartley & Johns, general merchants, and two years later Mr. Hartley became sole owner.

Mr. Hartley moved to Fairmont in 1877 and with a comparatively modest capital started his career in this city, where now for forty-five years he has been an honored resident. Though he began with a small stock of dry goods and notions, it comprised, nevertheless, the largest store in Fairmont at that time. Later he took into partnership Daniel and George Morrow under the firm name of Hartley

Mr. Hartley

Company and later Hartley & Morrow. In 1891, by release, he again became sole owner. In 1902 he added as partners his son Harry J. and Mr. J. H. Rownd, which time the title of the firm was J. M. Hartley & n. The business was incorporated in 1911 as the J. M. Hartley & Son Company, of which Mr. Hartley is president. all the years this business has steadily grown with the owt and development of Fairmont, and is the leading tablshment of its kind in the city.

With the broader business interests and civic welfare of airmont Mr. Hartley has been closely associated, since nature he is public-spirited and generous. He was for teen years president of the First National Bank of Fairmont. He is now a director of the National Bank of airmont, which took over the old First National. He as one of the organizers and president of the West Virnia Grocery & Candy Company; helped organize and came president of the Fairmont Electric Light & Power ompany, now the Monongahela Valley Traction Company; as one of the organizers and is still president of the arnesville Manufacturing Company; was an organizer and president of the Fairmont Building & Loan Association. tr. Hartley is president of the Cook Hospital, and for any years, until recently, was president of the Fairmont ong Men's Christian Association. He is a Knight Temlar and thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and hriner, is a member of the Rotary Club, Country Club, hamber of Commerce, and is president of the board of the irst Presbyterian Church.

Soon after he entered business on his own account on ictober 22, 1867, Mr. Hartley married Miss Mary Martha arney, daughter of John and Lorinda (Madeira) Carney, of Fairmont. Their companionship endured as one of great appiness for many years until the death of Mrs. Hartley n 1915. Of their six children the oldest is Carney, born December 2, 1868, who is a graduate in mechanical engineering from Cornell University and now a resident of Denver, Colorado. His son, Neil, was with the American Forces n France. The second child, Edwin Forest, born January 1, 1870, is a law graduate of Cornell University, and is a prominent member of the Fairmont bar. He married Louise oderwell, and their children are Mary, Francis, Joseph M., Kearsley and Forest. Joseph and Kearsley were enrolled in the World war. The former saw several months' service in France, while the latter was not fortunate enough to have crossed into the field of real war. The third child, Mary Grace, was born February 16, 1872, and married H. G. Greer. Their son, Joseph, was a member of the Student Army Training Corps. Frank M., born January 27, 1874, died at the age of twenty-seven years. Harry J., the active associate of his father in the J. M. Hartley & Son Company, was born September 15, 1876, and by his marriage to Nellie Crane has a daughter, Mary Crane. The youngest of the family, Jay, born June 2, 1878, died at the age of two years.

CHAFE WILSON is a member of the real estate and insurance firm of Haller & Wilson at Morgantown. This is an organization of two live and enterprising young business men, and Mr. Wilson, like Mr. Haller, is a man of thorough education and was formerly engaged in educational affairs of his native state.

His ancestors were pioneers of Ritchie County, West Virginia. The genealogy on the father's side follows:

David Davis Wilson, of Scotland, was born about 1658. Davis Wilson, son of David Davis Wilson, was born about 1690. William Wilson, son of Davis Wilson, was born in Ireland, 1722. He married Miss Elizabeth Blackburn, also of Ireland, and immigrated to America about 1755, settling in Shenandoah Valley, Virginia. Eleven children were born. John Wilson, fifth son of William Wilson, born in 1756, was severely wounded in an Indian fight near Wheeling when eighteen years of age. Married Miss Mary Wathin, a French girl. They reared six children. He served thirty years as clerk of the County Court of Randolph County. He was buried at Beverly. Archibald Wilson, son of John Wilson, was born 1801. In 1825 he married Miss Elizabeth Hudkins, daughter of Barton Hudkins, of Taylor County, and moved to Ritchie County. They reared a family of twelve children. He was a teacher, first surveyor of Ritchie County, and member of the first constitutional convention of the state. Many descendants live about Pennsboro. Horatio Nelson Wilson, third son of Archibald Wilson, was born in 1831. In 1859 he married Miss Victoria Mariah Taylor, daughter of Sheriff James Taylor of Ritchie County. He served as lieutenant in the state militia before the Civil war, but was not in active service during the rebellion, being a Southern sympathizer. He was a teacher, served as county surveyor, land assessor, and member of the Board of Education. His children were: Lucian B., deceased; Floyd S., merchant of Parkersburg; Mack, of Spencer; Vista, wife of E. L. Hartman, principal of the Park School at Parkersburg; Carlin, who died in childhood; Burr, who at the age of eleven, was killed by a boiler explosion; Prince, who died in childhood; Chape, the subject of this sketch; Walter W., deceased; Claude, of Lost Creek; and one son that died at birth. The genealogy on the mother's side:

Edmund Taylor, of English descent, was born in Virginia in 1796. He married Miss Rachel McKinney, also a Virginian. They came to Harrison, then to Ritchie County about 1820, settling near Pennsboro. They reared ten children. James Taylor, oldest son of Edmund Taylor, was born in Ritchie County in 1818. He married Miss Lovisa Dotson, daughter of Emmanuel Dotson, granddaughter of William Dotson, and great-granddaughter of James Dotson (originally "Dedson"), who came from England to Richmond, Virginia, in colonial days. Mr. Taylor served in the State Legislature and as sheriff of Ritchie County and went South during the Civil war. Victoria Mariah Taylor, oldest daughter of James Taylor, was born in 1842 and in 1859 was married to Horatio N. Wilson.

Chape Wilson was born on the home farm near Burnt House, Ritchie County, January 23, 1877. His early life was spent in that country community, and his early education came from the neighborhood free schools. At the age of sixteen he began teaching in the country schools of his native county. After fifteen years of such service he removed with his family to Glenville, Gilmer County, where he took the normal course in the State Normal School at that place, being graduated in the year 1910. Immediately after graduation he became principal of the Hillsboro High School at Hillsboro, Pocahontas County, West Virginia. After two years he went to East Bank, Kanawha County, where he established the Cabin Creek District High School, and there he remained for two years. For the three succeeding years he served as principal of one of the city schools of Morgantown, to which place he had moved with his family in August, 1914. Between school terms and at other odd times he attended West Virginia University, and thus completed two years of the A. B. course. In 1917 he gave up his profession and his studies and engaged for several years as a traveling salesman. Then, in February, 1921, he formed his partnership with Mr. Haller in the firm of Haller and Wilson.

He is a member of the Morgantown Real Estate Board and the Chamber of Commerce, the Presbyterian Church, Pocahontas Lodge No. 121, A. F. and A. M., and Morgantown Lodge of Perfection No. 6, of the Scottish Rite. On March 8, 1898, Mr. Wilson married Emily Della Fisher, who was born in Ritchie County, daughter of Adam M. and Sarah Ellen (McDonald) Fisher. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson are the parents of seven children: Linn Wilson, born May 15, 1899; Benlah Vista, born November 26, 1902; Wilda Victoria, who died at the age of sixteen months; Goldie Ellen, born January 31, 1907; Ruby Juanita, born October 1, 1909; Alma Virginia, born July 11, 1913; and Margery Jean, born December 12, 1920.

CHARLES S. SMOOT is a native son of Parkersburg and here has made for himself a place of prominence in connection with business enterprise and community life. He has become an expert in modern advertising enterprise, and now controls an extensive and prosperous business in street-car and outdoor advertising in his native city and county, besides which his progressive and civic loyalty have been further shown in his erection of the Lincoln Theater Building, in which he conducts a high-grade amusement enterprise, besides having control also of the Hippodrome Auditorium and likewise of the Camden Theater, which latter he leases. He is also part owner and director of the Fairmont Theater Company, and is one of the vital and enterprising men who play a large part in the general business and civic affairs of Parkersburg. His popularity in his native city is unqualified, and here he is an active member of the Rotary, the Elks and the Country Clubs, one of his major affiliations being with the Parkersburg Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Mr. Smoot is married and has one daughter, Sara.

Charles S. Smoot was born in Parkersburg on the 26th of February, 1875, and is a son of William Norman Smoot and Mary (Severance) Smoot, the Smoot family having early been established at Westport, Maryland, and representatives of the Severance family having been pioneer settlers of Marietta, Ohio. William N. Smoot became a prosperous merchant at Parkersburg, where the major part of his life was passed, and where his death occurred.

Charles S. Smoot, one of a family of six children, gained his early education in the public schools of Parkersburg, including the high school, and later he became successfully identified with newspaper business, as advertising manager of the Parkersburg State Journal, with which he continued his connection in this capacity about thirteen years. His broad experience in this field specially fortified him when he carried to successful issue his well formulated plans for establishing an independent advertising business, and from a modest inception he has built up a large and important business, with a representative clientele. Mr. Smoot has deep interest in everything touching the welfare and progress of his home city, and has personally done much to advance its claims as a vital distributing center and a place of no mean metropolitan advantages.

LOUIS N. PICKENS. In almost every community may be found men of worth-while achievements in some line or another, perhaps in several, and that they should be held in esteem is natural and justifiable, for honorable and successful effort adds to the general welfare. The mercantile interests at Parkersburg, West Virginia, are large and important and have a wide range, the products of the world finding sale here in such abundance that under the wise management of able and honorable merchants, Parkersburg has become an exceedingly important commercial center. A merchant of this city who has had long experience and stands high in the regard of his fellow citizens is Louis N. Pickens, who has been identified with business and civic interests at Parkersburg for many years.

Louis N. Pickens was born on his father's farm in Gallia County, Ohio, August 14, 1871, and is a son of Galvin and Mary Elizabeth (Waters) Pickens, and a grandson of John and Mary Ann (Lawrence) Pickens. The great-grandfather was born in Ireland, but John Pickens was born in Meigs County, Ohio, where he followed farming. He served in the Union Army during the war between the states. Calvin Pickens was a farmer in Ohio prior to coming to West Virginia. He was thrice married. No children were born to his first union, but one, Renben R., to his third, and two to his second, Louis N. and one that died in infancy.

Louis N. Pickens obtained his education in the public schools, and then, in preparation for teaching, passed the necessary examinations, and for six years taught school most acceptably in Jackson County, West Virginia. He found himself, however, having a natural leaning toward active business life, and after taking a course in a commercial college, was variously employed for some time before becoming bookkeeper and general office man for a prominent merchant of Parkersburg, Daniel Gardway, dealing in wool, hides and fur. That situation lasted for six years. In 1907 he became Mr. Gardway's partner, and this association continued until the spring of 1920, when the partnership was dissolved but Mr. Pickens has continued in the mercantile business and still is largely interested in this field.

On October 5, 1898, Mr. Pickens married Miss Mary L. Murrey, of Sandyville, Jackson County, West Virginia.

In politics Mr. Pickens is a democrat, and at times has taken an active part in civic affairs. From 1914 until 17 he was Superintendent of Public Safety, an office well carried with it membership in the City Council. For twenty-two years he has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is a thirty-second degree Mason, Knight Templar, York Rite, and a member of Nemesis Temple, Mystic Shrine, and he belongs also to the Odd Fellows and the Elks.

CAMDEN H. HOLDEN, president of the Ranwood Lumber Company, one of the important business concerns of a City of Parkersburg, is a native son of West Virginia, a scion of the third generation of the Holden family in this state, the Holden family having been founded in America in the Colonial period of our national history. John C. Holden, grandfather of him whose name initiates this paragraph, was a son of Alexander Holden, who was born in the State of New Jersey and became a pioneer settler in Licking County, Ohio, where he reclaimed a farm and became one of the influential citizens of that section of the Buckeye State. He served as justice of the peace, county commissioner and representative in the Ohio Legislature, and his also was the distinction of having been a soldier in the War of 1812. He continued his residence in Ohio until his death in 1832, at the age of sixty-eight years. John C. Holden was born in New Jersey and reared in Ohio, where was solemnized his marriage to Miss Prudence Kettle. He gained pioneer honors in Barbour County, West Virginia, where he established his home when that county was still a part of Virginia and known as Harrison County. A man of fine intellectuality and exceptional ability, he gained much of leadership in the pioneer community, and by his activities, which included the reclamation and development of a productive farm, he contributed much to the civic and material development of what is now one of the prosperous counties of West Virginia. He was a student of the Greek language, and his broad mental horizon made him a man of mature judgment and progressive ideas. Thus he gave to his children the best possible education advantages, and gave his influence to measures and enterprises that advanced the welfare of his community. Both he and his wife were honored pioneer citizens of Barbour County at the time of their deaths. In that county was born their son Elijah K., who was there reared to manhood and who there married Miss Mahala Reed, likewise native of Barbour County. Elijah K. Holden gained substantial success in connection with farm industry in his native county, effectively upheld the honors of the family name and was content to follow his chosen vocation and make his value felt through earnest and worthy achievement and civic loyalty rather than through political activity of public office. Of his five children four are living, and of the number the subject of this sketch is the only son.

Camden H. Holden, the eldest of the five children, was born on the old homestead farm in Barbour County, Ohio, the 30th of March, 1873. He was reared on this old homestead farm, and the discipline of the district schools was supplemented by his attending the public schools of the City of Buckhannon, Upshur County. That he made good use of his advantages is shown by the fact that, when seventeen years of age he proved himself eligible for pedagogic service and became a successful teacher in the rural schools. At the age of twenty years he initiated his association with the lumber business in Randolph County, and with this important line of industrial and commercial enterprise he has continued his alliance during the intervening years.

In 1907 Mr. Holden established his residence at Parkersburg, and as president of the Ranwood Lumber Company of this city he is one of the representative business men of Wood County. He is a staunch democrat in politics and he and his wife are members of the Baptist Church, with which the Holden family has been actively connected for many generations. He has received the chivalric degrees in a Masonic fraternity, in which his maximum York Rite was with the Commandery of Knights Templars in his home city. He holds membership also in Nemesis Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, and Parkersburg Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and the Parkersburg Country Club.

The year 1895 recorded the marriage of Mr. Holden and Alice Reger, of Buckhannon, this state, and they have a daughter, Edna F., who is the wife of Ralph Jones, of Parkersburg.

WILBERT F. CARMICHAEL. A name well and honorably known for many years in West Virginia for sterling business achievement is that of Carmichael, and a prominent member of the same at Parkersburg is Wilbert F. Carmichael, who is the active head of the wholesale confectionery firm of Carmichael & Martin, an exceedingly prosperous enterprise of this city. Mr. Carmichael was born near Hanlon's Mill, Ritchie County, West Virginia, March 30, 1876. His parents were David and Nancy A. (Locke) Carmichael.

David Carmichael was a man of sterling integrity and of unusual business ability. He was a native of Ohio and was seven years old when he came to West Virginia, a poor boy seeking employment, which he accepted as a farm hand and worked for 50 cents a day. He had but limited opportunities for acquiring an education, but he had the ambition to better his condition and took advantage of such chances as came his way, paying attention to those better equipped than himself and reading instructive books. Proving industrious and reliable in the employ of farmers, this reputation enabled him to secure better wages in the employ of tobacco makers and he became manager of a warehouse. Later he was employed in Hanlon's Mill, situated on McKim Creek, 10 miles out of Hebron, and it was at this point, in a little building 12 by 16 feet in dimensions which he had built himself, that he began business as a merchant. He had natural aptitude for merchandising, and from this humble beginning developed into one of the most successful merchants in Tyler County. Subsequently finding a purchaser for his small store, he opened another at Mole Hill, Ritchie County, removing from there two years later to Wick, Tyler County, where he was a merchant for five years. His next removal was to Meadville in Tyler County, where he remained in the mercantile business and also operated a farm, and then moved to Smithfield, in the oil district of Wetzel County, and for fifteen years was the leading merchant in that county.

In the meanwhile David Carmichael married Nancy A. Locke, and three children were born to them: Floyd, who is manager of the Carmichael Candy Company, wholesale confectioners at Clarksburg, West Virginia; Alice, who died at the age of twenty-two years, was the wife of Nathan Lane; and Wilbert F., who belongs to Parkersburg. David Carmichael was a member of the Christian Church. He was active in the democratic party, served one term as a justice of the peace and at one time was his party's candidate for sheriff. When he retired from business he was succeeded by his sons, and he finally returned to Ohio. His death occurred at Zanesville in April, 1917.

Wilbert F. Carmichael with his brother and sister had educational advantages that had been denied to their father in his youth but on which he always set a high value. Mr. Carmichael learned telegraphing and was an operator for four years, then, with his brother, succeeded his father in business, and for the next fifteen years the brothers were associated at Smithfield as merchants and lumber men, Wilbert F. attending mainly to their lumber interests in Nicholas, Webster and Clay counties. In 1915 they removed to Clarksburg and went into the wholesale confectionery business, where Floyd Carmichael continues, but in 1920 Wilbert F. Carmichael came to Parkersburg, and in association with his brother-in-law, Dr. J. E. Martin, organized the wholesale confectionery firm of Carmichael & Martin, succeeding the old firm of D. W. Dabney. Mr. Carmichael has shown good judgment in his choice of business and the outlook is very promising.

In 1897 Mr. Carmichael married Miss Virginia Bueher, who died in 1904, leaving three children: Mabel, wife of Ray Lang, Alice and David. In 1908 Mr. Carmichael married Miss Inez Martin, daughter of Sidney and Sophia (Morrow) Martin, of Shiloh, Tyler County, West Virginia. Mr. Carmichael is a Knight Templar Mason and belongs also to the order of United Commercial Travelers.

J. PRESSLEY CRAWFORD, member of the well known firm of Crawford & Son, real estate and insurance agents of Morgantown, West Virginia, is a son of William A. and Loumonia F. Crawford. He was born in Greene County, Virginia, September 17, 1897, where he was trained to work on his father's farm early and late. He attended the public schools of his county, also Elon College in North Carolina. On January 1, 1918, he married N. Grace Barker, who was born in Monongalia County, daughter of Joseph J. Barker and Sallie (Morris) Barker. They have a son, Milton Stanley, born October 31, 1919.

In 1918, at the age of twenty-one, Mr. Crawford began his business career at Morgantown as a salesman for W. B. Sharp, real estate and insurance, and in 1920 he and his father bought out the growing business of Mr. Sharp, and the firm of Crawford & Son was formed, which has grown and now enjoys an extended clientage, representing some of the standard lines of insurance and specializing in city property, improved orchards, farms, coal and timber lands. He also represents the E. A. Strout Farm Agency for his section of the state, the largest farm agency in the world. Mr. Crawford is one of the younger business men of Morgantown, and has displayed remarkable energy and resourcefulness in everything he has undertaken. He, like his father, is a son of the Old Dominion and feels at home among the "West Virginia Hills." J. Pressley Crawford possesses that indomitable will power to make a thing go if there is any chance, never yielding to failure, and the firm of Crawford & Son, of which he is a part, will no doubt be known through years to come.

WILLIAM A. CRAWFORD, SR., member of the firm of Crawford & Son, was born in Old Virginia, in the County of Greene, November 30, 1864. His ancestors were of Scotch-Irish and English descent. He was educated in the public schools of his county and at the age of eighteen he commenced his chosen profession of teaching in the public schools of his native county, and followed this work for twenty-seven consecutive terms. Mr. Crawford was brought up in the rural part of his county, where schools were few and far between, and he was forced to walk from four to six miles to school, but as soon as he was old enough was able to pass a creditable examination and take charge of a school of his own.

In 1886 Mr. Crawford married Miss L. F. Morris, one of his pupils, and to this union three children were born, Iola Graham, who died at the age of twenty-eight years, Addie and J. Pressley.

Mr. Crawford always took an active part in the politics of his county, and has held offices of his county from justice of the peace to high sheriff. When he entered politics his county was overwhelmingly democratic, but by hard work he was able to swing it over to the republican column, where it has since remained.

Being a farmer and teacher and living in one of the best fruit sections of his state, he became interested in horticulture and planted out three of the largest commercial orchards in his county, the largest of which he still owns and refuses to sell, and by his influence in that direction many people have planted good sized orchards in Greene County.

In 1920 Mr. Crawford removed to Morgantown, West Virginia, where his youngest daughter and son, J. Pressley Crawford, both live. He has always been interested in the welfare of the rising generation, and outside of his school work has been an active member of the Christian Church (better known in some places as the Christian Connection) and has held several important positions in his conference.

GEORGE L. DUDLEY. Three generations of the Dudley family have had a very substantial participation in the life, affairs and progress of the Parkersburg community. George L. Dudley is a man whose business qualifications have been appreciated by all who have come in contact with him, though normally he is very unostentatious, accomplishes his work with a quiet efficiency, and has been well satisfied to remain completely outside the sphere of politics and political honors.

His father, Lysander Dudley, was born about 1847 in Connecticut. When he was about a year old he was brought west by his parents Lysander and Betsy (Hull) Dudley, to Wood County, where they located on a country property on what is known today as Dudley Avenue in the northern part of Parkersburg. Lysander, Sr., was a carpenter and contractor, and in that industry he erected many of the important buildings of his day. He also was very active in the Baptist Church, and met all the tests of good citizenship.

His son Lysander up to 1892 lived on a farm that is now included in the City of Parkersburg. After he left the farm he gave his attention to the buying and selling of coal, timber and other lands. As a matter of duty and not in line with any ambition he accepted the responsibilities of public office when called upon, and among other local positions he was a councilman. He was also a devout member of the Baptist Church. His death occurred in 1916. Lysander Dudley, Jr., married Mollie F. Burdette, a relative of the late Bob Burdette, the famous humorist. She is still living, and of her nine children seven are living.

George Lewis Dudley was born at Parkersburg November 1, 1868, and supplemented his public school education with a course in a business college at Wheeling. He also left the home farm in 1892, and for several years thereafter was associated with his father in business. For about two years he had merchandising and timber interests in Roane County, but his chief business now and for some years past has been the Citizens Lumber Company, of which he is vice president and general manager.

Mr. Dudley is a Presbyterian, a democrat who frequently exercises independent choice of candidates, is a Knight Templar and thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, a member of the Mystic Shrine, and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is identified with the Chamber of Commerce and is a member of Blennerhasset and Country clubs.

In 1892 Mr. Dudley married Mary Frances Foley. Their two sons are George L., Jr., and Samuel Burdett. The older was in the aviation section as a second lieutenant during the World war, but the armistice was signed before he was sent abroad. The younger son, at the age of fifteen, ran away from home and enlisted, but had only one month of soldier life.

WILLIAM H. CARFER has been a resident of Wood County nearly all his life, and his activities as a farmer, public official and business executive constitute an impressive total that justifies the widespread esteem in which he is held at Parkersburg and in other sections of the state.

He represents the third generation of the Carfer family in America. His grandfather, Henry Carfer, was a native of Holland. Coming to the United States in 1797 as a young man, he settled on a farm near Moundsville, Marshall County, in what is now West Virginia, and lived out his industrious life there.

Of his six children his second son was Stephen Carfer, who was born on the old farm near Moundsville and married in that county Sophia Roberts. He was a farmer there and in 1855 moved his family to Wood County. At the outbreak of the Civil war he exhibited a passionate devotion to the cause of the Union. He enlisted in Company K of the Fifteenth West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, though at that time he was past the age for conscription. He explained his enlistment on the ground that he would as soon be killed in the service of his country as killed by bushwhackers. He was a good and faithful soldier in several campaigns, and death overtook him in the battle of Snicker's Gap in the Shenandoah Valley in July, 1864. He was survived by his widow and six children. She died in West County, March 14, 1875.

William H. Carfer was the ninth of the twelve children of his parents, only six of whom grew to mature years. He was born in Marshall County, March 8, 1854, was an infant when the family moved to Wood County, and as a boy of ten was able to appreciate the tragedy of a soldier father's death. He had the advantages of the common schools in his neighborhood and when about seventeen years of age did grade work on the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad. For five years he also assisted in operating a portable saw mill. Otherwise his place and his duties were the home farm to the age of thirty-six.

Mr. Carfer removed to Parkersburg in 1890, and for a time was a carpenter and employed in other capacities. He served four years on the Parkersburg police force, the last six months as a lieutenant of police. In 1896 he was elected constable, performing those duties four years. In 1900 he was elected and for four years was a justice of the peace, and in 1904 was chosen for a four year term as sheriff of Wood County. In 1910 he was a candidate for the State Legislature, but was defeated in the democratic landslide of that year.

Since leaving politics and the public service Mr. Carfer has been interested in oil production and since 1915 has been treasurer of the Union Merchandise Company. He is also president of the Parkersburg Transfer & Storage Company and a director of the Central Bank & Trust Company. He is a member of the Official Board of the First Methodist Church and a teacher in the Sunday School. He has always been a staunch republican, and fraternally is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Knights Pythias.

April 8, 1880, he married Violet, Adelaide Owings. She died November 20, 1898. She was the mother of four children: Mary Estella, who died at the age of four years; William Clayton, who died June 22, 1902, aged nine years; Archie Boyd, who is a graduate of West Virginia University; and John Franklin, who has found his work in the oil industry, both in Mexico and elsewhere. October 27, 1903, Mr. Carfer married Mrs. Sarah Jane (Satterfield) Kiger. She had two children by her first husband, Willis H. Kiger. They are Martha Alta, now Mrs. Walter Doss and Thomas E. Kiger.

ROBERT T. STEALEY went to work in a useful occupation as soon as he left school, and by quiet and efficient performance in his line of duty has gained recognition as good business man and is especially well known in hotel circles.

Mr. Stealey, who for a number of years has been connected with the Chancellor Hotel at Parkersburg, was born at Middleburn, West Virginia, March 20, 1874, son of Lloyd L. and Mary H. (Billingsley) Stealey. His father spent practically his entire life as a Middleburn merchant, was a man who enjoyed a widely extended friendship, and was active in the Methodist Church.

One of eight children, all living but one, Robert Stealey grew up in the family home at Middleburn. He attended the common schools there and when about seventeen he started to learn the printer's trade in the office of a country newspaper. He had four years of this training experience, but did not put his knowledge to use, since he left the printing office to become clerk in the Wells Hotel at Sistersville. His home has been at Parkersburg since 1898, and for several years he was clerk in the Blennerhasset Hotel, and in 1903 became clerk of the Chancellor Hotel. Later he acquired stock and is now treasurer of the Bank Block Investment Company, which is the operating corporation of the Chancellor Hotel.

Mr. Stealey is a member of the Parkersburg Country Club and of the Rotary Club. In 1906 he married Miss Lillie Casto, of Parkersburg. Mrs. Stealey died January 22, 1911, leaving two children, Robert Evans and Julian Dorr. Mr. Stealey's father was the late D. C. Casto, a well known Parkersburg lawyer.

Walter E. McDougall.

PHILIP D. NEAL. During the past thirty years Philip Neal has had an official and directing part in the management of half a dozen or more of Parkersburg's chief industries, commercial and banking institutions. His high place as a business man and citizen is an additional honor to a family that has been one of historic distinction in Wood County from the very beginning of settlement.

Mr. Neal is a great-grandson of that historic figure, Captain James Neal, founder of Neal's Station, the first block house and center of settlement in Wood County. He built this block house in 1785, and with his family located there permanently two years later. The connected facts in the career of Capt. James Neal are given on other pages of the biographical section.

Philip Neal's grandfather was John Neal, born in 1776, and died in 1825. He is frequently referred to among pioneer characters as Sheriff Neal. He was high sheriff of Wood County from 1807 to 1809, in the latter year was chosen member of the House of Burgesses, and from 1800 until the end of his life he sat on the bench of the County Court. His wife, whom he married in 1796, was Ephie's look, then about sixteen years of age, who died in 1852. Sheriff John Neal had thirteen children, and several of his sons carried the line of descent down to the present generation.

His tenth child was George B. Neal, who was born February 2, 1816, and died December 24, 1892. He spent all his life at Parkersburg, where he was the owner of a wharf and widely known in the river traffic. He was a member of the Episcopal Church, a democrat, and while he never attained wealth he was highly respected. He married Caroline McKinley, a daughter of William McKinley, of an old time family of Weston, West Virginia. She died in 1897. Her children were: Eva, widow of W. W. George; Annie, wife of Dr. N. L. Guice; Philip D.; Bettie, wife of Dr. George S. Bowles; Georgie M., deceased wife of Doctor Carr; Edward, who died in infancy; and Emma, Mrs. W. C. McConaughy, of Parkersburg.

Philip Doddridge Neal was born at Parkersburg October 1, 1865. He was endowed with sound inheritance, had an aptitude for business, was well educated in public and private schools, and his first regular employment was as a runner for the Parkersburg National Bank. He was with that institution five years, then became bookkeeper for the Consumers Coal & Mining Company, and in 1899 organized the Citizens Coal Company, of which he became secretary and manager and of which he is now vice president and treasurer. Mr. Neal in 1895 organized and became secretary and general manager of the Parkersburg Chair Company, and is now president and treasurer of that industry. He also organized as a subsidiary of the Citizens Coal Company the Citizens Concrete Company. For several years he was president of the wholesale grocery house of Shattuck & Jackson Company, a vice president of the Citizens National Bank, and from time to time connected with other local organizations.

Mr. Neal is a Knight Templar York Rite Mason, a member of the Mystic Shrine, and a charter member of the Rotary Club. He is a member of the Episcopal Church. In 1897 he married Miss Daisy Shattuck, daughter of Charles and Annie Shattuck. Their three children are: Caroline McK., born in 1898; Phyllis Shattuck, born in 1899; and Annie Shattuck, born in 1902.

EDWIN W. CROOKS, M. D., has been established in the successful general practice of his profession in the City of Parkersburg since the year 1908, and his character and ability mark him as one of the representative physicians and surgeons of Wood County. The doctor is an exemplar of the benignant school of Homeopathy, and has become one of its specially successful representatives in his native state.

Doctor Crooks was born at Belleville, West Virginia, on the 15th of September, 1874, and is a son of Horatio N. and Marian (Muir) Crooks. Horatio N. Crooks was born in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, and was a child of about one year at the time of the family removal to West Virginia, his father, Capt. Horatio N. Crooks, having been for many years a skilled and popular captain of steamboats plying the Ohio River between the cities of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and Memphis, Tennessee. Captain Crooks purchased farm land in the vicinity of Belleville, West Virginia, and improved this property into a productive farm, he and his wife having there maintained their home until the time of their deaths. On this old homestead their son Horatio N. continued to reside until the close of his life, and he held prestige as one of the substantial farmers and influential citizens of the community.

Dr. Edwin W. Crooks acquired his preliminary education in the public schools, and in his youth he began reading medicine by utilizing the medical library of his uncle, Dr. Edwin W. Crooks, who had removed to California. Finally he entered Pulte Medical College in the City of Cincinnati, Ohio, this institution, one of the oldest and best Homeopathic schools in the West, having been founded by another uncle of the doctor. He was graduated as a member of the class of 1906, and since thus receiving his degree he has continued a close student of the best standard and periodical literature of his profession and thus kept in touch with the advances made in medical and surgical science. As previously stated, Doctor Crooks has been engaged in practice at Parkersburg since 1908, and this city has been the stage of his earnest and able labors that have resulted in his building up a large and representative practice which gives him precedence as one of the leading physicians of the metropolis of his native county. He is a member of the Little Kanawha and Ohio Valley Medical Society and the American Institute of Homeopathy. He gave nine years of effective service as president of the Board of Health of Wood County, is a republican in political allegiance, and in the time-honored Masonic fraternity he has completed the circle of each the York and the Scottish Rites, in the latter of which he has received the thirty-second degree. His maximum York Rite affiliation is with the Commandery of Knights Templars in his home city, he is identified also with Nemesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and is an appreciative and popular member of Parkersburg Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

The year 1917 recorded the marriage of Doctor Crooks and Miss Rebecca Dils, and they have two sons, Edwin W., Jr., and Horatio N. (III). Doctor and Mrs. Crooks are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

HON. WALTER EDMUND McDUGGLE. Thirty years as a lawyer and eight years on the Circuit Bench is embraced in the professional and public record of Judge McDouggle of Parkersburg. He is one of the best loved men in that community, and upright and able judge, and a man who has been true to all the heavy obligations of his life.

He represents the third generation of this family in West Virginia, and was born on a farm eight miles below Parkersburg, in Wood County, December 4, 1867. His first American ancestor was John McDouggle, who was born in Scotland in 1731. Benjamin McDouggle, of the second generation, was born in Maryland in 1762, and married Elizabeth Duke. Their only child, Samuel F. McDouggle, grandfather of Judge McDouggle, was born in Virginia, June 14, 1798, and for some years had his home in that portion of Warren County which is now a part of Clark County in Old Virginia. In 1848 he moved to what is now West Virginia. All his active career was spent as a farmer. He was a pronounced opponent of the institution of slavery, though essentially true to the institutions of the South.

His son, Albert Armstrong McDouggle, whose mother was Mary Armstrong, was born in Warren County, Virginia, December 2, 1838, and spent practically his entire life as a farmer and stockman in Wood County, West Virginia. He was killed on a railroad crossing July 5, 1905. He was a student at Williams College in Ohio when the Civil war broke out. He returned home with the intention of entering the Union army. Three brothers had gone into the Confederate service, and he was influenced not to enlist. In his old home community at Washington Bottoms in Wood County, January 11, 1866, he married Louisa Jane Lewis, who was born February 21, 1841, and died October 7, 1870. Her father was Francis Keene Lewis.

Walter Edmund McDougle was the oldest of four children, and the only one to survive infancy. His boyhood days were spent on the home farm until 1886, and in the meantime he attended the local schools. For about eighteen months he attended the Tri-State Normal College at Angola, Indiana, taking a commercial course, and in 1889 began reading law with Judge John G. McCluer of Parkersburg. In September, 1890, he entered the law school of Washington and Lee University, graduating with the law degree in June, 1891, and was admitted to the bar at Parkersburg, July 13th.

Judge McDougle continued active in his work as a lawyer for over twenty years, until he went on the bench. He was frequently honored with public office, serving four years, 1893-96, as prosecuting attorney of Wood County. During this term in office he never had a mistrial or any case successfully appealed against him in higher courts. The judge before whom he tried many of his cases said that he was the best prosecuting attorney that had ever practiced in his court. From 1909 to 1912 he was assistant prosecuting attorney. He was elected judge of the Fourth Judicial Circuit of West Virginia in 1912, being chosen on the republican ticket, though for his second term he had no opposition. He has never been a partisan politician, and his widespread popularity is due to the eminent fitness he has shown for his judicial responsibilities.

Judge McDougle is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and other fraternal and social organizations, and he and his family are Presbyterians. At Marietta, Ohio, April 18, 1891, he married Myrtle Elizabeth Curry, daughter of George and Eliza (White) Curry. Her father was a Union soldier and later a brick manufacturer. The only son of Judge McDougle is Robert Boreman McDougle, who was born February 7, 1893. He graduated from the Parkersburg High School, from Washington and Lee University in 1916, and during the World war was a first lieutenant in the Three Hundred and Twenty-fourth Field Artillery, serving two years, fourteen months of which time were spent overseas in France. He was in the battle of the Argonne. He is now rated as one of the ablest young lawyers in this section of West Virginia, and is assistant prosecuting attorney of Wood County.

LEWIS M. LUDLOW is president and manager of the Acme Fishing Tool Company, one of the important industries that contribute to the prestige Parkersburg enjoys as a business and industrial center of the oil and gas interests in this territory.

Mr. Ludlow, who first came to West Virginia for his health and has remained to engage in business affairs, was born at Ludlow, near New York City, in Westchester County, New York, May 25, 1884, son of Thomas W. and Harriet (Carnochan) Ludlow, his father of English and his mother of English-Scotch ancestry. The New York town of Ludlow was named for his grandfather, Thomas W. Ludlow, who gave the right of way to the New York Central Railroad.

Lewis M. Ludlow was reared at Ludlow, attended St. John's School and Military Academy at Ossining, New York, and subsequently entered Columbia University at New York City, where he pursued special studies for about three years. Lack of money not permitting him to remain to graduate, he turned his attention to the confectionery business, and having for some time suffered ill health he sought a change of climate, removing to West Virginia in 1910. For two years he was in Roane County with the Louis F. Payn Oil Company, and his work put him in practical touch with every phase of oil production. With this experience he felt justified in entering the oil business on his own account, but in a short time had lost all his capital and the venture was almost disastrous.

Mr. Ludlow in 1912 became associated with the late George L. McKain, founder and president of the Acme Fishing Tool Company at Parkersburg. He remained with Mr. McKain until 1913, when he resigned his position to enter into the importing business in New York City. Upon the death of Mr. McKain he returned to Parkersburg and again associated himself with the Acme Fishing Tool Company, in the capacity of president.

Mr. Ludlow is a member of the Episcopal Church, a republican, belongs to the Chamber of Commerce, the Iwanis Club, Country Club, is a member of the advisory board of the Old Colony Club, and is a Knight Templar and thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, a member of Nemesis Temple of the Shrine, and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. In 1914 he married Harriet McKain, daughter of George L. McKain. They have one daughter, Ann.

CLARK NELSON. The Nelsons of Parkersburg for fifty years have been a family with all the qualities of enterprise and good citizenship that produce a fair and honorable name in a community.

In 1858 Benjamin Franklin Nelson came from Powhat, Ohio, to Parkersburg. He was accompanied by his wife, whose maiden name was Emily Clark, and by four children, while eight other children were born to them in Parkersburg. B. F. Nelson devoted his time and energies to farming in the Williams District of the county, where he died in 1884. His widow survived him with unimpaired faculties until her death in 1905. Only a short time before she had made a visit to California to see her son. One of the children of B. F. Nelson was Lafayette Nelson, who enlisted in the Union army and died of disease while in the service.

Clark Nelson, the younger son, was born March 30, 1861, and spent his life in Wood County, where he died September 8, 1919. He made the very best possible use of only ordinary opportunities to secure an education, and after exhausting the possibilities of the district schools attended a normal school several times. For sixteen years he taught in the country district of Wood County, employing the vacation periods to farm in the Clay and Lubeck districts. He was a republican in politics, but was seldom known in political councils, though he held several local positions when necessity required, more as a matter of good citizenship than for any other reason. He was a man of single mind and purpose, thought and acted correctly, and from youth to advanced years never failed to earn the respect paid to honesty and a blameless character. His range of knowledge was unusually wide for one who had to depend upon his own efforts to secure an education. In religious matters he was a devout member of the Baptist Church. In October, 1879, Clark Nelson married Wilda Spencer, and she is still living at Parkersburg. Their two sons were Arta L., born July 31, 1880, and Harvey H., born January 5, 1882.

These two sons continue the honorable prestige of the name in Parkersburg, and are active in commercial affairs. Arta L. Nelson attended a commercial college at Parkersburg and was employed as a stenographer and bookkeeper until he entered business with his brother in 1907. The Nelson brothers now have one of the prosperous mercantile establishments of the city. Arta Nelson married, November 27, 1912, Mary Crawford. Their three children are Mary, Clara Elizabeth and William Clark. Arta Nelson is a Methodist, a republican voter, a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, a member of Nemesis Temple of the Shrine, and the Parkersburg Chamber of Commerce.

Harvey H. Nelson secured a good practical education and at the age of nineteen began an apprenticeship at the plumber's trade. He followed that as a regular business until he entered the plumbing and heating business in 1907. Both brothers were active in behalf of the various drive and other patriotic causes in the World war. He is affiliated with the Masonic Order, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, is a member of the Rotary Club and is first vice president of the Chamber of Commerce. He likewise is a republican and a Methodist. April 14, 1915, Harvey Nelson married Nan R. Haddox. They have one daughter, Louise.

MONROE J. RATHBONE, manager of the Camden Works at Parkersburg for the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, is a native of Parkersburg and represents two prominent families of the state. He is a maternal grandson of James Monroe Jackson, of the distinguished family of West Virginia. This subject is more fully treated on other pages.

In the Rathbone line he is descended from Wait Rathbone, who was a New England sea captain and also a captain of militia during the Revolution. A son of Wait was William Palmer Rathbone, a native of Connecticut, subsequently a business man of New York City, and for a number of years a county judge in New Jersey. He settled at Burning Springs in what is now West Virginia in 1813, and finally retired to Parkersburg, where he died in 1862. His wife was Martha Valiau.

Their son, John Valiau Rathbone, was born in New York City in 1821 and accompanied his father to West Virginia. For several years he and a brother were general merchants, and in 1861 he became interested in the earlier phases of oil development and was one of the most conspicuously successful in that industry. It is said that in spite of his wealth he always remained a plain man of the people, enjoyed the companionship and fellowship of his old friends and acquaintances in Parkersburg, and was a wit and humorist. He died January 11, 1897, his home becoming subsequently the quarters of the Blennerhassett Club. In 1841 he married Anna Maria Doremus, of New Jersey. She died in the same year and eight months later than her husband. Of their eleven children the seventh in order of birth is Francis Vinton Rathbone, who married Mary E. Jackson, daughter of Judge James Monroe Jackson.

Monroe Jackson Rathbone, a son of Francis V. Rathbone, was born in Parkersburg July 23, 1874. He was well educated, attending the Parkersburg High School and the Virginia Military Institute. As a youth he became a member for the First National Bank of Parkersburg, also had some experience in merchandising, and for a time was an employee of a local gas company. In 1895 Mr. Rathbone removed to Chicago, and for five years was assistant manager of the lubricating sales department of the Standard Oil Company.

On his return to Parkersburg in 1900 he was purchasing agent for the wholesale grocery house of Shattuck-Jackson Company, but in 1904 resumed his service with the Standard Oil Company, and since 1907 has been manager of the Camden Works. He represents the third generation of a family active in the oil industry in West Virginia. Mr. Rathbone is also a director of the Citizens National Bank. Other interests and activities betray the public spirited and benevolent character of his citizenship. He is a member of the Board of Governors of the Country Club, a member of the Blennerhassett Club, a member of the Rotary Club, Chamber of Commerce, an Elk, is president of the local council of the Boy Scouts, and during the World war was a member of the War Labor Board. He is a democrat in politics and a member of the Protestant Episcopal church.

October 19, 1898, Mr. Rathbone married Miss Ida Virginia Welch, daughter of W. M. Welch. Four sons were born to their marriage: Monroe Jackson, Jr., Richard A., William Vinton, and James Vinton. The youngest died in infancy.

JACKSON FAMILY. John Jackson was born near Londonderry, Ireland, in 1719, was reared in the City of London, where he learned the builder's trade, and in 1848 crossed the ocean to Calvert County, Maryland. About 169 he and his family crossed the mountains into North-eastern Virginia and made permanent settlement on the Ackhannon River, just below Jackson's Port. Both he and his wife had experiences during the period of Indian warfare, and in mental, moral and physical strength they were tested to become the forebears of an illustrious race of descendants. John Jackson died at Clarksburg September 1, 1801. His wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Cummins, died in 1825. Of their eight children the second son, Edward, was the grandfather of Thomas Jonathan Jackson, known to immortal fame as Gen. Stonewall Jackson.

Their first son was known as Col. George Jackson. He was born about 1750 and in 1773 entered 400 acres of land in the vicinity of Clarksburg. He had a sound mental and physical inheritance, and was a natural leader, though without the opportunities to secure a literary education. He was with the frontier militia in the Indian wars, was commissioned colonel of a Virginia regiment by General Washington in the Revolution, and in 1781 joined General Clark's expedition against the British at Detroit. The first County Court of Harrison County was held at his home in 1784. He was elected a member of the House of Burgesses, was a member of the State Convention that ratified the Federal Constitution, and three times was chosen a member of Congress. It is said that a speech he made in Congress caused so much amusement among the members that he announced he would go home and send his son to Congress, and he would not be laughed at. His son John, in fact, immediately succeeded him, entering the Eighth Congress.

This son, John George Jackson, was born near Buckhannon, Virginia, and died at Clarksburg in 1825. He was liberally educated by his father, was elected a member of the Legislature in 1797, was appointed surveyor of Government lands west of the Ohio in 1793, and, as noted, was elected to Congress as successor of his father, serving from the Eighth to the Fourteenth congresses inclusive, except the Twelfth. He was a brigadier general of militia and in 1819 appointed United States judge for the Western District of Virginia, and was on the bench when he died. The first wife of John George Jackson was Mary Payne, who was born about 1781 and died February 13, 1808. She was a daughter of John and Mary (Coles) Payne. She and Mr. Jackson were married in the executive mansion at Washington, this being the first wedding celebrated in the White House. That honor was granted the bride by virtue of her being a sister of the wife of the President of the United States, the famous Dolly Madison. The second wife of John George Jackson, by whom is descended another line of the Jackson family in West Virginia, was a daughter of Return Jonathan Meigs, of the distinguished Meigs family of Ohio.

The only son of the first marriage of John George Jackson was Gen. John Jay Jackson, who was born in Wood County, Virginia, February 13, 1800. Much of his early life was spent in Parkersburg. He was educated privately and in Washington College in Pennsylvania, and by appointment from President Monroe entered West Point Military Academy in 1815, graduating in his nineteenth year. As an officer of the Regular army he performed service in the Seminole war in Florida, and at one time was a member of Gen. Andrew Jackson's staff. About January 1, 1823, he resigned his commission and turned his attention to the law. He soon reached the front ranks of his profession and was many times elected to public office. From 1830 to 1852 he was prosecuting attorney in the Circuit Superior Court. He was a brigadier general of Militia from 1842 until the beginning of the Civil war. His last public service was as a member of the Convention at Richmond in 1861, where he eloquently upheld the Union. He organized and was president of the Second National Bank of Parkersburg. He died January 1, 1877.

Gen. John Jay Jackson married in 1823 Emma G. Beeson, who died in 1842. In 1843 he married Jane E. B. Gardner.

While without doubt one of the ablest and most useful men in his generation in Parkersburg and his section of Virginia, Gen. John Jay Jackson had perhaps an even greater distinction in being the father of five eminent sons, all of whom became conspicuous in the history of West Virginia. These sons were Judge John Jay Jackson, United States District Judge James Monroe Jackson, Governor Jacob Beeson Jackson, Henry Clay Jackson and Andrew Gardner Jackson.

WILLIAM T. COCHRAN, present sheriff of Wood County, was for forty years closely identified with the educational affairs of the county, has also been a practical farmer, and altogether is one of the best known citizens of that locality.

Though a resident of West Virginia since early boyhood, he was born in Monroe County, Ohio, July 12, 1861. He was ten years of age when his parents, William and Sarah (Morris) Cochran, moved into Wood County, West Virginia. William Cochran was born in Ireland, came to the United States with his parents when a boy, and spent his active life as a farmer. He died in 1908, when about eighty years of age, and is survived by his widow, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1831, and is now ninety years of age.

One of eight children, six still living, William T. Cochran acquired his early school advantages in Ohio, and also attended public school in this state. He was very young when he did his first duty as a teacher, and at the age of eighteen he was granted a regular license to teach. His active interest in the cause of education has never ceased. For fifteen years he was a member of the Board of Examiners for teachers under the old school law. In 1890 he was elected superintendent of schools for Wood County, and after one term of four years was re-elected and filled the office eight years. Mr. Cochran enjoys the distinction of being one of the few teachers of the state who have been granted a state life certificate. From the time he left the superintendent's office he alternately taught and farmed until 1920. He owns 100 acres of land and other property in Wood County, and has been a careful, conservative business man.

On May 25, 1920, he was nominated for sheriff of Wood County over five competitors, and was chosen to the office by a majority of 422. He had qualifications for this post, since he had acted as deputy sheriff for sixteen years under four different sheriffs. Mr. Cochran is a republican in politics. He has been a life-long member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and is affiliated with the Elks and the Loyal Order of Moose.

Mr. Cochran married Miss Martha J. Bonar, daughter of Matthew Bonar, of Wood County. Six children were born to their marriage, two of whom died in infancy. Walter E. died in Alaska while on duty as a teacher in Government schools. Emma was also a teacher, who died at the age of twenty. Mont is now the manager and operator of his father's farm. Ethel is a teacher in the graded schools of Lubeck District of Wood County.

ALVIN L. COTTRILL is not only one of the progressive representatives of farm enterprise in Gilmer County but is also serving, in 1922, as mayor of Glenville, the judicial center of the county. He was born in Harrison County, this state, January 19, 1868, and is a son of Mortimer and Sarah (Cottrill) Cottrill, who were of the same family name but of no kinship. The parents were reared under the influence of farm life in Harrison County, and the father gave his entire active career to farm industry, in which he gained substantial success. He continued his residence in Harrison County until 1893, when he removed to Gilmer County and purchased a farm on the Waters of Dusk Camp in Glenville District. There both he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives, both having been zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Mr. Cottrill having been a staunch democrat. Of their six children four are living: Jane is the wife of George Davis; Rev. Frederick is a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church; Mary is the widow of I. E. Helmuth; and Alvin L., of this review, is the youngest of the number.

The old home farm in Harrison County was the scene of the experiences of Alvin L. Cottrill from the time of his birth until he had attained to adult age, and he gained his early education in the public and select schools. He early assumed his full share of responsibility in connection with the work of the home farm, and in his youth gained also a goodly skill as a carpenter, with the result that there was no little damage for his service as an artisan in this line. In his independent farming enterprise Mr. Cottrill has brought to bear the energy and progressive policies that make for maximum success, and near his home village of Glenville he is now the owner of a valuable farm property of 386 acres, on which are two producing gas wells, also a fifteen-room residence. He also has two lots in town. He has given special attention to the raising of cattle, and has been a leader in vigorous farm industry in this county. He is a stockholder in the Glenville Banking & Trust Company, and his civic loyalty and public spirit is indicated not only by the fact that he served in 1921 & 1922 as mayor of Glenville, but also by his having previously been called upon to function in this office, in 1915. He is unwavering in his support of the cause of the democratic party, is affiliated with the Independent Order of the Fellows, and he and his wife are leading members of the Glenville Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he is trustee, besides being the present superintendent of Sunday school.

In 1896 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Cottrill and Miss Angelina Davis, who was born in Lewis County, this state, December 10, 1873. Mr. and Mrs. Cottrill have four children: Floda G. is a graduate of the State Normal School at Glenville and is now a clerk in a mercantile establishment in this village; Nellie M. was born in 1911 and is attending the public schools of Glenville.

HARVEY A. HALL is giving a most progressive and efficient administration of the office of county agent of Gilmer County, with official headquarters at Glenville, the county seat. He was born on a farm in Lewis County, this state, May 30, 1891, and is a son of Minor J. and Amanda (Gaston) Hall, both likewise natives of Lewis County, where the former was born in March, 1853, and the latter in March, 1855, both having been reared on farms in the same neighborhood and having received the advantages of the local schools of the period. After their marriage the parents settled on a farm on Freeman's Creek in Lees County, and here they have maintained their home to the present time, both being members of the United Brethren Church and the father being a republican in politics. Of the eleven children five are now living: Tensie is the wife of C. N. Robinson, of Lewis County; Della is the wife of C. M. Gall, of that county; Enoch M. is a resident of Weston; Blonda S. graduated in a business college and is now a progressive farmer in Lewis County.

Harvey Hall was reared on the home farm and supplemented the discipline of the public schools by attending a West Virginia State Normal School at Glenville and later the Iowa State College of Agriculture and Mechanical Arts at Ames, Iowa, in which he was graduated with a degree of Bachelor of Science. For five years thereafter he was actively associated with farm enterprise in his native state, and he was then appointed to his present office, that of county agent of Gilmer County, a position in which he finds ample opportunity for the effective use of his technical knowledge and administrative ability. His political allegiance is given to the republican party, and in the Masonic fraternity he has received the thirty-second degree of a Scottish Rite. At Weston, Lewis County, his basic Masonic affiliation is with Weston Lodge No. 10, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, he is affiliated also with the Chapter of Royal Arch Masons and the Commandery of Knights Templar at that place, and is also a member of Nemo's Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., at Parkersburg, West Virginia.

December 15, 1919, recorded the marriage of Mr. Hall and Miss Mabel McGinnis, a graduate of the State Normal School at Glenville, and the one child of this union is a winsome little daughter, Roberta, born July 23, 1920.

CHARLES T. WHITING has long been numbered among the representative merchants of Glenville, the judicial center of Gilmer County, and is the owner also of a well improved farm of 100 acres, as well as the small farm on which he resides, adjacent to Glenville, and the Whiting House, with a block of ground, at the county seat. Mr. Whiting was born on the old homestead farm of the family near Glenville, and the date of his nativity was October 14, 1870. He is a son of Samuel S. and Susan (Varner) Whiting. Samuel S. Whiting was born and reared in England, and upon coming to the United States he first settled in the State of New York. From the old Empire State he came to what is now West Virginia and acquired a large tract of land in Gilmer County, where he became a successful ag-tourist and stock-grower and where he died in 1857, when his son Charles T., of this sketch, was not yet three years of age. Mrs. Whiting survived her husband many years, and both were earnest members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. They became the parents of six sons, of whom the subject of this sketch was the fifth in order of birth. John deceased, as is also Samuel H. W. R. was a Union soldier in the Civil war, as a member of Company G, Tenth West Virginia Volunteer Infantry. W. D., who was formerly engaged in the mercantile business, is now superintendent of one of the largest and finest orchards in Hampshire County, is state.

Charles T. Whiting was ten years of age when his dowered mother removed from the farm to Glenville, where he attended the village schools and supplemented this discipline by here continuing his studies in the State Normal school. In 1869 he here took a position as clerk in the general store of W. T. Wiant, and two years later he was admitted to partnership in the business. The enterprise was thereafter conducted for eight years under the title of Wiant & Whiting, and later the firm name became Whiting Brothers & Company. In 1902 Mr. Whiting engaged independently in the same line of business, but later he again formed a partnership with his brother, W. D. Whiting, for short time, and has since conducted an associated mercantile business alone.

Mr. Whiting is a progressive and liberal citizen, is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, is a member of the Baptist Church, and his wife holds membership in the Presbyterian Church.

In February, 1875, Mr. Whiting married Miss Sarah A. Lump, and after her death he wedded Miss Emma Lawrence. Of the six children of the first marriage three are living, and of the second union have been born three children, namely: Charles S., Harry and Andrew. Charles is a veteran of the World war, and is now a clerk in the state prohibition office at Wheeling. Harry has active management of the Whiting House, one of the leading hotels at Glenville, this hotel property being owned by his father. Andrew, the youngest of the three sons, is at home.

JAMES N. BERTHY, Sr., president of the First National Bank of Cowen, Webster County, was born in Preston County, West Virginia, August 1, 1858, about five years prior to the time when this commonwealth was segregated from Virginia and made an independent state. He is a son of William and Mary E. (Tanner) Berthy. The father was born in Ireland, in 1832, and was about thirteen years of age when he accompanied his parents on their immigration to the United States in 1845, the family home having at that time been established in Preston County, Virginia (now West Virginia). Within a few years thereafter his father of William Berthy died, and William was reared to manhood near Baltimore, Maryland, his educational advantages having been those of the common schools of the period. As a youth he became identified with construction work in the building of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, and thereafter he served many years as a locomotive engineer with this railroad system. He was a democrat in politics, and was a man of broad views and sterling character. Both he and his wife were residents of Preston County at the time of their deaths. All of their seven children attained to maturity, five of the number surviving at the time of this writing, in 1922, and James N., of this review, being the eldest of the five; William is a farmer in Preston County; Mary is the wife of George A. Ott; Miss Ella resides with her brother William on the farm in Preston County; and Frank is in the employ of a coal-mining company in that county.

James N. Berthy, Sr., was reared at Newburg, Preston County, and there profited by the advantages of the public schools, besides which he there gained practical business experience, he having been a lad of eleven years when he began clerking in a general store. He continued his service in this capacity until he had attained to his legal majority, when he became a partner in the business, his connection with which continued until 1891, when he removed to Upshur County and engaged in the lumber business as a member of the firm of Smoot Lumber Company, in which they were successful. In 1899 the company purchased timber land in Webster County, where they continued successful activities as manufacturers of and dealers in lumber, they having cut much of the timber on the land which they secured. Mr. Berthy has now virtually retired from this important line of industrial enterprise, by selling his lumber interests to Mr. C. D. Howard, his partner, and the mercantile interests to his son and son-in-law.

Mr. Berthy became a director of the First National Bank of Cowen at the time of its organization and incorporation, and he is now president of the institution, in the upbuilding of the business of which he has been a most influential factor. E. R. Rogers is vice president of the bank and M. E. Squires is its cashier. Mr. Berthy and his associate, Mr. C. D. Howard, are the owners of valuable timber, coal and farm lands in this section of the state. Mr. Berthy, is one of the substantial and progressive citizens of Webster County. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party.

June 6, 1883, was the date that marked the marriage of Mr. Berthy and Miss Ethel O. Smoot, daughter of J. R. and Susan (Howard) Smoot. She was born and reared at Newburg, Preston County, and her early education included a collegiate course. Of the five children of this union the eldest is James N., Jr., who is successfully engaged in the general merchandise business at Cowen; J. Howard is located at Cowen, this state, and is a traveling salesman; Maude B. is the wife of G. F. Wilkins; Margaret is the wife of W. H. Herold; and Mary is at home.

WILLIAM H. SMITH has been a forceful factor in the commercial, financial and civic affairs of Parkersburg for more than half a century. The City of Parkersburg is in a sense a modern development and creation, though it has been a center of some trade and importance since the pioneer period in Western Virginia. With its growth and development this branch of the Smith family has been closely identified for just a century.

The grandfather of the Parkersburg merchant and banker was Robert Saurin Smith, who located at Parkersburg in 1821. He was born in Nottingham, England, November 2, 1793, son of Rev. Robert Smith and a grandson of Rev. Francis Smith, both of whom were ministers of the General Baptist Church in England and were pastors of the church of that denomination at Nottingham through a long period of years. Robert Saurin Smith came to the United States with his wife and one child in 1819, and for the first two years lived in Baltimore and Pittsburgh. In Parkersburg he entered business as a tinsmith and coppersmith, gradually extending his enterprise to general merchandise and produce, and became one of the leading dealers in grain and other commodities, shipping such products down the river to New Orleans. He was greatly prospered in business, but eventually, on account of ill health and other reverses, lost most of his property. His home was at the corner of Ann and Fourth streets, and that property is still in the possession of his family. He was kindly and generous in all his relations with the community of Parkersburg, and from the first deeply interested in its public affairs. He was elected a trustee of the town corporation in 1826, but could not qualify, since he was not yet a naturalized American. Later, when he had fulfilled that duty, he was chosen a trustee in 1834, and at different times was an official of the town government and also served as a magistrate under the old Dominion laws. The wife of Robert S. Smith was Lucy L. Brook.

Their son, William Haines Smith, was born in Nottingham, England, June 1, 1818, and was only three years of age when brought to Parkersburg. He completed his education in Kenyon College at Gambier, Ohio, and on returning to Parkersburg became associated with his father in the produce and river traffic, taking many cargoes of grain to the South. Subsequently he extended his merchandising interests to Wirt and Jackson counties, but in 1860 returned to Wood County and bought a farm near Parkersburg. He was successful in his agricultural operations, and enjoyed the quiet environment of the country for many years. While on the farm he was county commissioner, member of the school board and county clerk, and also appointed by the Legislature as commissioner to value and assess the real estate of the county. On returning to Parkersburg in 1883 he organized with his sons the W. H. Smith Hardware Company, a business that has continued in successful operation for nearly forty years. He was for sixty-six years a dutiful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and at his home entertained the bishop, elders and other officials of the church, and lived a life of exemplary Christian conduct. He died February 22, 1906, at the age of eighty-eight. In 1841 he married Sarah Rector, daughter of Charles and Sarah (Rust) Rector, and granddaughter of Benjamin Rector and Peter Rust, both of whom were Revolutionary soldiers. The Rector family lived around Rectortown in Panquaker County. Her father, Charles Rector, was a soldier in the War of 1812 and soon afterward moved to the eastern part of Wood County, and was one of the influential men in the affairs of that community the rest of his life. He was born in 1776 and died in 1859. The children of William H. Smith, Sr., were Alice B., William Haines, Charles R., Arthur B., Lucy, Troilus and Levin.

William H. Smith, Jr., is the oldest son of this family. He was born in Jackson County, Virginia, February 16, 1847, and was about thirteen years of age when his parents returned to Wood County. A portion of his early life was spent on his father's farm, and he had the advantages of the common schools. In 1864, at the age of seventeen, he began clerking in a store at Parkersburg, and from 1867 to 1874 was employed in a local bank. He has been in the hardware business since the fall of 1874, and for many years has been president of the W. H. Smith Hardware Company. However, he is perhaps best known as a banker. In 1901 he organized the Central Bank & Trust Company of Parkersburg, and as president has wisely guided its affairs and made it one of the outstanding financial institutions of the state.

His powers and talents as a business man have been carefully trained and developed through a long period of years and consecutive experience. He started life well equipped in inheritance, and had the good fortune to receive wise direction from his parents, both of whom represented the highest standards of Christian character, and again and again Mr. Smith has expressed a sense of gratitude and obligation to his father and mother for their early teaching and training. He has always worked hard in the chosen field of his achievement, and has also accepted duties presented from time to time to every conscientious and thoughtful citizen. He has been a moral force in the community of Parkersburg, and to such men the modern city owes in large part the solid structure of its resources and the spirit of its enterprise.

Mr. Smith was mayor of Parkersburg in 1893-94. He is a republican in politics, a member of the Methodist Church, and as a citizen, he is an attendant of a church, and in home and business he has found complete expression for his great fund of energy. Mr. Smith on September 21, 1875, married at Parkersburg, Miss Collie Jackson, daughter of Gen. John J. and Jane (Gardner) Jackson.

MILTON E. SQUIRES has proved his resourcefulness and executive ability in a significant degree through his effective service as cashier of the First National Bank of Cowen, Webster County, a position of which he has been the popular incumbent since 1918, he being also a stockholder in this well ordered institution.

Mr. Squires was born on a farm in Lewis County, West Virginia, December 6, 1890, and is a son of G. Clark and Lucy (Butcher) Squires, the former of whom was born in October, 1855, and the latter in May, 1872. The father was born and reared in Braxton County, early gained a full share of experience in connection with the activities of the home farm, and that he profited by his youthful educational advantages was demonstrated in his successful service as a teacher in the rural schools when he was a young man. After his marriage he continued his alliance with farm enterprise in Braxton County until 1921, when he removed to Virginia, in which state he and his wife now reside. He is a member of the Methodist Protestant Church and his wife of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is a democrat in political adherency and is affiliated with the Improved Order of Red Men. G. Clark and Lucy (Butcher) Squires have eight children: Milton E., H. Earl, Lena, Bern Thomas, Fay, Alton and Ruth.

After having availed himself of the advantages of the public schools of Braxton County, Milton E. Squires continued his studies in the West Virginia State Normal School at Glenville until his graduation therein, and he gave six years of successful service as a teacher in the public schools, principally in rural districts. He was for one year cashier in the railway station at Burnsville, Braxton County, and he then, in 1918, assumed his present responsible office, that of cashier of the First National Bank of Cowen. Mr. Squires is aligned in the ranks of the democratic party, is affiliated with Cauden Lodge No. 107, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Glade Lodge No. 205, Knights of Pythias, at Cowen, of which he is a past chancellor, and both he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

In August, 1915, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Squires and Miss Mabel Greathouse, who likewise was born and reared in this state and who is the popular chatelaine of their attractive home. They have no children.

ALEXANDER W. BOBBITT. The year 1922 finds Mr. Bobbitt a resident of the Village of Cowen and in effect service as deputy sheriff of Webster County. He was born in Nicholas County, West Virginia (then Virginia), on the 1st of December, 1852, and is a son of Rufus and Mary (Williams) Bobbitt, the former a native of Rockbridge County, Virginia, and the latter of what is now Greenbrier County, West Virginia. After their marriage the parents settled on a farm in Nicholas County, and after the death of his first wife Mr. Bobbitt contracted a second marriage. He was a prosperous farmer at the time when the Civil War began, but as the result of that conflict he met with reverses that placed him far below his previous financial status. He continued his active alliance with farm industry in Nicholas County until his death, was a democrat in politics and was an earnest church member. Of the ten children of the first marriage seven are living in 1922, the subject of this sketch, and three others of the number being residents of Webster County: Lydia A. is the wife of Hiram A. Gardner, of that county; Nannie is the widow of Porterfield Morton, who was a farmer of Webster County; and L. H. is one of the progressive agriculturists of the county. John W. is a resident of Oklahoma. Elizabeth is the widow of A. P. Whit and she is a resident of Richwood. Elijah, who is a progressive farmer and stock dealer, resides in Nicholas County.

The old home farm was the stage of the childhood and youthful activities of Alexander W. Bobbitt, and in the common schools of Nicholas County he acquired his early education. He remained on the home farm until he was twenty-eight years of age, when he married, and in a vigorous career since that time he has achieved substantial success. His activities have included constructive alliance with farm industry, and he is prominently identified with banking interests in this section of the state. In his home village of Cowen he is a director of the First National Bank, he is president of the Lanesbottom Bank at Camde Webster County, is a stockholder in the Nicholas County Bank and is a director of the Kanawha Wholesale Groce Company at Burnsville, Braxton County.

Mr. Bobbitt has been active in furthering the local success of the democratic party, served as sheriff of Nicholas County two terms, besides having been for two terms deputy sheriff of that county and is now the deputy sheriff of Webster County. Both he and his wife are members of the Baptist Church.

In 1881 Mr. Bobbitt married Miss Zerilda Huff, and their children of this union are six in number: W. Clinton, a high-school teacher in Clay County; Luster is the wife of William Rollinson; Mary is the wife of W. R. Rogers; Elmer is a member of the firm of J. M. Frame & Brothers.

the City of Charleston; Mabel remains at the parental home and is a successful teacher, as is also Lillian, who is a wife of Harold Smith.

GEORGE R. MORTON, with residence and business headquarters at Camden on Gauley, Webster County, is one of a prominent representatives of the lumber industry in this section of the state. He was born on a farm on Strouds creek, this county, February 16, 1880, and is a son of Felix and Nannie (Bobbitt) Morton, the former of whom was born near Staunton, Virginia, in 1846, and the latter of whom was born in what is now Greenbrier County, West Virginia, in 1858. The father was reared on a farm and received his youthful education in the common schools of the county and period. When the Civil war was precipitated he became a youthful and loyal soldier of the Confederacy, but after his enlistment he was released, at the request of his father, he having been only sixteen years of age at the time. In Nicholas County, on the 10th of January, 1879, he married Miss Nannie Bobbitt, and shortly afterward they established their home on a farm on Strouds Creek, Webster County, where Mr. Morton became a prosperous exponent of agricultural and live stock industry and where he continued his residence until his death, his widow being till a resident of this county. He was a staunch democrat, was influential in community affairs and held several appointive offices of local trust. His religious faith was that of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which his widow likewise is an earnest member. Of their children the subject of this sketch is the eldest; K. H. likewise is engaged in the lumber business, with headquarters at Camden on Gauley; Pearl P. is also identified with the lumber business in Webster County; Lela is the wife of N. Rexroad.

Reared on the home farm and early beginning to assist in its work, George R. Morton made good use of the advantages afforded in the public schools of his native county and also attended private normal schools. He became a specially successful and popular teacher, and his pedagogic reputation and his secure place in the esteem of the people of his native county finally led to his being elected superintendent of the public schools of Webster County, an office of which he continued the incumbent nine years and in which he gave a most loyal and progressive administration. He has been chairman of the Democratic Executive Committee of Webster County since 1912, and in the various campaigns within this period has shown much ability and finesse in directing the political forces at his command. His wife is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In the Masonic fraternity Mr. Morton is affiliated with Camden Lodge No. 107, A. F. and A. M., of which he is a past master; Richmond Chapter No. 37, R. A. M.; and Sutton Commandery No. 16, Knights Templar. Mr. Morton is a director of the Lanes Bottom Bank in his home village and a stockholder in the First National Bank at Cowen, and he is also of the First National Bank of Webster Springs, the county seat, besides which he is a stockholder in Camden Mercantile & Milling Company and the Kanawha Wholesale Grocers Company at Burnsville, Braxton County, and is vice president of the Webster Smokeless Coal Company.

In 1905 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Morton and Miss Hettie Withrow, of Lewisburg, this state, and they have three children: Weldon, Chilton and Hampton.

ELBERT B. CHAMBERS. One of the staunch and effectively managed financial institutions of Mingo County is the Matewan National Bank at Matewan, of which Mr. Chambers is the president. He was born near Cedar Bluff, Tazewell County, Virginia, on the 29th of May, 1870, and is a son of Thomas and Sarah (Mitchell) Chambers, both likewise natives of that county and now residents of Matewan, West Virginia, to which state they removed in 1880, and established their residence on a farm on Mate Creek, in what is now Mingo County, before the construction of railroad lines through this section of the state. A man of superabundant energy and ambition, Thomas Chambers not only gave himself effectively to the improving and cultivating of his farm but also became actively identified with the timber industry, in connection with which he rafted logs down the Tug and Sandy rivers. He entered into a contract to cut the timber from the right of way of the proposed line of the Norfolk & Western Railroad from the tunnel to Grapevine Creek, a distance of eight miles, and in connection with this railroad development and the upbuilding of towns along the line he purchased the first lot in the new village of Matewan. Here he erected a modest building and installed a stock of general merchandise. He thus became one of the first merchants of the town, and has since continued as one of its representative business men and influential and honored pioneer citizens. He conducted his general store many years and is now interested in the hardware and furniture business here conducted by his youngest son. The stone used in constructing the foundation for his pioneer store Mr. Chambers hauled on a sled. He has aided largely in the civic and material development and progress of Matewan, contributed liberally to the erection of the two church buildings in the village, has served at varied intervals as a member of the village council, both he and his wife being zealous members of the Christian Church. In the early days of his log-rafting Mr. Chambers brought back merchandise on boats propelled with poles, and he had many friends up and down the rivers, including the Ohio. His eldest son, subject of this review, accompanied him on one of these trips, and at this time saw his first railroad train, at Louisville, Kentucky. Of the family of seven sons and three daughters Elbert B. was the first-born. The youngest, Thurman, is engaged in the hardware and furniture business at Matewan. Arthur resides in this village and was formerly its chief of police. James A. is engaged in shoe manufacturing in St. Louis, Missouri. John B., a commercial traveling salesman, resides at Huntington, West Virginia.

Elbert B. Chambers as a boy walked four miles daily to and from school, and he early began to assist his father in getting out and rafting timber, and while clearing the railroad right of way he served as camp cook for the crew of men employed by his father. In 1898 he opened a small general store at Matewan, and from this modest inception he developed a substantial and prosperous business, his wife having been his partner and effective coadjutor, he attributing much of his success and advancement to her aid and solicitous and wise counsel. He continued his large mercantile business many years, and upon the organization of the Matewan National Bank, May 13, 1913, he became its president, an office of which he has since continued the incumbent. The officers and directors of the Matewan National Bank are: Elbert B. Chambers, president; Joseph Schaeffer, vice president; Edgar Chambers, cashier; and M. G. Alley and John H. Greene. He has served several terms as a member of the village council and more recently as a member of the Mingo County Court, his status being that of a liberal, progressive and public-spirited citizen. In national affairs he is a staunch democrat, but in connection with public matters of a local order he is not constrained by strict partisan lines. His wife is a member of the Christian Church.

Mrs. Chambers, whose maiden name was Dora White, was born in the State of Pennsylvania. They have seven children: Lee is in the employ of the Norfolk & Western Railroad Company at Matewan; Edgar is cashier of the Matewan National Bank; Bernard is engaged in mercantile business at Matewan; Pearl is the wife of C. W. Overstreet, a merchant in this village; Daniel is in the employ of the Union Trust Company in the City of Charleston; and Lena and Everett remain at the parental home.

ALFRED REGER WARDEN, M. D. A resident of Taylor County since 1893, Doctor Warden has practiced medicine with genuine distinction and service, is a former member of the State Board of Health, and outside his profession is known throughout the state as an influential figure in republican politics.

His family connections have been associated with West Virginia for several generations. His grandfather, William Warden, was either a native of Scotland or of Scotch parentage, and spent many years on a farm at Sand Hill, near Wheeling, where he is buried. His wife was Nancy McCusky, and their children were: Rev. James M., Samuel, Mary, who married James McConn, Margaret, who became the wife of Samuel Steele, and Miss Amanda.

Rev. James M. Warden was one of the scholarly and able ministers of the Methodist Church in West Virginia for many years. He was born in Marshall County, this state, in 1836, graduated from an institution of higher education at West Alexander, Pennsylvania, and immediately entered the ministry, to which the rest of his life was devoted. He died at Grafton in 1918. He was a chaplain in the Union army during the Civil war, and was a member of the Masonic fraternity. His wife, Joanna C. Carmon, was a native of Pennsylvania, and died in Connecticut, but is buried at Grafton. The children of this good old couple were: Rev. William M., a Methodist minister of the New York East Conference; Dr. Alfred R.; S. Watson, chief clerk of the Hazel-Atlas Glass Company at Grafton; Frank R., a physician at Adamsville, Rhode Island; Nancy E., wife of William P. Hendrickson of Grafton; Cora, wife of W. E. Clayton, one of the chief clerks in the Baltimore & Ohio offices at Grafton; and Maud, wife of Edward Kelly, an automobile dealer at Buckhannon.

Alfred Reger Warden was born at Sand Hill, Marshall County, April 19, 1860, and his childhood was spent in the various towns and communities to which the duties of the ministry called his father. Consequently his early schooling was frequently interrupted. He graduated from the Moundsville High School at nineteen, did some teaching, took a course or two in West Virginia University, was for two years a student in Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, and in 1886 graduated in medicine from Western Reserve University at Cleveland. Doctor Warden performed his early professional services, continuing four years, in a mining community, at Malden in Kanawha County. From there he went to the State of Washington, and was located at Spokane Falls two years. Then, in 1893, he established his home at Grafton, and has been one of the busy professional men of that city for three decades. He has served as president of the Taylor County Medical Society, and is a member of the West Virginia State and American Medical Associations. For twenty years he has been on the staff of the Baltimore & Ohio surgeons.

Governor Dawson first delegated him with the responsibilities of membership on the State Board of Health, and he continued to serve through a period of twelve years, under the administrations of Governors Glasscock and Hatfield. He is the present health officer of Taylor County.

In seeking a standard of political action he did not depart from the ways of his family, and his first presidential vote went to James G. Blaine in 1884. He was chairman of the Taylor County Central Committee twelve years, a period marked by some warm and exciting contests, involving the political fortunes of some of the county's best known men. He has a long record of service as a delegate in conventions, and at state conventions came to know the national leaders contributed to the party by this state. He knew personally and regarded as very able men Stephen B. Elkins and his colleague in the United States Senate, N. B. Scott, and among his political friends of the present generation are Senator Southerland, Senator Davis Elkins and Harry Woodyard.

Doctor Warden is an official member of the Grafton Methodist Episcopal Church, and is a past master of Grafton Lodge No. 15, F. and A. M., a member of other Masonic bodies, including Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine. At Benwood, West Virginia, June 10, 1886, Doctor Warden married Miss Emma Laura Pelley, daughter of Squire A. L. and Mary A. (Morgan) Pelley. Of the three children born to their union a daughter, Rhea, died at Grafton, October 7, 1920, as the wife of Dr. C. F. McCuskey. The surviving son is a graduate of West Virginia University, served two years in the Medical Corps during the World war, is a graduate of Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, and is now an interne in the General Hospital at Allegheny, Pittsburgh.

CHARLES DUFFY FLOYD. The success which has crowned the efforts of Charles Duffy Floyd, of Clarksburg, clearly evidences the business skill, acumen and judgment of this individual, president of the Astron Oil Company, a producing concern. He has resided at Clarksburg since 1913. This is a utilitarian age, in which advancement and progress come by activity in the commercial and industrial interests of life. There is nothing to which America owes her pre-eminence among the nations of the earth more than to mineral products, and it has been in this field that L. Floyd has become one of the prominent men of his community.

Like many other men who have made their mark in the business world, Mr. Floyd is a product of agricultural West Virginia, having been born on a farm four miles east of Glenville, Gilmer County, October 10, 1885, a son of Jesse Lewis and Angellette (Stout) Floyd, both of whom were born in Braxton County, this state. The maternal grandparents were Thomas R. and Martha (Yerkey) Floyd, natives of the Old Dominion State and early settlers in Braxton County, where their son Jesse L. was born, reared and educated. Jesse L. Floyd adopted farming for his life work, and was engaged therein until the outbreak of the Spanish-American war when, with two of his sons, Ernie W. and Thomas W., the latter only fifteen years of age, enlisted for service in the United States Army. After receiving his honorable discharge Mr. Floyd resumed his farming activities, in which he continued to be occupied until his death in 1913, at the age of fifty-nine years. He was a man who was held in great respect and esteem in his community, and bore an unquestioned reputation as a man of straightforward dealing and much public spirit. Mr. Floyd's first wife died in 1896, leaving three sons: Ernie W., Thomas W. and Charles D. In 1902 Mr. Floyd married Evelyn Reed, and they became the parents of two children, Lucille and Jesse Lewis, Jr.

Charles Duffy was reared on the home farm and acquired his early education in the rural schools near by, his summer months being passed in assisting his father and brothers on the home place. Later he pursued a course in Glenville Normal School, from which he was graduated in 1908, going then to St. Albans, West Virginia, where he was principal of the school for one year. Next he entered West Virginia University and took a one-year literary course, then entering the law course and receiving his degree of Bachelor of Laws in 1912. He has never cared to engage in the practice of his profession and has not, therefore, applied for admission to the bar, but has found his legal knowledge very useful to him in his business affairs. Mr. Floyd had a brilliant college career, both in his studies and in a social way, as well as in athletics. He was admitted to the Tau Delta fraternity, was president of the Central West Virginia University Club at Clarksburg, and during the years 1910 and 1911 was a member of the varsity football team.

On leaving the university Mr. Floyd devoted five years to the real estate business at Clarksburg, where he has made his permanent home since February, 1913. In 1911 he engaged in the coal business as secretary and treasurer of the Fort Clark Coal Company, an office which he held for three years, and resigned from that post to become president of the Astron Oil Company, a producing concern operating in West Virginia, which was organized in 1920. This company has already extended its operations to great proportions, and under Mr. Floyd's able direction and management the business is showing a constant and healthful increase.

Mr. Floyd is a member of the Clarksburg Chamber of Commerce and the Kiwanis Club, is a thirty-second degree Mason, a Noble of the Mystic Shrine and a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He likewise holds membership in the Masonic Club, the Allegheny Club, the Cheat Mountain Club and the Oral Fishing Club, and has numerous friends in all these organizations.

EDWARD G. FEUERHERM is general manager of the William F. Mosser Company, engaged in the leather business in the City of Richmond, Nicholas County, where he is also a director of the First National Bank, with secure status as one of the representative business men of this vital and progressive little city.

Mr. Feuerherm was born at Newark, New Jersey, October 2, 1876, and is a son of Randolph and Bertha (Von roitsch) Feuerherm. He received his early education in the public schools of his native place, where also he attended the Newark, New Jersey, Technical School, and the New Jersey Business College after which he continued his studies in Marquette University at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, besides which he has taken special courses of study pertaining to the tanning and finishing of leather, especially paper and sole and glove leather. When he came to Richmond and first became associated with the William F. Fosser Company he remained here four years. He thereafter was in the employ of the great meat packing corporation of Morris & Company of Chicago, and when the nation became involved in the World war he returned to Richmond and became associated in the tanneries of the William F. Fosser Company, these local tanneries being the largest of the kind in the United States and he being now general manager of the same.

Mr. Feuerherm is a stalwart republican, and was active and influential in the affairs of the party while residing in the State of New York and also in the New England States. At Clarksburg, West Virginia, he is affiliated with the Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and he and his wife are communicants of the Catholic Church. The maiden name of Mrs. Feuerherm was Catherine R. Berry, and they have two daughters, Marie and Catherine, both having attended Mt. St. Joseph College in the City of Dubuque, Iowa.

HERBERT McCLELLAN COLEMAN, M. D., who is established in the general practice of his profession at Thacker, Mingo County, was born at Hurley, Buchanan County, Virginia, March 12, 1880, and he gained his early education principally in the public schools of West Virginia, where also he attended the Concord State Normal School at Athens. He next passed one year as a student in the law department of the University of West Virginia, and in 1901 was graduated in the law department of Southwest University at Jackson, Tennessee. He then engaged in the practice of law in his native county in Virginia, and there he was elected prosecuting attorney. He made an excellent record as a successful young lawyer, but his tastes and ambition led him soon to abandon the legal profession, resign his office of prosecuting attorney and turn his attention to the study of medicine. In 1904 he entered the medical department of the University of Louisville, Kentucky, and in this institution he was graduated in 1909, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He then became associated with Doctor Campbell in practice at Beckley, Raleigh County, West Virginia, and later he became contract physician in the service of the Norfolk & Western Railroad, in connection with construction work in double-tracking its line between War Eagle and Devon. The doctor established his residence at this time in the Village of Matewan, Mingo County, and in his general practice since that period he has continued his effective service as one of the able and representative physicians and surgeons of Mingo County. While in medical school he specialized in study of obstetrics and gynecology, but while having authoritative status in such connection he has gained specially high reputation as a skilled surgeon. In Mingo County he was associated in practice with Doctor Walden until the death of the latter, and Doctor Campbell is now his assistant. Doctor Coleman has the practice of the Thacker Coal & Coke Company, the Thacker Coal Mining Company, the Lynn Coal Company, the Alburn Coal Company, the Stone Mountain Coal Corporation, and is local surgeon for the Norfolk & Western Railroad. He gives professional supervision also in connection with the operations of the North Matewan Coal Company, of which he is president. During the recent mine troubles, when the Mingo County coal fields were being invaded by outsiders, Doctor Coleman shouldered his rifle and stood ready to protect the interests of the mine operators and their employees. He removed from Matewan to Thacker in the fall of 1921. Doctor Coleman is a member of the Mingo County Medical Society, the West Virginia State Medical Society, the Southern Medical Association and the American Medical Association. His political allegiance is given to the republican party, he and his wife are members respectively of the Presbyterian Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and in the Masonic fraternity he is affiliated with the Blue Lodge at Thacker, the Chapter and Commandery at Tazewell, Virginia, and the Consistory of the Scottish Rite in the City of Louisville, Kentucky. He is a member also of the lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks at Huntington.

January 14, 1911, recorded the marriage of Doctor Coleman and Miss Nell Lambert, daughter of E. H. Lambert, of Williamson, Mingo County, and the one child of this union is a son, Herbert McClellan Coleman, Jr.

Doctor Coleman is a son of Joseph and Armina (Stacey) Coleman, the former of whom died at Iellier, Pike County, Kentucky, in July, 1911, aged sixty-nine years, and the latter of whom likewise attained to the age of sixty-nine years, her death occurring in August, 1915.

Joseph Coleman was born and reared in Pike County, Kentucky, a representative of an old and influential family of that section of the Blue Grass State, and he was a gallant soldier of the Union in the Civil war, as a member of the Thirty-ninth Kentucky Mounted Infantry. His wife was born in Buchanan County, Virginia, and there he became a merchant at Hurley, as did he later at War Eagle in what is now Mingo County, West Virginia, whence he finally returned to his native county in Kentucky, where he passed the remainder of his life. He voted for Abraham Lincoln for President of the United States, and ever afterward continued his allegiance to the republican party. He was affiliated with the Grand Army of the Republic, and he and his wife were members of the Baptist Church. They became the parents of ten children, all of whom attained to years of maturity and seven of whom are now living (1922), Doctor Coleman of this review having been the eighth in order of birth.

THOMAS W. AYRES. The thriving little City of Richwood, Nicholas County, claims Mr. Ayres as one of its leading attorneys and counsellors at law, and the scope and importance of his practice indicates the popular estimate placed upon his professional ability and his sterling personal characteristics.

Mr. Ayres was born on a farm near Williamsburg, Greenbrier County, this state, October 7, 1884, and is a son of William D. and Margaret (McMillion) Ayres, the former of whom was born in Buckingham County, Virginia, May 10, 1834, and the latter of whom was born near Williamsburg, in what is now West Virginia. William D. Ayres became a resident of Nicholas County prior to the Civil war, and was one of the pioneer teachers in the schools of this county, he having continued his successful service as a teacher for many years and having also been a progressive exponent of farm industry, his wife having been a teacher in a private school prior to their marriage. Now venerable in years, this gracious and honored pioneer couple still reside on their fine old homestead farm near Williamsburg, he being a member of the Baptist and she of the Methodist Episcopal Church. For forty years William D. Ayres served as a member of the Board of Teachers' Examiners for Greenbrier County, and he held also the office of deputy county assessor, while he was active in the local councils of the democratic party. Of the three children, Thomas W. of this review, is the youngest; Kate is the wife of Remus McMillion; and John M. is auditor for the White Springs Company, the corporation which has control of the historic old health and pleasure resort at White Sulphur Springs, West Virginia.

The childhood and early youth of Thomas W. Ayres were compassed by the activities and influences of the old home farm, and that he profited fully by the advantages of the public schools of his native county is assured in the statement that for ten years he was a successful teacher in the public schools, in the meantime advancing his own education along higher academic lines. In consonance with his ambition and well formulated plans he finally entered the law department of Cumberland University, in which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. He was admitted to the bar in Nicholas County, and for ten years thereafter was engaged in successful practice at Summersville, the county seat. He then removed to the important little industrial city of Richmond, this county, where he is now a member of the representative law firm of Wolvorton & Ayres, which has specially high standing at the bar of Nicholas County.

Mr. Ayres is a staunch advocate of the principles of the democratic party, he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in the Masonic fraternity he is a past master of Summersville Lodge No. 76, A. F. & A. M.; and affiliated with Richmond Chapter No. 27, R. A. M.; Sutton Commandery No. 16, Knights Templar; and with Beni-Kedem Temple of the Mystic Shrine in the City of Charleston. He is also a past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias.

December 24, 1918, recorded the marriage of Mr. Ayres and Miss Maude S. Ryder, who graduated from the West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buckhannon, and who was a popular teacher in that institution prior to her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Ayres have one child, Mary M., born May 31, 1921.

FRANK STONE is actively identified with one of the important business enterprises in the City of Richmond, Nicholas County, where he is bookkeeper for the Richwood Store Company. He was born at Linden, Roane County, West Virginia, September 4, 1892, and is a son of Lewis P. and Viola (Looney) Stone, both likewise natives of that county, where the former was born in 1856 and the latter in 1860. The father is the owner of a fine farm property of 350 acres in Roane County, not far distant from productive oil fields in that county. He is a democrat, is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, and he and his wife hold membership in the Seventh Day Adventist Church. Of the eight children the eldest is Harry, who is engaged in the sawmill business at Clay Court House, Clay County; Sallie, who is the wife of H. A. Lawrence, was graduated in one of the state normal schools of West Virginia and was a popular teacher prior to her marriage; Samuel is a progressive farmer in Roane County; John B. is bookkeeper for the Elk Lick Coal Company at Richwood; Frank, of this sketch, was next in order of birth; and Nell, Mary and Kate remain at the parental home.

Frank Stone was reared on the home farm and gained his preliminary education in the local schools, after which he continued his studies in the high school for three years and became a successful teacher in the rural schools of his native county. In 1912 he came to Richwood and became a clerk for the Richwood Store Company. After the lapse of three years he became manager of one of the Richwood company's stores in Webster County, where he remained two years. Since that time he has held the position of bookkeeper for the Richwood Store Company. His political support is given to the democratic party. He is secretary of Richwood Lodge No. 122, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, besides being affiliated with Richwood Chapter No. 37, Royal Arch Masons, Sutton Commandery No. 16, Knights Templar, and is a Shriner, a member of Beni-Kedem Temple at Charleston.

The year 1917 recorded the marriage of Mr. Stone and Miss Velma Wilson, who graduated from high school and the training school for nurses at Buckhannon, and was in active service as a trained nurse for one year prior to her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Stone have two children: Jeanette and Allen.

HON. HARRY ALLEN DOWNS. Berkeley County became the home of the Downs family during the eighteenth century, and many of its descendants are now within this and adjoining states. One of them is Harry Allen Downs of Martinsburg, a prominent lawyer, a representative in the Legislature, and a recognized leader in the affairs of the Eastern Panhandle. The earlier generations of the family were pioneer farmers, and did their part in transforming the wilderness into a landscape of beauty and culture. Harry Allen Downs represents the fourth successive generation of the family in what is now Berkeley County.

His great-grandfather was Charles Downs, who erected the first flour mill in what was then Northern Virginia, located at Falling Waters, Berkeley County. The only transportation facilities then available were by wagon trail, and, later, the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal, which proved an outlet for his products to the eastern markets. Charles Downs was born in the latter part of the eighteenth century, not long after the Revolutionary war. He became one of the largest land owners in Berkeley County. He died in the seventy-sixth year of his age at the old Downs homestead at Falling Waters.

His son Davenport Downs, who was born at Falling Waters in Berkeley County in 1826, after attaining his majority married Miss Ann LeFevre, and they removed to the State of Iowa, where he engaged in farming until his death in 1886. His wife, Ann, died in 1856, at the birth of her second son, Joseph Allen Downs.

Joseph Allen Downs was born at his father's Iowa homestead in Wapello County, and soon afterward his father took the motherless child back East and he was put in the care of Miss Mary Cookus, on the farm of a relative, Say Van Metre, in Berkeley County. Here Joseph Allen Downs was reared, attending the public schools of the county and graduating from Hyde's Seminary in Martinsburg. He well remembered as a successful teacher, and for five years prior to his death, on April 19, 1901, was principal of the Fifth Ward schools of Martinsburg.

The wife of Joseph Allen Downs was Caroline Jeannette Evans, daughter of Tilletson Evans, a farmer of Berkeley County, whose name introduces another interesting pioneer family of this section. Tilletson was a son of James Evans, one of the first settlers in the state and an Indian fighter. James Evans put up a fort or blockade against the Indians at what was known as Big Spring in Berkeley County. On one occasion, when the settlement was attacked by Indians, the men folk being away, the women sought safety in the blockade and Polly Evans, a daughter of James, began beating a drum, which frightened the Indians, causing them to flee and, thereby, saving the unmarried women from death. Tilletson Evans married Mary Ann Orr. To this union were born three children: James A. B. Evans, Emma Virginia and Caroline Jeannette. James W. B. Evans died in 1919, survived by his widow, Moll Ourett Evans, and six children, all of whom reside in Berkeley County. Emma Virginia Evans was married to George Davenport Swinley, who died at Martinsburg in 1921, having survived by his widow and one daughter, now the wife of Russell S. Sperow. Caroline Jeannette, who became the wife of Joseph Allen Downs, survives with three children: William Smith, Harry Allen and Mary Ethel.

William Smith Downs was born at Martinsburg in 1888, attended public schools in that city, graduating from the high school in 1901, and immediately entered West Virginia University at Morgantown, graduating in 1905 with the degree Bachelor of Science in Civil Engineering. Following his graduation he was for two years in the service of the Bolivian Government of South America in railroad building. Then, returning to the United States, he located at Kingwood, West Virginia, and engaged as engineer for the Pittsburgh Hydro Electric Company in water power enterprises. At this time he is division engineer for the State Road Commission of West Virginia, with headquarters at Morgantown. He married Miss Nellie Jane A. Bright, of Kingwood, and they have three children. The are members of the Presbyterian Church.

Mary Ethel Downs, who was born at Martinsburg, August 20, 1894, graduated from the Martinsburg High School in 1913, and subsequently from Randolph-Macon Woman's College at Lynchburg, Virginia, with the A. B. degree. She was married to Edgar Sites, now connected with the Sheandoah Valley Bank & Trust Company of Martinsburg. They have two children and are members of the Lutheran Church.

HON. HARRY ALLEN DOWNS, whose record is now taken up, was born at Martinsburg, February 14, 1886. As a boy there he attended the public schools, graduating from high school in 1905, and in 1907 received his LL. B. degree from the Law School of West Virginia University. Since his education in law he has been engaged in practice at Martinsburg, with offices in the People's Trust Building. While a college Mr. Downs was a member of the Beta Theta Pi fraternity, a member of the Delta Chi law fraternity, and Beta Nu Epsilon, cap sheet of great fraternities. He played on the varsity baseball team for three years and on the football team three years. He was also treasurer of the graduating law class.

During his professional career Mr. Downs has made an enviable record in various offices of trust and responsibility. From 1911 to 1913 he was congressional committeeman, representing the republican party of Berkeley County in the second district. He was his party's nominee for state's attorney in 1912 and in 1916, being defeated at both elections by close margins. In January, 1913, he was appointed United States commissioner for the Northern District of West Virginia by the Hon. Alston G. Peyton, then judge of the United States Court, for a term of four years. In 1917 he was reappointed for a second term, and he discharged the duties of this responsible office through two terms until January, 1921. In the meantime, from 1913 to 1921, he served as solicitor for the City of Martinsburg under the administrations of Dr. H. G. Tonn and C. M. Seibert as mayor. Mr. Downs was nominee of his party for the House of Delegates in 1920, and led the county legislative ticket at the elections. During the 1921 session he received assignment to six committees, including the committee on judiciary, and his service was marked by the closest attention to the important program of legislation before the committees and also before the house as a whole.

Mr. Downs is a past exalted ruler of Martinsburg Lodge No. 778, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is a past state officer of the West Virginia Elks Reunion Association. He is a member of Robert White Lodge No. 67, F. and A. M., at Martinsburg, is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and a member of Osiris Temple of the Mystical Shrine.

Outside of his profession he is prominently identified with people culture in the Panhandle. He is a director and secretary of the Shepherdstown Light & Water Company and a director of the Hodges-Lemen Company, grain exporters. In August, 1920, Mr. Downs married Mrs. Ethel Boyer Lemen, widow of David Lemen, of Shepherdstown, and they have one daughter, Harriett Aileen, born November 9, 1921. They are members of the Presbyterian Church.

CHARLES WALKER FERGUSON, prosecuting attorney of Wayne County, is one of the able young attorneys of this section, and one who has a brilliant future before him. Coming of a long line of honorable ancestors, he has always felt obligated to live up to the best traditions of his family, and is an honor to his name and to Wayne. He is a veteran of the World war, in which he made an admirable record as an instructor, and in every respect he measures up to the highest standards of American citizenship. Mr. Ferguson was born in Wayne County, West Virginia, December 30, 1892, a son of Lucian and Fannie P. (Ferguson) Ferguson, both natives of Wayne County.

Lucian Ferguson was a merchant and farmer, and one of the leading men of Wayne County. He belonged to one of the pioneer families of the South, all of the members of which served in the Confederate army, and, further back, some bearing the name were Revolutionary soldiers. The paternal grandfather of Attorney Ferguson was Lieut. Sam J. Ferguson, of Company K, Sixteenth Virginia Infantry; and Judge Jimison Ferguson, an uncle of Lucian Ferguson, was colonel of this same regiment of the Confederate army. Mrs. Lucian Ferguson had two uncles in the army. John Ferguson was one, and he was killed in the battle of Gettysburg, and Harvey Ferguson, who was the other, was killed in Tennessee, and both were in the Confederate service. The family of Ferguson came into this region immediately succeeding the termination of the American Revolution, or in 1787, having served throughout that conflict, and settled about one mile north of Wayne. One of the Fergusons, known as "Pothead" Jim Ferguson, lived south of Wayne. He was noted for being the best shoemaker in the county, and while making shoes, studied law, and in time became the leading lawyer of his state. He framed the first code of laws for the State of West Virginia, was a member of the first constitutional convention of the state, and also a member of the State Legislature. The paternal grandfather of Charles Walker Ferguson, Charles W. Ferguson, was also a member of the constitutional convention. "Pothead" Ferguson died at Charleston, West Virginia, where through his efforts the capitol of the state was located.

Charles Walker Ferguson was educated in the public schools of Wayne County, Oakview Academy, a private school conducted by T. B. McClure, Marshall College for four years, and the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, where he secured his degree of Bachelor of Arts and his degree of Doctor of Laws, being graduated from the law department in 1915. Admitted to the bar at Morgantown that same year, he began the practice of his profession, and in the fall of 1916 was elected prosecuting attorney of Wayne County, to which office he was re-elected in 1920.

In May, 1918, Mr. Ferguson enlisted in the United States army for service during the World war, and was sent to the Officers' Training Camp at Camp Taylor, Kentucky, Field Artillery, and was commissioned a second lieutenant. After six months at Camp Lee he was sent to Camp Taylor, Kentucky, as an instructor of the Officers' Central Training Camp, and remained there until the close of the war, receiving his discharge in December, 1918. He is still a member of the Officers' Reserve Corps. Returning to Wayne, he resumed the practice of law and his official duties as prosecuting attorney. Although one of the youngest men in the state to hold so responsible an office, he is one of the most fearless, and those who appreciate his ability declare that he will be heard of in state affairs before long.

In November, 1919, Mr. Ferguson married Miss Shirley Burgess, a daughter of J. B. and Eria (Garrett) Burgess. Mr. Burgess is a farmer and merchant. Mr. Ferguson belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He is a Blue Lodge, Chapter, Knight Templar and Shriner Mason, and belongs to the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Junior Order United American Mechanics, subordinate order of Odd Fellows, and the Uniformed Order of Encampment of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, the American Legion, the Wayne County Bar Association, the West Virginia State Bar Association and the American Bar Association, and is active in all of these organizations. Mr. Ferguson is very proud of his family, and takes pleasure in tracing back his ancestry, not only in this country but in the old world, for the Fergusons are of honorable descent, of Scotch-Irish origin. Possessed of a striking and pleasing personality, Mr. Ferguson possesses the ability to make warm friends and to hold them close. As a lawyer he is logical, competent and resourceful; as a public official he is brave, alert and upright; and as a citizen he is zealous in discharging his responsibilities, and aiding in furthering the best interests of his city, county, state and country.

WILL H. PETERS. One of the most important advances made of recent years in this country is the growth of the sentiment that too much stress cannot be laid upon the necessity for securing for the children the best educational opportunities possible, for as they are trained during their formative period so will they develop in later life. This sentiment has produced the demand for educators of ability and thorough training, and Wayne County is fortunate in having in its office of county superintendent of schools a man of the caliber of Will H. Peters, a very interesting and efficient young educator, devoted to his work, popular alike with the parents and pupils, and capable of obtaining from his teachers a whole-souled co-operation which is working out for a wonderful advancement. He comes of one of the old Virginian families, of Irish descent, on his mother's side, and of substantial Dutch ancestry on his father's, and was born in Wayne County, December 31, 1884.

The parents of Professor Peters, William D. and Tennie (Vinson) Peters, were both born in Kentucky, and members of both the Peters and Vinson families served in the American Revolution. William D. Peters was a timberman, logging in the timber regions in his younger years, and later on in life became a farmer of Wayne County. During the time of war between the North and the South he espoused the cause of the Confederacy, and served during the entire war in Company K, Eighth Virginia Infantry. He was wounded at the battle of Piedmont, but recovered and rejoined his regiment. Professor Peters' grandfather Vinson was colonel of this same regiment, and a man of large affairs, his name being associated with much of the history of his section.

Growing up in Wayne County, Professor Peters attended its schools and took his normal course at Marshall College, from which he was graduated in 1912 with a teacher's certificate. From then on he was connected with educational work in Wayne County, teaching at different points, and acting as principal of the schools at Fort Gray until in 1918 he was elected county superintendent of schools for a term of four years, and took charge of his office in July, 1919.

In 1907 Professor Peters married at Louisa, Kentucky, Miss Nora D. Frazier, a daughter of James and Virginia (Ferguson) Frazier, both natives of West Virginia and farming people. Professor and Mrs. Peters have five daughters, namely: Virginia, Anna Mayne, Hazel, Minnie Lou and Josephine, all of whom are at home. He belongs to the Christian Church, and finds in its creed the expression of his religious faith. A Mason, he has been advanced through the Chapter and is going on with the work, and he also belongs to the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Knights of Pythias. Not only is Professor Peters a born instructor, he is an organizer as well, and is able to conduct the affairs of his office in a systematic manner, and to secure the services of teachers who are helpful and enthusiastic with regard to their work. Through both precept and example he has awakened a local pride in the pupils, and the different schools vie with each other in raising the standard of education in this locality, with most gratifying results.

BOSS C. BROMFIELD. The office of sheriff is a very important one at all times and in any community, but at present, when the country is still in the throes of the reconstruction period, there is great need for the services of men of iron nerve, integrity of character and firm determination to enforce the law and maintain order. The people of Wayne County feel that they have just that kind of a man in their present sheriff, Boss C. Bromfield, whose election to this office in November, 1920, was viewed with alarm by the lawless element in this region.

Boss C. Bromfield was born in Wayne County, November 14, 1886, a son of Boss C. and Parlice (Davis) Bromfield, both natives of West Virginia. The father was a farmer for a number of years, and also served for four years as jailor of Wayne County, was a member of the Board of Education, and always took an active and effective part in public affairs.

Growing up in his native county, Boss C. Bromfield, the younger, attended its common schools, Oakview Academy, a private school conducted by Professor McClure, and completing his studies when he was twenty-one years old, began his practical training as a fireman for the Norfolk & Western Railroad. After serving on an engine for about four and one-half years he went into the roundhouse at Kenova, West Virginia, for eighteen months. Severing his connection with the railroad, Mr. Bromfield went to work in a coal mine, and had charge of the pumps there. His father requiring his services on the homestead, Mr. Bromfield joined him, and for some years was engaged in farming. In November, 1920, he was the successful candidate of his party for sheriff, taking charge of the office the subsequent January, and already by his fearlessness and efficiency he has justified the support given him. It is his determination to make a record for himself as sheriff, to show no favor, but to see that everyone is given a fair deal.

On May 2, 1910, Sheriff Bromfield married at Catlettsburg, Kentucky, Miss Margaret Ferguson, a daughter of Anthony Wayne and Margaret (Ferguson) Ferguson, both natives of Wayne County. Mr. Ferguson is with the 1st Iowa, West Virginia, shops of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. Sheriff and Mrs. Bromfield have five children, namely: Wetzel, Carlton, Pat, Jewell and L. K. The family belong to the Baptist Church. Fraternally maintains membership with the Knights of Pythias, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Woodmen of the World. He is very proud of his family, which comes old Virginia stock, of Irish descent.

HEZEKIAH ADKINS. Wayne County affords a number of examples of self-reliant men, who entirely through their own exertions and ability have risen to positions of trust and responsibility in their community, and none is more worthy of mention than that afforded by the career of Hezekiah Adkins, county clerk of Wayne County and a man who during the many years he has been before the public has displayed a willingness to render the best service in his power, and to safeguard the interests of the taxpayers.

Mr. Adkins comes of old Virginia stock, of Scotch and Irish descent, and was born in Cabell County, West Virginia, July 13, 1867, a son of Jesse and Elizabeth (Stanley) Adkins, both natives of West Virginia. Jesse Adkins was a farmer and blacksmith, and followed both occupations in Cabell and Wayne counties. During the war between the two sections of the country he served in the Union army under Colonel Mimms, of Kentucky, and probably was a Kentucky regiment. He followed his trade while in the service, and while under orders helping to move a push boat that was being repaired he was caught and his foot at the lower part of his leg were crushed, resulting in his being permanently crippled. Through some mistake he did not receive his discharge from the army until 1896, when he applied to Washington for a pension, at which time this oversight was discovered. When the matter was looked up, it was given an honorable discharge. His death occurred in Wayne County in 1900.

Hezekiah Adkins was reared in Cabell and Wayne counties, and attended their public schools, but not after he passed his eighteenth birthday, for he then began surveying with his uncle, Winchester Adkins, with whom he learned to be an expert, and for twenty-seven years followed a general surveying business, during this time serving as county surveyor for four years, 1896-1900, and for the entire period also conducting his farm in Wayne County. In 1900 he was appointed deputy sheriff, which office he held until 1904, when he was made county engineer. In 1911 Mr. Adkins was appointed assistant clerk of the Circuit Court, later was made assistant clerk of Wayne County, and in 1920 was elected county clerk of the county and took office in January, 1921. During his long public service he has constantly proved his fidelity to high standards, and his service has been entirely satisfactory in every respect.

On February 25, 1886, Mr. Adkins married Florie Adkins, a daughter of Jacob and Eliza Adkins, farming people. Mr. and Mrs. Adkins became the parents of the following children: Eliza, who married M. J. Mills, of Kenova, West Virginia, has the following children, Armild Florida, Wilson and Varney; Pleasant, who married Miss Frankie Bing, of Wayne, has three children, Bessie, Mert, and Jay; Jesse, who is deputy county clerk, married Miss Ruby Gose, of Wayne, and they have two children, Ruth and Howard; Strawhorne, who married Miss Blanch Torn, has five children, Virginia, Hazel, Bernard, Beldon and Elouise; Cassie, who married Alden Toney, of Wayne, has five children, Clyde, A. G., Louise, Nann and Arma; Cero, who is at school at Valparaiso, Indiana, enlisted for service during the late war from a school he was attending at Berea, Kentucky, but the armistice was signed before he was sent overseas; and Raleigh, Paris, Wiley, Ashbury, Mable and Hezekiah, who are at home; and one who has deceased. Mr. Adkins is not connected with any religious organization, but his wife is a member of the United Baptist Church, and Cassie, Paris and Ashbury belong to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Fraternally Mr. Adkins maintains membership with the Masons, in which er he has been advanced through the Chapter, and with Knights of Pythias. It has been the rule of his life to do well whatever came to his hand, and this policy has aided in his advancement and enrollment in the confidence of his fellow citizens.

THOMAS MARTIN TURNER has been an energetic factor in the business life of Martinsburg for a long period of years, and represents one of the oldest families in the East-Panhandle of West Virginia.

He was born on a farm seven miles southwest of Charles town, in Jefferson County, and is a direct descendant of Thomas Turner, a native of Wales, a staunch Royalist who out the time of Charles I fled from England to the American colonies and eventually settled in the western wilds of Virginia, in what is now Jefferson County, West Virginia. He had three sons, and some of his land was inherited by son Anthony Thomas, who was born in Virginia. The next generation was represented by Thomas Turner, grandfather of Thomas Martin Turner. This Thomas Turner was born in the same locality as his father, inherited some of the old homestead, operated with slave labor and spent his life on the farm. He married Nancy Rush, a native of England or of English parentage. They reared five sons and two daughters, named Anthony, Ehud, Robert, John, Thomas, Jane and Ann.

Of these Anthony Turner was born at the old homestead three and a half miles west of Shepherdstown, and was sixteen years of age when his father died, at which time he left school to superintend the farm. When the estate was sold he bought a place southwest of Charles Town, here his son Thomas M. was born. This farm was sold in 1868, and he then removed to Martinsburg, where he continued in business a number of years and died April 27, 1897, aged eighty years twenty-seven days. His wife was Harriet Pitzer, who was born southwest of Martinsburg, in Berkeley County, daughter of Martin and Rachel (Bowers) Pitzer, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of Berkeley County. Harriet Turner died in 1882, the mother of eight children: Rachel Ann, who married James H. Smith; Mrs. Ella Rose Brillhart; Downie V., who became the wife of John H. Carothers; Thomas Martin; James; A. D.; William L. H.; and George W. The father of these children was always deeply interested in educational affairs, served as a school commissioner, was a staunch whig and Union man and later a republican, and a member of the Presbyterian Church.

Thomas Martin Turner acquired a good public school education during his youth, and at the age of seventeen he began his apprenticeship at the marble cutter's trade. After his apprenticeship he worked as a journeyman five years, and then for two years was a partner in marble works at Martinsburg. Having sold out to his partner he removed to Cincinnati, but after eight months of employment there returned and bought his present business and still continues the marble works as his chief interest.

At the age of twenty-seven Mr. Turner married Miss Ella McElroy, who was born at Harpers Ferry, West Virginia, daughter of William and Emily McElroy. Mrs. Turner died in 1911. Mr. Turner is affiliated with Equality Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M., Lebanon Chapter No. 2, R. A. M., Palestine Commandery No. 2, K. T., and was created a Noble of the Mystic Shrine October 16, 1912, in Osiris Temple at Wheeling. He is a past grand high priest of the Grand Royal Arch Chapter of West Virginia, a past eminent commander of Palestine Commandery, and has served as high priest of the Most Excellent Grand Royal Arch Chapter of Royal Arch Masons in West Virginia. Mr. Turner has been a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church since 1876, and has filled the offices of steward and trustee and has been a member of the choir since 1874.

CHARLES W. EDELEN, though member of one of the oldest and most substantial agricultural families of Wood County, left the farm in young manhood and chose the commercial field. For thirty years or more he has been prominent as a hardware merchant, banker, and in other lines of business at Parkersburg.

His ancestor and one of the pioneers of Wood County was Robert Edelen, a farmer who located on Washington Bottom, opposite Blennerhassett Island. Besides several daughters he and his wife had two sons, Benjamin and John. The son John married Mary Tims, and one of their children is William Tims Edelen of Parkersburg.

Benjamin Edelen married Susan Clark and fell heir to the old Edelen homestead at the upper end of Washington Bottom, where he lived and practiced the arts of farm husbandry throughout his life. His children, all born in the old homestead and all now deceased, were: Sarah, Mrs. Elias Booher; Anna, Mrs. Frank Miller; Delos Marcellus; and Stephen Wallace.

Delos Marcellus Edelen was born November 22, 1836. He had the advantages of the farm youth of his period, and practically his entire career was devoted to farming, though for a short time he was a merchant at Lubeck. During the Civil war he was an avowed Confederate in sympathies, was a reserve officer and trained men for the army. He died June 14, 1887. His life was one of useful effort, and he was well known and respected for his sterling honesty and integrity. He married Elizabeth Smith, whose father, Robert Smith, was also an old time citizen of Wood County. She died January 24, 1913. Of her four children two died in infancy and those surviving are Charles W. and Sarah L.

Charles W. Edelen was born in the same locality as his father and grandfather, on June 13, 1865. He acquired his education there, fitted himself for farm duties, but the year following his father's death moved into Parkersburg and began work as a clerk in the hardware store of W. H. Smith Hardware Company. He has been continuously identified with that business ever since and is now vice president and manager of the corporation, one of the leading hardware houses of the city. Mr. Edelen is also vice president of the Parkersburg Transfer & Storage Company, is vice president of the Union Merchandise Company, a director of the Central Bank & Trust Company and director of the Exchange Building Association. Mr. Edelen has been a faithful member of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for thirty years, is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and is a democrat.

April 11, 1889, he married Lena L. Leachman. She died in January, 1910. October 13, 1919, he married Miss Ruth Kilton Caldwell. Mr. Edelen by his first marriage had seven children: Barbara, wife of Fred Perkins; Charles Brooks, living in Cleveland, Ohio; John Richard; Eugene Elliott; Rama May, a student in Ohio State University; Elizabeth; and Isabel.

Three of his sons had army records. Charles Brooks was in the aviation service as an instructor at Grand Rapids, Michigan. John Richard enlisted before he was twenty-one in the hospital branch, was promoted from time to time, became pharmacist's mate in the navy, and most of his time was spent overseas. He had charge of the pharmaceutical department of the fleet that laid the mines for the allies in the North Sea. He is still in the navy, and is stationed in France (1921) in government work. The third son, Eugene Elliott, was born March 18, 1899, and was barely eighteen when he enlisted, being assigned to the medical department of the navy. He made fourteen trips across the ocean on vessels conveying troops. He is now in the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, and is stationed at Dayton, Ohio.

WILLIAM J. DAVIDSON, M. D. West Virginia lost one of its ablest surgeons in the death of William J. Davidson of Parkersburg. Highly skilled in that branch of his profession, Dr. Davidson used his talents for the benefit of humanity. His was a professional career singularly dedicated to service. While he was the last of this branch of the family, there were hundreds and perhaps thousands who mourned his untimely death as a personal and irreparable loss.

His father, Curtis Davidson, was born in Taylor County,

West Virginia, in 1837, and spent his entire life there, dying in 1904, at the age of sixty-seven. Against adverse conditions he achieved honor and success, growing up on his father's farm, acquiring a common school education, and as a young man teaching in district school. In a community where partisanship divided neighbors and relatives against each other, at the time of the war he espoused the Union cause and became a private in Company C of the Third Virginia Volunteer Infantry. He rose to the rank of lieutenant and was a captain when the war closed. He was in some of the great battles and campaigns of the struggle. After the war he resumed farming in Taylor County. He married Abbie Fleming, daughter of Maj. J. C. Fleming. Their three children were: William J.; John N., who died June 13, 1899; and Lucy, who died in infancy.

William J. Davidson was born on the home farm in Flemington May 29, 1867. He attended the public schools and West Virginia College at Flemington. He had the routine of a farm experience, and left the farm to form a partnership with his cousin, J. W. Davidson, the firm W. J. and J. W. Davidson conducting a mercantile establishment at Webster in Taylor County. Two years later their stock was removed to Flemington and consolidated with another business, subsequently conducted as H. P. Davidson & Company. William J. Davidson after about a year of experience as a merchant determined to prepare himself for a medical career, and at the age of twenty-two entered Louisville Medical College, graduating three years later. He also attended the Atlanta Medical College and for two years was in the New York Polyclinic, the greater part of that time being house surgeon of the Polyclinic Hospital. For a year he was special assistant to Dr. John F. Wyeth, founder and president of the New York Polyclinic Hospital. In 1898 Doctor Davidson began his professional work at Parkersburg, and some five years later went abroad and supplemented his personal skill and experience in surgery by attending instruction and clinics conducted by famous English surgeons of London, and also traveled widely over the Continent. Doctor Davidson was chief surgeon of St. Joseph's Hospital at Parkersburg, and few surgeons had such uniform success in their practice. He was a member of the American Medical Association, the County and State Medical societies, and Governor Hatfield appointed him a member of the Public Health Council of the state, in which department he served from April 1, 1913, to June 30, 1917. Governor E. F. Morgan again appointed him for a term of four years, beginning July 1, 1921. Governor Cornwall made him a member of "the court of last resort," whose chief function was to determine questions affecting men in the draft during the World war. Doctor Davidson was a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, a member of Nemesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine, but social organizations and activities could count on only a nominal participation from a man so thoroughly devoted to his professional work. He was unmarried. Perhaps the one hobby he indulged was the collection of weapons, ancient and modern, from all lands, and he spent much time and money in accumulating an arsenal said to be the finest collection of the kind in West Virginia.

Doctor Davidson was in the full tide of his working strength and efficiency when, following a visit to his old home in Taylor County and what he regarded as an insignificant bruise on a finger, blood poison set in, and in spite of all specialists could do he died at Parkersburg July 13, 1921. His was a life that touched and benefitted the entire community, and for that reason it thoroughly deserved the praise and tribute bestowed in the words of the following editorial taken from the Parkersburg News:

"Big of heart, big of body, big of brain, benevolent and beloved, possessing that rarest of all gifts, personality, Dr. William Johnston Davidson, one of the princes of the earth, an idol of the people of Parkersburg and for miles around on both sides of the Ohio River, has passed on to that 'bourne from which no traveler returneth,' and in his passing this city and the profession of which he was an honored member sustains a loss that will be long felt through all time.

"Not only will residents in the upper walks of life miss Dr. Davidson because of his association, but the loss will be particularly heavy on those in the lower classes, whom he ministered in his profession. None were too low for him to attend, and his deeds of benevolence and goodness, of which few knew, run into thousands of cases, which the persons cared for owe their lives and health to his ministrations.

"Doctor Davidson was an idealist with a philanthropic mind. When known he impressed his friends with his ability to give life and pay any price to do this for the benefit of humanity. The impression would be given that he was too thorough to be far wrong in a premise, and too fundamentally truthful to deceive others or himself.

"No review of his splendid life will be attempted here. It would not be possible, justly, to appreciate the achievements in charitable aid to suffering humanity which he gave. But knowledge of his good Samaritanism, embalmed in the hearts of the people of this community and will live forever."

HON. WILLIAM SCOTT JOHN. Quoting a recent editor in the Wheeling Intelligencer, "Mr. John is one of the younger men who have come conspicuously to the front in the public affairs of this state. A native of West Virginia, educated in the state and familiar with many of its public questions, he has rendered very conspicuous service and has made a record for clear thinking, earnest endeavor and sincere purpose. In the two sessions of the Legislature in which Mr. John has served, he was one of the most valuable members of the House of Delegates, not only on account of his intelligence and industry, but also on account of his high conception of public duty and his clear understanding of economic questions. In the passage of a number of bills of particular value to the whole people of West Virginia, Mr. John contributed perhaps more than any other member of the last two legislative sessions."

Mr. John represents an old family of Monongalia County. He was born in Cass District of that county, Janua 10, 1878, son of Lemuel N. and Julia A. (Boyers) John. His mother was born in Grant District of that county in 1843, daughter of Morgan L. Boyers. The paternal grandfather was Thomas John, likewise a native of Monongalia County. Lemuel John and wife have been substantial farming people in Monongalia County all their lives. Lemuel was born in Union District May 5, 1843, and his wife still live on their farm, at the age of seventy-eight.

William Scott John graduated A. B. from the University of West Virginia in 1900, received his LL. B. degree with the class of 1902, and during 1902-03, while starting his practice at Morgantown, was also an instructor in law at the university. During the past fifteen years he has been rated as one of the ablest members of the Morgantown bar, and is also extensively interested in agriculture and in coal production.

Mr. John served as assistant clerk of the West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals during 1903-05. He was elected a member of the West Virginia Legislature in 1916, and was re-elected in 1918, on the republican ticket. He was minority floor leader in the session of 1917, and was majority floor leader in 1919. He was a member of the committees of the judiciary, railroads, privileges and elections and Virginia debt. He was author of the bill enacted by the Legislature in May, 1917, noted as the first compulsory work law in America. Many other states during the war followed the example of West Virginia in this legislation. He was also author of House Bill No. 104, enacted by the Legislature in February, 1919, making it unlawful to display any red flag or other emblem hostile to the constitution and laws of the state or the United States. He also introduced and sponsored House Bill No. 59, known as the "Steppe" Gas Bill, based on the principle that the state has the right to control her natural sources in the interests of her citizens and extending the power of the Public Service Commission to fix rates on other regulations to comply with this principle. Perhaps the measure most prominently associated with him is Base Bill No. 30, which levies a privilege tax on all natural gas companies. He was the leader in promoting this measure through the regular and extra sessions of the Legislature, and his leadership in the House was largely responsible for its passage. The validity of this measure has since been tested in the State Supreme Court of Appeals. Mr. John was chosen as special counsel for the state in defending the constitutionality of the "Steptoe" act before the United States Supreme Court, where the case was still pending in the summer of 1921. In 1920 Mr. John was a candidate for Congress from the Second District of West Virginia, but was not elected, this being his first campaign for the office.

During the World War Mr. John was chairman of the Bankers Bureau for Monongalia County, and was county chairman for the Third Liberty Loan drive. For a number of years he served as city solicitor of Morgantown. He was president and a director of the Mapleton Coal Company, director and secretary of the Rosedale Coal Company and also of the Blue Flame Fuel Company. For the past 15 years he has been secretary of the Morgantown District School Board, is a member of the County and State Bar associations, belongs to the Old Colony Club, a fraternal organization, and is a member of Morgantown Union Lodge No. 4, A. F. and A. M. He is a Presbyterian. December 17, 1902, Mr. John married Mary Estelle Cox, daughter of Dr. James A. Cox of Morgantown.

LEWIS NATHAN. Parkersburg honors the name of Nathan because of its long association with the mercantile business and also because of the integrity and generosity that have been consistent facts in the character of the family.

The late Lewis Nathan was one of the city's most successful merchants, and fully earned the fine esteem he enjoyed. He was born in Baltimore, Maryland, son of Isaac Nathan, a native of England. When about twelve years of age Lewis Nathan went to Wheeling, West Virginia, and for several years was employed as a clerk in the clothing store of Stein Brothers, his relatives. In the early 1850s Stein Brothers sent him to Parkersburg to establish a branch store. Parkersburg was then without a railroad, and this section of country was still part of old Virginia. After a year or so Lewis Nathan sold the business at Parkersburg and returned to Wheeling, later conducted a store at Washington, D. C., but in the early '60s returned to Parkersburg permanently. From that time forward he was in the retail clothing and shoe business until his retirement. He was a man of marked individuality in his personal characteristics, but these never detracted from his business integrity, his honesty and his influence as a good citizen. He possessed high ideals, and life meant more to him than an opportunity for material gain. Above all he appreciated his American citizenship and taught his children to honor and respect their birthright. In race he was a Jew, but was liberal and tolerant of other religions, was charitable and contributed without ostentation to many objects. He died November 1, 1914, preceded by his wife many years. Her maiden name was Frances Davis. Of their children, Ben, Samuel and Clara, the only one now living is Ben Nathan.

Mr. Ben Nathan, a Parkersburg merchant, was born in that city August 13, 1866. As a boy he learned the trade of printer, but practically all his adult years have been devoted to merchandising. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, the B'nai B'Rith, and while generally registered as a democrat gives his support independently to men and measures. In March, 1902, he married Miss Julia Newberger. Their three children are Frances N., Carlyn and Ruth. Mrs. Nathan is a daughter of Samuel Newberger, a veteran Parkersburg citizen, whose career is sketched elsewhere.

SAMUEL NEWBERGER is one of the few men still living before whose eyes has been enrolled the panorama of Parkersburg's growth and progress through a period of nearly seventy years.

He was born at Shonningen on the River Main in Bavaria, Germany, February 6, 1835. He was just past fifteen years of age when he left home and native land to cross the Atlantic, the sailing vessel requiring forty-five days to make the voyage. In Baltimore he found employment in the clothing store conducted by an old friend and former teacher in Germany. Mr. Newberger came to Parkersburg in July, 1853. His residence has been continuous since that date. Not more than 1,200 people lived in the community when he came, and the town had no railroad connection with the outside world until 1857. So far as he can ascertain only two other people are now living who were in the city when he arrived. He has won his prosperity here and has in return given loyalty of his time and means and influence to the community welfare. Several times he was elected a member of the city council, served as treasurer of the school board, and during the Civil war was a lieutenant in the Home Guards. He was one of the first to go to Burning Springs when oil was discovered there in 1861, and the capital and enterprise he put into that business identify him with the pioneer oil production in the state. In 1866 he and his partner brought in a well which produced 1,000 barrels a day. More remarkable still, this well is still flowing with oil, and when at its apex it was one of the heaviest producers in the state.

Mr. Newberger is a member of the Masonic fraternity, being affiliated with Mount Olivet Lodge No. 3. This was organized when West Virginia was part of the Old Dominion, and under the old state was No. 113.

In September, 1861, Mr. Newberger married Dora Keller. Of their seven children six are living: Sallie, wife of Levi Rosenbaum, of Easton, Pennsylvania; Harry; Meyer; Hannah, Mrs. B. S. Leopold, of Fairmont, West Virginia; George; and Julia, wife of Ben Nathan, of Parkersburg. The sons Meyer and George are residents of Los Angeles.

FRANK VERNON ALER. A successful corporation lawyer must not only be an alert and broad member of his profession, but a keen and far-seeing business man. His is pre-eminently the domain of practical law, in which solid logic and hard fact, fertility of resource and vigor of professional treatment are generally relied upon in preference to the graces of oratory and ingenious theorizing. When to these qualities are added oratorical powers, and the humor, gentility and unfailing courtesy of a gentleman, the main traits have been set forth of the prominent corporation lawyer, Frank Vernon Aler, of Martinsburg.

Mr. Aler was born at Martinsburg, Berkeley County, West Virginia, April 29, 1868, and is a son of Samuel and Elizabeth Virginia (Coomes) Aler. His father was born February 11, 1828, in Maryland, and after acquiring a good literary education was thoroughly trained as a mechanic and draftsman and became an expert in these lines. When still comparatively a young man he entered the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company during the time of that railroad's construction, and was a close friend and associate of John W. Garrett. At the breaking out of the war between the states Mr. Aler was placed in charge of the United States Government arsenal at Harpers Ferry, and was subsequently identified with the Quartermaster's Department. While thus occupied with his duties on one occasion he was detailed to go to Frederick, Maryland, to dismantle several locomotives that were in danger of capture by the Confederate forces in the locality, and this feat he accomplished, he and his men working under cover of darkness, taking the locomotives apart and secreting the numerous parts. Following the close of the four-year struggle he settled down at Martinsburg, where he became assistant master mechanic for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. In 1891 United States Senator Stephen B. Elkins, then secretary of war, secured Mr. Aler a position in the United States Navy department, and he moved to Washington, D. C., where he was living at the time of his death. Immediately upon receipt of the news of the Johnstown flood Mr. Aler rushed to the Bridge at Harpers Ferry several locomotives, the combined weight of which probably saved the bridge from being swept away by the rushing flood waters. Mr. Aler held his position at Washington until he reached the age of eighty-six years, at which time he resigned, and died in the next year, a man greatly respected and esteemed by all who knew him. He married Elizabeth Virginia Coomes, a native of Virginia and a lineal descendant of Capt. William Richardson, a master mariner of the merchant marine service who located in Maryland in Lord Baltimore's time. Her parents moved from Virginia to Maryland and spent their last days at Gaithersburg. Mrs. Aler survived her husband two years, and was eighty-seven years of age at the time of her demise. She and Mr. Aler reared eight children: Charles Edwin, Anna Madora, Lillie Virginia, Ida Summers, Samuel E., Frank Vernon, Royal W. and Walter Marvin.

At the age of twelve years Frank Vernon Aler left the public schools to commence an apprenticeship to the trade of printer in the office of the Martinsburg Independent, which was published at that time by J. Nelson Wisner. On the completion of his apprenticeship he entered the office of Senator Charles J. Faulkner and studied law for two years, partly under the preceptorship of Judge Daniel B. Lucas. At the age of twenty-two years he took the examination before the Supreme Court of Appeals, in open court, and was admitted to practice, at that time forming a partnership with his former preceptor, Judge Lucas, an association which continued for fifteen years, during which time the combination was looked upon as one of the strongest in this part of the state. Since then Mr. Aler has been engaged in practice alone at Martinsburg, where he confines himself to the practice of corporation law. He has personally represented a number of large interests in important litigation during the past few years, and is an active and successful practitioner. His practice has covered a wide range and he has a brilliant record as a trial lawyer, but his constructive ability, as shown by the various organizations and reorganizations with which he has been connected, has won for him a still higher place in the esteem and confidence of his clients. He has promoted and financed industries representing $12,000,000, and in 1921 accepted a case involving the organization of a concern with $5,000,000 capital. He practices in the Circuit and Federal Courts of various states and in the Supreme Court of the United States, the highest tribunal.

Mr. Aler's large and important practice makes him a very busy man, but he is something more than a professional drudge, for he has several side interests that occasionally take his attention away from the serious business of law. In his home community of Martinsburg he is known as a horticulturist of something more than amateur ability, a producer of apples from his orchard on his country estate, and a thoroughly learned breeder of Scotch collie dogs. He is a valued member of the West Virginia State Historical and Antiquarian Society, and that he was possessed of a facile and trenchant pen even in his younger days is shown in the fact that in 1888 he published Aler's History of Berkeley County, which is a recognized authority on the early history of the county.

EDWIN A. BRAST. As hotel manager, banker and publisher Edwin A. Brast has had a conspicuous part in the affairs of Parkersburg for many years. It is especially interesting to note that he represents the third generation of the Brast family in the hotel business in West Virginia.

Mr. Brast is a native of Ohio, born at Powhatan Point in Belmont County September 11, 1872, son of William T. and Sylvia (Boger) Brast, the former a native of West Virginia and the latter of Ohio. His grandfather, Michael Brast, was born in Switzerland, came to the United States when a young man, and for some years followed farming in Ohio and West Virginia. In 1875 he moved to New Martinsville, West Virginia, where he founded and operated the Brast Hotel. He lived at New Martinsville the rest of his life.

Of his eight children William T. Brast was the fourth in age, the others being August, Amos, Edward, Jacob, Michael, Katherine and Charles. Reared in Ohio, he had two brothers, August and Edward, who were Union soldiers in the Civil war. William T. Brast went to New Martinsville with his parents in 1875, learned the blacksmith's trade and operated a blacksmith's shop and hardware store at New Martinsville several years. He also some years was associated with his father in the hotel business, and at the death of his father operated the Brast Hotel at New Martinsville. He acquired some extensive lumber interests, and it was later that he succeeded his father as manager of the Brast Hotel at New Martinsville. His last years were spent at Parkersburg, where he became well known and where he died in 1916.

Edwin A. Brast was one of the three children of his parents. He was an infant when the family moved to New Martinsville, where he grew up and acquired his public school education. In the Wheeling Business College he learned shorthand, and for a time acted as official court reporter of the Fourth Judicial Circuit. Mr. Brast has been a resident of Parkersburg for the past quarter of a century. Here he utilized his early training and managed the Blennerhassett Hotel until 1903. In that year he leased and has since operated the Chancellor Hotel, and is president of the Bank Block Investment Company, which owns this high class hostelry.

Mr. Brast for several years was a stockholder in the State Journal of Parkersburg. Later the Parkersburg Publishing Company took over both the Journal and the News, and after the consolidation continued the business as the Parkersburg News. Mr. Brast for five years has been a stockholder in that paper and in 1920 became president of the Parkersburg Publishing Company. In 1913 he organized the brokerage firm of E. A. Brast & Company, of which he is president, and among other business interests he is a director in the Parkersburg National and the Citizens National Bank.

Mr. Brast has used his business opportunities with exceptional skill and good judgment, and in his varied business enterprises has always been mindful of the best interests of the community. He is a republican in politics and has always been a regular party man.

HENRY HAMILTON DILS. In the commercial life of Parkersburg three men named Henry Hamilton Dils have successively figured as leading merchants and highly cultured and influential citizens.

The first of the name came to Parkersburg many years ago, establishing here his home and family. He married Ann Logan. Among his children was Henry Hamilton Dils second, who was reared in Parkersburg from boyhood and learned the practical side of business as clerk in general store. At the age of twenty he joined David Broughton and entered the dry goods and notions business. The firm of Broughton & Dils continued about three years, until the death of Mr. Broughton, when his interests were acquired by Jacob McKinney. The firm of McKinney & Dils was in existence until the death of Mr. Dils in 1895.

He was succeeded by Henry Hamilton Dils, third, who remained a partner in this business until 1900, when he sold out to Mr. McKinney. In the same year Mrs. H. I. Dils, second, and her two sons organized the present firm of Dils Brothers & Company, and this is one of the firms enjoying a large share of the business in Parkersburg today. Mrs. Dils, one of the firm, died in 1903. Henry Hamilton Dils, second, is recalled as one of the best Parkersburg citizenship. He was a good merchant, and his interests outside of his business made for progress and betterment. He was an advocate of the temperance cause and was one of the principal mainstays of the old prohibition party in this locality, seeing that the party was represented by a ticket in elections. He was also one of the earnest members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.
